The 28. day in the morning was very foggie: but at the clearing vp of the fogge, wee had ſight of lande, which I ſuppoſed to be Labrador, with great ſtore of yce about the land: I ranne in towards it, and ſownded, but could get no ground at 100. fathom, and the yce being ſo thicke, I could not get to the ſhoare, and ſo lay off, and came cleare of the yce. Upon Munday we came within a mile of the ſhoare, and ſought a harborowe: all the ſownd was full of yce, and our boate rowing a ſhoare, could get no ground at a 100. fathom, within a Cables length of the

30. ſhoare: then we ſailed Eaſtnortheaſt along the ſhoare, for ſo the lande lyeth, and the currant is there great, ſetting Northeaſt, and Southweſt: and if we could haue gotten anker ground, wee would haue ſeene with what force it had runne, but I iudge a ſhip may driue a league and a halfe, in one houre, with that tide.

31. This day at 4. of the cloke in the morning, being faire and cleere, we had ſight of a head land, as we iudged, bearing from vs north, and by Eaſt, and we ſailed Northeaſt, and by North to that land, and when we came thither, wee could not get to the lande for yce: for the yce ſtretched along the coaſt, ſo that we could not come to the land, by fiue leagues.

August. 1. Wedneſday the firſt of Auguſt it calmed, and in the after noone I cauſed my boate to be hoyſed out, being hard by a great Iſland of yce, and I and foure men rowed to that yce, and ſownded within two Cables length of it, and had ſixteene fathome, and little ſtones, and after that

2. ſownded againe within a Minion ſhot, and had ground at an hundreth fathome, and faire ſand: we ſownded the next day a quarter of a myle from it, and had ſixtie fathome rough ground, and at that preſent being aboord, that great Iſland of yce fell one part from another, making a noyſe as if a great cliffe had fallen into the Sea. And at foure of the clocke I ſownded againe, and had 90. fathome, and ſmall blacke ſtones, and little white ſtones, like pearles. The tide here did ſet to the ſhoare.

10. The tenth I tooke foure men, and my ſelfe, and rowed to ſhoare to an Iſland one league from the maine, and there the flood ſetteth Southweſt alongeſt the ſhoare, and it floweth as neere as I could iudge ſo too, I could not tarry to proone it, becauſe the ſhip was a great way from me, and I feared a fogge: but when I came a ſhoare, it was a low water. I went to ỹ top of the Iſland, and before I came backe, it was hied a foote water, and ſo without tarrying I came aboord.

11. They enter the Streit in the latitude of 63. deg. and 8. min.

The 11. we found our latitude to be 63. degr. and eight minutes, and this day we entred the ſtreight.

12. The 12. wee ſet ſaile towardes an Iſland, called the Gabriels Iſland, which was 10. leagues then from vs.

13 We eſpied a ſound, and bare with it, and came to a ſandie Baye, where we came to an anker, the land bearing Eaſt ſoutheaſt off vs, and there we rode al night in 8. fathome water. It floweth there at a Southeaſt Moone. We called it Priors ſownd, being from the Gabriels Iſland, tenne leagues.

14 The 14. we waied, and ranne into another ſownde, where wee ankered in 8. fathome water, faire ſand, and blacke oaze, and there calked our ſhip, being weake from the wales vpward, and tooke in freſh water.

15 The 15. day we waied, and ſailed to Priors Bay, being a mile from thence.

16 The 16. day was calme, and we rode ſtill, without yce, but preſently within two houres it was frozen round about the ſhip, a quarter of an ynch thicke, and that day very faire, and calme.

17 The 17. day we waied, and came to Thomas Williams Iſland.

18 The 18. day we ſailed North northweſt, and ankered againe in 23. fathome, and tough oaze, vnder Burchers Iſland, which is from the former Iſland, ten leagues.

19 The 19. day in the morning, being calme, and no winde, the Captaine and I tooke our boate, with eight men in her, to rowe vs a ſhoare, to ſee if there were there any people, or no, and going to the toppe of the Iſland, we had ſight of ſeuen boates, which came rowing from the Eaſt ſide, toward that Iſland: whereupon we returned aboord againe: at length we ſent our boate with fiue men in her, to ſee whither they rowed, and ſo with a white cloth brought one of their boates with their men along the ſhoare, rowing after our boate, till ſuch time as they ſawe our ſhip, and then they rowed a ſhoare: then I went on ſhoare my ſelfe, and gaue euery of them a threadden point, and brought one of them aboord of me, where hee did eate and drinke, and then carried him on ſhoare againe. Whereupon all the reſt came aboord with their boates, being nineteene perſons, and they ſpake, but we vnderſtoode them not. They bee like to Tartars, with long blacke haire, broad faces, and flatte noſes, and tawnie in colour, wearing Seale ſkinnes, and ſo doe the women, not differing in the faſhion, but the women are marked in the face with blewe ſtreekes downe the cheekes, and round about the eyes. Their boates are made all of Seales ſkinnes, with a keele of wood within the ſkin: the proportion of them is like a Spaniſh ſhallop, ſaue only they be flat in the bottome, and ſharpe at both ends. Sight of the Countrey people. The deſcription of the people.

20 The twentieth day wee waved, and went to the Eaſtſide of this Iſland, and I and the Captaine, with foure men more went on ſhoare, and there we ſawe their houſes, and the people eſpying vs, came rowing towards our boate: whereupon we plied toward our boate: and wee being in our boate and they aſhoare, they called to vs, and we rowed to them, and one of their company came into our boate, and we carried him a boord, and gaue him a Bell, and a knife: ſo the Captaine and I willed fiue of our men to ſet him a ſhoare at a rocke, and not among the company, which they came from, but their wilfulneſſe was ſuch, that they would goe to them, and ſo were taken themſelues, and our boate loſt. 5. of our men taken by the people.

21 The next day in the morning, we ſtoode in neere the ſhoare, and ſhotte off a fauconet, and ſounded our trumpet, but we could heare nothing of our men: this ſound wee called the fiue mens ſound, and plyed out of it, but ankered againe in thirtie fathome, and oaze: and riding there all night, in the morning, the ſnow lay a foote thicke vpon our hatches.

22 The 22. day in the morning we waved, and went againe to the place where we loſt our men, and our boate. We had ſight of fourteene boates, and ſome came neere to vs, but wee could learne nothing of our men: among the reſt, we intiſed one boate to our ſhips ſide, with a Bell, and in giuing him the Bell, we tooke him, and his boate, and ſo kept him, and ſo rowed downe to Thomas Williams Iſland, and there ankered all night.

26 The 26. day we waied, to come homeward, and by 12. of the clocke at noone, we were thwart of Trumpets Iſland. They returne.

27 The next day we came thwart of Gabriels Iſland, and at 8. of the clocke at night we had the Cape Labrador as we ſuppoſed Weſt from vs, ten leagues.

28 The 28. day we went our courſe Southeaſt.

29 We ſailed Southeaſt, and by Eaſt, 22. leagues.

September. 1 The firſt day of September in the morning we had ſight of the land of Friſeland, being eight leagues from vs, but wee could not come neerer it, for the monſtrous yce that lay about it. From this day, till the ſixth of this Moneth, we ranne along Iſland, and had the South part of it at eight of the clocke, Eaſt from vs ten leagues.

7 The ſeuenth day of this moneth we had a very terrible ſtorme, by force whereof, one of our men was blowen into the ſea out of our waſte, but he caught hold of the foreſaile ſheate, and there held till the Captaine pluckt him againe into the ſhip.

The Sheld.

The 25. day of this moneth we had ſight of the Iſland of Orkney, which was then Eaſt from vs. The firſt day of October we had ſight of the Shelds, and ſo ſailed about the coaſt, and ankered at Yarmouth, and the next day we came into Harwich.

The ſecond voyage of Maſter Martin Frobiſher, made to the Weſt and Northweſt Regions, in the yeere 1577. with a deſcription of the Countrey, and people: Written by Maſter Dioniſe Settle.

ON Whitſunday, being the ſixe and twentieth of May, in the yeere of our Lord God 1577. Captaine Frobiſher departed from Blacke Wall, with one of the Queenes Maieſties ſhips, called The Aide, of nine ſcore tunnes, or therabouts: and two other little Barkes likewiſe, the one called The Gabriel, whereof Maſter Fenton, a Gentleman of my Lord of Warwikes, was Captaine: and the other, The Michael, whereof Maſter Yorke, a Gentleman of my Lord Admirals was Captaine, accompanied with ſeuen ſcore Gentlemen, ſouldiers, and ſailers, well furniſhed with victuals, and other prouiſion neceſſarie for one halfe yeere, on this his ſecond voyage, for the further diſcouering of the paſſage to Cathay, and other Countreys thereunto adiacent, by Weſt and Northweſt nauigations: which paſſage or way, is ſuppoſed to bee on the North and Northweſt pars of America: and the ſaid America to be an Iſland inuironed with the ſea, where through our Merchants may haue courſe and recourſe with their merchandize, from theſe our Northernmoſt parts of Europe, to thoſe Orientall coaſts of Aſia, in much ſhorter time, and with greater benefite then any others, to their no little commoditie and profite that do or ſhall frequent the ſame. Our ſaid Captaine and General of this preſent voyage and company hauing the yeere before, with two little pinneſſes, to his great danger, and no ſmall commendations, giuen a worthy attempt towards the performance thereof, is alſo preſt, when occaſion ſhall be miniſtred (to the benefite of his Prince, and natiue Countrey) to aduenture himſelfe further therein. As for this ſecond voyage, it ſeemeth ſufficient, that he hath better explored and ſearched the commodities of thoſe people and Countreys, which in his firſt voyage the yeere before he had found out.

The Iſlands Orcades, or Orkney.

The Orcadians vpon ſmal occaſion fire their home.

No wood in Orkney.

Fiſher men of England haue daily traffike to Orkney.

Vpon which conſiderations, the day and yeere before expreſſed, we departed from Blacke Wall to Harwich, where making an accompliſhment of things neceſſary, the laſt of May we hoiſed vp ſailes, and with a merrie wind the 7. of Iune we arriued at the Iſlands called Orcades, or vulgarly Orkney, being in number 30. ſubiect and adiacent to Scotland, where we made prouiſion of freſh water: in the doing whereof our Generall licenſed the Gentlemen and ſouldiers for their recreation, to goe on ſhore. At our landing, the people fled from their poore cottages, with ſhrikes and alarms, to warne their neighbours of enemies, but by gentle perſwaſions we reclamed them to their houſes. It ſeemeth they are often frighted with Pirats, or ſome other enemies, that mooue them to ſuch ſudden feare. Their houſes are very ſimply builded with Pibble ſtone, without any chimneis, the fire being made in the middeſt thereof. The good man, wife, children, and other of their family eate and ſleepe on the one ſide of the houſe, and the cattell on the other, very beaſtly and rudely, in reſpect of ciuilitie. They are deſtitute of wood, their fire is turffes, and Cowſhards. They haue corne, bigge, and oates, with which they pay their Kings rent, to the maintenance of his houſe. They take great quantitie of fiſh, which they dry in the wind and Sunne. They dreſſe their meat very filthily, and eate it without ſalt. Their apparell is after the rudeſt ſort of Scotland. Their money is all baſe. Their Church and religion is reformed according to the Scots. The fiſher men of England can better declare the diſpoſitions of thoſe people then I: wherefore I remit other their vſages to their reports, as yeerely repairers thither, in their courſe to and from Iſland for fiſh.

In Iune and Iuly no night in thoſe Weſt and Northweſt regions.

We departed herehence the 8. of Iune, and followed our courſe betweene Weſt and Northweſt, vntill the 4. of Iuly: all which time we had no night, but that eaſily, and without any impediment we had when we were ſo diſpoſed, the fruition of our bookes, and other pleaſures to paſſe away the time: a thing of no ſmall moment, to ſuch as wander in vnknowen ſeas, and long nauigations, eſpecially, when both the winds and raging ſurges do paſſe their common and wonted courſe. This benefite endureth in thoſe parts not 6. weekes, while the ſunne is neere the Tropike of Cancer: but where the pole is raiſed to 70. or 80. degrees, it continueth much longer.

Great abundance of Firre trees floting in the ſea.

Inquire further of this current.

All along theſe ſeas, after we were ſixe dayes ſailing from Orkney, we met floting in the ſea, great Firre trees, which as we iudged, were with the furie of great floods rooted vp, and ſo driuen into the ſea. Iſland hath almoſt no other wood nor fuell, but ſuch as they take vp vpon their coaſtes. It ſeemeth, that theſe trees are driuen from ſome part of the New found land, with the current that ſetteth from the Weſt to the Eaſt.

The 4. of Iuly we came within the making of Friſland. From this ſhoare 10. or 12. leagues, we met great Iſlands of yce, of halfe a mile, ſome more, ſome leſſe in compaſſe, ſhewing aboue the ſea, 30. or 40. fathoms, and as we ſuppoſed faſt on ground, where with our lead we could ſcarſe ſound the bottome for depth.

Here, in place of odoriferous and fragrant ſmels of ſweete gums, & pleaſant notes of muſicall birdes, which other Countreys in more temperate Zones do yeeld, wee taſted the moſt boiſterous Boreal blaſts mixt with ſnow and haile, in the moneths of Iune and Iuly, nothing inferior to our vntemperate winter: a ſudden alteration, and eſpecially in a place or Parallele, where the Pole is not eleuate aboue 61. degrees: at which height other Countreys more to the North, yea vnto 70. degrees, ſhew themſelues more temperate then this doth.

Yce, ſnow, and haile in Iune and Iuly.

All along this coaſt yce lieth, as a continuall bulwarke, & ſo defendeth the Countrey, that thoſe that would land there, incur great danger. Our Generall 3. dayes together attempted with the ſhip boate to haue gone on ſhoare, which for that without great danger he could not accompliſh, he deferred it vntill a more conuenient time. All along the coaſt lie very high mountaines couered with ſnow, except in ſuch places, where through the ſteepenes of the mountaines of force it muſt needs fall. Foure dayes coaſting along this land, we found no ſigne of habitation. Little birds, which we iudged to haue loſt the ſhore, by reaſon of thicke fogges which that Countrey is much ſubiect vnto, came flying into our ſhips, which cauſeth vs to ſuppoſe, that the Countrey is both more tollerable, and alſo habitable within, then the outward ſhore maketh ſhew or ſignification.

Friſeland ſubiect to fogge.

From hence we departed the eight of Iuly: and the 16. of the ſame, we came with the making of land, which land our Generall the yeere before had named The Queenes foreland, being an Iſland as we iudge, lying neere the ſuppoſed continent with America: and on the other ſide, oppoſite to the ſame, one other Iſland called Halles Iſle, after the name of the Maſter of the ſhip, neere adiacent to the firme land, ſuppoſed continent with Aſia. Betweene the which two Iſlands there is a large entrance or ſtreight, called Frobiſhers ſtreight, after the name of our Generall, the firſt finder thereof. This ſaid ſtreight is ſuppoſed to haue paſſage into the ſea of Sur, which I leaue vnknowen as yet.

Frobiſhers ſtreight.

It ſeemeth that either here, or not farre hence, the ſea ſhould haue more large entrance, then in other parts within the frozen or vntemperate Zone: and that ſome contrary tide, either from the Eaſt or Weſt, with maine force caſteth out that great quantity of yce, which commeth floting from this coaſt, euen vnto Friſeland, cauſing that Countrey to ſeeme more vntemperate then others, much more Northerly then the ſame.

I cannot iudge that any temperature vnder the Pole, the time of the Sunnes Northerne declination being halfe a yere together, and one whole day, (conſidering that the Sunnes eleuation ſurmounteth not 23. degrees and 30. minuts) can haue power to diſſolue ſuch monſtrous and huge yce, comparable to great mountaines, except by ſome other force, as by ſwift currents and tides, with the helpe of the ſaid day of halfe a yeere.

Iſlands of yce comparable to mountaines.

Before we came within the making of theſe lands we taſted cold ſtormes, in ſo much that it ſeemed we had changed ſummer with winter, if the length of the dayes had not remooued vs from that opinion.

At our firſt comming, the ſtreighes ſeemed to be ſhut vp with a long mure of yce, which gaue no litle cauſe of diſcomfort vnto vs all: but our Generall, (to whoſe diligence imminent dangers, and difficult attempts ſeemed nothing, in reſpect of his willing mind, for the commoditie of his Prince and Countrey,) with two little Pinneſſes prepared of purpoſe, paſſed twiſe thorow them to the Eaſt ſhore, and the Iſlands thereunto adiacent: and the ſhip, with the two Barks lay off and on ſomething further into the ſea, from the danger of the yce.

Captaine Frobiſher his ſpeciall care and diligence for the benefite of his Prince and Countrey.

Whileſt

The order of the people appearing on ſhoare.

Whileſt he was ſearching the Countrey neere the ſhoare, ſome of the people of the Countrey ſhewed themſelues leaping and dauncing, with ſtrange ſhrikes and cries, which gaue no little admiration to our men. Our Generall deſirous to allure them vnto him by faire meanes, cauſed kniues, and other things to be proffered vnto them, which they would not take at our hands: but being laid on the ground, and the party going away, they came and tooke vp, leauing ſome thing of theirs to counteruaile the ſame. At the length two of them leauing their weapons, came downe to our Generall and Maſter, who did the like to them, commanding the company to ſtay, and went vnto them: who after certaine dumbe ſignes, and mute congratulations, began to lay handes vpon them, but they deliuerly eſcaped, and ranne to their bowes and arrowes, and came fiercely vpon them, (not reſpecting the reſt of our companie which were ready for their defence) but with their arrowes hurt diuers of them: we tooke the one, and the other eſcaped.

Fierce and bold people. One taken.

Whileſt our Generall was buſied in ſearching the Countrey, and thoſe Iſlands adiacent on the Eaſtſhoare, the ſhip and barkes hauing great care, not to put farre into the ſea from him, for that he had ſmall ſtore of victuals, were forced to abide in a cruell tempeſt, chancing in the night, amongſt and in the thickeſt of the yce, which was ſo monſtrous, that euen the leaſt of a thouſand had bene of force ſufficient, to haue ſhiuered our ſhip and barks into ſmall portions, if God (who in all neceſſities, hath care vpon the infirmitie of man) had not prouided for this our extremitie a ſufficient remedie through the light of the night, whereby we might well diſcerne to flee from ſuch imminent dangers, which we auoyded with 14. Bourdes in one watch the ſpace of 4. houres. If we had not incurred this danger amõgſt theſe monſtrous Iſlands of yce, we ſhould haue loſt our Generall and Maſter, and the moſt of our beſt ſailers, which were on the ſhoare deſtitute of victuals: but by the valure of our Maſter Gunner, Maſter Iackman, and Andrew Dier, the Maſters Mates, men expert both in nauigation, and other good qualities, wee were all content to incurre the dangers afore rehearſed, before we would with our owne ſafetie, runne into the ſeas, to the deſtruction of our ſayd Generall, and his company.

Richard Cox, Maſter gunner. Maſter Iackman. Andrew Dier.

The day following, being the 19. of Iulie, our Captaine returned to the ſhip, with report of ſuppoſed riches, which ſhewed it ſelfe in the bowels of thoſe barren mountaines, wherewith wee were all ſatiſfied.

Within foure daies after we had bene at the entrance of the ſtreights, the Northweſt and Weſt winds diſperſed the yce into the ſea, & made vs a large entrance into the ſtreights, ſo that without any impediment, on the 19. of Iulie we entred them, and the 20. thereof, our Generall and Maſter with great diligence, ſought out and ſounded the Weſt ſhoare, and found out a faire Harborough for the ſhip and barkes to ride in, and named it after our Maſters mate, Iackmans ſound, and brought the ſhip, barkes, and all their company to ſafe anker, except one man, which died by Gods viſitation.

Iackmans ſound.

At our firſt arriuall, after the ſhip rode at anker, our generall, with ſuch company as could well be ſpared from the ſhips, in marching order entred the lande, hauing ſpeciall care by exhortations, that at our entrance thereinto, wee ſhould all with one voyce, kneeling vpon our knees, chiefly thanke God for our ſafe arriuall: ſecondly beſeech him, that it would pleaſe his diuine Maieſtie, long to continue our Queene, for whom he, and all the reſt of our company in this order tooke poſſeſſion of the Countrey: and thirdly, that by our Chriſtian ſtudie and endeuour, thoſe barbarous, people trained vp in Paganiſme, and infidelitie, might be reduced to the knowledge of true religion, and to the hope of ſaluation in Chriſt our Redeemer. With other words very apt to ſignifie his willing mind, and affection toward his Prince and Countrey: whereby all ſuſpicion of an vndutifull ſubiect, may credibly be iudged to be vtterly exempted from his mind. All the reſt of the Gentlemen and other deſerue worthily herein, their due praiſe and commendation.

Poſſeſſion taken.

Theſe things in this order accompliſhed, our Generall commanded all the company to be obedient in things needfull for our owne ſafegard, to Maſter Fenton, Maſter Yorke, and Maſter Beaſt his Lieutenant, while he was occupied in other neceſſarie affaires, concerning our comming thither.

After this order we marched through the Countrey, with Enſigne diſplaied, ſo farre as was thought needfull, and now and then heaped vp ſtones on high mountaines, and other places in token of poſſeſſion, as likewiſe to ſignifie vnto ſuch as hereafter may chance to arriue there, that poſſeſſion is taken in the behalfe of ſome other Prince, by thoſe who firſt found out the Countrey.

Yce needefull to be regarded of ſeafaring men.

Who ſo maketh nauigations to thoſe Countreys, hath not onely extreme winds, and furious ſeas to encounter withall, but alſo many monſtrous and great Iſlands of yce: a thing both rare, wonderfull, and greatly to be regarded.

We were forced ſundry times, while the ſhip did ride here at anker, to haue continuall watch, with boats & men ready with halſers to knit faſt vnto ſuch yce, as with the ebbe & flood were toſſed to and fro in the harborough, & with force of oares to hale them away, for endangering the ſhip.

Our Generall certaine dayes ſearched this ſuppoſed continent with America, and not finding the commodity to anſwere his expectation, after he had made triall thereof he departed thence with two little barks, and men ſufficient to the Eaſt ſhore being the ſuppoſed continent of Aſia, and left the ſhip with moſt of the Gentlemen, ſouldiers, and ſailers, vntill ſuch time as he either thought good to ſend or come for them.

The ſtones of this ſuppoſed continent with America be altogether ſparkled, and gliſter in the Sunne like gold: ſo likewiſe doth the ſand in the bright water, yet they verifie the old Prouerb: All is not gold that gliſtereth.

Stones gliſter with ſparkles like gold.
A common prouerbe.

On this Weſt ſhore we found a dead fiſh floating, which had in his noſe a horne ſtreight and torquet, of length two yards lacking two ynches, being broken in the top, where we might perceiue it hollow, into the which ſome of our ſailers putting ſpiders they preſently died. I ſaw not the triall hereof, but it was reported vnto me of a trueth: by the vertue whereof we ſuppoſed it to be the ſea Vnicorne.

The ſea Vnicorne.

After our Generall had found out good harborough for the ſhip and barks to anker in, and alſo ſuch ſtore of ſuppoſed gold ore as he thought himſelfe ſatisfied withall, he returned to the Michael, whereof Maſter Yorke aforeſaid was Captaine, accompanied with our maſter and his Mate: who coaſting along the Weſt ſhore not farre from whence the ſhip rode, they perceiued a faire harborough, and willing to ſound the ſame, at the entrance thereof they eſpied two tents of Seale ſkins, vnto which the Captaine, our ſaid Maſter, and other company reſorted. At the ſight of our men the people fled into the mountaines: neuertheleſſe they went to their tents, where leauing certaine trifles of ours, as glaſſes, bels, kniues, and ſuch like things they departed, not taking any thing of theirs except one dogge. They did in like maner leaue behind them a letter, pen, yncke, and paper, whereby our men whom the Captaine loſt the yere before, and in that peoples cuſtody, might (if any of them were aliue) be aduertiſed of our preſence and being there.

The people fled at the ſight of our men.

On the ſame day after conſultation had, all the Gentlemen, and others likewiſe that could be ſpared from the ſhip, vnder the conduct and leading of Maſter Philpot, (vnto whom in our Generall his abſence, and his Lieutenant Maſter Beaſt, al the reſt were obedient) went a ſhore, determining to ſee, if by faire means we could either allure them to familiarity, or otherwiſe take ſome of them, and ſo attaine to ſome knowledge of thoſe men whom our Generall loſt the yeere before.

Maſter Philpot.
Maſter Beaſt.

At our comming backe againe to the place where their tents were before, they had remoued their tents further into the ſaid Bay or Sound, where they might if they were driuen from the land, flee with their boates into the ſea. We parting our ſelues into two companies, and compaſſing a mountaine came ſuddenly vpon them by land, who eſpying vs, without any tarying fled to their boates, leauing the moſt part of their oares behind them for haſte, and rowed downe the bay, where our two Pinneſſes met them and droue them to ſhore: but if they had had all their oares, ſo ſwift are they in rowing, it had bene loſt time to haue chaſed them.

When they were landed they fiercely aſſaulted our men with their bowes and arrowes, who wounded three of them with our arrowes: and perceiuing themſelues thus hurt, they deſperatly leapt off the Rocks into the Sea, and drowned themſelues: which if they had not done, but had ſubmitted themſelues, or if by any meanes we could haue taken them aliue (being their enemies as they iudged) we would both haue ſaued them, & alſo haue ſought remedy to cure their wounds receiued at our hands. But they altogether voyd of humanity, and ignorant what mercy meaneth, in extremities looke for no other then death: and perceiuing they ſhould fall into our hands, thus miſerably by drowning rather deſired death then otherwiſe to be ſaued by vs: the reſt perceiuing their fellowes in this diſtreſſe, fled into the high mountaines. Two women not being ſo apt to eſcape as the men were, the one for her age, and the other being incombred with a yong child, we tooke. The old wretch, whom diuers of our Saylers ſuppoſed to be eyther a deuill, or a witch, had her buſkins plucked off, to ſee if ſhe were clouen footed, and for her ougly hew and deformity we let her goe: the yong woman and the child we brought away. We named the place where they were ſlaine, Bloodie point: and the Bay or Harborough, Yorks ſound, after the name of one of the Captaines of the two Barks.

A fierce aſſault of a few.

Hauing this knowledge both of their fierceneſſe and cruelty, and perceiuing that faire meanes as yet is not able to allure them to familiarity, we diſpoſed our ſelues, contrary to our inclination, ſomething to be cruel, returned to their tents and made a ſpoyle of the ſame: where we found an old ſhirt, a doublet, a girdle, and alſo ſhooes of our men, whom we loſt the yeere before: on nothing elſe vnto them belonging could we ſet our eyes.

Faire meanes not able to allure them to familiarity.

Boates of ſkinnes.

Their riches are not gold,ſiluer or precious Drapery,but their ſaid tents and botes, made of the ſkins of red Deare and Seale ſkins: alſo dogges like vnto woolues, but for the moſt part black,with other trifles,more to be wondred at for their ſtrangeneſſe,then for any other commoditie needefull for our vſe.

Our departure from the Weſt ſhore.

Thus returning to our ſhip the 3.of Auguſt,we departed from the Weſt ſhore ſuppoſed firme with America,after we had ankered there 13.dayes: and ſo the 4.thereof we came to our Generall on the Eaſt ſhore,and ankered in a faire harborough named Anne Warwickes ſound, vnto which is annexed an Iſland both named after the Counteſſe of Warwicke, Anne Warwickes ſound and Iſle.

In this Iſle our Generall thought good for this voyage, to fraight both the ſhip and barkes, with ſuch ſtone or ſuppoſed gold minerall,as he iudged to counteruaile the charges of his firſt,and this his ſecond nauigation to theſe Countreys.

The countrey people ſhew themſelues vnto vs.

In the meane time of our abode here ſome of the countrey people came to ſhew themſelues vnto vs,ſundry times on the maine ſhore,neere adiacent to the ſaid Iſle. Our Generall deſirous to haue ſome newes of his men,whom he loſt the yeere before,with ſome company with him repaired with the ſhip boat to common,or ſigne with them for familiaritie, whereunto he is perſwaded to bring them. They at the firſt ſhew made tokens,that three of his fiue men were aliue, and deſired penne,ynck, and paper,and that within three or foure dayes they would returne, and (as we iudged) bring thoſe of our men which were liuing,with them.

They alſo made ſignes or tokens of their King,whom they called Cacough, & how he was carried on mens ſhoulders,and a man farre ſurmounting any of our company,in bigneſſe and ſtature.

Their vſage in traffique or exchange.

With theſe tokens and ſignes of writing,penne,yncke, and paper was deliuered them, which they would not take at our hands,but being laid vpon the ſhore, and the partie gone away, they tooke vp: which likewiſe they do when they deſire any thing for change of theirs,laying for that which is left ſo much as they thinke will counteruaile the ſame,and not comming neere together. It ſeemeth they haue bene vſed to this trade or traffique, with ſome other people adioyning, or not farre diſtant from their Countrey.

The people ſhew themſelues the third time.

After 4.dayes ſome of them ſhewed themſelues vpon the firme land,but not where they were before. Our General very glad thereof,ſuppoſing to heare of our men,went from the Iſland,with the boat,and ſufficient company with him. They ſeemed very glad, and allured him about a certaine point of the land: behind which they might perceiue a company of the crafty villaines to lye lurking,whom our Generall would not deale withall, for that he knew not what company they were,and ſo with few ſignes diſmiſſed them and returned to his company.

The people ſhew themſelues againe on firme land.

An other time as our ſaid Generall was coaſting the Countrey with two little Pinneſſes, whereby at our returne he might make the better relation thereof, three of the crafty villains, with a white ſkin allured vs to them. Once againe our generall,for that he hoped to heare of his men,went towards them: at our comming neere the ſhore whereon they were, we might perceiue a number of them lie hidden behind great ſtones,& thoſe 3, in ſight labouring by al meanes poſſible that ſome would come on land: and perceiuing we made no haſt by words nor friendly ſignes, which they vſed by clapping of their hands,and being without weapon,and but 3.in ſight, they ſought further means to prouoke vs thereunto. One alone laid fleſh on the ſhore, which we tooke vp with the Boat hooke, as neceſſary victuals for the relieuing of the man, woman, and child,whom we had taken: for that as yet they could not digeſt our meat: whereby they perceiued themſelues deceiued of their expectation,for all their crafty allurements. Yet once againe to make (as it were) a full ſhew of their craftie natures,and ſubtile ſleighes, to the intent thereby to haue intrapped and taken ſome of our men, one of them counterfeited himſelfe impotent and lame of his legs,who ſeemed to deſcend to the water ſide, with great difficultie: and to couer his craft the more,one of his fellowes came downe with him,and in ſuch places where he ſeemed vnable to paſſe,he tooke him on his ſhoulders,ſet him by the water ſide,and departed from him,leauing him (as it ſhould ſeeme) all alone, who playing his counterfait pageant very well, thought thereby to prouoke ſome of vs to come on ſhore, not fearing, but that one of vs might make our party good with a lame man.

Their firſt meanes to allure vs to ſhore.

Their ſecond meanes.

Their third and craftieſt allurement.

Compaſſion to cure a crafty lame man.

Our Generall hauing compaſſion of his impotency, thought good (if it were poſſible) to cure him thereof: wherefore he cauſed a ſouldier to ſhoote at him with his Caleeuer, which graſed before his face. The counterfeit villeine deliuerly fled, without any impediment at all, and got him to his bow and arrowes, and the reſt from their lurking holes, with their weapons, bowes, arrowes, ſlings, and darts. Our Generall cauſed ſome caleeuers to be ſhot off at them, whereby ſome being hurt, they might hereafter ſtand in more feare of vs.

This was all the anſwere for this time we could haue of our men, or of our Generals letter. Their craftie dealing at theſe three ſeuerall times being thus manifeſt vnto vs, may plainely ſhew their diſpoſition in other things to be correſpondent. We iudged that they vſed theſe ſtratagemes, thereby to haue caught ſome of vs, for the deliuering of the man woman and child whom we had taken.

They are men of a large corporature, and good proportion: their colour is not much vnlike the Sunne burnt Countrey man, who laboureth daily in the Sunne for his liuing.

They weare their haire ſomething long, and cut before either with ſtone or knife, very diſorderly. Their women weare their haire long, and knit vp with two loupes, ſhewing forth on either ſide of their faces, and the reſt foltred vpon a knot. Alſo ſome of their women race their faces proportionally, as chinne, cheekes, and forehead, and the wriſts of their hands, whereupon they lay a colour which continueth darke azurine.

They eate their meat all raw, both fleſh, fiſh, and foule, or ſomething per boyled with blood and a little water which they drinke. For lacke of water they will eate yce, that is hard froſen, as pleaſantly as we will do Sugar Candie, or other Sugar.

If they for neceſſities ſake ſtand in need of the premiſſes, ſuch graſſe as the Countrey yeeldeth they plucke vp and eate, not deintily, or ſalletwiſe to allure their ſtomacks to appetite: but for neceſſities ſake without either ſalt, oyles, or waſhing, like brute beaſts deuouring the ſame. They neither vſe table, ſtoole, or table cloth for comlines: but when they are imbrued with blood knuckle deepe, and their kniues in like ſort, they vſe their tongues as apt inſtruments to lick them cleane: in doing whereof they are aſſured to looſe none of their victuals.

They frank or keepe certaine dogs not much vnlike Wolues, which they yoke togither, as we do oxen & horſes, to a ſled or traile: and ſo carry their neceſſaries ouer the yce and ſnow from place to place: as the captiue, whom we haue, made perfect ſignes. And when thoſe dogs are not apt for the ſame vſe: or when with hunger they are conſtrained for lacke of other victuals, they eat them: ſo that they are as needfull for them in reſpect of their bigneſſe, as our oxen are for vs.

Dogges like vnto wolues.

They eate dogs fleſh.

They apparell themſelues in the ſkins of ſuch beaſts as they kill, ſewed together with the ſinewes of them. All the foule which they kill, they ſkin, and make thereof one kind of garment or other, to defend them from the cold.

They make their apparel with hoods and tailes, which tailes they giue when they thinke to gratifie any friendſhip ſhewed vnto them: a great ſigne of friendſhip with them. The men haue them not ſo ſide as the women.

Hoods and tailes to their apparell.

The men and women weare their hoſe cloſe to their legges, from the waſt to the knee without any open before, as well the one kind as the other. Vpon their legges they weare hoſe of leather, with the furre ſide inward two or three paire on at once, and eſpecially the women. In thoſe hoſe they put their kniues, needles, and other things needfull to beare about. They put a bone within their hoſe, which reacheth from the foote to the knee, whereupon they draw their ſaid hoſe, and ſo in place of garters they are holden from falling downe about their feete.

They dreſſe their ſkinnes very ſoft and ſouple with the haire on. In cold weather or Winter they weare the furre ſide inward: and in Summer outward. Other apparell they haue none but the ſaid ſkinnes.

Thoſe beaſts, fiſhes, and foules which they kill, are their meat, drinke, apparell, houſes, bedding, hoſe, ſhooes, threed, and ſailes for their boates, with many other neceſſaries whereof they ſtand in need, and almoſt all their riches.

Their houſes are tents made of Seale ſkins, pitched vp with 4. Firre quarters foure ſquare meeting at the top, and the ſkins ſewed together with ſinewes, and laid thereupon: they are ſo pitched vp, that the entrance into them is alwayes South or againſt the Sunne.

Their houſes of Seale ſkins and Firre.

They haue other ſorts of houſes which we found not to be inhabited, which are raiſed with ſtones and Whale bones, and a ſkinne layd ouer them, to withſtand the raine or other weather: the entrance of them being not much vnlike an Ouens mouth, whereto I thinke they reſort for a time to fiſh, hunt, and foule, and ſo leaue them vntill the next time they come thither againe.

Their weapons are bowes, arrowes, darts, and ſlings. Their bowes are of wood of a yard long, ſinewed at the back with ſtrong ſinewes, not glued too, but faſt girded and tyed on. Their bow ſtrings are likewiſe ſinewes. Their arrowes are three pieces nocked with bone, and ended with bone, with thoſe two ends, and the wood in the midſt, they paſſe not in length halfe a yard or little more. They are fethered with two fethers the penne end being cut away, and the fethers layd vpon the arrow with the broad ſide to the wood: inſomuch that they ſeeme when they are tyed on, to haue foure fethers. They haue alſo three ſorts of heads to thoſe arrowes: one ſort of ſtone or yron, proportioned like to a heart: the ſecond ſort of bone, much like vnto a ſtopt head, with a hooke on the ſame: the third ſort of bone likewiſe made ſharpe at both ſides, and ſharpe pointed. They are not made very faſt but lightly tyed to, or elſe ſet in a nocke, that vpon ſmall occaſion the arrowes leaue theſe heads behind them: and they are of ſmall force, except they be very neere when they ſhoote.

Their weapons of defence.

Three ſorts of heads to their arrowes.

Two ſorts of darts.

Their Darts are made of two ſorts: the one with many forkes of bones in the fore end, and likewiſe in the midſt: their proportions are not much vnlike our toaſting yrons but longer: theſe they caſt out of an inſtrument of wood, very readily. The other ſort is greater then the firſt aforeſayd, with a long bone made ſharpe on both ſides not much vnlike a Rapier, which I take to bee their moſt hurtfull weapon.

Two ſorts of boates made of leather.

They haue two ſorts of boats made of leather, ſet out on the inner ſide with quarters of wood, artificially tyed together with thongs of the ſame: the greater ſort are not much vnlike our wherries, wherein ſixteene or twenty men may ſit: they haue for a ſayle dreſt the guts of ſuch beaſts as they kill very fine and thinne, which they ſew together: the other boate is but for one man to ſit and row in with one oare.

They vſe to foule, fiſh, and hunt.

Their order of fiſhing, hunting, and fouling are with theſe ſaid weapons: but in what ſort, or how they vſe them we haue no perfect knowledge as yet.

It is to be ſuppoſed that their inhabiting is elſe where.

I can ſuppoſe their abode or habitation not to be here, for that neither their houſes or apparell, are of ſuch force to withſtand the extremity of cold, that the Countrey ſeemeth to be infected withall: neither do I ſee any ſigne likely to performe the ſame.

Thoſe houſes or rather dennes which ſtand there, haue no ſigne of footway, or any thing elſe troden, which is one of the chiefeſt tokens of habitation. And thoſe tents which they bring with them, when they haue ſufficiently hunted and fiſhed, they remoue to other places: and when they haue ſufficiently ſtored them of ſuch victuals, as the Countrey yeeldeth or bringeth forth, they returne to their winter ſtations or habitations. This coniecture do I make, for the infertility which I coniecture to be in that Countrey.

Their vſe of yron.

They haue ſome yron whereof they make arrow heads, kniues, and other little inſtruments, to worke their boates, bowes, arrowes, and darts withall, which are very vnapt to doe any thing withall but with great labour.

It ſeemeth that they haue conuerſation with ſome other people, of whom for exchange they ſhould receiue the ſame. They are greatly delighted with any thing that is bright, or giueth a ſound.

Anthropophagi.

What knowledge they haue of God, or what Idoll they adore, we haue no perfect intelligence. I thinke them rather Anthropophagi, or deuourers of mans fleſh then otherwiſe: for that there is no fleſh or fiſh which they find dead (ſmell it neuer ſo filthily) but they will eate it, as they finde it without any other dreſſing. A loathſome thing, either to the beholders or hearers.

Signes of gold oare.

There is no maner of creeping beaſt hurtfull, except ſome Spiders (which as many affirme, are ſignes of great ſtore of gold) and alſo certaine ſtinging Gnattes, which bite ſo fiercely, that the place where they bite ſhortly after ſwelleth and itcheth very ſore.

Signes of gold from other people.

They make ſignes of certaine people that weare bright plates of gold in their foreheads, and other places of their bodies.

Deſcription of the Countreis.

The Countreys on both ſides the ſtreights lye very high with rough ſtony mountaines, and great quantitie of ſnow thereon. There is very little plaine ground and no graſſe, except a little which is much like vnto moſſe that groweth on ſoft ground, ſuch as we get Turffes in. There is no wood at all. To be briefe there is nothing fit or profitable for the vſe of man, which that Countrey with roote yeeldeth or bringeth forth: Howbeit there is great quantity of Deere, whoſe ſkins are like vnto Aſſes, there heads or hornes doe farre exceede, as well in length as alſo in breadth, any in theſe our parts or Countreys: their feete likewiſe are as great as our oxens, which we meaſured to be ſeuen or eight ynches in breadth. There are alſo hares, wolues, fiſhing beares, and ſea foule of ſundry ſorts.

As the Countrey is barren and vnfertile, ſo are they rude and of no capacitie to culture the ſame to any perfection: but are contented by their hunting, fiſhing, and fouling, with raw fleſh and warme blood to ſatiſfie their greedy panches, which is their only glory.

A ſigne of Earthquakes or thunder.

There is great likelihood of Earthquakes or thunder: for that there are huge and monſtrous mountaines, whoſe greateſt ſubſtance are ſtones, and thoſe ſtones ſo ſhaken with ſome extraordinarie meanes that one is ſeparated from another, which is diſcordant from all other Quarries.

There are no riuers, or running ſprings, but ſuch as through the heate of the Sunne, with ſuch water as diſcendeth from the mountaines and hilles, whereon great drifts of ſnow do lie, are ingendred.

No riuers, but ſuch as the Sunne doth cauſe to come of ſnow.

It argueth alſo that there ſhould be none: for that the earth, which with the extremitie of the Winter is ſo froſen within, that that water which ſhould haue recourſe within the ſame to maintaine ſprings, hath not his motion, whereof great waters haue their originall, as by experience is ſeene other where. Such valleis as are capable to receiue the water, that in the Summer time by the operation of the Sunne deſcendeth from great abundance of ſnowe, which continually lyeth on the mountaines and hath no paſſage, ſinketh into the earth and ſo vaniſheth away, without any runnell aboue the earth, by which occaſion or continuall ſtanding of the ſaid water, the earth is opened, and the great froſt yeeldeth to the force thereof, which in other places foure or fiue fathoms within the ground for lacke of the ſaid moiſture, the earth (euen in the very Summer time) is froſen, and ſo combineth the ſtones together, that ſcarcely inſtruments with great force can vnknit them.

A probabilitie that there ſhould be neither ſpring or riuers in the ground.

Alſo where the water in thoſe valleis can haue no ſuch paſſage away, by the continuance of time in ſuch order as is before rehearſed, the yeerely deſcent from the mountaines filleth them full, that at the loweſt banke of the ſame, they fall into the valley, and ſo continue as fiſhing Ponds or Stagnes in Summer time full of water, and in the Winter hard froſen: as by ſkarres that remaine thereof in Summer may eaſily be perceiued: ſo that the heat of Summer is nothing comparable or of force to diſſolue the extremitie of cold that commeth in Winter.

Neuertheleſſe I am aſſured that below the force of the froſt within the earth, the waters haue recourſe, and emptie themſelues out of ſight into the ſea, which through the extremitie of the froſt are conſtrained to doe the ſame: by which occaſion the earth within is kept the warmer, and ſprings haue their recourſe, which is the onely nutriment of golde and Minerals within the ſame.

Springs nouriſh gold.

There is much to be ſayd of the commodities of theſe Countreys, which are couched within the bowels of the earth, which I let paſſe till more perfect triall be made thereof.

The 24. of Auguſt, after we had ſatiſfied our minds with fraight ſufficient for our veſſels, though not our couetous deſires with ſuch knowledge of the Countrey, people, and other commodities as are before rehearſed, we departed therehence. The 17. of September we fell with the lands end of England, and ſo ſailed to Milford Hauen, from whence our Generall rode to the Court for order, to what Port or Hauen to conduct the ſhip.

Our departure from thoſe Countreys.

We loſt our two Barkes in the way homeward, the one the 29. of Auguſt, the other the 31. of the ſame moneth, by occaſion of great tempeſt and fogge. Howbeit God reſtored the one to Briſtowe, and the other made his courſe by Scotland to Yermouth. In this voyage we loſt two men, one in the way by Gods viſitation, and the other homeward caſt ouer borde with a ſurge of the ſea.

How & when we loſt our 2. Barks, which God neuertheleſſe reſtored.

I Could declare vnto the Readers, the latitude and longitude of ſuch places and regions as we haue bene at, but not altogether ſo perfectly as our maſters and others, with many circumſtances of tempeſts and other accidents incident to Sea faring men, which ſeeme not altogether ſtrange, but I let them paſſe to their reports as men moſt apt to ſet forth and declare the ſame. I haue alſo left the names of the Countreys on both the ſhores vntouched, for lacke of vnderſtanding the peoples language: as alſo for ſundry reſpects, not needfull as yet to be declared.

The concluſion.

Countreys new diſcouered where commoditie is to be looked for, doe better accord with a new name giuen by the diſcouerers, then an vncertaine name by a doubtfull Authour.

Our general named ſundry Iſlands, Mountaines, Capes, and Harboroughs after the names of diuers Noble men and other gentlemen his friends, aſwel on the one ſhore as alſo on the other.

The third and laſt voyage vnto Meta Incognita, made by M. Martin Frobiſher, in the yeere 1578. Written by Thomas Ellis.

Theſe are to let you know, that vpon the 25, of May, the Thomas Allen being Viceadmirall, whoſe Captaine was M. Yorke, M. Gibbes Maſter, Chriſtopher Hall Pilot, accompanied with the Reareadmiral named the Hopewel, whoſe Captaine was M. Henrie Carewe, the M. Andrewe Dier, and certaine other ſhips came to Grauеſend, where wee ankred and abode the comming of certaine of our Fleete which were not yet come.

Maſter Yorke. Chriſtopher Hall. The Hopewel. Captaine Carew. Andrew Dier, The 27. of the ſame moneth our Fleete being nowe come together, and all things preſt in a readineſſe, the wind fauouring, and tide ſeruing, we being of ſailes in number eight, waied ankers and hoiſed our ſailes toward Harwich to meete with our Admirall, and the reſidue which then and there abode our arriuall: where we ſafely arriued the 28. thereof, finding there our Admirall, whom we with the diſcharge of certaine pieces ſaluted, according to order and duety, and were welcommed with the like courteſie: which being finiſhed we landed: where our Generall continued muſtering his ſouldiers and Miners, and ſetting things in order appertaining to the voyage vntill the laſt of the ſaid moneth of May, which day we hoiſed our ſailes, and committing our ſelues to the conducting of Almightie God, we ſet forward toward the weſt Countrey in ſuch luckie wiſe and good ſucceſſe, that by the fift of Iune we paſſed the Durſies, being the vtmoſt part of Ireland to the Weſtward.

Harwich.

Durſies, Ireland.

And here it were not much amiſſe nor farre from our purpoſe, if I ſhould a little diſcourſe and ſpeake of our aduentures and chances by the way, as our landing at Plimmouth, as alſo the meeting certaine poore men, which were robbed and ſpoyled of all that they had by Pirates and Rouers: amongſt whom was a man of Briſtow, on whom our Generall vſed his liberalitie, and ſent him away with letters into England.

Plimmouth.

Briſtow.

But becauſe ſuch things are impertinent to the matter, I will returne (without any more mentioning of the ſame) to that from the which I haue digreſſed and ſwarued, I meane our ſhips now ſailing on the ſurging ſeas, ſometime paſſing at pleaſure with a wiſhed Eaſterne wind, ſometime hindered of our courſe againe by the Weſterne blaſts, vntill the 20. day of the foreſayd moneth of Iune, on which day in the morning we fell with Frizeland, which is a very hie and cragged land and was almoſt cleane couered with ſnow, ſo that we might ſee nought but craggie rockes and the tops of high and huge hilles, ſometimes (and for the moſt part) all couered with foggie miſts. There might we alſo perceiue the great Iſles of yce lying on the ſeas, like mountaines, ſome ſmall, ſome big, of ſundry kinds of ſhapes, and ſuch a number of them, that wee could not come neere the ſhore for them.

Frizeland.

Thus ſailing alongſt the coaſt, at the laſt we ſaw a place ſomewhat voyd of yce, where our Generall (accompanied with certaine other) went a ſhore, where they ſawe certaine tents made of beaſts ſkinnes, and boates much like vnto theirs of Meta Incognita. The tents were furniſhed with fleſh, fiſh, ſkins, and other trifles: amongſt the which was found a boxe of nailes: whereby we did coniecture, that they had either Artificers amongſt them, or els a traffike with ſome other nation. The men ran away, ſo that wee could haue no conference or communication with them. Our Generall (becauſe hee would haue them no more to flee, but rather incouraged to ſtay through his courteous dealing) gaue commaundement that his men ſhould take nothing away with them, ſauing onely a couple of white dogs, for the which he left pinnes, poynts, kniues, and other trifling things, and departed without taking or hurting any thing, and ſo came abord, and hoyſed ſailes, and paſſed forwards.

The curteſie of our Generall.

But being ſcarce out of the ſight thereof, there fell ſuch a fogge and hidious miſt that we could not ſee one another: whereupon we ſtroke our drums, and ſounded our trumpets, to the ende we might keepe together: and ſo continued all that day and night till the next day that the miſt brake vp: ſo that we might eaſily perceiue all the ſhips thus ſailing together all that day, vntil the next day, being the 22. of the ſame: on which day wee ſawe an infinite number of yce, from the which we caſt about to ſhun the danger thereof.

But one of our ſmall Barkes named the Michael, whoſe Captaine was Maſter Kinderſlie, the Maſter Bartholomew Bull, loſt our company, inſomuch that we could not obteine the ſight of her many dayes after, of whom I meane to ſpeake further anon when occaſion ſhall be miniſtred, and opportunitie ſerue. Thus we continued in our courſe vntill the ſecond of Iuly, on which day we fell with the Queenes foreland, where we ſaw ſo much yce, that we thought it vnpoſſible to get into the Straights: yet at the laſt we gaue the aduenture and entred the yce.

Maſter Kinderſlie. Bartholomew Bull.

Being amongſt it wee ſawe the Michael, of whom I ſpake before, accompanied with the Iudith, whoſe Captaine was Maſter Fenton, the Maſter Charles Iackman, bearing into the foreſayd yce, farre diſtant from vs, who in a ſtorme that fell that preſent night, (whereof I will at large God willing, diſcourſe hereafter) were ſeuered from vs, and being in, wandred vp and downe the Straights amongſt the yce many dayes in great perill, till at the laſt, (by the prouidence of God) they came ſafely to harbor in their wiſhed Port, in the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound, the 20. of Iuly aforeſayd, tenne dayes before any of the other ſhippes: who going on ſhore found where the people of the Countrey had bene, and had hid their prouiſion in great heapes of ſtones being both of fleſh and fiſh, which they had killed: whereof wee alſo found great ſtore in other places after our arriual. They found alſo diuers engins, as bowes, ſlings, and darts. They found likewiſe certaine pieces of the Pinneſſe which our Generall left there the yeere before, which Pinneſſe he had ſunke, minding to haue it againe the next yeere.

Now ſeeing I haue entreated ſo much of the Iudith and the Michael: I will returne to the reſt of the other ſhips, and will ſpeake a little of the ſtorme which fell, with the miſhaps that we had, the night that we put into the yce: whereof I made mention before.

At the firſt entring into the yce in the mouth of the Straights, our paſſage was very narrow, and difficult but being once gotten in, we had a faire open place without any yce for the moſt part, being a league in compaſſe, the yce being round about vs and incloſing vs, as it were, within the pales of a parke. In which place, (becauſe it was almoſt night) we minded to take in our ſailes, and lie a hull all that night. But the ſtorme ſo increaſed, and the waues began to mount aloft, which brought the yce ſo neere vs, and comming on ſo faſt vpon vs, that we were faine to beare in and out, where we might eſpie an open place. Thus the yce comming on vs ſo faſt, we were in great danger, looking euery houre for death. And thus paſſed we on in that great danger, ſeeing both our ſelues and the reſt of our ſhips ſo troubled and toſſed amongſt the yce, that it would make the ſtrongeſt heart to relent.

Our entrance & paſſage, &c.

At the laſt the Barke Dionyſe being but a weake ſhip, and bruiſed afore amongſt the yce, being ſo leake that no longer ſhe could tarry aboue the water, ſanke without ſauing any of the goods which were within her: which ſight ſo abaſhed the whole Fleete, that we thought verily we ſhould haue taſted of the ſame ſauce. But neuertheleſſe we ſeeing them in ſuch danger, manned our boates and ſaued all the men in ſuch wiſe, that not one periſhed: God be thanked.

Barke Dionyſe.

The ſtorme ſtill increaſed and the yce incloſed vs, ſo that we were faine to take downe top and top maſtes: for the yce had ſo inuironed vs, that we could ſee neither land nor ſea, as farre as we could kenne: ſo that we were faine to cut our cables to hang ouer boord for fenders, ſomewhat to eaſe the ſhips ſides from the great and driry ſtrokes of the the yce: ſome with Capſtan barres, ſome fending off with oares, ſome with plancks of two ynches thicke, which were broken immediatly with the force of the yce, ſome going out vpon the yce to beare it off with their ſhoulders from the ſhips. But the rigorouſnes of the tempeſt was ſuch, and the force of the yce ſo great, that that not onely they burſt and ſpoyled the foreſaid prouiſion, but likewiſe ſo raſed the ſides of the ſhips, that it was pitifull to behold, and cauſed the hearts of many to faint.

Narow ſhifts for ſafetie.

Thus we continued all that diſmall and lamentable night plunged in this perplexitie, looking for inſtant death: but our God (who neuer leaueth them deſtitute which faithfully call vpon him, although he often puniſheth for amendements ſake) in the morning cauſed the winds to ceaſe, and the fogge which all that night lay on the face of the water to cleare: ſo that we might perceiue about a mile from vs, a certaine place cleare from any yce, to the which with an eaſie breath of wind which our God ſent vs, we bent our ſelues. And furthermore, hee prouided better for vs then we deſerued or hoped for: for when we were in the foreſaid cleare place, he ſent vs a freſh gale at Weſt or at Weſt Southweſt, which ſet vs cleare without all the yce. And further he added more: for he ſent vs ſo pleaſant a day as the like we had not of a long time before, as after puniſhment conſolation.

Gods prouidence.

Thus we ioyfull wights being at libertie, tooke in all our ſailes and lay a hull, praying God for our deliuerance, and ſtayed to gather together our Fleete: which once being done, we ſeeing that none of them had any great hurt, neither any of them wanted, ſauing onely they of whom I ſpake before and the ſhip which was loſt, then at the laſt wee hoiſed our ſailes, and lay bulting off and on, till ſuch time as it would pleaſe God to take away the yce that wee might get into the Straights.

And as we thus lay off and on we came by a marueilous huge mountaine of yce, which ſurpaſſed all the reſt that euer we ſaw: for we iudged it to be neere foureſcore fathomes aboue water, and we thought it to be aground for any thing that we could perceiue, being there nine ſcore fathoms deepe, and of compaſſe about halfe a mile.

A mountaine of yce appearing in ſundry figures.

Alſo the fift of Iuly there fell a hidious fogge and miſt, that continued till the nineteenth of the ſame: ſo that one ſhippe could not ſee another. Therefore we were faine to beare a ſmall ſayle and to obſerue the time: but there ran ſuch a current of a tide, that it ſet vs to the Northweſt of the Queenes foreland the backſide of all the Straights: where (through the contagious fogge hauing no ſight either of Sunne or Starre) we ſcarce knew where we were. In this fogge the tenth of Iuly we loſt the company of the Viceadmirall, the Anne Francis, the Buſſe of Bridgewater, and the Francis of Foy.

A fog of long continuance.

A current to the Northweſt.

The 16. day one of our ſmall Barkes named the Gabriel was ſent by our Generall to beare in with the land to diſcrie it, where being on land, they met with the people of the Countrey, which ſeemed very humane and ciuill, and offered to traffike with our men, profering them foules and ſkins for kniues, and other trifles: whoſe courteſie cauſed vs to thinke, that they had ſmall conuerſation with other of the Straights.

The Gabriel.

The people offer to traffike with vs.

Then we bare backe againe to goe with the Queenes foreland: and the eighteenth day wee came by two Iſlands whereon we went on ſhore, and found where the people had bene: but we ſaw none of them. This day wee were againe in the yce, and like to be in as great perill as we were at the firſt. For through the darkneſſe and obſcuritie of the foggie miſt, we were almoſt run on rocks and Iſlands before we ſaw them: But God (euen miraculouſly) prouided for vs, opening the fogges that we might ſee clearely, both where and in what danger we preſently were, and alſo the way to eſcape: or els without faile we had ruinouſly runne vpon the rocks.

When we knew perfectly our inſtant caſe, wee caſt about to get againe on Sea-bord, which (God be thanked) by night we obtained and praiſed God. The cleare continued ſcarce an houre, but the fogge fell againe as thicke as euer it was.

Then the Rearadmirall and the Beare got themſelues cleare without danger of yce and rocks, ſtrooke their ſailes and lay a hull, ſtaying to haue the reſt of the Fleete come forth: which as yet had not found the right way to cleare themſelues from the danger of rockes and yce, vntill the next morning, at what time the Rearadmirall diſcharged certaine warning pieces to giue notice that ſhe had eſcaped, and that the reſt (by following of her) might ſet themſelus free, which they did that day.

Warning pieces of ſafe paſſage diſcharged.

Then hauing gathered our ſelues togither we proceeded on our purpoſed voyage, bearing off, and keeping our ſelues diſtant from the coaſt till the 19. day of Iuly: at which time the fogges brake vp and diſperſed, so that we might plainely and clearely behold the pleaſant ayre, which ſo long had bene taken from vs, by the obſcuritie of the foggie miſts: and after that time we were not much encombred therewith vntill we had left the confines of the Countrey.

A faire ſound betweene the Queenes foreland and Iackmans ſound.

Then we eſpying a fayre ſound, ſuppoſed it to goe into the Straights betweene the Queenes foreland and Iackmans ſound, which proued as we imagined. For our Generall ſent forth againe the Gabriel to diſcouer it, who paſſed through with much difficulty: for there ran ſuch an extreme current of a tide, with ſuch a horrible gulfe, that with a freſh gale of wind they were ſcarce able to ſtemme it: yet at the length with great trauaile they paſſed it, and came to the Straights, where they met with the Thomas Allen, the Thomas of Ipſwich, and the Buſſe of Bridgewater: who altogether aduentured to beare into the yce againe, to ſee if they could obtaine their wiſhed Port. But they were ſo incombred that with much difficultie they were able to get out againe, yet at the laſt they eſcaping, the Thomas Allen, and the Gabriel bare in with the Weſterne ſhore, where they found harbour, and there moared their ſhips vntill the fourth of Auguſt, at which time they came to vs in the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound. The Thomas of Ipſwich caught a great leake which cauſed her to caſt againe to Seabord and ſo was mended.

We ſailed along ſtill by the coaſt vntill we came to the Queenes foreland, at the point whereof we met with part of the gulfe aforeſayd, which place or gulfe (as ſome of our Maſters doe credibly report) doeth flow nine houres, and ebs but three. At that point wee diſcouered certaine lands Southward, which neither time nor opportunitie would ſerue to ſearch. Then being come to the mouth of the Straights we met with the Anne Francis, who had laine bulting vp and downe euer ſince her departure alone, neuer finding any of her company. We met then alſo the Francis of Foy, with whom againe we intended to venture and get in: but the yce was yet ſo thicke, that we were compelled againe to retyre and get vs on Sea-bord.

An horrible ſnowe fell in Iuly.

There fell alſo the ſame day being the 26. of Iuly, ſuch an horrible ſnow, that it lay a foot thick vpon the hatches which froſe as it fell.

We had alſo at other times diuers cruell ſtormes both of ſnow and haile, which manifeſtly declared the diſtemperature of the Countrey: yet for all that wee were ſo many times repulſed and put backe from our purpoſe; knowing that lingering delay was not profitable for vs, but hurtfull to our voyage, we mutually conſented to our valiant Generall once againe, to giue the onſet.

The 28. day therefore of the ſame Iuly we aſſayed, and with little trouble (God be prayſed) we paſſed the dangers by day light. Then night falling on the face of the earth, wee hulled in the cleare, til the chearefull light of the day had chaſed away the noyſome darkeneſſe of the night: at which time we ſet forward towards our wiſhed Port: by the 30. day wee obteined our expected deſire, where we found the Iudith, and the Michael: which brought no ſmal ioy vnto the General, and great conſolation to the heauie hearts of thoſe wearied wights.

The time of our ſetting forward, &c.

The 30. day of July we brought our ſhips into the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound, and moared them, namely theſe ſhips, The Admirall, the Rearadmiral, the Francis of Foy, the Beare, Armenel, the Salomon, and the Buſſe of Bridgewater: which being done, our Generall commaunded vs all to come a shore vpon the Counteſſes Iland, where he ſet his Miners to worke vpon the Mine, giuing charge with expedition to diſpatch with their lading.

Our Generall himſelfe, accompanied with his Gentlemen, diuers times made rodes into ſundry partes of the Countrey, as well to finde new Mines, as alſo to finde out and ſee the people of the Countrey. He found out one Mine vpon an Iland by Beares ſound, and named it the Counteſſe of Suſſex Iland. One other was found in Winters Fornace, with diuers others, to which the ſhips were ſent ſunderly to be laden. In the ſame rodes he mette with diuers of the people of the Countrey at ſundry times, as once at a place called Dauids ſound: who ſhot at our men, and very deſperately gaue them the onſet, being not aboue three or foure in number, there being of our Countrey men aboue a doſen: but ſeeing themſelues not able to preuaile, they tooke themſelues to flight: whom our men purſued, but being not vſed to ſuch craggie cliffes, they ſoone loſt the ſight of them, and ſo in vaine returned.

The Counteſſe of Suſſex Iland. Winters Fornace.

Dauids ſound.

We alſo ſaw of them at Beares ſound, both by Sea and land in great companies: but they would at all times keepe the water betweene them and vs. And if any of our ſhips chanced to be in the ſound (as they came diuers times, becauſe the Harbor was not very good) the ſhip laden, and departed againe: then ſo long as any ſhips were in ſight, the people would not be ſeene. But when as they perceiued the ſhips to be gone, they would not only ſhew themſelues ſtanding vpon high cliffes, and call vs to come ouer vnto them: but alſo would come in their Botes very neere to vs, as it were to brag at vs: whereof our Generall hauing aduertiſement, ſent for the Captaines and Gentlemen of the Ships, to accompany and attend vpon him, with the Captaine alſo of the Anne Francis, who was but the night before come vnto vs. For they, and the Fleebote hauing loſt vs the 26. day in the great ſnowe, put into an harbour in the Queenes foreland, where they found good Oare, wherewith they laded themſelues, and came to ſeeke the Generall: ſo that now we had all our Shippes, ſauing one Barke, which was loſt, and the Thomas of Ipſwich, who (compelled by what furie I knowe not) forſooke our company, and returned home without lading.

The policie of the people for ſafetie of themſelues.

Our Generall accompanied with his Gentlemen, (of whom I ſpake) came all together to the Counteſſe of Suſſex Iland, neere to Beares ſound: where he manned out certaine Pinniſſes, and went ouer to the people: who perceiuing his arriuall, fledde away with all ſpeede, and in haſte left certaine dartes and other engines behinde them, which we found: but the people we could not finde.

Their ſpeedie flight at our Generals arriuall.

The next morning our Generall perceiuing certaine of them in botes vpon the Sea, gaue chaſe to them in a Pinneſſe vnder ſaile, with a freſh gale of winde, but could by no meanes come neere vnto them: for the longer he ſailed, the further off he was from them: which well ſhewed their cunning and actiuitie. Thus time wearing away, and the day of our departure approching, our Generall commaunded vs to lade with all expedition, that we might be againe on Seaboard with our ſhips: for whileſt we were in the Countrey, we were in continual danger of freezing in: for often ſnow and haile often falling, the water was ſo much froſen and congealed in the night, that in the morning we could ſcarce row our botes or Pinneſſes, eſpecially in Diers ſound, which is a calme and ſtill water: which cauſed our Generall to make the more haſte, ſo that by the 30. day of Auguſt we were all laden, and made all things ready to depart.

But before I proceede any further herein, to ſhew what fortune befell at our departure, I will turne my penne a litle to M. Captaine Fenton, and thoſe Gentlemen which ſhould haue inhabited all the yeere in thoſe Countries, whoſe valiant mindes were much to be commended: For doubtleſſe they had done as they intended, if lucke had not withſtoode their willingneſſe.

Gentlemen ſhould haue inhabited the Countrey.

For the Barke Dionyſe which was loſt, had in her much of their houſe which was prepared and ſhould haue bene builded for them, with many other implements. Alſo the Thomas of Ipſwich which had moſt of their prouiſion in her, came not into the Streightes at all: neither did we ſee her ſince the day we were ſeparated in the great ſnow, of which I ſpake before. For theſe cauſes, hauing not their houſe, nor yet prouiſion, they were diſappointed of their pretence to tarie, and therefore laded their ſhips, and ſo came away with vs.

But before we tooke ſhipping, we builded a litle houſe in the Counteſſe of Warwicks Iland, and garniſhed it with many kinds of trifles, as Pinnes, Points, Laces, Glaſſes, Kombes, Babes on horſebacke and on foote, with innumerable other ſuch fanſies and toyes: thereby to allure and entice the people to ſome familiaritie againſt other yeeres.

An houſe erected and garniſhed with diuers trifles.

Thus

An outragious tempeſt.

Thus hauing finiſhed all things we departed the Countrey, as I ſayd before: but becauſe the Buſſe had not lading enough in her, ſhe put into Beares ſound to take in a little more. In the meane while the Admirall, and the reſt without at Sea ſtayed for her. And that night fell ſuch an outragious tempeſt, beating on our ſhips with ſuch vehement rigor, that anchor and cable auailed nought: for we were driuen on rockes and Iſlands of yce, inſomuch that (had not the great goodneſſe of God bene miraculouſly ſhewed to vs) we had bene caſt away euery man. This danger was more doubtfull and terrible, then any that preceded or went before: for there was not any one ſhippe (I thinke) that eſcaped without dammage. Some loſt anchor and alſo cables, ſome botes, ſome Pinniſſes: ſome anchor, cables, boates and Pinniſſes.

This boyſtrous ſtorme ſo ſeuered vs one from another, that one ſhippe knewe not what was become of another. The Admirall knewe not where to finde the Viceadmirall or Rearadmirall, or any other ſhip of our company. Our Generall being on land in Beares ſound could not come to his Shippe, but was compelled to goe aboord the Gabriel where he continued all the way homeward: for the boyſtrous blaſts continued ſo extreamely and ſo long a time, that they ſent vs homewarde (which was Gods fauour towardes vs) will we, nill we, in ſuch haſte, as not any one of vs were able to keepe in company with other, but were ſeparated. And if by chance any one Shippe did ouertake other, by ſwiftneſſe of ſayle, or mette, as they often did: yet was the rigour of the wind ſo hidious, that they could not continue company together the ſpace of one whole night.

Our entring the coaſtes dangerous.

Thus our iourney outward was not ſo pleaſant, but our comming thither, entering the coaſts and countrey, by narrow Streights, perillous yce, and ſwift tides, our times of aboade there in ſnowe and ſtormes, and our departure from thence the 31. of Auguſt with dangerous bluſtering windes and tempeſts, which that night aroſe, was as vncomfortable: ſeparating vs ſo as wee ſayled, that not any of vs mette together, vntill the 28. of September, which day we fell on the Engliſh coaſtes, betweene Sylley and the landes ende, and paſſed the channell, vntill our arriuall in the riuer of Thames.

The report of Thomas VViars paſſenger in the Emanuel, otherwiſe called the Buſſe of Bridgewater, wherein Iames Leech was Maſter, one of the ſhips in the laſt Voyage of Maſter Martin Frobiſher 1578. concerning the the diſcouerie of a great Iſland in their way homeward the 12. of September.

The Buſſe of Bridgewater was left in Beares ſound at Meta incognita, the ſecond day of September behinde the Fleete in ſome diſtreſſe, through much winde, ryding neere the Lee ſhoare, and forced there to ride it out vpon the hazard of her cables and anchors, which were all aground but two, The third of September being fayre weather, and the winde North northweſt ſhe ſet ſayle, and departed thence, and fell with Friſland on the 8. day of September at ſixe of the clocke at night, and then they ſet off from the Southweſt point of Friſland, the wind being at Eaſt, and Eaſt Southeaſt, but that night the winde veared Southerly, and ſhifted oftentimes that night: but on the tenth day in the morning, the wind at Weſt northweſt faire weather, they ſteered Southeaſt, and by ſouth, and continued that courſe vntil the 12. day of September, when about 11. a clocke before noone, they deſcryed a lande, which was from them about fiue leagues, and the Southermoſt part of it was Southeaſt by Eaſt from them, and the Northermoſt next, North Northeaſt, or Northeaſt. The Maſter accompted that the Southeaſt poynt of Friſland was from him at that inſtant when hee firſt deſcryed this new Iſlande, Northweſt by North, 50. leagues. They account this Iſland to be 25. leagues long, and the longeſt way of it Southeaſt, and Northweſt. The Southerne part of it is in the latitude of 57. degrees and 1. ſecond part, or there about. They continued in ſight of it, from the 12. day at a 11. of the clocke, till the 13. day three of the clocke in the after noone, when they left it: and the laſt part they ſaw of it, bare from them Northweſt by North. There appeared two Harboroughs vpon that coaſt: the greateſt of them ſeuen leagues to the Northwards of the Southermoſt poynt, the other but foure leagues. There was very much yce neere the ſame land, and alſo twentie or thirty leagues from it, for they were not cleare of yce, till the 15. day of September after noone. They plyed their Voyage homewards, and fell with the Weſt part of Ireland about Galway, and had firſt ſight of it on the 25. day of September.

The Iſland in length 25. leagues.
This Iland is in the latitude of 57. degrees and 1 ſecond part.
Two harboroughs in this Iſland.

Notes framed by M. Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple Eſquire, giuen to certaine Gentlemen that went with M. Frobiſher in his North weſt diſcouerie, for their directions: And not vnfit to be committed to print, conſidering the ſame may ſtirre vp conſiderations of theſe and of ſuch other things, not vnmeete in ſuch new voyages as may be attempted hereafter.

That the firſt Seate be choſen on the ſeaſide, ſo as (if it may be) you may haue your owne Nauie within Bay, riuer or lake, within your Seate ſafe from the enemie: and ſo as the enemie ſhalbe forced to lie in open rode abroade without, to be diſperſed with all windes and tempeſts that ſhall ariſe. Thus ſeated you ſhall be leaſt ſubiect to annoy of the enemie, ſo may you by your Nauie within paſſe out to all parts of the world, and ſo may the Shippes of England haue acceſſe to you to ſupply all wants, ſo may your commodities be caryed away alſo. This ſeat is to be choſen in a temperate Climat, in ſweete ayre, where you may poſſeſſe alwayes ſweete water, wood, ſeacoles or turfe, with fiſh, fleſh, graine, fruites, herbes and rootes, or ſo many of thoſe as may ſuffice very neceſſitie for the life of ſuch as ſhall plant there. And for the poſſeſſing of mines of golde, of ſiluer, copper, quickſiluer, or of any ſuch precious thing, the wants of thoſe needfull things may be ſupplyed from ſome other place by ſea, &c.

Stone to make Lyme of,
Slate ſtone to tyle withall, or ſuch clay as maketh tyle,
Stone to wall withall, if Brycke may not bee made,
Timber for buylding eaſely to be conueied to the place,
Reede to couer houſes or ſuch like, if tyle or ſlate be not,
are to be looked for as things without which no Citie may be made nor people in ciuil ſort be kept together.

The people there to plant and to continue are eyther to liue without traffique, or by traffique and by trade of marchandiſe. If they ſhall liue without ſea traffique, at the firſt they become naked by want of linnen and woollen, and very miſerable by infinite wants that will otherwiſe enſue, and ſo will they be forced of themſelues to depart, or elſe eaſely they will be conſumed by the Spanyards, by the Frenchmen, or by the naturall inhabitants of the countrey, and ſo the enterprize becomes reprochfull to our Nation, and a let to many other good purpoſes that may be taken in hand.

And by trade of marchandiſe they can not liue, except the Sea or the Land there may yeelde commoditie. And therefore you ought to haue moſt ſpeciall regard of that poynt, and ſo to plant, that the naturall commodities of the place and ſeate may draw to you acceſſe of Nauigation for the ſame, or that by your owne Nauigation you may cary the ſame out, and fetch home the ſupply of the wants of the ſeate.

Such Nauigation ſo to be employed ſhall, beſides the ſupply of wants, be able to encounter with forreine force.

And for that in the ample vent of ſuch things as are brought to you out of England by Sea, ſtandeth a matter of great conſequence, it behoueth that all humanitie and curteſie and much forbearing of reuenge to the Inland people be vſed: ſo ſhall you haue firme amitie with your neighbours, ſo ſhall you haue their inland commodities to mainteine traffique, and ſo ſhall you waxe rich and ſtrong in force. Diuers and ſeuerall commodities of the inland are not in great plenty to be brought to your hands, without the ayde of ſome portable or Nauigable riuer, or ample lake, and therefore to haue the helpe of ſuch a one is moſt requiſite: And ſo is it of effect for the diſperſing of your owne commodities in exchange into the inlands.

Nothing is more to be indeuoured with the Inland people then familiarity. For ſo may you beſt diſcouer all the natural cōmodities of their countrey, & alſo all their wants, al their ſtrengths, all their weakneſſe, and with whom they are in warre, and with whom confederate in peace and amitie, &c. which knowen you may worke many great effects of greateſt conſequence.

And in your planting the conſideration of the clymate and of the ſoyle be matters that are to be reſpected. For if it be ſo that you may let in the ſalt ſea water, not mixed with the freſh into flats, where the ſunne is of the heate that it is at Rochel, in the Bay of Portugal, or in Spaine, then may you procure a man of ſkill, and ſo you haue wonne one noble commoditie for the fiſhing, and for trade of marchandize by making of Salt.

Or if the ſoyle and clymate be ſuch as may yeeld you the Grape as good as that at Burdeaux, as that in Portugal, or as that about Siuil in Spaine, or that in the Iſlands of the Canaries, then there reſteth but a workman to put in execution to make Wines, and to dreſſe Reſigns of the ſunne and other, &c.

Or if ye finde a ſoyle of the temperature of the South part of Spaine or Barbarie in the which you finde the Oliue tree to growe: Then you may be aſſured of a noble marchandize for this Realme, conſidering that our great trade of clothing doeth require oyle, and weying how deere of late it is become by the vent they haue of that commoditie in the Weſt Indies, and if you finde the wilde Oliue there it may be graffed.

Or if you can find the berrie of Cochenile with which we colour Stammelles, or any Roote, Berrie, Fruite, wood or earth fitte for dying, you winne a notable thing fitte for our ſtate of clothing. This Cochenile is naturall in the Weſt Indies on that firme.

Or if you haue Hides of beaſts fitte for ſole Lether, &c. It will be a marchandize right good, and the Sauages there yet can not tanne Lether after our kinde, yet excellently after their owne manner.

Or if the ſoyle ſhall yeeld Figges, Almonds, Sugar Canes, Quinces, Orenges, Lemonds, Potatos, &c. there may ariſe ſome trade and traffique by Figs, Almonds, Sugar, Marmelade, Sucket, &c.

Or if great woods be found, if they be of Cypres, cheſts may be made, if they be of ſome kinde of trees, Pitch and Tarre may be made, if they be of ſome other, then they may yeeld Roſin, Turpentine, &c. and all for trade and traffique, and Caskes for wine and oyle may be made, likewiſe ſhips and houſes, &c.

And becauſe traffique is a thing ſo materiall, I wiſh that great obſeruation be taken what euery ſoyle yeeldeth naturally, in what commoditie ſoeuer, and what it may be made to yeelde by indeuour, and to ſend vs notice home, that thereupon we may deuiſe what meanes may be thought of to raiſe trades.

Now admit that we might not be ſuffered by the Sauages to enioy any whole country or any more then the ſcope of a citie, yet if we might enioy traffique, and be aſſured of the ſame, we might be much inriched, our Nauie might be increaſed, and a place of ſafetie might there be found, if change of religion or ciuil warres ſhould happen in this realme, which are things of great benefit. But if we may enioy any large territorie of apt ſoyle, we might ſo vſe the matter, as we ſhould not depend vpon Spaine for oyles, ſacks, reſignes, orenges, lemonds, ſpaniſh ſkins, &c. Nor vpon France for woad, bayſalt, and Gaſcoyne wines, nor on Eaſtland for flaxe, pitch, tarre, maſtes, &c. So we ſhould not ſo exhauſt our treaſure, and ſo exceedingly inrich our doubtfull friends, as we doe, but ſhould purchaſe the commodities that we want for halfe the treaſure that now wee doe: and ſhould by our owne induſtries and the benefites of the ſoyle there cheaply purchaſe oyles, wines, ſalt, fruits, pitch, tarre, flaxe, hempe, maſtes, boords, fiſh, golde, ſiluer, copper, tallow, hides and many commodities: beſides if there be no flatts to make ſalt on, if you haue plentie of wood you may make it in ſufficient quantitie for common vſes at home there.

If you can keepe a ſafe Hauen, although you haue not the friendſhip of the neere neighbours, yet you may haue traffique by ſea vpon one ſhore or other, vpon that firme in time to come, if not preſent.

If you find great plentie of tymber on the ſhore ſide or vpon any portable riuer, you were beſt to cut downe of the ſame the firſt winter, to be ſeaſoned for ſhips, barks, boates and houſes.

And if neere ſuch wood there be any riuer or brooke vpon the which a ſawing mill may be placed, it would doe great ſeruice, and therefore conſideration would be had of ſuch places.

And if ſuch port & choſen place of ſetling were in poſſeſſion and after fortified by arte, although by the land ſide our Engliſhmen were kept in, and might not enioy any traffique with the next neighbours, nor any victuals: yet might they victuall themſelues of fiſh to ſerue very neceſſitie, and enter into amitie with the enemies of their next neighbours, and ſo haue vent of their marchandize of England & alſo haue victual, or by meanes hereupon to be vſed, to force the next neighbours to amitie. And keeping a nauy at the ſeting place, they ſhould find out along the tract of the land to haue traffique, and at diuers Iſlands alſo. And ſo this firſt ſeat might in time become a ſtapling place of the commodities of many countreys and territories, and in time this place might become of all the prouinces round about the only gouernour. And if the place firſt choſen ſhould not ſo well pleaſe our people, as ſome other more lately found out: There might be an eaſie remoue, and that might be raſed, or rather kept for others of our nation to auoyd an ill neighbour.

If the ſoyles adioyning to ſuch conuenient Hauen and ſetling places be found marſhie and boggie, then men ſkilful in dꝛayning are to be carryed thither. Foꝛ arte may woꝛke wonderful effects therein, and make the ſoyle rich foꝛ many vſes.

To plant vpon an Iſland in the mouth of ſome notable riuer, oꝛ vpon the point of the land entring into the riuer, if no ſuch Iſland be, were to great end. Foꝛ if ſuch riuer were nauigable oꝛ poꝛtable farre into the land, then would ariſe great hope of planting in fertil ſoyles, and traffike on the one oꝛ on the other ſide of the riuer, oꝛ on both, oꝛ the linking in amitie with one oꝛ other pettie king contending there foꝛ dominion.

Such riuers found, both Barges and Boates may be made foꝛ the ſafe paſſage of ſuch as ſhall pierce the ſame. Theſe are to be couered with doubles of courſe linnen artificially wꝛought, to defend the arrow oꝛ the dart of the ſauage from the rower.

Since euery ſoile of the woꝛld by arte may be made to yeeld things to feede and to clothe man, bꝛing in your returne a perfect note of the ſoile without and within, and we ſhall deuiſe if neede require to amend the ſame, and to dꝛaw it to moꝛe perfection. And if you finde not fruites in your planting place to your liking, we ſhall in fiue dꝛifats furniſh you with ſuch kindes of plants to be carryed thither the winter after your planting, as ſhall the very next ſummer following yeeld you ſome fruite, and the yeere next following, as much as ſhall ſuffice a towne as bigge as Calice, and that ſhoꝛtly after ſhall be able to yeeld you great ſtoꝛe of ſtrong durable good ſider to dꝛinke, and theſe trees ſhall be able to encreaſe you within leſſe then ſeuen yeeres as many trees pꝛeſently to beare, as may ſuffice the people of diuers pariſhes, which at the firſt ſetling may ſtand you in great ſtead, if the ſoile haue not the commoditie of fruites of goodneſſe already. And becauſe you ought greedily to hunt after things that yeeld pꝛeſent reliefe, without trouble of carriage thither, thereforꝛe I make mention of theſe thus ſpecially, to the end you may haue it ſpecially in minde.

A true Diſcourſe of the three Voyages of diſcouerie, for the finding of a paſſage to Cathaya, by the Northweſt, vnder the conduct of Martin Frobiſher Generall: Before which, as a neceſſary Preface is prefixed a twofolde diſcourſe, conteining certaine reaſons to proue all partes of the World habitable. Penned by Maſter George Beſt, a Gentleman employed in the ſame voyages.

What commodities and inſtructions may be reaped by diligent reading this Diſcourſe.

1 First, by example may be gathered, how a Diſcouerer of new Countries is to pꝛoceede in his firſt attempt of any Diſcouerie.

2 Item, how he ſhould be pꝛouided of ſhipping, victuals, munition, and choice of men.

3 How to pꝛoceede and deale with ſtrange people, be they neuer ſo barbarous, cruell and fierce, either by lenitie oꝛ otherwiſe.

4 How trade of Merchandize may be made without money.

5 How a Pilot may deale, being inuironed with mountaines of yce in the frozen Sea.

6 How length of dayes, change of ſeaſons, Summers and Winters doe differ in ſundꝛy regions.

Experiences and reaſons of the Sphere, to proue all partes of the worlde habitable, and thereby to confute the poſition of the fiue Zones.

Experience to proue that Torrida Zona is habitable.

First, it may be gathered by experience of our Engliſhmen in Anno 1553. For Captaine Windam made a Voyage with Merchandiſe to Guinea, and entred ſo farre within the Torrida Zona, that he was within three or foure degrees of the Equinoctiall, and his company abiding there certaine Moneths, returned with gaine.

Alſo the Engliſhmen made another Voyage very proſperous and gainefull, An. 1554. to the coaſts of Guinea, within 3. degrees of the Equinoctiall. And yet it is reported of a trueth, that all the tract from Cape de las Palmas trending by C. de tres puntas alongſt by Benin, vnto the Ile of S. Thomas (which is perpendiculer vnder the Equinoctial) all that whole Bay is more ſubiect to many blooming and ſmoothering heates, with infectious and contagious ayres, then any other place in all Torrida Zona: and the cauſe thereof is ſome accidents in the land. For it is moſt certaine, that mountains, Seas, woods and lakes &c. may cauſe through their ſundry kinde of ſituation, ſundry ſtrange and extraordinary effects, which the reaſon of the clyme otherwiſe would not giue. I mention theſe Voyages of our Engliſhmen, not ſo much to proue that Torrida Zona may bee, and is inhabited, as to ſhew their readineſſe in attempting long and dangerous Nauigations. Wee alſo among vs in England haue blacke Moores, Æthiopians, out of all partes of Torrida Zona, which after a ſmall continuance, can well endure the colde of our Countrey, and why ſhould not we as well abide the heate of their Countrey? But what ſhould I name any more experiences, ſeeing that all the coaſtes of Guinea and Benin are inhabited of Portugals, Spanyardes, French, and ſome Engliſhmen, who there haue built Caſtles and Townes. Onely this I will ſay to the Merchants of London, that trade yeerely to Marochus, it is very certaine, that the greateſt part of the burning Zone is farre more temperate and coole in Iune, then the Countrey of Marochus, as ſhall appeare by theſe reaſons and experiences following. For let vs firſt conſider the breadth and bigneſſe of this burning Zone (which as euery man knoweth, is 47. degrees) each Tropicke, which are the bounders thereof, being 23. degrees and a halfe diſtant from the Equinoctiall. Imagine againe two other Paralels, on each ſide the Equinoctiall one, eyther of them diſtant from the Equinoctial about 20. degrees, which Paralels may be deſcribed either of them twice a yeere by the Sunne, being in the firſt degrees of Gemini the 11. of May, and in Leo the 13. of Iuly, hauing North latitude. And againe, the Sunne being in the firſt degrees of Sagittarius, the 12. of Nouember, and in Aquarius the 9. of Ianuary, hauing South latitude, I am to proue by experience and reaſon, that all that diſtance included betweene theſe two Paralels laſt named (conteyning 40. degrees in latitude, going round about the earth, according to longitude) is not onely habitable, but the ſame moſt fruitfull and delectable, and that if any extremitie of heate bee, the ſame not to be within the ſpace of twenty degrees of the Equinoctiall on either ſide, but onely vnder and about the two Tropickes, and ſo proportionally the neerer you doe approch to eyther Tropicke, the more you are ſubiect to extremitie of heate (if any ſuch be) and ſo Marochus being ſituate but ſixe or ſeuen degrees from the Tropicke of Cancer, ſhall be more ſubiect to heate, then any place vnder or neere the Equinoctiall line.

Marochus more hote then about the Equinoctiall.

And firſt by the experience of ſundry men, yea thouſands, Trauailers and Merchants, to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies in many places both directly vnder, and hard by the Equinoctiall, they with one conſent affirme, that it aboundeth in the middeſt of Torrida Zona with all maner of Graine, Hearbes, graſſe, fruite, wood and cattell, that we haue heere, and thouſandes other ſortes, farre more wholeſome, delectable and precious, then any wee haue in theſe Northerne climates, as very well ſhall appeare to him that will reade the Hiſtories and Nauigations of ſuch as haue trauelled Arabia, India intra & extra Gangem, the Iſlands Moluccæ, America, &c. which all lye about the middle of the burning Zone, where it is truely reported, that the great hearbes, as are Radiſh, Lettuce, Colewortes, Borage, and ſuch like, doe waxe ripe, greater, more ſauourie and delectable in taſte then ours, within ſixteene dayes after the ſeede is ſowen. Wheate being ſowed the firſt of Februarie, was found ripe the firſt of May, and generally, where it is it is leſſe fruitfull, the wheate will be ripe the fourth moneth after the ſeed is ſowne, and in ſome places will bring foorth an eare as bigge as the wriſt of a mans arme containing 1000. graines; Beanes, peace, &c. are there ripe twice a yeere. Alſo graſſe being cut downe, will grow vp in ſixe dayes aboue one foote high. If our cattell be tranſported thither, within a ſmall time their yongones become of bigger ſtature, and more fat then euer they would haue bene in theſe countreys. There are found in euery wood in great numbers, ſuch timber trees as twelue men holding handes together are not able to fathome. And to be ſhort, all they that haue bene there with one conſent affirme, that there are the goodlieſt greene medowes and plaines, the faireſt mountaines couered with all ſorts of trees and fruites, the faireſt valleys, the goodlieſt pleaſant freſh riuers, ſtored with infinite kinde of fiſhes, the thickeſt woods, greene and bearing fruite all the whole yeere, that are in all the world. And as for gold, ſiluer, and all other kinde of Metals, all kinde of ſpices and delectable fruites, both for delicacie and health, are there in ſuch abundance, as hitherto they haue bene thought to haue bene bred no where elſe but there. And in concluſion, it is nowe thought that no where elſe but vnder the Equinoctiall, or not farre from thence, is the earthly Paradiſe, and the onely place of perfection in this worlde. And that theſe things may ſeeme the leſſe ſtrange, becauſe it hath bene accompted of the olde Philoſophers, that there coulde nothing proſper for the extreme heat of the Sunne continually going ouer their heades in the Zodiacke, I thought good here to alleadge ſuch naturall cauſes as to me ſeeme very ſubſtantiall and ſure reaſons.

Commodities and pleaſures vnder the Equinoctiall.

Firſt you are to vnderſtand that the Sunne doeth worke his more or leſſe heat in theſe lower parts by two meanes, the one is by the kinde of Angle that the Sunne beames doe make with the earth, as in all Torrida Zona it maketh perpendicularly right Angles in ſome place or other at noone, and towards the two Poles very oblique and vneuen Angles. And the other meane is the longer or ſhorter continuance of the Sunne aboue the Horizon. So that whereſoeuer theſe two cauſes do moſt concurre, there is moſt exceſſe of heat: and when the one is wanting, the rigor of the heat is leſſe. For though the Sunne beames do beat perpendicularly vpon any region ſubiect vnto it, if it hath no continuance or abode aboue the Horizon, to worke his operation in, there can no hote effect proceed. For nothing can be done in a moment. And this ſecond cauſe mora Solis ſupra Horizontem, the time of the ſunnes abiding aboue the Horizon, the old Philoſophers neuer remembred, but regarded onely the maner of Angles that the Sunne beames made with the Horizon, which if they were equall and right, the heat was the greater, as in Torrida Zona: if they were vnequall and oblique, the heat was the leſſe, as towards both Poles, which reaſon is very good and ſubſtantiall: for the perpendicular beames reflect and reuerberate in themſelues, ſo that the heat is doubled, euery beame ſtriking twice, & by vniting are multiplied, and continue ſtrong in forme of a Columne. But in our Latitude of 50. and 60. degrees, the Sunne beames deſcend oblique and ſlanting wiſe, and ſo ſtrike but once and depart, and therefore our heat is the leſſe for any effect that the Angle of the Sunne beames make. Yet becauſe wee haue a longer continuance of the Sunnes preſence aboue our Horizon then they haue vnder the Equinoctial; by this continuance the heat is increaſed, for it ſhineth to vs 16. or 18. houres ſometime, when it continueth with them but twelue houres alwayes.

Heat is cauſed by two meanes that is by his maner of Angle and by his continuance.

Note this reaſon.

And againe, our night is very ſhort wherein cold vapours vſe to abound, being but ſixe or eight houres long, whereas theirs is alwayes twelue houres long, by which two aduantages of long dayes and ſhort nightes, though we want the equalitie of Angle, it commeth to paſſe that in Sommer our heat here is as great as theirs is there, as hath bene proued by experience, and is nothing diſſonant from good reaſon. Therefore whoſoeuer will rightly way the force of colde and heat in any region, muſt not onely conſider the Angle that the Sunne beames make, but alſo the continuance of the ſame aboue the Horizon. As firſt to them vnder the Equinoctiall the Sunne is twice a yeere at noone in their Zenith perpendicular ouer their heads, and therefore during the two houres of thoſe two dayes the heat is very vrgent, and ſo perhaps it will be in foure or fiue dayes more an houre euery day, vntill the Sunne in his proper motion haue croſſed the Equinoctiall; ſo that this extreme heat cauſed by the perpendicular Angle of the Sunne beames, endureth but two houres of two dayes in a yeere. But if any man ſay the Sunne may ſcalde a good while before and after it come to the Meridian, ſo farre foorth as reaſon leadeth, I am content to allow it, and therefore I will meaſure and proportion the Sunnes heat, by comparing the Angles there, with the Angles made here in England, becauſe this temperature is beſt knowen vnto vs. As for example, the 11. day of March, when vnder the Equinoctiall it is halfe houre paſt eight of the clocke in the morning, the Sunne will be in the Eaſt about 38. degrees aboue the Horizon, becauſe there it riſeth alwayes at ſixe of the clocke, and mooueth euery houre 15. degrees, and ſo high very neere will it be with vs at London the ſaid eleuenth day of March at noone. And therefore looke what force the Sunne hath with vs at noone, the eleuenth of March, the ſame force it ſeemeth to haue vnder the Equinoctial at half an houre paſt eight in the morning, or rather leſſe force vnder the Equinoctiall. For with vs the Sunne had bene already ſixe houres aboue the Horizon, and ſo had purified and clenſed all the vapours, and thereby his force encreaſed at noone; but vnder the Equinoctiall, the Sunne hauing bene vp but two houres and an halfe, had ſufficient to doe, to purge and conſume the cold and moyſt vapours of the long night paſt, and as yet had wrought no effect of heate. And therefore I may boldly pronounce, that there is much leſſe heate at halfe an houre paſt eight vnder the Equinoctiall, then is with vs at noone; à fortiori. But in March we are not onely contented to haue the Sunne ſhining, but we greatly deſire the ſame. Likewiſe the 11 of Iune, the Sunne in our Meridian is 62 degrees high at London: and vnder the Equinoctiall it is ſo high after 10 of the clocke, and ſeeing then it is beneficial with vs; à fortiori it is beneficiall to them after 10 of the clocke.

And thus haue wee meaſured the force of the Sunnes greateſt heate, the hotteſt dayes in the yeere, vnder the Equinoctiall, that is in March and September, from ſixe till after tenne of the clocke in the morning, and from two vntill Sunne ſet. And this is concluded, by reſpecting onely the firſt cauſe of heate, which is the conſideration of the Angle of the Sunne beames, by a certaine ſimilitude, that whereas the Sunne ſhineth neuer aboue twelue houres, more then eight of them would bee coole and pleaſant euen to vs, much more to them that are acquainted alwayes with ſuch warme places. So there remaineth leſſe then foure houres of any exceſſiue heate, and that onely in the two Sommer dayes of the yeere, that is the eleuenth day of March, and the fourteenth of September: for vnder the Equinoctiall they haue two Sommers, the one in March, and the other in September, which are our Spring and Autumne: and likewiſe two Winters, in Iune and December, which are our Sommer and Winter, as may well appeare to him that hath onely taſted the principles of the Sphere. But if the Sunne bee in either Tropicke, or approching neere thereunto, then may wee more eaſily meaſure the force of his Meridian altitude, that it ſtriketh vpon the Equinoctiall. As for example, the twelfth of Iune the Sunne will be in the firſt degree of Cancer. Then looke what force the heate of the Sunne hath vnder the Equinoctiall, the ſame force and greater it hath in all that Parallel, where the Pole is eleuated betweene fourtie and ſeuen, and fourtie and eight degrees. And therefore Paris in France the twelfth day of Iune ſuſtaineth more heate of the Sunne, then Saint Thomas Iland lying neere the ſame Meridian doeth likewiſe at noone, or the Ilands Taprobana, Moluccæ, or the firme lande of Peru in America, which all lye vnderneath the Equinoctiall. For vpon the twelfth day of Iune aforeſaide, the Sunne beames at noone doe make an Iſoſcheles Triangle, whoſe Vertex is the Center of the Sunne, the Baſis a line extended from Saint Thomas Iland vnder the Equinoctiall, vnto Paris in France neere the ſame Meridian: therefore the two Angles of the Baſe muſt needs be equal per 5. primi, Ergo the force of the heat equal, if there were no other cauſe then the reaſon of the Angle, as the olde Philoſophers haue appointed. But becauſe at Paris the Sunne riſeth two houres before it riſeth to them vnder the Equinoctiall, and ſetteth likewiſe two houres after them, by meanes of the obliquitie of the Horizon, in which time of the Sunnes preſence foure houres in one place more then the other, it worketh ſome effect more in one place then in the other, and being of equall height at noone, it muſt then needs follow to be more hote in the Parallel of Paris, then it is vnder the Equinoctiall.

Paris in France is as hote as vnder the Equinoctiall in Iune.

In Iune is greater heat at Paris then vnder the Equinoctial.

Alſo this is an other reaſon, that when the Sunne ſetteth to them vnder the Equinoctiall, it goeth very deepe and lowe vnder their Horizon, almoſt euen to their Antipodes, whereby their twilights are very ſhort, and their nights are made very extreeme darke and long, and ſo the moyſture and coldneſſe of the long nights wonderfully encreaſeth, ſo that at length the Sunne riſing can hardly in many houres conſume and driue away the colde humours and moyſt vapours of the night paſt, which is cleane contrary in the Parallel of Paris: for the Sunne goeth vnder their Horizon but very little, after a ſloping ſort, whereby their nights are not very darke, but lightſome, as looking into the North in a cleare night without cloudes it doeth manifeſtly appeare, their twilights are long: for the Parallel of Cancer cutteth not the Horizon of Paris at right Angles, but at Angles very vneuen, and vnlike as it doeth the Horizon of the Equinoctiall. Alſo the Sommer day at Paris is ſixteene houres long, and the night but eight: where contrarywiſe vnder the Equinoctiall the day is but twelue houres long, and ſo long is alſo the night, in whatſoeuer Parallel the Sunne be: and therefore looke what oddes and difference of proportion there is betweene the Sunnes abode aboue the Horizon in Paris, and the abode it hath vnder the Equinoctiall, (it being in Cancer) the ſame proportion would ſeeme to be betweene the heate of the one place, place and heate of the other: for other things (as the Angle of the whole arke of the Sunnes progreſſe that day in both places) are equall.

The twilights are ſhorter, and the nights darker vnder the Equinoctial then at Paris.

But vnder the Equinoctiall the preſence and abode of the Sunne aboue the Horizon is equall to his abſence, and abode vnder the Horizon, eche being twelue houres. And at Paris the continuance and abode of the Sunne is aboue the Horizon ſixteene houres long, and but eight houres abſence, which proportion is double, from which if the proportion of the equalitie be ſubtracted to finde the difference, there will remaine ſtill a double proportion, whereby it ſeemeth to follow, that in Iune the heate at Paris were double to the heate vnder the Equinoctiall. For (as I haue ſaid) the Angles of the Sunne beames are in all points equall, and the cauſe of difference is, Mora Solis ſupra Horizontem, the ſtay of the Sunne in the one Horizon more then in the other. Therefore, whoſoeuer could finde out in what proportion the Angle of the Sunne beames heateth, and what encreaſe the Sunnes continuance doeth adde thereunto, it might expreſly be ſet downe, what force of heat and cold is in all regions.

In what proportion the Angle of the Sun beames heateth.

Thus you partly ſee by comparing a Climate to vs well knowen, and familiarly acquainted by like height of the Sunne in both places, that vnder the Equinoctiall in Iune is no exceſſiue heat, but a temperate aire rather tending to cold. For as they haue there for the moſt part a continuall moderate heat, ſo yet ſometime they are a little pinched with colde, and vſe the benefite of fire as well as we, eſpecially in the euening when they goe to bed, for as they lye in hanging beds tied faſt in the vpper part of the houſe, ſo will they haue fires made on both ſides their bed, of which two fires, the one they deuiſe ſuperſtitiouſly to driue away ſpirits, and the other to keepe away from them the coldneſſe of the nights.

They vſe and haue neede of fire vnder the Equinoctiall.

Alſo in many places of Torrida Zona, eſpecially in the higher landes ſomewhat mountainous, the people a litle ſhrincke at the cold, and are often forced to prouide themſelues clothing, ſo that the Spaniards haue found in the Weſt Indies many people clothed, eſpecially in Winter, whereby appeareth, that with their heat there is colde intermingled, elſe would they neuer prouide this remedy of clothing, which to them is rather a griefe and trouble then otherwiſe. For when they goe to warres, they will put off all their apparell, thinking it to be comberſome, and will alwayes goe naked, that they thereby might be more nimble in their fight.

Colde intermingled with heate vnder the Equinoctial.

Some there be that thinke the middle Zone extreme hot, becauſe the people of the countrey can, and doe liue without clothing, wherein they childiſhly are deceiued: for our Clime rather tendeth to extremitie of colde, becauſe wee cannot liue without clothing: for this our double lining, furring, and wearing ſo many clothes, is a remedy againſt extremitie, and argueth not the goodneſſe of the habitation, but inconuenience and iniury of colde: and that is rather the moderate, temperate, and delectable habitation, where none of theſe troubleſome things are required, but that we may liue naked and bare, as nature bringeth vs foorth.

Others againe imagine the middle Zone to be extreme hot, becauſe the people of Africa, eſpecially the Ethiopians, are ſo cole blacke, and their haire like wooll curled ſhort, which blackneſſe and curled haire they ſuppoſe to come onely by the parching heat of the Sunne, which how it ſhould be poſſible I cannot ſee: for euen vnder the Equinoctiall in America, and in the Eaſt Indies, and in the Ilands Moluccæ the people are not blacke, but tauney and white, with long haire vncurled as wee haue, ſo that if the Ethiopians blackneſſe came by the heat of the Sunne, why ſhould not thoſe Americans and Indians alſo be as blacke as they, ſeeing the Sunne is equally diſtant from them both, they abiding in one Parallel: for the concaue and conuexe Superficies of the Orbe of the Sunne is concentrike, and equidiſtant to the earth; except any man ſhould imagine ſomewhat of Aux Solis, and Oppoſitum, which indifferently may be applied aſwel to the one place as to the other. But the Sunne is thought to giue no otherwiſe heat, but by way of Angle in reflection, and not by his neereneſſe to the earth: for throughout all Africa, yea in the middeſt of the middle Zone, and in all other places vpon the tops of mountaines there lyeth continuall ſnow, which is neerer to the Orbe of the Sunne, then the people are in the valley, by ſo much as the height of theſe mountaines amount vnto, and yet the Sunne notwithſtanding his neereneſſe, can not melt the ſnow for want of conuenient place of reflections. Alſo the middle region of the aire where all the haile, froſt, and ſnow is engendred, is neerer vnto the Sunne then the earth is, and yet there continueth perpetuall cold, becauſe there is nothing that the Sunne beames may reflect againſt, whereby appeareth that the neereneſſe of the body of the Sunne worketh nothing.

Ethiopians blacke, with curled haire.

The Sunne heateth not by his neereneſſe, but onely by reflection.

Therefore to returne againe to the blacke Moores. I my ſelfe haue ſeene an Ethiopian as blacke as a cole brought into England, who taking a faire Engliſh woman to wife, begat a ſonne in all reſpects as blacke as the father was, although England were his natiue countrey, and an Engliſh woman his mother: whereby it ſeemeth this blacknes proceedeth rather of ſome natural infection of that man, which was ſo ſtrong, that neither the nature of the Clime, neither the good complexion of the mother concurring, coulde any thing alter, and therefore wee cannot impute it to the nature of the Clime. And for a more freſh example, our people of Meta Incognita (of whom and for whom this diſcourſe is taken in hande) that were brought this laſt yeere into England, were all generally of the ſame colour that many nations be, lying in the middeſt of the middle Zone. And this their colour was not onely in the face which was ſubiect to Sunne and aire, but alſo in their bodies, which were ſtil couered with garments as ours are, yea the very ſucking childe of twelue moneths age had his ſkinne of the very ſame colour that moſt haue vnder the Equinoctiall, which thing cannot proceed by reaſon of the Clime, for that they are at leaſt ten degrees more towardes the North then wee in England are, No, the Sunne neuer commeth neere their Zenith by fourtie degrees: for in effect, they are within three or foure degrees of that which they call the froſen Zone, and as I ſaide, fourtie degrees from the burning Zone, whereby it followeth, that there is ſome other cauſe then the Climate or the Sonnes perpendicular reflexion, that ſhould cauſe the Ethiopians great blackneſſe. And the moſt probable cauſe to my iudgement is, that this blackeneſſe proceedeth of ſome naturall infection of the firſt inhabitants of that Countrey, and ſo all the whole progenie of them deſcended, are ſtill polluted with the ſame blot of infection. Therefore it ſhall not bee farre from our purpoſe, to examine the firſt originall of theſe blacke men, and howe by a lineall diſcent they haue hitherto continued thus blacke.

The cauſe of the Ethiopians blackneſſe.

The Arke of Noe.

Chus the ſonne of Cham accurſed.

Africa was called Chameſis.

It manifeſtly and plainely appeareth by holy Scripture, that after the generall inundation and ouerflowing of the earth, there remained no moe men aliue, but Noe and his three ſonnes, Sem, Cham, and Iaphet, who onely were left to poſſeſſe and inhabite the whole face of the earth: therefore all the ſundry diſcents that vntil this preſent day haue inhabited the whole earth, muſt needes come of the off-ſpring either of Sem, Cham, or Iaphet, as the onely ſonnes of Noe, who all three being white, and their wiues alſo, by courſe of nature ſhould haue begotten and brought foorth white children. But the enuie of our great and continuall enemie the wicked Spirite is ſuch, that as hee coulde not ſuffer our olde father Adam to liue in the felicitie and Angelike ſtate wherein hee was firſt created, but tempting him, ſought and procured his ruine and fall: ſo againe, finding at this flood none but a father and three ſonnes liuing, hee ſo cauſed one of them to tranſgreſſe and diſobey his fathers commaundement, that after him all his poſteritie ſhoulde bee accurſed. The fact of diſobedience was this: When Noe at the commandement of God had made the Arke and entred therein, and the floud-gates of heauen were opened, ſo that the whole face of the earth, euery tree and mountaine was couered with abundance of water, hee ſtraitely commaunded his ſonnes and their wiues, that they ſhould with reuerence and feare beholde the iuſtice and mighty power of God, and that during the time of the floud while they remained in the Arke, they ſhould vſe continencie, and abſtaine from carnall copulation with their wiues: and many other precepts hee gaue vnto them, and admonitions touching the iuſtice of God, in reuenging ſinne, and his mercie in deliuering them, who nothing deſerued it. Which good inſtructions and exhortations notwithſtanding his wicked ſonne Cham diſobeyed, and being perſwaded that the firſt childe borne after the flood (by right and Lawe of nature) ſhould inherite and poſſeſſe all the dominions of the earth, hee contrary to his fathers commaundement while they were yet in the Arke, vſed company with his wife, and craftily went about thereby to diſ-inherite the off-ſpring of his other two brethren: for the which wicked and deteſtable fact, as an example for contempt of Almightie God, and diſobedience of parents, God would a ſonne ſhould bee borne whoſe name was Chus, who not onely it ſelfe, but all his poſteritie after him ſhould bee ſo blacke and lothſome, that it might remaine a ſpectacle of diſobedience to all the worlde. And of this blacke and curſed Chus came all theſe blacke Moores which are in Africa, for after the water was vaniſhed from off the face of the earth, and that the lande was dry, Sem choſe that part of the land to inhabite in, which nowe is called Aſia, and Iaphet had that which now is called Europa, wherein wee dwell, and Africa remained for Cham and his blacke ſonne Chus, and was called Chameſis after the fathers name, being perhaps a curſed, dry, ſandy, and vnfruitfull ground, fit for ſuch a generation to inhabite in.

Thus you ſee, that the cauſe of the Ethiopians blackneſſe is the curſe and naturall infection of blood, and not the diſtemperature of the Climate; Which alſo may bee prooued by this example, that theſe blacke men are found in all parts of Africa, as well without the Tropickes, as within, euen vnto Capo de buona Speranza Southward, where, by reaſon of the Sphere, ſhould be the ſame temperature that is in Sicilia, Morea and Candie, where al be of very good complexions. Wherefore I conclude, that the blackneſſe proceedeth not of the hoteneſſe of the Clime, but as I ſaide, of the infection of blood, and therefore this their argument gathered of the Africans blackneſſe is not able to deſtroy the temperature of the middle Zone. Wee may therefore very well bee aſſertained, that vnder the Equinoctiall is the moſt pleaſant and delectable place of the worlde to dwell in; where although the Sunne for two houres in a yeere be direct ouer their heads, and therefore the heate at that time ſomewhat of force, yet becauſe it commeth ſo ſeldome, and continueth ſo ſmall a time, when it commeth, it is not to bee wayed; but rather the moderate heate of other times in all the yeere to be remembred. And if the heate at any time ſhould in the ſhort day waxe ſomewhat vrgent, the coldneſſe of the long night there would eaſily refreſh it, according as Honterus ſayeth, ſpeaking of the temperature vnder the Equinoctiall.

Greateſt temperature vnder the Equinoctiall.

Quódque die ſolis violento incanduit æſtu,
Humida nox reficit, paribuſque refrigerat horis.

If the heate of the Sunne in the day time doe burne or parch any thing, the moyſture of the night doeth coole and refreſh the ſame againe, the Sunne being as long abſent in the night, as it was preſent in the day.

Alſo our Authour of the Sphere, Iohannes de Sacro Boſco, in the Chapter of the Zodiacke, deriueth the Etymologie of Zodiacus, of the Greeke word Zoe, which in Latine ſignifieth Vita, life; for out of Ariſtotle hee alleadgeth, that Secundum acceſſum & receſſum ſolis in Zodiaco, fiunt generationes & corruptiones in rebus inferioribus: according to the Sunnes going to and fro in the Zodiake, the inferiour bodies take their cauſes of generation and corruption. Then it followeth, that where there is moſt going too and fro, there is moſt generation and corruption: which muſt needes be betweene the two Tropickes; for there the Sunne goeth too and fro moſt, and no where elſe but there. Therefore betweene the two Tropikes, that is, in the middle Zone, is greateſt increaſe, multiplication, generation, and corruption of things, which alſo wee finde by experience; for there is Summer twice in the yeere, and twice Winter, ſo that they haue two Harueſts in the yeere, and continuall Spring. Seeing then the middle Zone falleth out ſo temperate, it reſteth to declare where the hoteſt part of the world ſhould bee, for we finde ſome places more hote then others.

Vnder the Equinoctiall is greateſt generation.

To anſwere this doubt, reaſon perſwadeth, the hoteſt place in the world to bee vnder and about the two Tropickes; for there more then in any other place doe both the cauſes of heate concurre, that is, the perpendicular falling of the Sunne beames, at right angles, and a greater continuance of the Sunne aboue the Horizon, the Pole there being eleuated three or foure and twentie degrees. And as before I concluded, that though the Sunne were perpendicular to them vnder the Equinoctiall, yet becauſe the ſame continued but a ſmall time, (their dayes being ſhort, and their nights long) and the ſpeedie departure of the Sunne from their Zenith, becauſe of the ſuddeine croſſing of the Zodiake with the Equinoctiall, and that by ſuch continuall courſe and recourſe of hote and colde, the temperature grew moderate, and very well able to bee endured: ſo nowe to them vnder the two Tropickes, the Sunne hauing once by his proper motion declined twentie degrees from the Equinoctial, beginneth to draw neere their Zenith, which may bee (as before) about the eleuenth day of May, and then beginneth to ſende his beames almoſt at right Angles, about which time the Sunne entreth into the firſt degree of Gemini, and with this almoſt right Angle the Sunne beames will continue vntill it bee paſt Cancer, that is, the ſpace of two moneths euery day at noone, almoſt perpendicular ouer their heades, being then the time of Solſtitium Aeſtiuale: which ſo long continuance of the Sunne about their Zenith may cauſe an extreeme heate (if any be in the world) but of neceſſitie farre more heate then can bee vnder the Equinoctiall, where the Sunne hath no ſuch long abode in the Zenith, but paſſeth away there-hence very quickly. Alſo vnder the Tropickes, the day is longer by an houre and a halfe, then it is vnder the Equinoctiall; wherefore the heate of the Sunne hauing a longer time of operation, muſt needes be encreaſed, eſpecially ſeeing the night wherein colde and moyſture doe abound vnder the Tropickes, is leſſe then it is vnder the Equinoctiall. Therefore I gather, that vnder the Tropickes is the hoteſt place, not onely of Torrida Zona, but of any other part of the world, eſpecially becauſe there both cauſes of heate doe concurre, that is, the perpendicular falling of the Sunne beames two moneths together, and the longer abode of the Sunnes preſence aboue the Horiſon. And by this meanes more at large is prooued, that Marochus in Summer is farre more hote, then at any time vnder the Equinoctiall, becauſe it is ſituate ſo neere the Tropick of Cancer, and alſo for the length of their dayes. Neither yet do I thinke, that the Regions ſituate vnder the Tropicks are not habitable, for they are found to be very fruitfull alſo; although Marochus and ſome other parts of Afrike neere the Tropike for the drineſſe of the natiue ſandie ſoile, and ſome accidents may ſeeme to ſome to be intemperate for ouer much heat. For Ferdinandus Ouiedus ſpeaking of Cuba and Hiſpaniola, Ilands of America, lying hard vnder, or by the Tropike of Cancer, ſaith, that theſe Ilands haue as good paſture for cattell, as any other countrey in the world.

Alſo, they haue moſt holeſome and cleare water, and temperate aire, by reaſon whereof the heards of beaſtes are much bigger, fatter, and of better taſte, then any in Spaine, becauſe of the ranke paſture, whoſe moyſture is better digeſted in the blade or graſſe, by continuall and temperate heate of the Sunne, whereby being made more fat and vnctious, it is of better and more ſtedfaſt nouriſhment: For continuall and temperate heate doeth not onely draw much moyſture out of the earth to the nouriſhment of ſuch things as growe, and are engendred in that Clime, but doeth alſo by moderation preſerue the ſame from putrifying, digeſting alſo, and condenſating or thickning the ſaid moyſt nouriſhment into a gummie and vnctious ſubſtance, whereby appeareth alſo, that vnder the Tropikes is both holeſome, fruitfull, and pleaſant habitation, whereby laſtly it followeth, that all the middle Zone, which vntill of late dayes hath bene compted and called the burning, broyling, and parched Zone, is now found to be the moſt delicate, temperate, commodious, pleaſing, and delectable part of the world, and eſpecially vnder the Equinoctiall.

Vnder the Tropickes is moderate temperature.

Hauing now ſufficiently at large declared the temperature of the middle Zone, it remaineth to ſpeake ſomewhat alſo of the moderate and continuall heate in colde Regions, as well in the night as in the day all the Sommer long, and alſo how theſe Regions are habitable to the inhabitants of the ſame, contrary to the opinion of the olde writers.

Of the temperature of colde Regions all the Sommer long, and alſo how in Winter the ſame is habitable, eſpecially to the inhabitants thereof.

The colde Regions of the world are thoſe, which tending toward the Poles Arctike, and Antarctike, are without the circuite or boundes of the ſeuen Climates: which aſſertion agreeable to the opinion of the olde Writers, is found and ſet out in our authour of the Sphere, Iohannes de Sacroboſco, where hee plainely ſaith, that without the ſeuenth Climate, which is bounded by a Parallel paſſing at fiftie degrees in Latitude, all the habitation beyonde is diſcommodious and intollerable. But Gemma Friſius a late writer finding England and Scotland to be without the compaſſe of thoſe Climates, wherein hee knewe to bee very temperate and good habitation, added thereunto two other Climates, the vttermoſt Parallel whereof paſſeth by 56. degrees in Latitude, and therein comprehendeth ouer and aboue the firſt computation, England, Scotland, Denmarke, Moſcouia, &c. which all are rich and mightie kingdomes.

Nine Climates.

The olde writers perſwaded by bare coniecture, went about to determine of thoſe places, by comparing them to their owne complexions, becauſe they felt them to bee hardly tollerable to themſelues, and ſo took thereby an argument of the whole habitable earth; as if a man borne in Marochus, or ſome other part of Barbarie, ſhould at the latter end of Sommer vpon the ſuddeine, either naked, or with his thinne veſture, bee brought into England, hee would iudge this Region preſently not to bee habitable, becauſe hee being brought vp in ſo warme a Countrey, is not able here to liue, for ſo ſuddeine an alteration of the colde aire: but if the ſame man had come at the beginning of Sommer, and ſo afterward by little and little by certaine degrees, had felt and acquainted himſelfe with the froſt of Autumne, it would haue ſeemed by degrees to harden him, and ſo to make it farre more tollerable, and by vſe after one yeere or two, the aire would ſeeme to him more temperate. It was compted a great matter in the olde time, that there was a braſſe pot broken in ſunder with froſen water in Pontus, which after was brought and ſhewed in Delphis, in token of a miraculous colde region and winter, and therefore conſecrated to the Temple of Apollo.

A compariſon betweene Marochus and England.

This effect being wrought in the Parallel of fourtie three degrees in Latitude, it was preſently counted a place very hardly and vneaſily to be inhabited for the great colde. And how then can ſuch men define vpon other Regions very farre without that Parallel, whether they were inhabited or not, ſeeing that in ſo neere a place they ſo groſſely miſtooke the matter, and others their followers being contented with the inuentions of the olde Authours, haue perſiſted willingly in the ſame opinion, with more confidence then conſideration of the cauſe: ſo lightly was that opinion receiued, as touching the vnhabitable Clime neere and vnder the Poles.

Therefore I am at this preſent to proue, that all the land lying betweene the laſt climat euen vnto the point directly vnder either poles, is or may be inhabited, eſpecially of ſuch creatures as are ingendred and bred therein. For indeed it is to be confeſſed, that ſome particular liuing creature cannot liue in euery particular place or region, eſpecially with the ſame ioy and felicitie, as it did where it was firſt bred, for the certeine agreement of nature that is betweene the place and the thing bred in that place; as appeareth by the Elephant, which being tranſlated and brought out of the ſecond or third climat, though they may liue, yet will they neuer ingender or bring forth yong. Alſo we ſee the like in many kinds of plants and herbs; for example, the Orange trees, although in Naples they bring forth fruit abundantly, in Rome and Florence they will beare onely faire greene leaues, but not any fruit: and tranſlated into England, they will hardly beare either flowers, fruit, or leaues, but are the next Winter pinched and withered with colde: yet it followeth not for this, that England, Rome, and Florence ſhould not be habitable.

All the North regions are habitable.

Elephant.

Orange tree.

In the prouing of theſe colde regions habitable, I ſhalbe very ſhort, becauſe the ſame reaſons ſerue for this purpoſe, which were alleged before in the prouing the middle Zone to be temperate, eſpecially ſeeing all heat and colde proceed from the Sunne, by the meanes either of the Angle which his beames do make with the Horizon, or els by the long or ſhort continuance of the Suns preſence aboue ground: ſo that if the Sunnes beames do beat perpendicularly at right Angles, then there is one cauſe of heat, and if the Sunne do alſo long continue aboue the Horizon, then the heat thereby is much increaſed by acceſſe of this other cauſe, & ſo groweth to a kinde of extremity. And theſe two cauſes, as I ſayd before, do moſt concurre vnder the two Tropicks, and therefore there is the greateſt heat of the world. And likewiſe, where both theſe cauſes are moſt abſent, there is greateſt want of heat, and increaſe of colde (ſeeing that colde is nothing but the priuation and abſence of heat) and if one cauſe be wanting, and the other preſent, the effect will grow indifferent. Therefore this is to be vnderſtood, that the neerer any region is to the Equinoctiall, the higher the Sunne doth riſe ouer their heads at noone, and ſo maketh either right or neere right Angles, but the Sunne tarieth with them ſo much the ſhorter time, and cauſeth ſhorter dayes, with longer and colder nights, to reſtore the domage of the day paſt, by reaſon of the moiſture conſumed by vapour. But in ſuch regions, ouer the which the Sunne riſeth lower (as in regions extended towards either pole) it maketh there vnequall Angles, but the Sunne continueth longer, and maketh longer dayes, and cauſeth ſo much ſhorter and warmer nights, as retaining warme vapours of the day paſt. For there are found by experience Summer nights in Scotland and Gothland very hot, when vnder the Equinoctiall they are found very cold. This benefit of the Sunnes long continuance & increaſe of the day, doth augment ſo much the more in colde regions as they are nerer the poles, and ceaſeth not increaſing vntill it come directly vnder the point of the pole Articke, where the Sunne continueth aboue ground the ſpace of ſixe moneths or halfe a yere together, and ſo the day is halfe a yere long, that is the time of the Sunnes being in the North ſignes, from the firſt degree of Aries vntill the laſt of Virgo, that is all the time from our 10 day of March vntill the 14 of September. The Sunne therfore during the time of theſe ſixe moneths without any offence or hindrance of the night, giueth his influence vpon thoſe lands with heat that neuer ceaſeth during that time, which maketh to the great increaſe of Summer, by reaſon of the Sunnes continuance. Therefore it followeth, that though the Sunne be not there very high ouer their heads, to cauſe right angle beames, and to giue great heat, yet the Sun being there ſometime almoſt 24 degrees high doth caſt a conuenient and meane heat, which there continueth without hindrance of the night the ſpace of ſixe moneths (as is before ſayd) during which time there followeth to be a conuenient, moderate and temperate heat: or els rather it is to be ſuſpected the heat there to be very great, both for continuance, and alſo, Quia virtus vnita creſcit, the vertue and ſtrength of heat vnited in one increaſeth. If then there be ſuch a moderate heat vnder the poles, and the ſame to continue ſo long time; what ſhould moue the olde writers to ſay there cannot be place for habitation. And that the certainty of this temperate heat vnder both the poles might more manifeſtly appeare, let vs conſider the poſition & quality of the ſphere, the length of the day, and ſo gather the height of the Sunne at all times, and by conſequent the quantity of his angle, and ſo laſtly the ſtrength of his heat.

Two cauſes of heat.

Hote nights nere the pole.

Colde nights vnder the Equinoctiall.

One day of ſixe moneths.

Moderate heat vnder ẏ poles.

Thoſe lands and regions lying vnder the pole, and hauing the pole for their Zenith, muſt needs haue the Equinoctial circle for their Horizon: therefore the Sun entring into the North ſignes, and deſcribing euery 24 houres a parallel to the Equinoctiall by the diurnall motion of Primum mobile, the ſame parallels muſt needs be wholly aboue the Horizon: and ſo looke how many degrees there are from the firſt of Aries to the laſt of Virgo, ſo many whole reuolutions there are aboue their Horizon that dwell vnder the pole, which amount to 182, and ſo many of our dayes the

Horizon and Equinoctiall all one vnder the pole.

the Sunne continueth with them. During which time they haue there continuall day and light, without any hinderance of moiſt nights. Yet it is to be noted, that the Sunne being in the firſt degree of Aries, and laſt degree of Virgo, maketh his reuolution in the very horizon, ſo that in theſe 24 houres halfe the body of the Sunne is aboue the horizon, and the other halfe is vnder his only center, deſcribing both the horizon and the equinoctiall circle.

London.

And therefore ſeeing the greateſt declination of the Sunne is almoſt 24 degrees, it followeth, his greateſt height in thoſe countreys to be almoſt 24 degrees. And ſo high is the Sun at noone to vs in London about the 29 of October, being in the 15 degree of Scorpio, and likewiſe the 21 of January being in the 15 of Aquarius. Therefore looke what force the Sun at noone hath in London the 29 of October, the ſame force of heat it hath, to them that dwell vnder the pole, the ſpace almoſt of two moneths, during the time of the Summer ſolſtitium, and that without intermingling of any colde night; ſo that if the heat of the Sunne at noone could be well meaſured in London (which is very hard to do, becauſe of the long nights which ingender great moiſture and cold) then would manifeſtly appeare by expreſſe numbers the maner of the heat vnder the poles, which certainly muſt needs be to the inhabitants very commodious and profitable, if it incline not to ouermuch heat, and if moiſture do not want.

Commodious dwelling vnder the poles.

For as in October in England we finde temperate aire, and haue in our gardens hearbs and floures notwithſtanding our cold nights, how much more ſhould they haue the ſame good aire, being continuall without night. This heat of ours continueth but one houre, while the Sun is in that meridian, but theirs continueth a long time in one height. This our heat is weake, and by the coolenesse of the night vaniſheth, that heat is ſtrong, and by continuall acceſſe is ſtill increaſed and ſtrengthened. And thus by a ſimilitude of the equall height of the Sun in both places appeareth the commodious and moderate heat of the regions vnder the poles.

And ſurely I cannot thinke that the diuine prouidence hath made any thing vncommunicable, but to haue giuen ſuch order to all things, that one way or other the ſame ſhould be imployed, and that euery thing and place ſhould be tollerable to the next: but eſpecially all things in this lower world be giuen to man to haue dominion and vſe thereof. Therefore we need no longer to doubt of the temperate and commodious habitation vnder the poles during the time of Summer.

The nights vnder the pole.

But all the controuerſie conſiſteth in the Winter, for then the Sunne leaueth thoſe regions, and is no more ſeene for the ſpace of other ſixe moneths, in the which time all the Sunnes courſe is vnder their horizon for the ſpace of halfe a yere, and then thoſe regions (ſay ſome) muſt needs be deformed with horrible darkneſſe, and continuall night, which may be the cauſe that beaſts can not ſeeke their food, and that alſo the colde ſhould then be intollerable. By which double euils all liuing creatures ſhould be conſtrained to die, and were not able to indure the extremity and iniury of Winter, and famine inſuing thereof, but that all things ſhould periſh before the Summer following, when they ſhould bring foorth their brood and yoong, and that for theſe cauſes the ſayd Clime about the pole ſhould be deſolate and not habitable. To all which obiections may be anſwered in this maner: Firſt, that though the Sunne be abſent from them thoſe ſix moneths, yet it followeth not that there ſhould be ſuch extreme darkneſſe; for as the Sunne is departed vnder their horizon, ſo is it not farre from them: and not ſo ſoone as the Sunne falleth ſo ſuddenly commeth the darke night; but the euening doth ſubſtitute and prolong the day a good while after by twilight. After which time the reſidue of the night receiueth light of the Moone and Starres, vntill the breake of the day, which giueth alſo a certaine light before the Sunnes riſing; ſo that by theſe meanes the nights are ſeldome darke; which is verified in all parts of the world, but leaſt in the middle Zone vnder the Equinoctiall, where the twilights are ſhort, and the nights darker then in any other place, becauſe the Sunne goeth vnder their horizon ſo deepe, euen to their antipodes. We ſee in England in the Summer nights, when the Sunne goeth not farre vnder the horizon, that by the light of the Moone & Starres we may trauell all night, and if occaſion were, do ſome other labour alſo. And there is no man that doubteth whether our cattell can ſee to feed in the nights, ſeeing we are ſo well certified therof by our experience: and by reaſon of the ſphere our nights ſhould be darker then any time vnder the poles.

The Aſtronomers conſent that the Sunne deſcending from our vpper hemiſphere at the 18 parallel vnder the horizon maketh an end of twilight, ſo that at length the darke night inſueth, and that afterward in the morning the Sun approching againe within as many parallels, doth driue away the night by acceſſe of the twilight. Againe, by the poſition of the ſphere vnder the pole, the horizon, and the equinoctiall are all one. Theſe reuolutions therefore that are parallel to the equinoctiall are alſo parallel to the horizon, ſo that the Sunne deſcending vnder that horizon, and there deſcribing certaine parallels not farre diſtant, doth not bring darke nights to thoſe regions vntill it come to the parallels diſtant 18 degrees from the equinoctiall, that is, about the 21 degree of Scorpio, which will be about the 4 day of our Nouember, and after the Winter ſolſtitium, the Sunne returning backe againe to the 9 degree of Aquarius, which will be about the 19 of Ianuary; during which time onely, that is, from the 4 day of Nouember vntill the 19 day of Ianuary, which is about ſix weeks ſpace, thoſe regions do want the commodity of twilights: therefore, during the time of theſe ſayd ſix moneths of darkneſſe vnder the poles, the night is deſtitute of the benefit of the Sunne and the ſayd twilights onely for the ſpace of ſix weeks or thereabout. And yet neither this time of ſix weeks is without remedy from heauen; for the Moone with her increaſed light hath acceſſe at that time, and illuminateth the moneths lacking light euery one of themſelues ſeuerally halfe the courſe of that moneth, by whoſe benefit it commeth to paſſe that the night named extreame darke poſſeſſeth thoſe regions no longer then one moneth, neither that continually, or all at one time, but this alſo diuided into two ſorts of ſhorter nights, of the which either of them indureth for the ſpace of 15 dayes, and are illuminate of the Moone accordingly. And this reaſon is gathered out of the ſphere, whereby we may teſtifie that the Summers are warme and fruitfull, and the Winters nights vnder the pole are tolerable to liuing creatures. And if it be ſo that the Winter and time of darkneſſe there be very colde, yet hath not nature left them vnprouided therefore: for there the beaſts are couered with haire ſo much the thicker in how much the vehemency of colde is greater; by reaſon whereof the beſt and richeſt furres are brought out of the coldeſt regions. Alſo the fowles of theſe colde countreys haue thicker ſkinnes, thicker feathers, and more ſtored of downe then in other hot places. Our Engliſh men that trauell to S. Nicholas, and go a fiſhing to Wardhouſe, enter farre within the circle Arctike, and ſo are in the frozen Zone, and yet there, aſwell as in Iſland and all along thoſe Northerne Seas, they finde the greateſt ſtore of the greateſt fiſhes that are; as Whales, &c. and alſo abundance of meane fiſhes; as Herrings, Cods, Haddocks, Brets, &c. which argueth that the ſea as well as the land may be and is well frequented and inhabited in the colde countreys.

The regions vnder the poles want twilights but ſixe weeks.

Winter nights vnder the pole tolerable to liuing creatures

But ſome perhaps will maruell there ſhould be ſuch temperate places in the regions about the poles, when at vnder 62 degrees in latitude our captaine Frobiſher & his company were troubled with ſo many and ſo great mountaines of fleeting ice, with ſo great ſtormes of colde, with ſuch continuall ſnow on tops of mountaines, and with ſuch barren ſoile, there being neither wood nor trees, but low ſhrubs, and ſuch like. To all which obiections may be anſwered thus: Firſt, thoſe infinite Iſlands of ice were ingendred and congealed in time of Winter, and now by the great heat of Summer were thawed, and then by ebs, flouds, winds, and currents, were driuen to and fro, and troubled the fleet; ſo that this is an argument to proue the heat in Summer there to be great, that was able to thaw ſo monſtrous mountaines of ice. As for continuall ſnow on tops of mountaines, it is there no otherwiſe then is in the hoteſt part of the middle Zone, where alſo lieth great ſnow all the Summer long vpon tops of mountaines, becauſe there is not ſufficient ſpace for the Sunnes reflection, whereby the ſnow ſhould be molten. Touching the colde ſtormy winds and the barrenneſſe of the country, it is there as it is in Cornwall and Deuonſhire in England, which parts though we know to be fruitfull and fertile, yet on the North ſide thereof all alongſt the coaſt within ſeuen or eight miles off the ſea there can neither hedge nor tree grow, although they be diligently by arte husbanded and ſeene vnto: and the cauſe thereof are the Northerne driuing winds, which comming from the ſea are ſo bitter and ſharpe that they kill all the yoong & tender plants, and ſuffer ſcarſe any thing to grow; and ſo is it in the Iſlands of Meta incognita, which are ſubiect moſt to Eaſt & Northeaſtern winds, which the laſt yere choaked vp the paſſage ſo with ice that the fleet could hardly recouer their port. Yet notwithſtanding all the obiections that may be, the countrey is habitable; for there are men, women, children, & ſundry kind of beaſts in great plenty, as beares, deere, hares, foxes and dogs: all kinde of flying fowles, as ducks, ſeamewes, wilmots, partridges, larks, crowes, hawks, and ſuch like, as in the third booke you ſhall vnderſtand more at large. Then it appeareth that not onely the middle Zone but alſo the Zones about the poles are habitable.

An obiection of Meta incognita.

Meta incognita inhabited.

Which thing being well conſidered, and familiarly knowen to our Generall captaine Frobiſher, aſwell for that he is thorowly furniſhed of the knowledge of the ſphere and all other ſkilles appertaining to the arte of nauigation, as alſo for the confirmation he hath of the ſame by many yeres experience both by ſea and land, and being perſuaded of a new and neerer paſſage to Cataya then by Capo de buona Sperança, which the Portugals yerely vſe: he began firſt with himſelfe to deuiſe, and then with his friends to conferre, and layed a plaine plat vnto them that that voyage was not onely poſſible by the Northweſt, but alſo he could proue eaſie to be performed. And further, he determined and reſolued with himſelfe to go make full proofe thereof, and to accompliſh or bring true certificate of the truth, or els neuer to returne againe, knowing this to be the only thing of the world that was left yet vndone, whereby a notable minde might be made famous and fortunate. But although his will were great to performe this notable voyage, whereof he had conceiued in his minde a great hope by ſundry ſure reaſons and ſecret intelligence, which here for ſundry cauſes I leaue vntouched, yet he wanted altogether meanes and ability to ſet forward, and performe the ſame. Long time he conferred with his priuate friends of theſe ſecrets, and made alſo many offers for the performing of the ſame in effect vnto ſundry merchants of our countrey aboue 15 yeres before he attempted the ſame, as by good witneſſe ſhall well appeare (albeit ſome euill willers which challenge to themſelues the fruits of other mens labours haue greatly iniured him in the reports of the ſame, ſaying that they haue bene the firſt authours of that action, and that they haue learned him the way, which themſelues as yet haue neuer gone) but perceiuing that hardly he was hearkened vnto of the merchants, which neuer regard vertue without ſure, certaine, and preſent gaines, he repaired to the Court (from whence, as from the fountaine of our Common wealth, all good cauſes haue their chiefe increaſe and maintenance) and there layed open to many great eſtates and learned men the plot and ſumme of his deuice. And amongſt many honourable minds which fauoured his honeſt and commendable enterpriſe, he was ſpecially bound and beholding to the right honourable Ambroſe Dudley earle of Warwicke, whoſe fauourable minde and good diſpoſition hath alwayes bene ready to countenance and aduance all honeſt actions with the authours and executers of the ſame: and ſo by meanes of my lord his honourable countenance he receiued ſome comfort of his cauſe, and by litle and litle, with no ſmall expenſe and paine brought his cauſe to ſome perfection, and had drawen together ſo many aduenturers and ſuch ſummes of money as might well defray a reaſonable charge to furniſh himſelfe to ſea withall.

He prepared two ſmall barks of twenty and fiue and twenty tunne a piece, wherein he intended to accompliſh his pretended voyage. Wherefore, being furniſhed with the foreſayd two barks, and one ſmall pinneſſe of ten tun burthen, hauing therein victuals and other neceſſaries for twelue moneths prouiſion, he departed vpon the ſayd voyage from Blacke-wall the 15 of Iune anno Domini 1576.

One of the barks wherein he went was named The Gabriel, and the other The Michael; and ſailing Northweſt from England vpon the 11 of Iuly he had ſight of an high and ragged land, which he iudged to be Friſland (whereof ſome authors haue made mention) but durſt not approch the ſame by reaſon of the great ſtore of ice that lay alongſt the coaſt, and the great miſts that troubled them not a litle. Not farre from thence he loſt company of his ſmall pinneſſe, which by meanes of the great ſtorme he ſuppoſed to be ſwallowed vp of the Sea, wherein he loſt onely foure men.

The Michael returned home.

Alſo the other barke named The Michael miſtruſting the matter, conueyed themſelues priuily away from him, and returned home, with great report that he was caſt away.

Frobiſhers firſt entrance within þ ſtraights.

The worthy captaine notwithſtanding theſe diſcomforts, although his maſt was ſprung, and his toppe maſt blowen ouerboord with extreame foule weather, continued his courſe towards the Northweſt, knowing that the ſea at length muſt needs haue an ending, & that ſome land ſhould haue a beginning that way; and determined therefore at the leaſt to bring true proofe what land and ſea the ſame might be ſo farre to the Northweſtwards, beyond any man that hath heretofore diſcouered. And the twentieth of Iuly he had ſight of an high land, which he called Queene Elizabeths Forland, after her Maieſties name. And ſailing more Northerly alongſt that coaſt, he deſcried another forland with a great gut, bay, or paſſage, diuiding as it were two maine lands or continents aſunder. There he met with ſtore of exceeding great ice all this coaſt along, and coueting ſtill to continue his courſe to the Northwards, was alwayes by contrary winde detained ouerthwart theſe ſtraights, and could not get beyond. Within few dayes after he perceiued the ice to be well conſumed and gone, either there ingulfed in by ſome ſwift currents or indrafts, carried more to the Southwards of the ſame ſtraights, or els conueyed ſome other way: wherefore he determined to make proofe of this place, to ſee how farre that gut had continuance, and whether he might carry himſelfe thorow the ſame into ſome open ſea on the backe ſide, whereof he conceiued no ſmall hope, and ſo entred the ſame the one and twentieth of Iuly, and paſſed aboue fifty leagues therein, as he reported, hauing vpon either hand a great maine or continent. And that land vpon his right hand as he ſailed Weſtward he iudged to be the continent of Aſia, and there to be diuided from the firme of America, which lieth vpon the left hand ouer againſt the ſame.

Frobiſhers ſtraights.

This place he named after his name, Frobiſhers ſtreights, like as Magellanus at þ Southweſt end of the world, hauing diſcouered the paſſage to the South ſea (where America is diuided from the continent of that land, which lieth vnder the South pole) and called the ſame ſtraights, Magellanes ſtraits.

After he had paſſed 60 leagues into this foreſayd ſtraight, he went aſhore, and found ſignes where fire had bene made.

He ſaw mightey deere that ſeemed to be mankinde, which ranne at him, and hardly he eſcaped wͭ his life in a narrow way, where he was faine to vſe defence and policy to ſaue his life.

Deere.

In this place he ſaw and perceiued ſundry tokens of the peoples reſorting thither. And being aſhore vpon the top of a hill, he perceiued a number of ſmall things fleeting in the ſea afarre off, which he ſuppoſed to be porpoſes or ſeales, or ſome kinde of ſtrange fiſh; but comming neerer, he diſcouered them to be men in ſmall boats made of leather. And before he could deſcend downe frō the hill, certaine of thoſe people had almoſt cut off his boat from him, hauing ſtollen ſecretly behinde the rocks for that purpoſe, where he ſpeedily haſted to his boat, and bent himſelfe to his halberd, and narrowly eſcaped the danger, and ſaued his boat. Afterwards he had ſundry conferences with them, and they came aboord his ſhip, and brought him ſalmon and raw fleſh and fiſh, and greedily deuoured the ſame before our mens faces. And to ſhew their agility, they tried many maſteries vpon the ropes of the ſhip after our mariners faſhion, and appeared to be very ſtrong of their armes, and nimble of their bodies. They exchanged coats of ſeales, and beares ſkinnes, and ſuch like, with our men; and receiued belles, looking glaſſes, and other toyes, in recompenſe thereof againe. After great curteſie, and many meetings, our mariners, contrary to their captaines direction, began more eaſily to truſt them; and fiue of our men going aſhore were by them intercepted with their boat, and were neuer ſince heard of to this day againe: ſo that the captaine being deſtitute of boat, barke, and all company, had ſcarſely ſufficient number to conduct backe his barke againe. He could now neither conuey himſelfe aſhore to reſcue his men (if he had bene able) for want of a boat; and againe the ſubtile traitours were ſo wary, as they would after that neuer come within our mens danger. The captaine notwithſtanding deſirous to bring ſome token from thence of his being there, was greatly diſcontented that he had not before apprehended ſome of them: and therefore to deceiue the deceiuers he wrought a prety policy; for knowing wel how they greatly delighted in our toyes, and ſpecially in belles, he rang a prety lowbell, making ſignes that he would giue him the ſame that would come and fetch it. And becauſe they would not come within his danger for feare, he flung one bell vnto them, which of purpoſe he threw ſhort, that it might fall into the ſea and be loſt. And to make them more greedy of the matter he rang a louder bell, ſo that in the end one of them came nere the ſhip ſide to receiue the bel; which when he thought to take at the captaines hand, he was thereby taken himſelfe: for the captaine being readily prouided let the bell fall, and caught the man faſt, and plucked him with maine force boat and all into his barke out of the ſea. Whereupon when he found himſelfe in captiuity, for very sholer and diſdaine he bit his tongue in twaine within his mouth: notwithſtanding, he died not thereof, but liued vntill he came in England, and then he died of cold which he had taken at ſea.

Taking of the firſt Sauage.

Now with this new pray (which was a ſufficient witneſſe of the captaines farre and tedious trauell towards the vnknowen parts of the world, as did well appeare by this ſtrange infidell, whoſe like was neuer ſeene, read, nor heard of before, and whoſe language was neither knowen nor vnderſtood of any) the ſayd captaine Frobiſher returned homeward, and arriued in England in Harwich the 2 of October following, and thence came to London 1576, where he was highly commended of all men for his great and notable attempt, but ſpecially famous for the great hope he brought of the paſſage to Cataya.

Frobiſhers returne.

And it is eſpecially to be remembred that at their firſt arriuall in thoſe parts there lay ſo great ſtore of ice all the coaſt along ſo thicke together, that hardly his boat could paſſe vnto the ſhore. At length, after diuers attempts he commanded his company, if by any poſſible meanes they could get aſhore, to bring him whatſoeuer thing they could firſt finde, whether it were liuing or dead, ſtocke or ſtone, in token of Chriſtian poſſeſſion, which thereby he tooke in behalfe of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſty, thinking that thereby he might iuſtify the hauing and inioying of the ſame things that grew in theſe vnknowen parts.

The taking poſſeſſion of Meta incognita.

Some of his company brought floures, ſome greene graſſe; and one brought a piece of blacke ſtone much like to a ſea cole in colour, which by the waight ſeemed to be ſome kinde of mettall or minerall. This was a thing of no account in the iudgement of the captaine at the firſt ſight; and yet for nouelty it was kept in reſpect of the place from whence it came.

How the ore was found by chance.

After his arriuall in London, being demanded of ſundry his friends what thing he had brought them home out of that countrey, he had nothing left to preſent thē withall but a piece of this blacke ſtone. And it fortuned a gentlewoman one of the aduenturers wiues to haue a piece therof, which by chance ſhe threw and burned in the fire, ſo long, that at the length being taken forth, and quenched in a litle vineger, it gliſtered with a bright marqueſſet of golde. Whereupon the matter being called in ſome queſtion, it was brought to certaine Goldfiners in London to make aſſay thereof, who gaue out that it held golde, and that very richly for the quantity. Afterwards, the ſame Goldfiners promiſed great matters thereof if there were any ſtore to be found, and offered themſelues to aduenture for the ſearching of thoſe parts from whence the ſame was brought. Some that had great hope of the matter ſought ſecretly to haue a leaſe at her Maieſties hands of thoſe places, whereby to inioy the maſſe of ſo great a publike profit vnto their owne priuate gaines.

Many aduenturers.

In concluſion, the hope of more of the ſame golde ore to be found kindled a greater opinion in the hearts of many to aduance the voyage againe. Whereupon preparation was made for a new voyage againſt the yere following, and the captaine more ſpecially directed by commiſſion for the ſearching more of this golde ore then for the ſearching any further diſcouery of the paſſage. And being well accompanied with diuers reſolute and forward gentlemen, her Maieſty then lying at the right honourable the lord of Warwicks houſe in Eſſex, he came to take his leaue, and kiſſing her higneſſe hands, with gracious countenance & comfortable words departed toward his charge.

In the ſecond voyage commiſſion was giuen onely for the bringing of ore.

ON Whitſunday being the 26 of May, Anno 1577, early in the morning, we weighed anker at Blackwall, and fell that tyde downe to Graueſend, where we remained vntill Monday at night.

On munday morning the 27 of May, aboord the Ayde we receiued all the Communion by the Miniſter of Graueſend, and prepared vs as good Chriſtians towards God, and reſolute men for all fortunes: and towards night we departed to Tilbery Hope.

They receiue the communion.

Tueſday the eight and twenty of May, about nine of the clocke at night, we arriued at Harwich in Eſſex and there ſtayed for the taking in of certaine victuals, vntill Friday being the thirtieth of May, during which time came letters from the Lordes of the Councell, ſtraightly commanding our Generall, not to exceede his complement and number appointed him, which was, one hundred and twentie perſons: whereupon he diſcharged many proper men which with vnwilling mindes departed.

The number of men in this voyage.

He alſo diſmiſſed all his condemned men, which he thought for ſome purpoſes very needefull for the voyage, and towarde night vpon Friday the one and thirtieth of May we ſet ſaile, and put to the Seas againe. And ſayling Northward alongſt the Eaſt coaſts of England and Scotland, the ſeuenth day of Iune we arriued in Saint Magnus ſound in Orkney Ilands, called in latine Orcades, and came to ancker on the South ſide of the Bay, and this place is reckoned from Blackwall where we ſet ſaile firſt   leagues.

The condemned men diſcharged.

The firſt arriuall after our departing frõ England.

Here our companie going on lande, the Inhabitants of theſe Ilandes beganne to flee as from the enemie, whereupon the Lieutenant willed euery man to ſtay togither, and went himſelfe vnto their houſes to declare what we were and the cauſe of our comming thither, which being vnderſtood, after their poore maner they friendly entreated vs, and brought vs for our money ſuch things as they had. And here our Goldfiners found a Mine of ſiluer.

A Mine of ſiluer found in Orkney.

Orkney is the principall of the Iſles of the Orcades, and ſtandeth in the latitude of fiftie nine degrees and a halfe. The countrey is much ſubiect to colde, anſwerable for ſuch a climate, and yet yeeldeth ſome fruites, and ſufficient maintenance for the people contented ſo poorely to liue.

There is plentie ynough of Poultrey, ſtore of egges, fiſh, and foule.

For their bread they haue Oaten Cakes, and their drinke is Ewes milke, and in ſome partes Ale.

Their houſes are but poore without and ſluttiſh ynough within, and the people in nature thereunto agreeable.

For their fire they burne heath and turffe, the Countrey in moſt parts being voide of wood.

They haue great want of Leather, and deſire our old ſhoes, apparell, and old ropes (before money) for their victuals, and yet are they not ignorant of the value of our coine. The chiefe towne is called Kyrway.

Kyrway the chiefe towne of Orkney.

In this Iland hath bene ſometime an Abbey or a religious houſe called Saint Magnus; being on the Weſt ſide of the Ile, whereof this ſound beareth name, through which we paſſed. Their Gouernour or chiefe Lord is called the Lord Robert Steward, who at our being there, as we vnderſtood, was in durance at Edenburgh, by the Regents commandement of Scotland.

S.Magnus ſound why ſo called.

After we had prouided vs here of matter ſufficient for our voyage the eight of Iune wee ſet ſayle againe, and paſſing through Saint Magnus ſound hauing a merrie winde by night, came cleare and loſt ſight of all the land, and keeping our courſe Weſt Northweſt by the ſpace of two dayes, the winde ſhifted vpon vs ſo that we lay in trauerſe on the Seas, with contrary windes, making good (as neere as we could) our courſe to the weſtward, and ſometime to the Northward, as the winde ſhifted. And hereabout we met with 3 ſaile of Engliſh fiſhermen frõ Iſeland, bound homeward, by whom we wrote our letters vnto our friends in England. We trauerſed theſe Seas by the ſpace of 26 dayes without ſight of any land, and met with much drift wood, & whole bodies of trees. We ſawe many monſterous fiſhes and ſtrange foules, which ſeemed to liue onely onely by the Sea, being there ſo farre diſtant from any land. At length God fauoured vs with more proſperous windes, and after wee had ſayled foure dayes with good winde in the Poop, the fourth of Iuly the Michaell being formoſt a head ſhot off a peece of Ordinance, and ſtroke all her ſayles, ſuppoſing that they deſcryed land, which by reaſon of the thicke miſtes they could not make perfit: howbeit, as well our account as alſo the great alteration of the water, which became more blacke and ſmooth, did plainely declare we were not farre off the coaſt. Our Generall ſent his Maſter aboord the Michaell (who had beene with him the yeere before) to beare in with the place to make proofe thereof, who deſcryed not the land perfect, but ſawe ſundry huge Ilands of yce, which we deemed to be not paſt twelue leagues from the ſhore, for about tenne of the clocke at night being the fourth of Iuly, the weather being more cleare, we made the land perfect and knew it to be Friſlande. And the heigth being taken here, we found our ſelues to be in the latitude of 60 degrees and a halfe, and were fallen with the Southermoſt part of this land. Betweene Orkney and Friſland are reckoned leagues.

Great bodies of trees driuing in the ſeas.

Monſtrous fiſh & ſtrange foule liuing onely by the Sea.

Water being blacke and ſmooth, ſignifieth land to be neere.

Ilands of yce.

The firſt ſight of Friſland the 4. of Iuly.

This Friſlande ſheweth a ragged and high lande, hauing the mountaines almoſt couered ouer with ſnow alongſt the coaſt full of drift yce, and ſeemeth almoſt inacceſſible, and is thought to be an Iland in bigneſſe not inferiour to England, and is called of ſome Authors, Weſt Friſlande, I thinke becauſe it lyeth more Weſt then any part of Europe. It extendeth in latitude to the Northward very farre as ſeemed to vs, and appeareth by a deſcription ſet out by two brethren Venetians, Nicholaus and Antonius Zeni, who being driuen off from Ireland with a violent tempeſt made ſhipwracke here, and were the firſt knowen Chriſtians that diſcouered this land about two hundred yeares ſithence, and they haue in their Sea-cardes ſet out euery part thereof and deſcribed the condition of the inhabitants, declaring them to be as ciuill and religious people as we. And for ſo much of this land as we haue ſayled alongſt, comparing their Carde with the coaſt, we finde it very agreeable. This coaſt ſeemeth to haue good fiſhing, for we lying becalmed let fall a hooke without any bayte and preſently caught a great fiſh called a Hollibut, who ſerued the whole companie for a dayes meate, and is dangerous meate for ſurfetting. And ſounding about fiue leagues off from the ſhore, our leade brought vp in the tallow a kinde of Corrall almoſt white, and ſmall ſtones as bright as Chriſtall: and it is not to be doubted but that this land may be found very rich and beneficial if it were thoroughly diſcouered, although we ſawe no creature there but little birdes. It is a maruellous thing to behold of what great bigneſſe and depth ſome Ilands of yce be here, ſome ſeuentie, ſome eightie fadome vnder water, beſides that which is aboue, ſeeming Ilands more then halfe a mile in circuit. All theſe yce are in taſt freſh, and ſeeme to be bredde in the ſounds thereabouts, or in ſome lande neere the pole, and with the winde and tides are driuen alongſt the coaſtes. We found none of theſe Ilands of yce ſalt in taſte, whereby it appeareth that they were not congealed of the Ocean Sea water which is alwayes ſalt, but of ſome ſtanding or little moouing lakes or great freſh waters neere the ſhore, cauſed eyther by melted ſnowe from tops of mountaines, or by continuall acceſſe of freſh riuers from the land, and intermingling with the Sea water, bearing yet the dominion (by the force of extreame froſt) may cauſe ſome part of ſalt water to freeſe ſo with it, and ſo ſeeme a little brackiſh, but otherwiſe the maine Sea freeſeth not, and therefore there is no Mare Glaciale or froſen Sea, as the opinion hitherto hath bene. Our Generall prooued landing here twice, but by the ſuddaine fall of miſtes (whereunto this coaſt is much ſubiect) he was like to looſe ſight of his ſhips, and being greatly endangered with the driuing yce alongſt the coaſt, was forced aboord and faine to ſurceaſe his pretence till a better opportunitie might ſerue: and hauing ſpent foure dayes and nightes ſayling alongſt this land, finding the coaſt ſubiect to ſuch bitter colde and continuall miſtes, he determined to ſpend no more time therein, but to beare out his courſe towardes the ſtreightes called Frobiſhers ſtreightes after the Generals name, who being the firſt that euer paſſed beyond 58 degrees to the Northwardes, for any thing that hath beene yet knowen of certaintie of New found land, otherwiſe called the continent or firme land of America, diſcouered the ſaide ſtraightes this laſt yere 1576.

The opinion of the froſen Seas is deſtroyed by experience.

Betweene Friſland and the ſtraights we had one great ſtorme, wherein the Michaell was ſomewhat in danger, hauing her Stirrage broken, and her toppe Maſtes blowen ouer boord, & being not paſt 50 leagues ſhort of the ſtraightes by our account, we ſtroke ſayle & lay a hull, fearing the continuance of of the ſtorme, the winde being at the Northeaſt, and hauing loſt companie of the Barkes in that flaw of winde, we happily met againe the ſeuenteenth day of Iuly, hauing the euening before ſeene diuers Ilands of fleeting yce, which gaue an argument that we were not farre from land. Our Generall in the morning from the maine top (the weather being rea-

And about noone, the weather being more cleare, we made the North foreland perfite, which otherwiſe is called Halles Iland, and alſo the ſmall Iland bearing the name of the ſayde Hall whence the Ore was taken vp which was brought into England this laſt yeere 1576 the ſaid Hall being preſent at the finding & taking vp thereof, who was then Maiſter in the Gabriell with Captaine Frobiſher. At our arriuall here all the Seas about this coaſt were ſo couered ouer with huge quantitie of great yce, that we thought theſe places might onely deſerue the name of Mare Glaciale, and be called the Iſie Sea.

Halles Iland.

This North foreland is thought to be deuided from the continent of the Northerland, by a little ſound called Halles ſound, which maketh it an Iland, and is thought little leſſe then the Ile of Wight, and is the firſt entrance of the ſtraights vpon the Norther ſide, and ſtandeth in the latitude of ſixtie two degrees and fiftie minutes, and is reckoned from Friſland   leagues. God hauing bleſſed vs with ſo happie a land-fall, we bare into the ſtraights which runne in next hand, and ſomewhat further vp to the Northwarde, and came as neere the ſhore as wee might for the yce, and vpon the eighteenth day of Iuly our Generall taking the Goldfiners with him, attempted to goe on ſhore with a ſmall rowing Pinneſſe, vpon the ſmall Ilande where the Ore was taken vp, to prooue whether there were any ſtore thereof to be found, but he could not get in all that Iland a peece ſo bigge as a Walnut, where the firſt was found. But our men which ſought the other Ilands thereabouts found them all to haue good ſtore of the Ore, whereupon our Generall with theſe good tidings returned aboord about tenne of the clocke at night, and was ioyfully welcommed of the company with a volie of ſhot. He brought egges, foules, and a young Seale aboord, which the company had killed aſhore, and hauing found vpon thoſe Ilands ginnes ſet to catch fowle, and ſtickes newe cut, with other things, he well perceiued that not long before ſome of the countrey people had reſorted thither.

The deſcription of the ſtraights.

No more gold Ore found in the firſt Iland.

Egs & foules of Meta incognita.

Snares ſet to catch birds withall.

Hauing therefore found thoſe tokens of the peoples acceſſe in thoſe parts, and being in his firſt voyage well acquainted with their ſubtill and cruell diſpoſition, hee prouided well for his better ſafetie, and on Friday the ninteenth of Iuly in the morning early, with his beſt companie of Gentlemen and ſouldiers, to the number of fortie perſons, went on ſhore, aſwell to diſcouer the Inland and habitation of the people, as alſo to finde out ſome fit harborowe for our ſhippes. And paſſing towardes the ſhoare with no ſmall difficultie by reaſon of the abundance of yce which lay alongſt the coaſt ſo thicke togither that hardly any paſſage through them might be diſcouered, we arriued at length vpon the maine of Halles greater Iland, and found there alſo aſwell as in the other ſmall Ilands good ſtore of the Ore. And leauing his boates here with ſufficient guarde we paſſed vp into the countrey about two Engliſh miles, and recouered the toppe of a high hill, on the top whereof our men made a Columne or Croſſe of ſtones heaped vp of a good heigth togither in good ſort, and ſolemnely ſounded a Trumpet, and ſaide certaine prayers kneeling about the Enſigne, and honoured the place by the name of Mount Warwicke, in remembrance of the Right Honorable the Lord Ambroſe Dudley Earle of Warwick, whoſe noble minde and good countenance in this, as in all other good actions, gaue great encouragement and good furtherance. This done, we retyred our companies not ſeeing any thing here worth further diſcouerie, the countrey ſeeming barren and full of ragged mountaines and in moſt parts couered with ſnow.

The building of a Columne, called Mount Warwicke.

And thus marching towards our botes, we eſpied certaine of the countrey people on the top of Mount Warwick with a flag wafting vs backe againe and making great noiſe, with cries like the mowing of Buls ſeeming greatly deſirous of conference with vs: whereupon the Generall being therewith better acquainted, anſwered them againe with the like cries, whereat and with the noiſe of our trumpets they ſeemed greatly to reioyce, ſkipping, laughing and dancing for ioy. And hereupon we made ſignes vnto them, holding vp two fingers, cōmanding two of our men to go apart from our cōpanies, whereby they might do the like. So that forthwith two of our men & two of theirs met togither a good ſpace from company, neither partie hauing their weapons about thē. Our men gaue them pins and points and ſuch trifles as they had. And they likewiſe beſtowed on our men two bow caſes and ſuch things as they had. They earneſtly deſired our men to goe vp into their countrey, and our men offered them like kindneſſe aboord our ſhips, but neither part (as it ſeemed) admitted or truſted the others curteſie. Their maner of traffique is thus, they doe vſe to lay downe of their marchandiſe vpon the ground, ſo much as they meane to part withal, and ſo looking that the other partie with whom they make trade ſhould doe the like, they themſelues doe depart, and then if they doe like of their Mart they come againe, and take in exchange the others marchandiſe, otherwiſe if they like not, they take their owne and depart. The day being thus well neere ſpent, in haſte wee retired our companies into our boates againe, minding forthwith to ſearch alongſt the coaſt for ſome harborow fit for our ſhippes, for the preſent neceſſitie thereof was much, conſidering that all this while they lay off and on betweene the two landes, being continually ſubiect aſwell to great danger of fleeting yce, which enuironed them, as to the ſodaine flawes which the coaſt ſeemeth much ſubiect vnto. But when the people perceiued our departure, with great tokens of affection they earneſtly called vs backe againe, following vs almoſt to our boates: whereupon our Generall taking his Maſter with him, who was beſt acquainted with their maners, went apart vnto two of them, meaning, if they could lay ſure hold vpon them, forcibly to bring them aboord, with intent to beſtow certaine toyes and apparell vpon the one, and ſo to diſmiſſe him with all arguments of curteſie, and retaine the other for an Interpreter. The Generall and his Maiſter being met with their two companions togither, after they had exchanged certaine things the one with the other, one of the Saluages for lacke of better marchandiſe, cut off the tayle of his coat (which is a chiefe ornament among them) and gaue it vnto our Generall for a preſent. But he preſently vpon a watchword giuen with his Maiſter ſodainely laid hold vpon the two Saluages. But the ground vnderfoot being ſlipperie with the ſnow on the ſide of the hill, their handfaſt fayled and their prey eſcaping ranne away and lightly recouered their bow and arrowes, which they had hid not farre from them behind the rockes. And being onely two Saluages in ſight, they ſo fiercely, deſperately, and with ſuch fury aſſaulted and purſued our Generall and his Maſter, being altogether vnarmed, and not miſtruſting their ſubtiltie that they chaſed them to their boates, and hurt the Generall in the buttocke with an arrow, who the rather ſpeedily fled backe, becauſe they ſuſpected a greater number behind the rockes. Our ſouldiers (which were commanded before to keepe their boates) perceiuing the danger, and hearing our men calling for ſhot came ſpeedily to reſcue, thinking there had bene a greater number. But when the Saluages heard the ſhot of one of our caliuers (and yet hauing firſt beſtowed their arrowes) they ranne away, our men ſpeedily following them. But a ſeruant of my Lorde of Warwick, called Nicholas Conger a good footman, and vncombred with any furniture hauing only a dagger at his backe ouertooke one of them, and being a Corniſhman and a good wraſtler, ſhewed his companion ſuch a Corniſh tricke, that he made his ſides ake againſt the ground for a moneth after. And ſo being ſtayed, he was taken aliue and brought away, but the other eſcaped. Thus with their ſtrange and new prey our men repaired to their boates, and paſſed from the maine to a ſmall Iland of a mile compaſſe, where they reſolued to tarrie all night; for euen now a ſodaine ſtorme was growen ſo great at ſea, that by no meanes they could recouer their ſhips. And here euery man refreſhed himſelfe with a ſmall portion of victuals which was laide into the boates for their dinners, hauing neither eate nor drunke all the day before. But becauſe they knewe not how long the ſtorme might laſt, nor how farre off the ſhippes might be put to ſea, nor whether they ſhould euer recouer them againe or not, they made great ſpare of their victuals, as it greatly behoued them: For they knew full well that the beſt cheare the countrey could yeeld them, was rockes and ſtones, a hard food to liue withall, and the people more readie to eate them then to giue them wherewithall to eate. And thus keeping verie good watch and warde, they lay there all night vpon hard cliffes of ſnow and yce both wet, cold, and comfortleſſe.

The Ayde ſet on fire.

These things thus hapning with the company on land, the danger of the ſhips at Sea was no leſſe perilous. For within one houre after the Generals departing in the morning by negligence of the Cooke in ouer-heating, and the workman in making the chimney, the Ayde was ſet on fire, and had bene the confuſion of the whole if by chance a boy eſpying it, it had not bene ſpeedily with great labour and Gods helpe well extinguiſhed.

The great dan-ger of thoſe rockes of yce.

This day alſo were diuerſe ſtormes and flawes, and by nine of the clocke at night the ſtorme was growen ſo great, & continued ſuch vntill the morning, that it put our ſhips at ſea in no ſmall perill: for hauing mountaines of fleeting yce on euery ſide, we went roomer for one, and loofed for another, ſome ſcraped vs, and ſome happily eſcaped vs, that the leaſt of a M. were as dangerous to ſtrike as any rocke, and able to haue ſplit aſunder the ſtrongeſt ſhip of the world. We had a ſcope of cleare without yce, (as God would) wherein we turned, being otherwiſe compaſſed on euery ſide about: but ſo much was the winde and ſo litle was our ſea roome, that being able to beare onely our forecourſe we caſt ſo oft about, that we made fourteene bordes in eight glaſſes running, being but foure houres: but God being our beſt Stereſman, & by the induſtry of Charles Iackman and Andrew Dyer thē maſters mates, both very expert Mariners, & Richard Cox ẏ maiſter Gunner, with other very carefull ſailers, then within bord, and alſo by the helpe of the cleare nights which are without darkeneſſe, we did happily auoide thoſe preſent dangers, whereat ſince wee haue more marueiled then in the preſent danger feared, for that euery man within borde, both better and worſe had ynough to doe with his hands to hale ropes, and with his eyes to looke out for danger. But the next morning being the 20 of Iuly, as God would, the ſtorme ceaſed, and the Generall eſpying the ſhips with his new Captiue and whole company, came happily abord, and reported what had paſſed a ſhoare, whereupon altogither vpon our knees we gaue God humble and hartie thankes, for that it had pleaſed him, from ſo ſpeedy peril to ſend vs ſuch ſpeedy deliuerance, and ſo from this Northerne ſhore we ſtroke ouer towards the Southerland.

Night without darknes in that countrey.

The one and twentieth of Iuly, we diſcouered a bay which ranne into the land, that ſeemed a likely harborow for our ſhips, wherefore our Generall rowed thither with his boats, to make proofe thereof, and with his goldfiners to ſearch for Ore, hauing neuer aſſayed any thing on the South ſhore as yet, and the firſt ſmall Iland which we landed vpon. Here all the ſands and clifts did ſo gliſter and had ſo bright a marqueſite, that it ſeemed all to be gold, but vpon tryall made, it prooued no better then black-lead, and verified the prouerbe. All is not gold that gliſtereth.

Our firſt comming on the Southerland of the ſayd ſtraights.

A Mine of Blacke lead.

Vpon the two and twentieth of Iuly we bare into the ſayde ſound, and came to ancker a reaſonable bredth off the ſhore, where thinking our ſelues in good ſecuritie, we were greatly endangered with a peece of drift yce, which the Ebbe brought foorth of the ſounds and came thwart vs ere we were aware. But the gentlemen and ſouldiers within bord taking great paines at this pinch at the Capſtone, ouercame the moſt danger thereof, and yet for all that might be done, it ſtroke on our ſterne ſuch a blow, that we feared leaſt it had ſtriken away our rudder, and being forced to cut our Cable in the hawſe, we were faine to ſet our fore ſaile to runne further vp within, and if our ſtirrage had not bene ſtronger then in the preſent time we feared, we had runne the ſhip vpon the rockes, hauing a very narrow Channell to turne in, but as God would, all came well to paſſe. And this was named Iackmans ſound, after the name of the Maſters mate, who had firſt liking vnto the place.

Iackmans ſound

Vpon a ſmall Iland, within this ſound called Smithes Iland (becauſe he firſt ſet vp his forge there) was found a Mine of ſiluer, but was not wonne out of the rockes without great labour. Here our goldfiners made ſay of ſuch Ore as they found vpon the Northerland, and found foure ſortes thereof to holde gold in good quantitie. Vpon another ſmall Iland here was alſo found a great dead fiſh, which as it ſhould ſeeme, had bene embayed with yce, and was in proportion round like to a Porpoſe, being about twelue foote long, and in bigneſſe anſwerable, hauing a horne of two yardes long growing out of the ſnoute or noſtrels. This horne is wreathed and ſtraite, like in faſhion to a Taper made of waxe, and may truely be thought to be the ſea Vnicorne. This horne is to be ſeene and reſerued as a Iewell by the Queenes Maieſties commandement, in her Wardrope of Robes.

The finding of an Vnicornes horne.

Tueſday the three and twentieth of Iuly, our Generall with his beſt company of gentlemen, ſouldiers and ſaylers, to the number of ſeuentie perſons in all, marched with enſigne diſplayde, vpon the continent of the Southerland (the ſuppoſed continent of America) where, commanding a Trumpet to ſound a call for euery man to repaire to the enſigne, he declared to the whole company how much the cauſe imported for the ſeruice of her Maieſtie, our countrey, our credits, and the ſafetie of our owne liues, and therefore required euery man to be conformable to order, and to be directed by thoſe he ſhould aſſigne. And he appointed for leaders, Captaine Fenton, Captaine Yorke, and his Lieutenant George Beſte: which done, we caſt our ſelues into a ring, and altogither vpon our knees, gaue God humble thanks for that it had pleaſed him of his great goodneſſe to preſerue vs from ſuch imminent dangers, beſeeching likewiſe the aſſiſtance of his holy ſpirite, ſo to deliuer vs in ſafetie into our Countrey, whereby the light and truth of theſe ſecrets being knowen, it might redound to the more honour of his holy name, and conſequently to the aduancement of our common wealth. And ſo, in as good ſort as the place ſuffered, we marched towards the tops of the mountaines, which were no leſſe painfull in climbing then dangerous in deſcending, by reaſon of their ſteepneſſe & yce. And hauing paſſed about fiue miles, by ſuch vnwieldie wayes, we returned vnto our ſhips without ſight of any people, or likelihood of habitation. Here diuerſe of the Gentlemen deſired our Generall to ſuffer them to the number of twentie or thirtie perſons to march vp thirtie or fortie leagues in the countrey, to the end they might diſcouer the Inland, and doe ſome acceptable ſeruice for their countrey. But he not contented with the matter he ſought for, and well conſidering the ſhort time he had in hand, and the greedie deſire our countrey hath to a preſent ſauour and returne of gaine, bent his whole indeuour only to find a Mine to fraight his ſhips, and to leaue the reſt (by Gods helpe) hereafter to be well accompliſhed.

And therefore the twentie ſixe of July he departed ouer to the Northland, with the two barkes, leauing the Ayde ryding in Iackmans ſound, and ment (after hee had found conuenient harborow, and fraight there for his ſhips) to diſcouer further for the paſſage. The Barkes came the ſame night to ancker in a ſound vpon the Northerland, where the tydes did runne ſo ſwift, and the place was ſo ſubiect to indrafts of yce, that by reaſon thereof they were greatly endangered, & hauing found a very rich Myne, as they ſuppoſed, and got almoſt twentie tunne of Ore together, vpon the 28 of July the yce came driuing into the ſound where the Barkes rode, in ſuch ſort, that they were therewith greatly diſtreſſed. And the Gabriell riding aſterne the Michael, had her Cable gauld aſunder in the hawſe with a peece of driuing yce, and loſt another ancker, and hauing but one cable and ancker left, for ſhe had loſt two before, and the yce ſtill driuing vpon her, ſhe was (by Gods helpe) well fenced from the danger of the reſt, by one great Iland of yce, which came a ground hard a head of her, which if it had not ſo chanced, I thinke ſurely ſhee had beene caſt vpon the rockes with the yce. The Michael mored ancker vpon this great yce, and roade vnder the lee thereof: but about midnight, by the weight of it ſelfe, and the ſetting of the Tydes, the yce brake within halfe the Barkes length, and made vnto the companie within boord a ſodaine and fearefull noyſe. The next flood toward the morning we weyed ancker, and went further vp the ſtraights, and leauing our Ore behind vs which we had digged, for haſt left the place by the name of Beares ſound after the Maſters name of the Michaell, and named the Iland Leceſters Iland. In one of the ſmall Ilands here we found a Tombe, wherein the bones of a dead man lay together, and our ſauage Captiue being with vs, & being demanded by ſignes whether his countreymen had not ſlaine this man and eat his fleſh ſo from the bones, he made ſignes to the contrary, and that he was ſlaine with Wolues and wild beaſts. Here alſo was found hid vnder ſtones good ſtore of fiſh, and ſundry other things of the inhabitants; as ſleddes, bridles, kettels of fiſhſkinnes, kniues of bone, and ſuch other like. And our Sauage declared vnto vs the vſe of all thoſe things. And taking in his hand one of thoſe countrey bridles, he caught one of our dogges and hampred him handſomely therein, as we doe our horſes, and with a whip in his hand, he taught the dogge to drawe in a ſled as we doe horſes in a coach, ſetting himſelfe thereupon like a guide: ſo that we might ſee they vſe dogges for that purpoſe that we do our horſes. And we found ſince by experience, that the leſſer ſort of dogges they feede fatte, and keepe them as domeſticall cattell in their tents for their eating, and the greater ſort ſerue for the vſe of drawing their ſleds.

The twentie ninth of July, about fiue leagues from Beares ſound, we diſcouered a Bay which being fenced on ech ſide with ſmal Ilands lying off the maine, which breake the force of the tides, and make the place free from any indrafts of yce, did proue a very fit harborow for our ſhips, where we came to ancker vnder a ſmall Ilande, which now together with the ſound is called by the name of that right Honourable and vertuous Ladie, Anne Counteſſe of Warwicke. And this is the furtheſt place that this yeere we haue entred vp within the ſtreites, and is rekoned from the Cape of the Queenes foreland, which is the entrance of the ſtreites not aboue 30 leagues. Vpon this Iland was found good ſtore of the Ore, which in the waſhing helde gold to our thinking plainly to be ſeene: whereupon it was thought beſt rather to load here, where there was ſtore and indifferent good, then to ſeeke further for better, and ſpend time with ieoperdie. And therefore our Generall ſetting the Myners to worke, and ſhewing firſt a good preſident of a painefull labourer and a good Captaine in himſelfe, gaue good examples for others to follow him: whereupon euery man both better and worſe, with their beſt endeuours willingly layde to their helping hands. And the next day, being the thirtieth of July, the Michaell was ſent ouer to Iackmans ſound, for the Ayde and the whole companie to come thither. Vpon the maine land ouer againſt the Counteſſes Iland we diſcouered and behelde to our great maruell the poore caues and houſes of thoſe countrey people, which ſerue them (as it ſhould ſeeme) for their winter dwellings, and are made two fadome vnder grounde, in compaſſe round, like to an Ouen, being ioyned faſt one by another, hauing holes like to a Foxe or Conny berry, to keepe and come togither. They vndertrenched theſe places with gutters ſo, that the water falling from the hilles aboue them, may ſlide away without their annoyance: and are ſeated commonly in the foote of a hill, to ſhield them better from the cold windes, hauing their doore and entrance euer open towards the South. From the ground vpward they builde with whales bones, for lacke of timber, which bending one ouer another, are handſomely compacted in the top together, and are couered ouer with Sealeſkinnes, which in ſtead of tiles, fence them from the raine. In which houſe they haue only one roome, hauing the one halfe of the floure raiſed with broad ſtones a foot higher than ẏ other, whereon ſtrawing Moſſe, they make their neſts to ſleep in.

They defile theſe dennes moſt filthily with their beaſtly feeding, & dwell ſo long in a place (as we thinke) vntill their ſluttiſhnes lothing them, they are forced to ſeeke a ſweeter ayre, and a new ſeate, and are (no doubt) a diſperſed and wandring nation, as the Tartarians, and liue in hords and troupes, without any certaine abode, as may appeare by ſundry circumſtances of our experience.

The ſluttiſhneſſe of theſe people.

Here our captiue being aſhore with vs, to declare the vſe of ſuch things as we ſaw, ſtayd himſelfe alone behind the company, and did ſet vp fiue ſmall ſtickes round in a circle one by another, with one ſmal bone placed iuſt in the middeſt of all: which thing when one of our men perceiued, he called vs backe to behold the matter, thinking that hee had meant ſome charme or witchcraft therein. But the beſt coniecture we could make thereof was, that hee would thereby his countreymen ſhould vnderſtand, that for our fiue men which they betrayed the laſt yeere (whom he ſignified by the fiue ſtickes) he was taken and kept priſoner, which he ſignified by the bone in the midſt. For afterwards when we ſhewed him the picture of his countreman, which the laſt yeere was brought into England (whoſe counterfeit we had drawen, with boate and other furniture, both as he was in his own, & alſo in Engliſh apparel) he was vpon the ſudden much amazed thereat, and beholding aduiſedly the ſame with ſilence a good while, as though he would ſtreine courteſie whether ſhould begin the ſpeech (for he thought him no doubt a liuely creature) at length began to queſtion with him, as with his companion, and finding him dumb and mute, ſeemed to ſuſpect him, as one diſdeinfull, and would with a little helpe haue growen into choller at the matter, vntill at laſt by feeling and handling, hee found him but a deceiuing picture. And then with great noiſe and cryes, ceaſed not wondring, thinking that we could make men liue or die at our pleaſure.

A ſigne ſet vp by the ſauage captiue, & the meaning thereof.

And thereupon calling the matter to his remembrance, he gaue vs plainely to vnderſtand by ſignes, that he had knowledge of the taking of our fiue men the laſt yeere, and confeſſing the maner of ech thing, numbred the fiue men vpon his fiue fingers, and pointed vnto a boat in our ſhip, which was like vnto that wherein our men were betrayed: And when we made him ſignes, that they were ſlaine and eaten, he earneſtly denied, and made ſignes to the contrary.

The laſt of Iuly the Michael returned with the Aide to vs from the Southerland, and came to anker by vs in the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound, and reported that ſince we departed from Iackmans ſound there happened nothing among them there greatly worth the remembrance, vntill the thirtieth of Iuly, when certaine of our company being a ſhoare vpon a ſmall Iſland within the ſayd Iackmans ſound, neere the place where the Aide rode, did eſpie a long boat with diuers of the countrey people therein, to the number of eighteene or twenty perſons, whom ſo ſoone as our men perceiued, they returned ſpeedily aboord, to giue notice thereof vnto our company. They might perceiue theſe people climbing vp to the top of a hill, where with a flagge, they wafted vnto our ſhip, and made great outcries and noyſes, like ſo many Buls. Hereupon our men did preſently man foorth a ſmall ſkiffe, hauing not aboue ſixe or ſeuen perſons therein, which rowed neere the place where thoſe people were, to prooue if they could haue eny conference with them. But after this ſmall boate was ſent a greater, being wel appointed for their reſcue, if need required.

Another ſhew of twenty perſons of that countrey in one boate.

As ſoone as they eſpied our company comming neere them, they tooke their boates and haſted away, either for feare, or elſe for pollicie, to draw our men from reſcue further within their danger: wherefore our men conſtruing that their comming thither was but to ſeeke aduantage, followed ſpeedily after them, but they rowed ſo ſwiftly away, that our men could come nothing neere them. Howbeit they failed not of their beſt endeuour in rowing, and hauing chaſed them aboue two miles into the ſea, returned into their ſhips againe.

The morning following being the firſt of Auguſt, Captaine Yorke with the Michael came into Iackmans ſound, and declared vnto the company there, that the laſt night paſt he came to anker in a certaine baye (which ſithens was named Yorkes ſound) about foure leagues diſtant from Iackmans ſound, being put to leeward of that place for lacke of winde, where he diſcouered certaine tents of the countrey people, where going with his company aſhore, he entred into them, but found the people departed, as it ſhould ſeeme, for feare of their comming. But amongſt ſundry ſtrange things which in theſe tents they found, there was rawe and new killed fleſh of vnknowen ſorts, with dead carcaſſes and bones of dogs, and I know not what. They alſo beheld (to their greateſt marueile) a dublet of Canuas made after the Engliſh faſhion, a ſhirt, a girdle, three ſhoes for contrary feete, and of vnequall bigneſſe, which they well coniectured to be the apparell of our fiue poore countreymen, which were intercepted the laſt yeere by theſe Countrey people, about fiftie leagues from this place, further within the Straights. Whereupon our men being in good hope, that ſome of them might be here, and yet liuing: the Captaine deuiſing for the beſt left his mind behind him in writing, with pen, yncke, and paper alſo, whereby our poore captiue countrymen, if it might come to their hands, might know their friends minds, and of their arriuall, and likewiſe returne their anſwere. And ſo without taking any thing away in their tents, leauing there alſo looking glaſſes, points, and other of our toyes (the better to allure them by ſuch friendly meanes) departed aboord his Barke, with intent to make haſte to the Aide, to giue notice vnto the company of all ſuch things as he had there diſcouered: and ſo meant to returne to theſe tents againe, hoping that he might by force or policie intrappe or intice the people to ſome friendly conference. Which things when he had deliuered to the whole company there, they determined forthwith to go in hand with the matter. Hereupon Captaine Yorke with the maſter of the Aide and his mate (who the night before had bene at the tents, and came ouer from the other ſide in the Michael with him) being accompanied with the Gentlemen and ſouldiors to the number of thirty or forty perſons in two ſmall rowing Pinnaſſes made towards the place, where the night before they diſcouered the tents of thoſe people, and ſetting Charles Iackman, being the maſters Mate, aſhore with a conuenient number, for that he could beſt guide them to the place, they marched ouer land, meaning to compaſſe them on the one ſide, whileſt the Captaine with his boates might entrap them on the other ſide. But landing at laſt at the place where the night before they left them, they found them with their tents remoued. Notwithſtanding, our men which marched vp into the countrey, paſſing ouer two or three mountaines, by chance eſpied certaine tents in a valley vnderneath them neere vnto a creeke by the Sea ſide, which becauſe it was not the place where the guide had bene the night before, they iudged them to be another company, and beſetting them about, determined to take them if they could. But they hauing quickly diſcried our companie, lanched one great & another ſmal boat, being about 16 or 18 perſons, and very narrowly eſcaping, put themſelues to ſea. Wherupon our ſouldiers diſcharged their Caliuers, and followed them, thinking the noiſe therof being heard to our boats at ſea, our men there would make what ſpeede they might to that place. And thereupon indeede our men which were in the boates (croſſing vpon them in the mouth of the ſound whereby their paſſage was let from getting ſea roome, wherein it had bene impoſſible for vs to ouertake them by rowing) forced them to put themſelues aſhore vpon a point of land within the ſayd ſound (which vpon the occaſion of the ſlaughter there, was ſince named The bloody point) whereunto our men ſo ſpeedily followed, that they had little leiſure left them to make any eſcape. But ſo ſoone as they landed, ech of them brake his Oare, thinking by that meanes to preuent vs, in carying away their boates for want of Oares. And deſperatly returning vpon our men, reſiſted them manfully in their landing, ſo long as their arrowes and dartes laſted, and after gathering vp thoſe arrowes which our men ſhot at them, yea, and plucking our arrowes out of their bodies incountred afreſh againe, and maintained their cauſe vntill both weapons and life fayled them. And when they found they were mortally wounded, being ignorant what mercy meaneth, with deadly fury they caſt themſelues headlong from off the rockes into the ſea, leaſt perhaps their enemies ſhould receiue glory or prey of their dead carcaiſes, for they ſuppoſed vs belike to be Canibals or eaters of mans fleſh. In this conflict one of our men was dangerouſly hurt in the belly with one of their arrowes, and of them were ſlaine fiue or ſixe, the reſt by flight eſcaping among the rockes, ſauing two women, whereof the one being old and vgly, our men thought ſhee had bene a deuill or ſome witch, and therefore let her goe: the other being yong, and cumbred with a ſucking childe at her backe, hiding her ſelfe behind the rockes, was eſpied by one of our men, who ſuppoſing ſhe had bene a man, ſhot through the haire of her head, and pierced through the childs arme, whereupon ſhe cried out, and our Surgeon meaning to heale her childes arme, applyed ſalues thereunto. But ſhe not acquainted with ſuch kind of ſurgery, plucked thoſe ſalues away, and by continuall licking with her owne tongue, not much vnlike our dogs, healed vp the childes arme. And becauſe the day was welneere ſpent our men made haſte vnto the reſt of our company which on the other ſide of the water remained at the tents, where they found by the apparell, letter, and other Engliſh furniture, that they were the ſame company which Captaine Yorke diſcouered the night before, hauing remoued themſelues from the place where he left them.

And now conſidering their ſudden flying from our men, and their deſperate maner of fighting, we began to ſuſpect that we had heard the laſt newes of our men which the laſt yere were betrayed of theſe people. And conſidering alſo their rauenous and bloody diſpoſition in eating any kind of raw fleſh or carrion howſoeuer ſtinking, it is to bee thought that they had ſlaine and deuoured our men: For the dublet which was found in their tents had many holes therein being made with their arrowes and darts.

But now the night being at hand, our men with their captiues and ſuch poore ſtuffe as they found in their tents, returned towards their ſhips, when being at ſea, there aroſe a ſudden flaw of winde, which was not a litle dangerous for their ſmall boates: but as God would they came all ſafely aboord. And with theſe good newes they returned (as before mentioned) into the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound vnto vs. And betweene Iackmans ſound, from whence they came, and the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound betweene land and land, being thought the narroweſt place of the Straights were iudged nine leagues ouer at the leaſt: and Iackmans ſound being vpõ the Southerland, lyeth directly almoſt ouer againſt the Counteſſes ſound, as is reckoned ſcarce thirty leagues within the Straights from the Queenes Cape, which is the entrance of the Streits of the Southerland. Hauing now got a woman captiue for the comfort of our man, we brought them both together, and euery man with ſilence deſired to behold the maner of their meeting and entertainment, the which was more worth the beholding than can be well expreſſed by writing. At their firſt encountring they beheld each the other very wiſtly a good ſpace, without ſpeech or word vttered, with great change of colour and countenance, as though it ſeemed the griefe and diſdeine of their captiuity had taken away the vſe of their tongues and vtterance: the woman at the firſt very ſuddenly, as though ſhe diſdeined or regarded not the man, turned away, and began to ſing as though ſhe minded another matter: but being againe brought together, the man brake vp the ſilence firſt, and with ſterne and ſtayed countenance, began to tell a long ſolemne tale to the woman, whereunto ſhe gaue good hearing, and interrupted him nothing, till he had finiſhed, and afterwards, being growen into more familiar acquaintance by ſpeech, they were turned together, ſo that (I thinke) the one would hardly haue liued without the comfort of the other. And for ſo much as we could perceiue, albeit they liued continually together, yet they did neuer vſe as man & wife, though the woman ſpared not to doe all neceſſary things that appertained to a good houſwife indifferently for them both, as in making cleane their Cabin, and euery other thing that appertained to his eaſe: for when he was ſeaſicke, ſhe would make him cleane, ſhe would kill and flea the dogs for their eating, and dreſſe his meate. Only I thinke it worth the noting, the continencie of them both: for the man would neuer ſhift himſelfe, except he had firſt cauſed the woman to depart out of his cabin, and they both were moſt ſhamefaſt, leaſt any of their priuie parts ſhould be diſcouered, either of themſelues, or any other body.

The ſhamefaſtnes and chaſtity of thoſe Sauage captiues.

On Munday the ſixth of Auguſt, the Lieutenant with all the Souldiers, for the better garde of the Myners and the other things a ſhore, pitched their tents in the Counteſſes Iſland, and fortifyed the place for their better better defence as well as they could, and were to the number of forty perſons, when being all at labour, they might perceiue vpon the top of a hill ouer againſt them a number of the countrey people wafting with a flag, and making great outcries vnto them, and were of the ſame companie, which had encountred lately our men vpon the other ſhore, being come to complaine their late loſſes, and to entreate (as it ſeemed) for reſtitution of the woman and child, which our men in the late conflict had taken and brought away; whereupon the Generall taking the ſauage captiue with him, and ſetting the woman where they might beſt perceiue her in the higheſt place of the Iſland, went ouer to talke with them. This captiue at his firſt encounter of his friends fell ſo out into teares that he could not ſpeake a word in a great ſpace, but after a while, ouercomming his kindneſſe, he talked at full with his companions, and beſtowed friendly vpon them ſuch toyes and trifles as we had giuen him, whereby we noted, that they are very kind one to another, and greatly ſorrowfull for the loſſe of their friends. Our Generall by ſignes required his fiue men which they tooke captiue the laſt yere, and promiſed them, not only to releaſe thoſe which he had taken, but alſo to reward them with great gifts and friendſhip. Our Sauage made ſignes in anſwere from them that our men ſhould be deliuered vs, and were yet liuing, and made ſignes likewiſe vnto vs that we ſhould write our letters vnto them, for they knew very well the vſe we haue of writing, and receiued knowledge thereof, either of our poore captiue countreymen which they betrayed, or elſe by this our new captiue who hath ſeene vs dayly write, and repeate againe ſuch words of his language as we deſired to learne: but they for this night, becauſe it was late, departed without any letter, although they called earneſtly in haſt for the ſame. And the next morning early being the ſeuenth of Auguſt, they called againe for the letter, which being deliuered vnto them, they ſpeedily departed, making ſignes with three fingers, and pointing to the Sunne, that they meant to returne within 3 dayes, vntill which time we heard no more of them, & about the time appointed they returned, in ſuch ſort as you ſhal afterwards heare.

Another appearance of the countrey people.

Theſe people know the vſe of writing.

A letter ſent vnto the fiue Engliſh captiues.

This night becauſe the people were very neere vnto vs, the Lieutenant cauſed the Trumpet to ſound a call, and euery man in the Iſland repayring to the Enſigne, he put them in minde of the place ſo farre from their countrey wherein they liued, and the danger of a great multitude which they were ſubiect vnto, if good watch and warde were not kept, for at euery low water the enimie might come almoſt dryfoot from the mayne vnto vs, wherefore he willed euery man to prepare him in good readineſſe vpon all ſudden occaſions, and ſo giuing the watch their charge, the company departed to reſt.

I thought the Captaines letter well worth the remembring, not for the circumſtance of curious enditing, but for the ſubſtance and good meaning therein contained, and therefore haue repeated here the ſame, as by himſelfe it was haſtily written.

The forme of M. Martin Frobiſhers letter to the Engliſh captiues.

IN the name of God, in whom we all beleeue, who (I truſt) hath preſerued your bodies and ſoules amongſt theſe Infidels, I commend me vnto you. I will be glad to ſeeke by al means you can deuiſe for your deliuerance, either with force, or with any commodities within my ſhips, which I will not ſpare for your ſakes, or any thing elſe I can doe for you. I haue aboord, of theirs, a man, a woman, and a child, which I am contented to deliuer for you, but the man which I caried away from hence the laſt yeere is dead in England. Moreouer you may declare vnto them, that if they deliuer you not, I will not leaue a man aliue in their countrey. And thus, if one of you can come to ſpeake with mee, they ſhall haue either the man, woman, or childe in pawne for you. And thus vnto God whom I truſt you doe ſerue, in haſt I leaue you, and to him wee will dayly pray for you. This Tueſday morning the ſeuenth of Auguſt. Anno 1577.

Yours to the vttermoſt of my power,
MARTIN FROBISHER.

Poſtſcript.

I haue ſent you by theſe bearers, penne, ynke, and paper, to write backe vnto me againe, if perſonally you cannot come to certifie me of your eſtate.

The cauſe why M. Frobiſher entred no further within the Streits this yere.

Now had the Generall altered his determination for going any further into the Streites at this time for any further diſcouery of the paſſage hauing taken a man and a woman of that countrey, which he thought ſufficient for the vſe of language: & hauing alſo met with theſe people here, which intercepted his men the laſt yere, (as the apparell and Engliſh furniture which was found in their tents, very well declared) he knew it was but a labour loſt to ſeeke them further off, when he had found them there at hand. And conſidering alſo the ſhort time he had in hand, he thought it beſt to bend his whole endeuour for the getting of Myne, and to leaue the paſſage further to be diſcouered hereafter. For his commiſſion directed him in this voyage, onely for the ſearching of the Ore, and to deferre the further diſcouery of the paſſage vntill another time.

Beſts bulwarke

On Thurſday the ninth of Auguſt we began to make a ſmal Fort for our defence in the Counteſſes Iſland, and entrenched a corner of a cliffe, which on three parts like a wall of good heigth was compaſſed and well fenced with the ſea, and we finiſhed the reſt with caſkes of the earth, to good purpoſe, and this was called Beſts bulwarke, after the Lieutenants name, who firſt deuiſed the ſame. This was done for that wee ſuſpected more leſt the deſperate men might oppreſſe vs with multitude, then any feare we had of their force, weapons, or policie of battel: but as wiſedome would vs in ſuch place (ſo farre from home) not to be of our ſelues altogether careleſſe: ſo the ſignes which our captiue made vnto vs, of the comming downe of his Gouernour or Prince, which he called Catchoe, gaue vs occaſion to foreſee what might enſue thereof, for he ſhewed by ſignes that this Catchoe was a man of higher ſtature farre then any of our nation is, and he is accuſtomed to be caried vpon mens ſhoulders.

Their King called Catchoe. How he is honoured.

About midnight the Lieutenant cauſed a falſe Alarme to be giuen in the Iſland, to proue as well the readines of the company there aſhore, as alſo what help might be hoped for vpon the ſudden frō the ſhips if need ſo required, & euery part was found in good readines vpon ſuch a ſudden.

Saturday the eleuenth of Auguſt the people ſhewed themſelues againe, & called vnto vs from the ſide of a hil ouer againſt vs. The General (with good hope to heare of his men, and to haue anſwere of his letter) went ouer vnto them, where they preſented themſelues not aboue three in ſight, but were hidden indeede in greater numbers behind the rockes, and making ſignes of delay with vs to intrappe ſome of vs to redeeme their owne, did onely ſeeke aduantage to traine our boat about a point of land from ſight of our companie: whereupon our men iuſtly ſuſpecting them, kept aloofe without their danger, and yet ſet one of our company aſhore, which tooke vp a great bladder which one of them offered vs, and leauing a looking glaſſe in the place, came into the boate againe. In the meane while our men which ſtood in the Counteſſes Iſland to beholde, who might better diſcerne them, then thoſe of the boate, by reaſon they were on higher ground, made a great outcrie vnto our men in the boate, for that they ſaw diuers of the Sauages creeping behind the rockes towards our men, wherupon the Generall preſently returned without tidings of his men.

A bladder changed for a looking glaſſe.

No newes of the Engliſh captiues.

Concerning this bladder which we receiued, our Captiue made ſignes that it was giuen him to keepe water and drinke in, but we ſuſpected rather it was giuen him to ſwimme and ſhift away withall, for he and the woman ſought diuers times to eſcape, hauing looſed our boates from aſterne our ſhips, and we neuer a boate left to purſue them withall, and had preuailed very farre, had they not bene very timely eſpied and preuented therein.

To what end the bladder was deliuered.

After our Generals comming away from them they muſtred themſelues in our ſight, vpon the top of a hill, to the number of twenty in a rancke, all holding hands ouer their heads, and dancing with great noiſe and ſongs together: we ſuppoſed they made this dance and ſhew for vs to vnderſtand, that we might take view of their whole companies and force, meaning belike that we ſhould doe the ſame. And thus they continued vpon the hill tops vntill night, when hearing a piece of our great Ordinance, which thundred in the hollowneſſe of the high hilles, it made vnto them ſo fearefull a noiſe, that they had no great will to tarie long after. And this was done more to make them know our force then to doe them any hurt at all.

Thoſe people dancing vpon the hil toppes.

Nn Suuday the 12 of Auguſt, Captaine Fenton trained the company, and made the ſouldiers maintaine ſkirmiſh among themſelues, as well for their exerciſe, as for the countrey people to behold in what readines our men were alwaies to be found, for it was to be thought, that they lay hid in the hilles thereabout, and obſerued all the manner of our proceedings.

A ſkirmiſh ſhewed to thoſe people.

On Wedneſday the fourteenth of Auguſt, our Generall with two ſmall boates well appointed, for that hee ſuſpected the countrey people to lie lurking thereabout, went vp a certaine Bay within the Counteſſes ſound, to ſearch for Ore, and met againe with the countrey people, who ſo ſoone as they ſaw our men made great outcries, and with a white flag made of bladders ſowed together with the guts and ſinewes of beaſts, wafted vs amaine vnto them, but ſhewed not aboue three of their company. But when wee came neere them, wee might perceiue a great multitude creeping behinde the rockes, which gaue vs good cauſe to ſuſpect their traiterous meaning: whereupon we made them ſignes, that if they would lay their weapons aſide, and come forth, we would deale friendly with them, although their intent was manifeſted vnto vs: but for all the ſignes of friendſhip we could make them they came ſtill creeping towards vs behind the rocks to get more aduantage of vs, as though we had no eyes to ſee them, thinking belike that our ſingle wits could not diſcouer ſo bare deuiſes and ſimple drifts of theirs. Their ſpokeſman earneſtly perſwaded vs with many intiſing ſhewes, to come eate and ſleepe aſhore, with great arguments of courteſie, and clapping his bare hands ouer his head in token of peace and innocencie, willed vs to doe the like. But the better to allure our hungry ſtomackes, he brought vs a trimme baite of raw fleſh, which for faſhion ſake with a boat-hooke wee caught into our boate: but when the cunning Cater perceiued his firſt cold morſell could nothing ſharpen our ſtomacks, he caſt about for a new traine of warme fleſh to procure our appetites, wherefore he cauſed one of his fellowes in halting maner, to come forth as a lame man from behind the rockes, and the better to declare his kindnes in caruing, he hoiſed him vpon his ſhoulders, and bringing him hard to the water ſide where we were, left him there limping as an eaſie prey to be taken of vs. His hope was that we would bite at this baite, and ſpeedily leape aſhore within their danger, wherby they might haue apprehended ſome of vs, to ranſome their friends home againe, which before we had taken. The gentlemen and ſouldiers had great will to encounter them aſhore, but the Generall more carefull by proceſſe of time to winne them, then wilfully at the firſt to ſpoile them, would in no wiſe admit that any man ſhould put himſelfe in hazard aſhore, conſidering the matter he now intended was for the Ore, and not for the Conqueſt: notwithſtanding to proue this cripples footemanſhip, he gaue liberty for one to ſhoote: whereupon the cripple hauing a parting blow, lightly recouered a rocke and went away a true and no fained cripple, and hath learned his leſſon for euer halting afore ſuch cripples againe. But his fellowes which lay hid before, full quickly then appeared in their likeneſſe, and maintained the ſkirmiſh with their ſlings, bowes and arrowes very fiercely, and came as neere as the water ſuffred them: and with as deſperate minde as hath bene ſeene in any men, without feare of ſhotte or any thing, followed vs all along the coaſt, but all their ſhot fell ſhort of vs, and are of little danger. They had belayed all the coaſt along for vs, and being diſperſed ſo, were not well to be numbred, but wee might diſcerne of them aboue an hundreth perſons, and had cauſe to ſuſpect a greater number. And thus without loſſe or hurt we returned to our ſhips againe.

Now our worke growing to an end, and hauing, onely with fiue poore Miners, and the helpe of a few gentlemen and ſouldiers, brought aboord almoſt two hundreth tunne of Ore in the ſpace of twenty dayes, euery man therewithall well comforted, determined luſtily to worke a freſh for a bone voyage, to bring our labour to a ſpeedy and happy ende.

And vpon Wedneſday at night being the one and twentieth of Auguſt, we fully finiſhed the whole worke. And it was now good time to leaue, for as the men were well wearied, ſo their ſhooes and clothes were well worne, their baſkets bottoms torne out, their tooles broken, and the ſhips reaſonably well filled. Some with ouer-ſtraining themſelues receiued hurts not a little daungerous, ſome hauing their bellies broken, and others their legs made lame. And about this time the yce began to congeale and freeze about our ſhips ſides a night, which gaue vs a good argument of the Sunnes declining Southward, & put vs in mind to make more haſte homeward.

It is not a little worth the memorie, to the commendation of the gentlemen and ſouldiers herein, who leauing all reputation apart, with ſo great willingneſſe and with couragious ſtomackes, haue themſelues almoſt ouercome in ſo ſhort a time the difficultie of this ſo great a labour. And this to be true, the matter, if it bee well weyed without further proofe, now brought home doth well witneſſe.

Thurſday the 22 of Auguſt, we plucked downe our tents, and euery man haſted homeward, and making bonefires vpon the top of the higheſt Mount of the Iſland, and marching with Enſigne diſplayed round about the Iſland, wee gaue a vollie of ſhotte for a farewell, in honour of the righ honourable Lady Anne, Counteſſe of Warwicke, whoſe name it beareth: and ſo departed aboord.

The 23 of Auguſt hauing the wind large at Weſt, we ſet ſaile from out of the Counteſſes ſound homeward, but the wind calming we came to anker within the point of the ſame ſound againe.

They returne. Snow halfe a foote deepe in Auguſt.

The 24 of Auguſt about three of the clocke in the morning, hauing the wind large at Weſt, we ſet ſaile againe, and by nine of the clocke at night, wee left the Queenes Foreland aſterne of vs, and being cleere of the Streites, we bare further into the maine Ocean, keeping our courſe more Southerly, to bring our ſelues the ſooner vnder the latitude of our owne climate.

The wind was very great at ſea, ſo that we lay a hull all night, & had ſnow halfe a foote deepe on the hatches.

From the 24 vntil the 28 we had very much wind, but large, keeping our courſe Southſoutheaſt, and had like to haue loſt the Barkes, but by good hap we met againe. The height being taken, we were in degrees and a halfe.

The 29 of Auguſt the wind blew much at Northeaſt, ſo that we could beare but onely a bunt of our foreſaile, and the Barkes were not able to cary any ſayle at all.

The Michael loſt company of vs and ſhaped her courſe towards Orkney becauſe that way was better knowne vnto them, and arriued at Yermouth.

The Maſter of the Gabriel ſtrooken ouer-boord.

The 30 of Auguſt with the force of the wind, and a ſurge of the ſea, the Maſter of the Gabriel and the Boatſwain were ſtriken both ouerboord, & hardly was the Boatſwain recouered, hauing hold on a roape hanging ouerboord in the ſea, and yet the Barke was laced fore and after with ropes a breaſt high within boorde.

This Maſter was called William Smith, being but a yong man and a very ſufficient mariner, who being all the morning before exceeding pleaſant, told his Captaine he dreamed that he was caſt ouerboord, and that the Boatſwain had him by the hand, and could not ſaue him, and ſo immediately vpon the end of his tale, his dreame came right euilly to paſſe, and indeed the Boatſwain in like ſort held him by one hand, hauing hold on a rope with the other, vntill his force fayled, and the Maſter drowned. The height being taken we found our ſelues to be in the latitude of degrees and a halfe, and reckoned our ſelues from the Queenes Cape homeward about two hundreth leagues.

The laſt of Auguſt about midnight, we had two or three great and ſudden flawes or ſtormes.

The firſt of September the ſtorme was growen very great, and continued almoſt the whole day and night, and lying a hull to tarrie for the Barkes our ſhip was much beaten with the ſeas, euery ſea almoſt ouertaking our poope, ſo that we were conſtrained with a bunt of our ſaile to trie it out, and eaſe the rolling of our ſhip. And ſo the Gabriel not able to beare any ſayle to keepe company with vs, and our ſhip being higher in the poope, and a tall ſhip, whereon the winde had moꝛe foꝛce to dꝛiue, went ſo faſt away that we loſt ſight of them, and left them to God and their good foꝛtune of Sea. The ſecond day of September in the moꝛning, it pleaſed God of his goodneſſe to ſend vs a calme, whereby we perceiued the Rudder of our ſhip toꝛne in twaine, and almoſt ready to fall away. Wherefoꝛe taking the benefite of the time, we flung halfe a dozen couple of our beſt men ouer boord, who taking great paines vnder water, dꝛiuing plankes, and binding with ropes, did well ſtrengthen and mend the matter, who returned the moſt part moꝛe then halfe dead out of the water, and as Gods pleaſure was, the ſea was calme vntill the woꝛke was finiſhed. The fift of September, the height of the Sunne being taken, we found our ſelues to be in the latitude of degrees and a halfe. In this voyage commonly wee tooke the latitude of the place by the height of the ſunne, becauſe the long day taketh away the light not onely of the Polar, but alſo of all other fixed Starres. And here the North Starre is ſo much eleuated aboue the Hoꝛizon, that with the ſtaffe it is hardly to bee well obſerued, and the degrees in the Aſtrolabe are too ſmall to obſerue minutes. Therefoꝛe wee alwaies vſed the Staffe and the ſunne as fitteſt inſtruments foꝛ this vſe.

The Rudder of the Aide toꝛne in twain.

How the latitudes were alwayes taken in this voyage rather with the Staffe then Aſtrolabe.

Hauing ſpent foure oꝛ fiue dayes in trauerſe of the ſeas with contrary winde, making our Souhter way good as neere as we could, to raiſe our degrees to bꝛing our ſelues with the latitude of Sylley, wee tooke the height the tenth of September, and found our ſelues in the latitude of degrees and ten minutes. The eleuenth of September about ſixe a clocke at night the winde came good Southweſt, we vered ſheat and ſet our courſe Southeaſt.

And vpon Thurſday, the twelfth of September, taking the height, wee were in the latitude of and a halfe, and reckoned our ſelues not paſt one hundꝛed and fifty leagues ſhoꝛt of Sylley, the weather faire, the winde large at Weſtſouthweſt, we kept our courſe Southeaſt.

The thirteenth dey the height being taken, wee found our ſelues to be in the latitude of degrees, the wind Weſtſouthweſt, then being in the height of Sylley, and we kept our courſe Eaſt, to run in with the ſleeue oꝛ chanel ſo called, being our narrow ſeas, and reckoned vs ſhoꝛt of Sylley twelue leagues.

Sonday, the 15 of September about foure of the clocke, we began to ſound with our lead, and had ground at 61 fadome depth, white ſmall ſandy ground, and reckoned vs vpon the backe of Sylley, and ſet our courſe Eaſt and by Noꝛth, Eaſtnoꝛtheaſt, and Noꝛtheaſt among.

The ſixteenth of September, about eight of the clocke in the moꝛning ſounding, we had 65. fadome oſey ſand, and thought our ſelues thwart of S. Georges channell a little within the banks. And bearing a ſmall ſaile all night, we made many ſoundings, which were about foꝛtie fadome, and ſo ſhallow, that we could not well tell where we were.

The ſeuenteenth of September we ſounded, and had foꝛty fadome, and were not farre off the lands end, finding bꝛanded ſand with ſmall woꝛmes and Cockle ſhelles, and were ſhotte betwene Sylley and the lands ende, and being within the bay, we were not able to double the pointe with a South and by Eaſt way, but were faine to make another boord, the wind being at Southweſt and by Weſt, and yet could not double the point to come cleere of the lands end, to beare along the channel: and the weather cleered vp when we were hard aboord the ſhoꝛe, and we made the lands end perfit, and ſo put vp along Saint Georges chanel. And the weather being very foule at ſea, we coueted ſome harboꝛough, becauſe our ſteerage was bꝛoken, and ſo came to ancoꝛ in Padſtow road in Cornewall. But riding there a very dangerous roade, we were aduiſed by the countrey, to put to Sea againe, and of the two euils, to chooſe the leſſe, foꝛ there was nothing but pꝛeſent perill where we roade: whereupon we plyed along the channell to get to Londy, from whence we were againe dꝛiuen, being but an open roade, where our Anker came home, and with foꝛce of weather put to Seas againe, and about the thꝛee and twentieth of September, arriued at Milford Hauen in Wales, which being a very good harborough, made vs happy men, that we had receiued ſuch long deſired ſafetie.

The arriual of the Aide at Padſtow in Cornewall.

Our comming to Milford Hauen.

About one moneth after our arriuall here, by oꝛder from the Loꝛds of the Counſell, the ſhip came vp to Briſtow, where the Oꝛe was committed to keeping in the Caſtel there. Here we found the Gabriel one of the Barkes, arriued in good ſafetie, who hauing neuer a man within boord very ſufficient to bꝛing home the ſhip, after the Maſter was loſt, by good foꝛtune, when ſhe came vpon the coaſt, met with a ſhip of Briſtow at ſea, who conducted her in ſafety thither.

The arriuall of the Gabriel at Briſtow.

Here we heard good tidings alſo of the arriuall of the other Barke called the Michael, in the Noꝛth parts, which was not a little ioyful vnto vs, that it pleaſed God ſo to bꝛing vs to a ſafe meeting againe, and wee loſt in all the voyage only one man, beſides one that dyed at ſea, which was ſicke befoꝛe he came aboord, and was ſo deſirous to follow this enterpꝛiſe, that he rather choſe to dye therein, then not to be one to attempt ſo notable a voyage.

The Michael arriued in the Noꝛth parts.

Only one man died the voyage.

The third voyage of Captaine Frobiſher, pretended for the diſcouerie of Cataia, by Meta Incognita, *Anno Do.*1578.

The Generall being returned from the ſecond voyage, immediately after his arriuall in England, repaired with all haſt to the Court being then at Windſore, to aduertiſe her Maieſtie of his proſperous proceeding, and good ſucceſſe in this laſt voyage, & of the plenty of gold Ore, with other matters of importance which he had in theſe Septentrionall parts diſcouered. He was courteouſly enterteyned, and hartily welcommed of many noble men, but eſpecially for his great aduenture, commended of her Maieſtie, at whoſe hands he receiued great thankes, and moſt gratious countenance, according to his deſerts. Her Highneſſe alſo greatly commended the reſt of the Gentlemen in this ſeruice, for their great forwardnes in this ſo dangerous an attempt: but eſpecially ſhe reioyced very much, that among them there was ſo good order of gouernement, ſo good agreement, euery man ſo ready in his calling, to do whatſoeuer the General ſhould cōmand, which due commendation gratiouſly of her Maieſtie remembred, gaue ſo great encouragement to all the Captaines and Gentlemen, that they, to continue her Highneſſe ſo good and honourable opinion of them, haue ſince neither ſpared labour, limme, nor life, to bring this matter (ſo well begun) to a happie and proſperous ende. And finding that the matter of the golde Ore had appearance & made ſhew of great riches & profit, & the hope of the paſſage to Cataya, by this laſt voyage greatly increaſed, her Maieſtie appointed ſpeciall Commiſſioners choſen for this purpoſe, gentlemen of great iudgement, art, and ſkill, to looke thorowly into the cauſe, for the true triall and due examination thereof, and for the full handling of all matters thereunto appertaining. And becauſe that place and countrey hath neuer heretofore beene diſcouered, and therefore had no ſpeciall name, by which it might be called and knowen, her Maieſtie named it very properly Meta Incognita, as a marke and bound vtterly hitherto vnknowen. The commiſſioners after ſufficient triall and proofe made of the Ore, and hauing vnderſtood by ſundrie reaſons, and ſubſtantiall grounds, the poſſibilitie and likelyhood of the paſſage, aduertiſed her highneſſe, that the cauſe was of importance, and the voyage greatly worthy to be aduanced againe. Whereupon preparation was made of ſhips and all other things neceſſary, with ſuch expedition, as the time of the yeere then required. And becauſe it was aſſuredly made accompt of, that the commoditie of Mines, there already diſcouered, would at the leaſt counteruaile in all reſpects the aduenturers charge, and giue further hope & likelyhood of greater matters to follow: it was thought needfull, both for the better guard of thoſe parts already found, and for further diſcouery of the Inland and ſecrets of thoſe countreys, & alſo for further ſearch of the paſſage to Cataya (whereof the hope continually more & more increaſeth) that certaine numbers of choſen ſouldiers and diſcreet men for thoſe purpoſes ſhould be aſſigned to inhabite there. Whereupon there was a ſtrong fort or houſe of timber, artificially framed, & cunningly deuiſed by a notable learned man here at home, in ſhips to be caried thither, wherby thoſe men that were appointed to winter & ſtay there the whole yere, might aſwell bee defended from the danger of the ſnow and cold ayre, as alſo fortified from the force or offence of thoſe countrey people, which perhaps otherwiſe with too great multitudes might oppreſſe them. And to this great aduenture and notable exploit many well minded and forwad yong Gentlemen of our countrey willingly haue offered themſelues. And firſt Captaine Fenton Lieutenant generall for Captaine Frobiſher, and in charge of the company with him there, Captaine Beſt, and Captaine Filpot, vnto whoſe good diſcretions the gouernment of that ſeruice was chiefly commended, who, as men not regarding peril in reſpec of the profit and common wealth of their countrey, were willing to abide the firſt brunt & aduenture of thoſe dangers among a ſauage and brutiſh kinde of people, in a place hitherto euer thought for extreme cold not habitable. The whole number of men which had offered, and were appointed to inhabite Meta Incognita all the yeere, were one hundreth perſons, wherof 40 ſhould be mariners for the vſe of ſhips, 30 Miners for gathering the gold Ore together for the next yere, and 30 ſouldiers for the better guard of the reſt, within which laſt number are included the Gentlemen, Goldfiners, Bakers, Carpenters, & all neceſſary perſons. To each of the Captaines was aſſigned one ſhip, aſwel for the further ſearching of the coaſt & countrey there, as for to returne & bring backe their companies againe, if the neceſſity of the place ſo vrged, or by miſcarying of the fleet the next yere, they might be diſappointed of their further prouiſion. Being therfore thus furniſhed withal neceſſaries, there were ready to depart vpon the ſaid voyage 15 ſaile of good ſhips, wherof the whole number was to returne again with their loding of gold Ore in the end of the ſommer, except thoſe 3 ſhips, which ſhould be left for the vſe of thoſe Captains which ſhould inhabite there the whole yere. And being in ſo good

The ſayd fifteene ſaile of ſhips arriued and met together at Harwich, the ſeuen and twentieth day of May Anno 1578, where the Generall and the other Captaines made view, and muſtred their companies. And euery ſeuerall Captaine receiued from the Generall certaine Articles of direction, for the better keeping of order and company together in the way, which Articles are as followeth.

Articles and orders to be obſerued for the Fleete, ſet downe by Captaine Frobiſher Generall, and deliuered in writing to euery Captaine, as well for keeping company, as for the courſe, the 31 of May.

1 INprimis, to baniſh ſwearing, dice, and card-playing, and filthy communication, and to ſerue God twice a day, with the ordinary ſeruice vſuall in Churches of England, and to cleare the glaſſe, according to the old order of England.

2 The Admiral ſhall carie the light, & after his light be once put out, no man to goe a head of him, but euery man to ſit his ſailes to follow as neere as they may, without endangering one another.

3 That no man ſhall by day or by night depart further from the Admirall them the diſtance of one Engliſh mile, and as neere as they may, without danger one of another.

4 If it chance to grow thicke, and the wind contrary, either by day or by night, that the Admirall be forced to caſt about, before her caſting about ſhee ſhall giue warning, by ſhooting off a peece, and to her ſhall anſwere the Viceadmirall and the Rereadmirall each of them with a piece, if it bee by night, or in a fogge; and that the Viceadmirall ſhall anſwere firſt, and the Rereadmirall laſt.

5 That no man in the Fleete deſcrying any ſayle or ſayles, giue vpon any occaſion any chace before he haue ſpoken with the Admirall.

6 That euery euening all the Fleete come vp and ſpeake with the Admirall, at ſeuen of the Clocke, or betweene that and eight, and if the weather will not ſerue them all to ſpeake with the Admirall, then ſome ſhall come to the Viceadmirall, and receiue the order of their courſe of Maſter Hall chiefe Pilot of the Fleete, as he ſhall direct them.

7 If to any man in the Fleete there happen any miſchance, they ſhal preſently ſhoote off two peeces by day, and if it be by night, two peeces, and ſhew two lights.

8 If any man in the Fleete come vp in the night, & hale his fellow, knowing him not, he ſhall giue him this watch-word, Before the world was God. The other ſhal anſwere him (if he be one of our Fleete) After God came Chriſt his Sonne. So that if any be found amongſt vs, not of our owne company, he that firſt deſcrieth any ſuch ſayle or ſayles, ſhall giue warning to the Admirall by himſelfe or any other that he can ſpeake to, that ſailes better then he, being neereſt vnto him.

9 That euery ſhip in the fleete in the time of fogs, which continually happen with little winds, and moſt part calmes, ſhall keepe a reaſonable noiſe with trumpet, drumme, or otherwiſe, to keepe themſelues cleere one of another.

10 If it fall out ſo thicke or miſtie that we lay it to hull, the Admiral ſhall giue warning with a piece, and putting out three lights one ouer another, to the end that euery man may take in his ſailes, and at his ſetting of ſayles againe doe the like, if it be not cleere.

11 If any man diſcouer land by night, that he giue the like warning, that he doth for miſchances, two lights, and two pieces, if it be by day one piece, and put out his flagge, and ſtrike all his ſailes he hath aboord.

12 If any ſhip ſhall happen to loſe company by force of weather, then any ſuch ſhip or ſhips ſhall get her into the latitude of   , and ſo keepe that latitude vntil they get Friſland. And after they be paſt the Weſt parts of Friſland, they ſhall get them into the latitude of   , and   , and not to the Northward of   ; and being once entred within the Streites, al ſuch ſhips ſhal euery watch ſhoote off a good piece, and looke out well for ſmoke and fire which thoſe that get in firſt ſhall make euery night, vntill all the fleete be come together.

13 That vpon the ſight of an Enſigne in the maſt of the Admirall (a piece being ſhot off) the whole fleete ſhall repaire to the Admirall, to vnderſtand ſuch conference as the Generall is to haue with them.

14 If we chance to meete with any enemies, that foure ſhips ſhall attend vpon the Admirall, viz. the Francis of Foy the Moone, the Barke Dennis, and the Gabriel: and foure vpon my Lieutenant generall in the Iudith, viz. the Hopewel, the Armenal, the Beare, and the Salomon: and the other foure vpon the Vizadmirall, the Anne Francis, the Thomas of Ipſwich, the Emmanuel, and the Michael.

15 If there happen any diſordred perſon in the Fleete, that he be taken and kept in ſafe cuſtodie vntill he may conueniently be brought aboord the Admirall, and there to receiue ſuch puniſhment as his or their offences ſhall deſerue.

Our departure from England.

Cape Cleare the ſixt of Iune.

A charitable deede.

Marke this current.

Hauing receiued theſe articles of direction we departed from Harwich the one and thirtieth of May. And ſayling along the South part of England Weſtward, we at length came by the coaſt of Ireland at Cape Cleare the ſixth of Iune, and gaue chaſe there to a ſmall barke which was ſuppoſed to be a Pyrat, or Rouer on the Seas, but it fell out indeede that they were poore men of Briſtow, who had met with ſuch company of Frenchmen as had ſpoiled and ſlaine many of them, and left the reſt ſo ſore wounded that they were like to periſh in the ſea, hauing neither hand nor foote hole to helpe themſelues with, nor victuals to ſuſtaine their hungry bodies. Our Generall, who well vnderſtood the office of a Souldier and an Engliſhman, and knew well what the neceſſitie of the ſea meaneth, pitying much the miſerie of the poore men, relieued them with Surgerie and ſalues to heale their hurtes, and with meate and drinke to comfort their pining hearts; ſome of them hauing neither eaten nor drunke more then oliues and ſtinking water in many dayes before, as they reported. And after this good deede done, hauing a large wind, we kept our courſe vpon our ſayd voyage without ſtaying for the taking in of freſh water, or any other prouiſion, whereof many of the fleete were not throughly furniſhed: and ſayling towards the Northweſt parts from Ireland, we mette with a great current from out of the Southweſt, which caried vs (by our reckoning) one point to the Northeaſtwards of our ſayd courſe, which current ſeemed to vs to continue it ſelfe towards Norway, and other the Northeaſt parts of the world, whereby we may be induced to beleeue, that this is the ſame which the Portugals meete at Capo de buona Speranza, where ſtriking ouer from thence to the Streites of Magellan, and finding no paſſage there for the narrowneſſe of the ſayde Streites, runneth along into the great Bay of Mexico, where alſo hauing a let of land, it is forced to ſtrike backe againe towards the Northeaſt, as we not onely here, but in another place alſo, further to the Northwards, by good experience this yeere haue found, as ſhalbe hereafter in his place more at large declared.

Now had we ſayled about foureteene dayes, without ſight of any land, or any other liuing thing, except certaine foules, as Wilmots, Nodies, Gulles, &c. which there ſeeme onely to liue by ſea.

The twentieth of Iune, at two of the clocke in the morning, the General deſcried land, & found it to be Weſt Friſland, now named weſt England, here the Generall, & other Gentlemen went aſhore, being the firſt knowen Chriſtians that we haue true notice of, that euer ſet foot vpon that ground: and therefore the Generall tooke poſſeſſion thereof to the vſe of our Soueraigne Lady the Queenes Maieſtie, and diſcouered here a goodly harborough for the ſhips, where were alſo certaine little boates of that countrey. And being there landed, they eſpied certaine tents and people of that countrey, which were (as they iudge) in all ſorts, very like thoſe of Meta Incognita, as by their apparell, and other things which we found in their tents, appeared.

Weſt England.

The Sauage and ſimple people ſo ſoone as they perceiued our men comming towards them, (ſuppoſing there had bene no other world but theirs) fled fearefully away, as men much amazed at ſo ſtrange a ſight, and creatures of humane ſhape, ſo farre in apparell, complexion, and other things different from themſelues. They left in their tents all their furniture for haſte behind them, where amongſt other things were found a boxe of ſmall nailes, and certaine red Herrings, boords of Firre tree well cut, with diuers other things artificially wrought: whereby it appeareth, that they haue trade with ſome ciuill people, or elſe are indeede themſelues artificiall workemen.

Our men brought away with them onely two of their dogs, leauing in recompenſe belles, looking-glaſſes, and diuers of our countrey toyes behinde them.

This countrey, no doubt, promiſeth good hope of great commoditie and riches, if it may be well diſcouered. The deſcription whereof you ſhall finde more at large in the ſecond voyage.

Friſland ſuppoſed to be continent with Groenland.

Some are of opinion, that this Weſt England is firme land with the Northeaſt partes of Meta Incognita, or elſe with Groenland. And their reaſon is, becauſe the people, apparel, boates, and other things are ſo like to theirs: and another reaſon is, the multitude of Iſlands of yce, which lay betweene it and Meta Incognita, doth argue, that on the North ſide there is a bay, which cannot be but by conioyning of the two lands together.

The 23 of Iune.

Charing croſſe.

And hauing a faire and large winde we departed from thence towards Frobiſhers Streites, the three and twentieth of Iune. But firſt wee gaue name to a high cliffe in Weſt England, the laſt that was in our ſight, and for a certaine ſimilitude, we called it Charing croſſe. Then wee bare Southerly towards the Sea, becauſe to the Northwardes of this coaſt we met with much driuing yce, which by reaſon of the thicke miſtes and weather might haue bene ſome trouble vnto vs.

On Munday the laſt of Iune, wee met with many great Whales, as they had bene Porpoſes.

A Whale ſtrooke a ſhip.

This ſame day the Salamander being vnder both her corſes and bonets, happened to ſtrike a great Whale with her full ſtemme, with ſuch a blow that the ſhip ſtoode ſtill, and ſtirred neither forward nor backward. The Whale thereat made a great and vgly noyſe, and caſt vp his body and taile, and ſo went vnder water, and within two daies after, there was found a great Whale dead ſwimming aboue water, which wee ſuppoſed was that which the Salamander ſtrooke.

Frobiſhers Streites choked vp with yce.

The ſecond day of Iuly early in the morning we had ſight of the Queenes Foreland, and bare in with the land all the day, and paſſing thorow great quantity of yce, by night were entred ſomewhat within the Streites, perceiuing no way to paſſe further in, the whole place being frozen ouer from the one ſide to the other, and as it were with many walles, mountaines, and bulwarks of yce, choked vp the paſſage, and denied vs entrance. And yet doe I not thinke that this paſſage or Sea hereabouts is frozen ouer at any time of the yere: albeit it ſeemed ſo vnto vs by the abundance of yce gathered together, which occupied the whole place. But I doe rather ſuppoſe theſe yce to bee bred in the hollow ſoundes and freſhets thereabouts: which by the heate of the ſommers Sunne, being looſed, doe emptie themſelues with the ebbes into the ſea, and ſo gather in great abundance there together.

And to ſpeake ſomewhat here of the ancient opinion of the frozen ſea in theſe parts: I doe thinke it to be rather a bare coniecture of men, then that euer any man hath made experience of any ſuch ſea. And that which they ſpeake of Mare glaciale, may be truely thought to be ſpoken of theſe partes: for this may well be called indeede the ycie ſea, but not the frozen ſea, for no ſea conſiſting of ſalt water can be frozen, as I haue more at large herein ſhewed my opinion in my ſecond voyage; for it ſeemeth impoſſible for any ſea to bee frozen which hath his courſe of ebbing and flowing, eſpecially in thoſe places where the tides doe ebbe and flowe aboue ten fadome. And alſo all theſe aforeſayd yce, which we ſometime met a hundreth mile from lande, being gathered out of the ſalt Sea, are in taſte freſh, and being diſſolued, become ſweete and holeſome water.

Salt water cannot freeze.

And the cauſe why this yere we haue bene more combred with yce then at other times before, may be by reaſon of the Eaſterly & Southerly winds, which brought vs more timely thither now then we looked for. Which blowing from the ſea directly vpon the place of our Streits, hath kept in the yce, and not ſuffered them to be caried out by the ebbe to the maine ſea, where they would in more ſhort time haue bene diſſolued. And all theſe fleeting yce are not only ſo dangerous in that they wind and gather ſo neere together, that a man may paſſe ſometimes tenne or twelue miles as it were vpon one firme Iſland of yce: but alſo for that they open and ſhut together againe in ſuch ſort with the tides and ſea-gate, that whileſt one ſhip followeth the other with full ſayles, the yce which was open vnto the foremoſt will ioyne and cloſe together before the latter can come to follow the firſt, whereby many times our ſhippes were brought into great danger, as being not able ſo ſodainely to take in our ſayles, or ſtay the ſwift way of our ſhips.

We were forced many times to ſtemme and ſtrike great rockes of yce, and ſo as it were make way through mighty mountaines. By which meanes ſome of the fleete, where they found the yce to open, entred in, and paſſed ſo farre within the danger thereof, with continuall deſire to recouer their port, that it was the greateſt wonder of the world that they euer eſcaped ſafe, or were euer heard of againe. For euen at this preſent we miſſed two of the fleete, that is, the Iudith, wherein was the Lieutenant generall Captaine Fenton; and the Michael, whom both we ſuppoſed had bene vtterly loſt, hauing not heard any tidings of them in moe then 20 dayes before.

Barke Dennis ſunke.

And one of our fleete named the Barke Dennis, being of an hundreth tunne burden, ſeeking way in amongſt theſe yce, receiued ſuch a blow with a rocke of yce that ſhe ſunke downe therewith in the ſight of the whole fleete. Howbeit hauing ſignified her danger by ſhooting off a peece of great Ordinance, new ſuccour of other ſhips came ſo readily vnto them, that the men were all ſaued with boats.

Part of the houſe loſt.

Within this ſhip that was drowned there was parcell of our houſe which was to bee erected for them that ſhould ſtay all the winter in Meta Incognita.

This was a more fearefull ſpectacle for the Fleete to beholde, for that the outragious ſtorme which preſently followed, threatned them the like fortune and danger. For the Fleete being thus compaſſed (as aforeſayd) on euery ſide with yce, hauing left much behinde them, thorow which they paſſed, and finding more before them, thorow which it was not poſſible to paſſe, there aroſe a ſudden terrible tempeſt at the Southeaſt, which blowing from the maine ſea, directly vpon the place of the Streites, brought together all the yce a ſea-boorde of vs vpon our backes, and thereby debard vs of turning backe to recouer ſea-roome againe: ſo that being thus compaſſed with danger on euery ſide, ſundry men with ſundry deuiſes ſought the beſt way to ſaue themſelues. Some of the ſhips, where they could find a place more cleare of yce, and get a little birth of ſea roome, did take in their ſayles, and there lay adrift. Other ſome faſtened & mored Anker vpon a great Iſland of yce, and roade vnder the Lee therof, ſuppoſing to be better guarded thereby from the outragious winds, and the danger of the leſſer fleeting yce. And againe ſome were ſo faſt ſhut vp, and compaſſed in amongſt an infinite number of great countreys and Iſlands of yce, that they were faine to ſubmit themſelues and their ſhips to the mercy of the vnmercifull yce, and ſtrengthened the ſides of their ſhips with iunckes of cables, beds, Maſtes, plankes and ſuch like, which being hanged ouer boord on the ſides af their ſhips, might the better defend them from the outragious ſway and ſtrokes of the ſaid yce. But as in greateſt diſtreſſe, men of beſt valour are beſt to bee diſcerned, ſo it is greatly worthy commendation and noting with what inuincible minde euery Captaine encouraged his company, and with what incredible labour the painefull Mariners and poore Miners (vnacquainted with ſuch extremities) to the euerlaſting renowne of our nation, did ouercome the brunt of theſe ſo great and extreme dangers: for ſome, euen without boord vpon the yce, and ſome within boord vpon the ſides of their ſhips, hauing poles, pikes, pieces of timber, and Ores in their handes, ſtoode almoſt day and night without any reſt, bearing off the force, and breaking the ſway of the yce with ſuch incredible paine and perill, that it was wonderfull to beholde, which otherwiſe no doubt had ſtriken quite through and through the ſides of their ſhips, notwithſtanding our former prouiſion: for plankes of timber of more then three inches thicke, and other things of greater force and bigneſſe, by the ſurging of the ſea and billowe, with the yce were ſhiuered and cut in ſunder, at the ſides of our ſhips, ſo that it will ſeeme more then credible to be reported of. And yet (that which is more) it is faithfully and plainely to bee prooued, and that by many ſubſtantiall witneſſes, that our ſhips, euen thoſe of greateſt burdens, with the meeting of contrary waues of the ſea, were heaued vp betweene Iſlands of yce, a foote welneere out of the ſea aboue their watermarke, hauing their knees and timbers within boord both bowed and broken therewith.

And amidſt theſe extremes, whileſt ſome laboured for defence of the ſhips, and ſought to ſaue their bodies, other ſome of more milder ſpirit ſought to ſaue the ſoule by deuout prayer and meditation to the Almightie, thinking indeede by no other meanes poſſible then by a diuine Miracle to haue their deliuerance: ſo that there was none that were either idle, or not well occupied, and he that helde himſelfe in beſt ſecuritie had (God knoweth) but onely bare hope remayning for his beſt ſafetie.

Thus all the gallant Fleete and miſerable men without hope of euer getting foorth againe, diſtreſſed with theſe extremities remayned here all the whole night and part of the next day, excepting foure ſhips, that is, the Anne Francis, the Moone, the Francis of Foy, and the Gabriell, which being ſomewhat a Seaboord of the Fleete, and being faſt ſhips by a winde, hauing a more ſcope of cleare, tryed it out all the time of the ſtorme vnder ſayle, being hardly able to beare a coaſt of each.

And albeit, by reaſon of the fleeting yce, which were diſperſed here almoſt the whole ſea ouer, they were brought many times to the extreameſt point of perill, mountaines of yce tenne thouſand times ſcaping them ſcarce one ynch, which to haue ſtriken had bene their preſent deſtruction, conſidering the ſwift courſe and way of the ſhips, and the vnwieldineſſe of them to ſtay and turne as a man would wiſh: yet they eſteemed it their better ſafetie, with ſuch perill to ſeeke Sea-roome, than without hope of euer getting libertie to lie ſtriuing againſt the ſtreame, and beating amongſt the Iſie mountaines, whoſe hugeneſſe and monſtrous greatneſſe was ſuch, that no man would credite, but ſuch as to their paines ſawe and felt it. And theſe foure ſhippes by the next day at noone got out to Sea, and were firſt cleare of the yce, who now enioying their owne libertie, beganne a new to ſorrow and feare for their fellowes ſafeties. And deuoutly kneeling about their maine Maſt, they gaue vnto God humble thankes, not only for themſelues, but beſought him likewiſe highly for their friendes deliuerance. And euen now whileſt amidoeſt theſe extremities this gallant Fleete and valiant men were altogither ouerlaboured and forewatched, with the long and fearefull continuance of the foreſayd dangers, it pleaſed God with his eyes of mercie to looke downe from heauen to ſende them helpe in good time, giuing them the next day a more fauourable winde at the West Northweſt, which did not onely diſperſe and driue foorth the yce before them, but alſo gaue them libertie of more ſcope and Sea-roome, and they were by night of the ſame day following perceiued of the other foure ſhippes, where (to their greateſt comfort) they enioyed againe the fellowſhip one of another. Some in mending the ſides of their ſhips, ſome in ſetting vp their top Maſtes, and mending their ſayles and tacklings; Againe, ſome complayning of their falſe Stemme borne away, ſome in ſtopping their leakes, ſome in recounting their dangers paſt, ſpent no ſmall time & labour. So that I dare well auouch, there were neuer men more dangerouſly diſtreſſed, nor more mercifully by Gods prouidence deliuered. And hereof both the torne ſhips, and the forwearied bodies of the men arriued doe beare moſt euident marke and witneſſe. And now the whole Fleete plyed off to Seaward, reſoluing there to abide vntill the Sunne might conſume, or the force of winde diſperſe theſe yce from the place of their paſſage: and being a good birth off the ſhore, they tooke in their ſailes, and lay adrift.

The ſeuenth of Iuly as men nothing yet diſmayed, we caſt about towards the inward, and had ſight of land, which roſe in forme like the Northerland of the ſtraights, which ſome of the Fleete, and thoſe not the worſt Marriners, iudged to be the North Foreland: howbeit other ſome were of contrary opinion. But the matter was not well to be diſcerned by reaſon of the thicke fogge which a long time hung vpon the coaſt, & the new falling ſnow which yeerely altereth the ſhape of the land, and taketh away oftentimes the Mariners markes. And by reaſon of the darke miſts which continued by the ſpace of twentie dayes togither, this doubt grewe the greater and the longer perilous. For whereas indeede we thought our ſelues to be vpon the Northeaſt ſide of Frobiſhers ſtraights, we were now caried to the Southweſtwards of the Queenes Foreland, and being deceiued by a ſwift current comming from the Northeaſt, were brought to the Southweſtwards of our ſaid courſe many miles more then we did thinke poſſible could come to paſſe. The cauſe whereof we haue ſince found, and it ſhall be at large hereafter declared.

Another aſſault.

Foggs, ſnow, and miſtes hinder the Mariners markes.

A ſwift current from the Northeaſt.

Here we made a point of land which ſome miſtooke for a place in the ſtraightes called Mount Warwicke: but how we ſhould be ſo farre ſhot vp ſo ſuddainely within the ſaid ſtraighs the experteſt Mariners began to maruell, thinking it a thing impoſſible that they could be ſo farre ouertaken in their accounts, or that any current could deceiue them here which they had not by former experience prooued and found out. Howbeit many confeſſed that they found a ſwifter courſe of flood then before time they had obſerued. And truely it was wonderfull to heare and ſee the ruſhing and noiſe that the tides do make in this place with ſo violent a force that our ſhips lying a hull were turned ſometimes round about euen in a moment after the maner of a whirlepoole, and the noyſe of the ſtreame no leſſe to be heard a farre off, then the waterfall of London Bridge.

But whileſt the Fleete lay thus doubtfull amongſt great ſtore of yce in a place they knew not without ſight of Sunne, whereby to take the height, and ſo to know the true eleuation of the pole, and without any cleere of light to make perfite the coaſt, the Generall with the Captaines & Maſters of his ſhips, began doubtfully to queſtion of the matter, and ſent his Pinneſſe aboord to heare each mans opinion, and ſpecially of Iames Beare, Maſter of the Anne Francis, who was knowen to be a ſufficient and ſkilful Mariner, and hauing bene there the yere before, had wel obſerued the place, and drawen out Cardes of the coaſt. But the rather this matter grew the more doubtfull, for that Chriſtopher Hall chiefe Pilot of the voyage, deliuered a plaine and publique opinion in the hearing of the whole Fleete, that hee had neuer ſeene the foreſayd coaſt before, and that he could not make it for any place of Frobiſhers Streits, as ſome of the Fleete ſuppoſed, and yet the landes doe lie and trend ſo like, that the beſt Mariners therein may bee deceiued.

Iames Beare a good Mariner.

Chriſtopher Hall chiefe Pylot.

The tenth of Iuly, the weather ſtill continuing thicke and darke, ſome of the ſhips in the fogge loſt ſight of the Admirall and the reſt of the fleete, and wandring to and fro, with doubtfull opinion whether it were beſt to ſeeke backe againe to ſeaward through great ſtore of yce, or to follow on a doubtfull courſe in a Sea, Bay, or Streites they knew not, or along a coaſt, whereof by reaſon of the darke miſtes they could not diſcerne the dangers, if by chance any rocke or broken ground ſhould lie off the place, as commonly in theſe parts it doth.

The Viceadmirall Captaine Yorke conſidering the foreſayd opinion of the Pylot Hall, who was with him in the Thomas Allen, hauing loſt ſight of the Fleete, turned backe to ſea againe, hauing two other ſhips in company with him.

Alſo the Captaine of the Anne Francis hauing likewiſe loſt company of the Fleete, and being all alone, held it for beſt to turne it out to ſea againe, vntill they might haue cleere weather to take the Sunnes altitude, and with incredible paine and perill got out of the doubtfull place, into the open Sea againe, being ſo narrowly diſtreſſed by the way, by meanes of continuall fogge and yce, that they were many times ready to leape vpon an Iland of yce to auoide the preſent danger, and ſo hoping to prolong life awhile meant rather to die a pining death.

Some hoped to ſaue themſelues on cheſtes, and ſome determined to tie the Hatches of the ſhips togither, and to binde themſelues with their furniture faſt thereunto, and ſo to be towed with the ſhip-bote aſhore, which otherwiſe could not receiue halfe of the companie, by which meanes if happily they had arriued, they ſhould eyther haue periſhed for lacke of foode to eate, or elſe ſhould themſelues haue beene eaten of thoſe rauenous, bloodie, and Men-eating people.

Hard ſhifts to ſaue mens liues.

The reſt of the Fleete following the courſe of the Generall which led them the way, paſſed vp aboue ſixtie leagues within the ſaide doubtfull and ſuppoſed ſtraights, hauing alwayes a faire continent vpon their ſtarreboord ſide, and a continuance ſtill of an open Sea before them.

The coaſt along yͤ Southſide of Gronland 60 leagues

The Generall albeit with the firſt perchance he found out the error, and that this was not the olde ſtraights, yet he perſwaded the Fleete alwayes that they were in their right courſe, and knowen ſtraights. Howbeit I ſuppoſe he rather diſſembled his opinion therein then otherwiſe, meaning by that policie (being himſelfe led with an honourable deſire of further diſcouerie) to induce the Fleete to follow him, to ſee a further proofe of that place. And as ſome of the companie reported, he hath ſince confeſſed that if it had not bene for the charge and care he had of the Fleete and fraughted ſhips, he both would and could haue gone through to the South Sea, called Mar del Sur, and diſſolued the long doubt of the paſſage which we ſeeke to find to the rich countrey of Cataya.

Miſtaken ſtraights which indeede are no ſtraights.

Frobiſher could haue paſſed to Cataia.

1 Of which miſtaken ſtraights, conſidering the circumſtance, we haue great cauſe to confirme our opinion, to like and hope well of the paſſage in this place. For the foreſaid Bay or Sea, the further we ſayled therein, the wider we found it, with great likelihood of endleſſe continuance. And where in other places we were much troubled with yce, as in the entrance of the ſame, ſo after we had ſayled fiftie or ſixtie leagues therein we had no let of yce, or other thing at all, as in other places we found.

Faire open way.

Reaſons to proue a paſſage here.

2 Alſo this place ſeemeth to haue a maruellous great indraft, and draweth vnto it moſt of the drift yce, and other things which doe fleete in the Sea, either to the North or Eaſtwards of the ſame, as by good experience we haue found.

driſt

Great indrafts.

A current to the Weſt.

3 For here alſo we met with boordes, lathes, and diuers other things driuing in the Sea, which was of the wracke of the ſhip called the Barke Dennis, which periſhed amongſt the yce as beforeſaid, being loſt at the firſt attempt of the entrance ouerthwart the Queenes forelande in the mouth of Frobiſhers ſtraights, which could by no meanes haue bene ſo brought thither, neither by winde nor tyde, being loſt ſo many leagues off, if by force of the ſaid current the ſame had not bene violently brought. For if the ſame had bene brought thither by tide of flood, looke how farre the ſaid flood had carried it, the ebbe would haue recarried it as farre backe againe, and by the winde it could not ſo come to paſſe, becauſe it was then ſometime calme, and moſt times contrarie.

Nine houres flood to three houres ebbe.

And ſome Mariners doe affirme that they haue diligently obſerued, that there runneth in this place nine houres flood to three ebbe, which may thus come to paſſe by force of the ſayd current: for whereas the Sea in moſt places of the world, doth more or leſſe ordinarily ebbe and flow once euery twelue houres with ſixe houres ebbe, and ſixe houres flood, ſo alſo would it doe there, were it not for the violence of this haſtning current, which forceth the flood to make appearance to beginne before his ordinary time one houre and a halfe, and alſo to continue longer than his naturall courſe by an other houre and a halfe, vntill the force of the ebbe be ſo great that it will no longer be reſiſted: according to the ſaying, Naturam expellas furca licet, vſque recurrit. Although nature and naturall courſes be forced and reſiſted neuer ſo much, yet at laſt they will haue their owne ſway againe.

Moreouer it is not poſſible that ſo great courſe of floods and current, ſo high ſwelling tides with continuance of ſo deepe waters, can be digeſted here without vnburdening themſelues into ſome open Sea beyond this place, which argueth the more likelihood of the paſſage to be hereabouts. Alſo we ſuppoſe theſe great indrafts doe growe and are made by the reuerberation and reflection of that ſame current, which at our comming by Ireland, met and croſſed vs, of which in the firſt part of this diſcourſe I ſpake, which comming from the bay of Mexico, paſſing by and waſhing the Southweſt parts of Ireland, reboundeth ouer to the Northeaſt parts of the world, as Norway, Iſland, &c. where not finding any paſſage to an open Sea, but rather being there encreaſed by a new acceſſe, and another current meeting with it from the Scythian Sea, paſſing the bay of Saint Nicholas Weſtward, it doth once againe rebound backe, by the coaſtes of Groenland, and from thence vpon Frobiſhers ſtraights being to the Southweſtwardes of the ſame.

The ſea moueth from Eaſt to Weſt continually.

5 And if that principle of Philoſophie be true, that Inferiora corpora reguntur à ſuperioribus, that is, if inferiour bodies be gouerned, ruled, and caried after the manner and courſe of the ſuperiors, then the water being an inferior Element, muſt needes be gouerned after the ſuperior heauen, and ſo follow the courſe of Primum mobile from Eaſt to Weſt.

Authoritie.

6 But euery man that hath written or conſidered any thing of this paſſage, hath more doubted the returne by the ſame way by reaſon of a great downefall of water, which they imagine to be thereabouts (which we alſo by experience partly find) than any miſtruſt they haue of the ſame paſſage at all. For we find (as it were) a great downefall in this place, but yet not ſuch but that we may returne, although with much a doe. For we were eaſlier carried in one houre then we could get forth againe in three. Alſo by another experience at another time, we found this current to deceiue vs in this ſort: That whereas we ſuppoſed it to be 15 leagues off, and lying a hull, we were brought within two leagues of the ſhore contrarie to all expectation.

Hard but yet poſſible turning backe againe.

Our men that ſayled furtheſt in the ſame miſtaken ſtraightes (hauing the maine land vpon their ſtarboord ſide) affirme that they met with the outlet or paſſage of water which commeth thorow Frobiſhers ſtraightes, and followeth as all one into this paſſage.

Some of our companie alſo affirme that they had ſight of a continent vpon their larboord ſide being 60 leagues within the ſuppoſed ſtraightes: howbeit except certaine Ilands in the entrance hereof we could make no part perfect thereof. All the foreſaid tract of land ſeemeth to be more fruitfull and better ſtored of Graſſe, Deere, Wilde foule, as Partridges, Larkes, Seamewes, Guls, Wilmots, Falcons and Taſſel gentils, Rauens, Beares, Hares, Foxes, and other things, than any other part we haue yet diſcouered, and is more populous. And here Luke Ward, a Gentleman of the companie, traded marchandiſe, and did exchange kniues, bels, looking glaſſes, &c. with thoſe countrey people, who brought him foule, fiſh, beares ſkinnes, and ſuch like, as their countrey yeeldeth for the ſame. Here alſo they ſaw of thoſe greater boats of the countrey, with twentie perſons in a peece.

Traffique.

Now after the Generall had beſtowed theſe many dayes here, not without many dangers, he returned backe againe. And by the way ſayling alongſt this coaſt (being the backeſide of the ſuppoſed continent of America) and the Queenes Foreland, he perceiued a great ſound to goe thorow into Frobiſhers ſtraights. Whereupon he ſent the Gabriel the one and twentieth of Iuly, to prooue whether they might goe thorow and meete againe with him in the ſtraightes, which they did: and as wee imagined before, ſo the Queenes foreland prooued an Iland, as I thinke moſt of theſe ſuppoſed continents will. And ſo he departed towardes the ſtraights, thinking it were high time now to recouer his Port, and to prouide the Fleete of their lading, whereof he was not a little carefull, as ſhall by the proceſſe and his reſolute attempts appeare. And in his returne with the reſt of the fleete he was ſo intangled by reaſon of the darke fogge amongſt a number of Ilands and broken ground that lye off this coaſt, that many of the ſhippes came ouer the top of rockes, which preſently after they might perceiue to lie dry, hauing not halfe a foote water more then ſome of their ſhips did draw. And by reaſon they could not with a ſmal gale of wind ſtemme the force of the flood, whereby to goe cleere off the rockes, they were faine to let an anker fall with two bent of Cable togither, at an hundred and odde fadome depth, where otherwiſe they had bene by the force of the tydes caried vpon the rockes againe, and periſhed: ſo that if God in theſe fortunes (as a mercifull guide, beyond the expectation of man) had not carried vs thorow, we had ſurely periſhed amidſt theſe dangers. For being many times driuen hard aboord the ſhore without any ſight of land, vntill we were ready to make ſhipwracke thereon, being forced commonly with our boats to ſound before our ſhips, leaſt we might light thereon before we could diſcerne the ſame; it pleaſed God to giue vs a cleare of Sunne and light for a ſhort time to ſee and auoyde thereby the danger, hauing bene continually darke before, and preſently after. Manie times alſo by meanes of fogge and currents being driuen neere vpon the coaſt, God lent vs euen at the very pinch one proſperous breath of winde or other, whereby to double the land, and auoid the perill, and when that we were all without hope of helpe, euery man recommending himſelfe to death, and crying out, Lord now helpe or neuer, now Lord looke downe from heauen and ſaue vs ſinners, or elſe our ſafetie commeth too late: euen then the mightie maker of heauen, and our mercifull God did deliuer vs: ſo that they who haue bene partakers of theſe dangers doe euen in their ſoules confeſſe, that God euen by miracle hath ſought to ſaue them, whoſe name be prayſed euermore.

Returne out of the miſtaken ſtraights.

Great dangers.

Long time now the Anne Francis had layne beating off and on all alone before the Queenes foreland, not being able to recouer their Port for yce, albeit many times they dangerouſly attempted it, for yet the yce choaked vp the paſſage, and would not ſuffer them to enter. And hauing neuer ſeene any of the fleete ſince twenty dayes paſt, when by reaſon of the thicke miſtes they were ſeuered in the miſtaken ſtraights, they did now this preſent 23 of Iuly ouerthwart a place in the ſtraights called Hattons Hedland, where they met with ſeuen ſhips of yͤ Fleete againe, which good hap did not onely reioyce them for themſelues, in reſpect of the comfort which they receiued by ſuch good companie, but eſpecially that by this meanes they were put out of doubt of their deare friends, whoſe ſafeties long time they did not a little ſuſpect and feare.

Anne Francis met with ſome of the fleete.

At their meeting they haled the Admirall after the maner of the Sea, and with great ioy welcommed one another with a thundring volly of ſhot. And now euery man declared at large the fortunes and dangers which they had paſſed.

Francis of Foy.

The foure and twentieth of Iuly we met with the Francis of Foy, who with much adoe ſought way backe againe through the yce from out of the miſtaken ſtraights, where (to their great perill) they prooued to recouer their Port. They brought the firſt newes of the Vizadmirall Captaine Yorke, who many dayes with themſelues, and the Buſſe of Bridgewater was miſſing. They reported that they left the Vizeadmirall reaſonably cleare of the yce, but the other ſhip they greatly feared, whom they could not come to helpe, being themſelues ſo hardly diſtreſſed as neuer men more. Alſo they told vs of the Gabriel, who hauing got thorow from the backſide, and Weſtern point of the Queenes foreland, into Frobiſhers ſtraights, fell into their company about the cape of Good hope.

Bridgewater ſhip.

And vpon the ſeuen and twentieth of Iuly, the ſhip of Bridgewater got out of the yce and met with the Fleete which lay off and on vnder Hattons Hedland. They reported of their maruellous accidents and dangers, declaring their ſhip to be ſo leake that they muſt of neceſſitie ſeeke harborow, hauing their ſtem ſo beaten within their huddings, that they had much adoe to keepe themſelues aboue water. They had (as they ſay) fiue hundreth ſtrokes at the pump in leſſe then halfe a watch, being ſcarce two houres; their men being ſo ouer-wearied therewith, and with the former dangers that they deſired helpe of men from the other ſhips. Moreouer they declared that there was nothing but yce and danger where they had bene, and that the ſtraights within were frozen vp, and that it was the moſt impoſſible thing of the world, to paſſe vp vnto the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound, which was the place of our Port.

The Streits frozen ouer.

The report of theſe dangers by theſe ſhips thus publiſhed amongſt the fleete, with the remembrance of the perils paſt, and thoſe preſent before their face, brought no ſmall feare and terror into the hearts of many conſiderate men. So that ſome beganne priuily to murmure againſt the Generall for this wilfull maner of proceeding. Some deſired to diſcouer ſome harborow thereabouts to refreſh themſelues and reforme their broken veſſels for a while, vntill the North and Northweſt windes might diſperſe the yce, and make the place more free to paſſe. Other ſome forgetting themſelues, ſpake more vndutifully in this behalfe, ſaying: that they had as leeue be hanged when they came home, as without hope of ſafetie to ſeeke to paſſe, and ſo to periſh amongſt the yce.

The Generall not opening his eares to the peeuiſh paſſion of any priuate perſon, but chiefly reſpecting the accompliſhment of the cauſe he had vndertaken (wherein the chiefe reputation and fame of a Generall and Captaine conſiſteth) and calling to his remembrance the ſhort time he had in hand to prouide ſo great number of ſhips their loading, determined with this reſolution to paſſe and recouer his Port, or elſe there to burie himſelfe with his attempt.

A valiant minde of M. Frobiſher.

Notwithſtanding ſomewhat to appeaſe the feeble paſſions of the fearefuller ſort, and the better to entertaine time for a ſeaſon, whileſt the yce might the better be diſſolued, he haled on the Fleete with beleefe that he would put them into harborow: thereupon whileſt the ſhippes lay off and on vnder Hattons Hedland, he ſought to goe in with his Pinneſſes amongſt the Ilandes there, as though hee meant to ſearch for harborowe, where indeede he meant nothing leſſe, but rather ſought if any Ore might be found in that place, as by the ſequele appeared.

In the meane time whileſt the Fleete lay thus doubtfull without any certaine reſolution what to do, being hard aboord the lee-ſhore, there aroſe a ſodaine and terrible tempeſt at the South-ſoutheaſt, whereby the yce began maruellouſly to gather about vs.

Whereupon euery man, as in ſuch caſe of extremitie he thought beſt, ſought the wiſeſt way for his owne ſafety. The moſt part of the Fleete which were further ſhot vp within the ſtraights, and ſo farre to the leeward, as that they could not double the land, following the courſe of the Generall, who led them the way, tooke in their Sayles, and layde it a hull amongſt the yce, and ſo paſſed ouer the ſtorme, and had no extremitie at all, but for a ſhort time in the ſame place.

Howbeit the other ſhips which plyed out to Seaward, had an extreme ſtorme for a longer ſeaſon. And the nature of the place is ſuch, that it is ſubiect diuerſly to diuers windes, according to the ſundry ſituation of the great Alps and mountaines there, euery mountaine cauſing a ſeuerall blaſt, and pirrie, after the maner of a Leuant.

In this ſtorme being the ſixe and twentieth of Iuly, there fell ſo much ſnow, with ſuch bitter cold aire, that we could not ſcarce ſee one another for the ſame, nor open our eyes to handle our ropes and ſayles, the ſnow being aboue halfe a foote deepe vpon the hatches of our ſhip, which did ſo wet throw our poore Mariners clothes, that hee that had fiue or ſixe ſhifts of apparell had ſcarce one drie threed to his backe, which kind of wet and coldneſſe, togither with the ouerlabouring of the poore men amiddeſt the yce, bred no ſmall ſickneſſe amongſt the fleete, which ſomewhat diſcouraged ſome of the poore men, who had not experience of the like before, euery man perſwading himſelfe that the winter there muſt needes be extreme, where they found ſo vnſeaſonable a Sommer.

Snow in Iuly

Extreme winter.

And yet notwithſtanding this cold aire, the Sunne many times hath a maruellous force of heate amongſt thoſe mountaines, inſomuch that when there is no breth of winde to bring the colde aire from the diſperſed yce vpon vs, we ſhall be wearie of the bloming heate and then ſodainely with a perry of winde which commeth downe from the hollowneſſe of the hilles, we ſhall haue ſuch a breth of heate brought vpon our faces as though we were entred within ſome bathſtoue or hote-houſe, and when the firſt of the pirry and blaſt is paſt, we ſhall haue the winde ſodainely a new blow cold againe.

Great heat in Meta Incognita.

Vnconſtant weather.

In this ſtorme the Anne Francis, the Moone, and the Thomas of Ipſwich, who found themſelues able to hold it vp with a ſaile, and could double about the Cape of the Queenes foreland, plyed out to the Seaward, holding it for better policie and ſafetie to ſeeke Searoome, then to hazard the continuance of the ſtorme, the danger of the yce, and the lee-ſhoare.

And being vncertaine at this time of the Generals priuate determinations, the weather being ſo darke that they could not diſcerne one another, nor perceiue which way he wrought, betooke themſelues to this courſe for beſt and ſafeſt.

The General, notwithſtanding the great ſtorme, following his own former reſolution, ſought by all meanes poſſible, by a ſhorter way to recouer his Port, and where he ſaw the yce neuer ſo little open, he gate in at one gappe and out at another, and ſo himſelfe valiantly led the way thorow before to induce the Fleete to follow after, and with incredible paine and perill at length gat through the yce, and vpon the one and thirtieth of Iuly recouered his long wiſhed Port after many attempts and ſundry times being put backe, and came to anker in the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound, in the entrance whereof, when he thought all perill paſt, he encountred a great Iland of yce which gaue the Ayde ſuch a blow, hauing a little before wayed her anker a cocke bill, that it ſtroke the anker flouke through the ſhips bowes vnder the water, which cauſed ſo great a leake, that with much adoe they preſerued the ſhip from ſinking.

The Generall recouereth his port.

At their arriuall here they perceiued two ſhips at anker within the harborough, whereat they began much to maruell and greatly to reioyce, for thoſe they knew to be the Michael, wherein was the Lieutenant generall Captaine Fenton, and the ſmall Barke called the Gabriel, who ſo long time were miſſing, and neuer heard of before, whom euery man made the laſt reckoning, neuer to heare of againe.

Here euery man greatly reioyced of their happie meeting, and welcommed one another after the Sea manner with their great Ordinance, and when each partie had ripped vp their ſundry fortunes and perils paſt, they highly prayſed God, and altogither vpon their knees gaue him due, humble and heartty thankes, and Maiſter Wolfall a learned man, appointed by her Maieſties Councell to be their Miniſter and Preacher made vnto them a godly ſermon, exhorting them eſpecially to be thankefull to God for their ſtrange and miraculous deliuerance in thoſe ſo dangerous places, and putting them in mind of the vncertainetie of mans life, willed them to make themſelues alwayes readie as reſolute men to enioy and accept thankefully whatſoeuer aduenture his diuine Prouidence ſhould appoint. This maiſter Wolfall being well ſeated and ſetled at home in his owne Countrey, with a good and large liuing, hauing a good honeſt woman to wife and very towardly children, being of good reputation among the beſt, refuſed not to take in hand this painefull voyage, for the onely care he had to ſaue ſoules, and to reforme thoſe Infidels if it were poſſible to Chriſtianitie: and alſo partly for the great deſire he had that this notable voyage ſo well begunne, might be brought to perfection: and therefore he was contented to ſtay there the whole yeare if occaſion had ſerued, being in euery neceſſary action as forward as the reſoluteſt men of all. Wherefore in this behalfe he may rightly be called a true Paſtor and miniſter of Gods word, which for the profite of his flocke ſpared not to venture his owne life.

Maſter Wolfall Preacher.

But to returne againe to Captaine Fentons company, and to ſpeake ſome what of their dangers (albeit they be more then by writing can be expreſſed) they reported that from the night of the firſt ſtorme which was about the firſt day of Iuly vntill ſeuen dayes before the Generals arriuall, which was the ſixe and twentith of the ſame, they neuer ſaw any one day or houre, wherin they were not troubled with continuall danger and feare of death, and were twentie dayes almoſt togither faſt amongſt the yce. They had their ſhip ſtricken through and through on both ſides, their falſe ſtemme borne quite away, and could goe from their ſhips in ſome places vpon the yce very many miles, and might eaſily haue paſſed from one Iland of yce to another euen to the ſhore, and if God had not wonderfully prouided for them and their neceſſitie, and time had not made them more cunning and wiſe to ſeeke ſtrange remedies for ſtrange kindes of dangers, it had bene impoſſible for them euer to haue eſcaped: for among other deuiſes, whereſoeuer they found any Iland of yce of greater bigneſſe then the reſt (as there be ſome of more then halfe a mile compaſſe about, and almoſt forty fadome high) they commonly coueted to recouer the ſame, and thereof to make a bulwarke for their defence, whereon hauing mored anker, they road vnder the lee therof for a time, being therby garded from the danger of the leſſer driuing yce. But when they muſt needes forgoe this new found fort by meanes of other yce, which at length would vndermine and compaſſe them round about, and when that by heauing of the billow they were therewith like to be bruſed in peeces, they vſed to make faſt the ſhippe vnto the moſt firme and broad peece of yce they could find, and binding her noſe faſt thereunto, would fill all their ſayles whereon the winde hauing great power, would force forward the ſhip, and ſo the ſhippe bearing before her the yce, & ſo one yce driuing forward another, ſhould at length get ſcope & searoome. And hauing by this meanes at length put their enemies to flight, they occupyed the cleare place for a prettie ſeaſon among ſundry mountaines and Alpes of yce. One there was found by meaſure to be 65 fadome aboue water, which for a kind of ſimilitude, was called Salomons porch.

The aduentures of Captaine Fenton and his companie.

Extremitie causeth men to deuiſe new arts and remedies.

Hard ſhifts.

Some thinke thoſe Ilands eight times ſo much vnder water as they are aboue, becauſe of their monſtrous weight. But now I remember I ſaw very ſtrange wonders, men walking, running, leaping and ſhooting vpon the mayne ſeas 40. myles from any land, without any Shippe or other veſſell vnder them. Alſo I ſaw freſh Riuers running amidſt the ſalt Sea a hundred myle from land, which if any man will not beleeue, let him knowe that many of our company leapt out of their Shippe vpon Ilandes of yce, and running there vp and downe, did ſhoote at Buts vpon the yce, and with their Caliuers did kill great Seales, which vſe to lye and ſleepe vpon the yce, and this yce melting aboue at the toppe by reflection of the Sunne, came downe in ſundry ſtreames, which vniting together, made a pretie Brooke able to driue a Mill.

Strange wonders.

The ſayde Captaine Fenton recouered his Port tenne dayes before any man, and ſpent good tyme in ſearching for Mine, and hee found good ſtore thereof. He alſo diſcouered about tenne Miles vp into the Countrey, where he perceiued neither Towne, Village, nor likelihoode of habitation, but it ſeemeth (as he ſayth) barren, as the other parts which as yet we haue entred vpon: but their victuals and prouiſion went ſo ſcant with them, that they had determined to returne homeward within ſeuen dayes after, if the Fleete had not then arriued.

The Generall after his arriuall in the Counteſſes ſound, ſpent no time in vaine, but immediatly at his firſt landing called the chiefe Captaines of his Councell together, and conſulted with them for the ſpeedier execution of ſuch things as then they had in hand. As firſt, for ſearching and finding out good Minerall for the Miners to be occupyed on. Then to giue good Orders to bee obſerued of the whole company on ſhore. And laſtly, to conſider for the erecting vp of the Fort and Houſe for the vſe of them which were to abide there the whole yeere. For the better handling of theſe, and all other like important cauſes in this ſeruice, it was ordeined from her Maieſtie and the Councell, that the Generall ſhould call vnto him certaine of the chiefe Captaines and Gentlemen in Councell, to conferre, conſult and determine of all occurrents in this ſeruice, whoſe names are as here they follow.

Captaine Fenton.
Captaine Yorke.
Captaine Beſt.
Captaine Carew.
Captaine Philpot.

And in Sea cauſes to haue as aſſiſtants, Chriſtopher Hall and Charles Iackman, being both very good Pilots, and ſufficient Mariners, whereof the one was chiefe Pilot of the Voyage, and the other for the diſcouerie. From the place of our habitation Weſtward, Maſter Selman was appointed Notarie, to regiſter the whole maner of proceeding in theſe affaires, that true relation thereof might be made, if it pleaſed her Maieſtie to require it.

The firſt of Auguſt euery Captaine by order, from the Generall and his councell, was commanded to bring aſhoare vnto the Counteſſes Iland all ſuch Gentlemen, ſouldiers, and Myners, as were vnder their charge, with ſuch prouiſion as they had of victuals, tents, and things neceſſary for the ſpeedy getting together of Mine, and fraight for the ſhippes.

The Muſter of the men being taken, and the victuals with all other things viewed and conſidered, euery man was ſet to his charge, as his place and office required. The Myners were appointed where to worke, and the Mariners diſcharged their ſhippes.

Vpon the ſecond of Auguſt were publiſhed and proclaymed vpon the Counteſſe of Warwicks Iland with ſound of Trumpet, certaine Orders by the Generall and his councell, appoynted to be obſerued of the company during the time of their abiding there.

In the meane time, whileſt the Mariners plyed their worke, the Captaines ſought out new Mynes, the Goldfiners made tryall of the Ore, the Mariners diſcharged their ſhippes, the Gentlemen for example ſake laboured heartily, and honeſtly encouraged the inferiour ſort to worke. So that the ſmall tyme of that little leaſure that was left to tarrie, was ſpent in vaine.

The ſecond of Auguſt the Gabriel arriued, who came from the Vizeadmirall, and beeing diſtreſſed ſore with Yce, put into Harborough neere vnto Mount Oxford. And now was the whole Fleete arriued ſafely at their Port, excepting foure, beſides the Shippe that was loſt: that is, the Thomas Allen, the Anne Francis, the Thomas of Ipſwich, and the Moone, whoſe abſence was ſome lette vnto the workes and other proceedings, aſwell for that theſe Shippes were furniſhed with the better ſorte of Myners, as with other prouiſion for the habitation.

The ninth of Auguſt the Generall with the Captaynes of his counſell aſſembled together, and began to conſider and take order for the erecting vp of the houſe or Fort for them that were to inhabite there the whole yeere, and that preſently the Maſons and Carpenters might goe in hande therewith. Firſt therefore they peruſed the Bils of lading, what euery man receiued into his Shippe, and found that there was arriued onely the Eaſtſide, and the Southſide of the houſe, and yet not that perfect and entier: for many pieces thereof were vſed for fenders in many Shippes, and ſo broken in pieces whileſt they were diſtreſſed in the yce. Alſo after due examination had, and true account taken, there was found want of drinke and fuel to ſerue one hundreth men, which was the number appoynted firſt to inhabite there, becauſe their greateſt ſtore was in the Shippes which were not yet arriued. Then Captaine Fenton ſeeing the ſcarcitie of the neceſſary things aforeſayd, was contented, and offred himſelfe to inhabite there with ſixtie men. Whereupon they cauſed the Carpenters and Maſons to come before them, and demanded in what time they would take vpon them to erect vp a leſſe houſe for ſixtie men. They required eight or nine weekes, if there were Tymber ſufficient, whereas now they had but ſixe and twentie dayes in all to remayne in that Countrey. Wherefore it was fully agreed vpon, and reſolued by the Generall and his counſell, that no habitation ſhould be there this yeere. And therefore they willed Maſter Selman the Regiſter to ſet downe this decree with all their conſents, for the better ſatiſfying of her Maieſtie, the Lords of the Counſell, and the Aduenturers.

Conſultation for inhabiting Meta incognita.

An hundred men appointed to inhabite.

No habitation this yeere.

The Anne Francis, ſince ſhee was parted from the Fleete, in the laſt ſtorme before ſpoken of, could neuer recouer aboue fiue leagues within the ſtreights, the winde being ſometime contrary, and moſt times the Yce compaſſing them round about. And from that time, being about the ſeuen and twentieth of July, they could neither heare nor haue ſight of any of the Fleete, vntil the 3. of Auguſt, when they deſcryed a ſayle neere vnto Mount Oxford, with whom when they had ſpoken, they could vnderſtand no newes of any of the Fleete at all. And this was the Thomas of Ipſwich, who had layne beating off and on at Sea with very fowle weather, and contrary windes, euer ſince that foreſayd ſtorme, without ſight of any man. They kept company not long together, but were forced to looſe one another againe, the Moone being conſort alwayes with the Anne Francis, and keeping very good company plyed vp together into the ſtreightes, with great deſire to recouer their long wiſhed Port: and they attempted as often, and paſſed as farre as poſſible the winde, weather, & yce gaue them leaue, which commonly they found very contrary. For when the weather was cleare and without fogge, then commonly the winde was contrary. And when it was eyther Eaſterly or Southerly, which would ſerue their turnes, then had they ſo great a fogge and darke miſte therewith, that eyther they could not diſcerne way thorow the yce, or els the yce lay ſo thicke together, that it was impoſſible for them to paſſe. And on the other ſide, when it was calme, the Tydes had force to bring the yce ſo ſuddenly about them, that commonly then they were moſt therewith diſtreſſed, hauing no Winde to cary them from the danger thereof.

And by the ſixt of Auguſt being with much adoe got vp as high as Leiceſter point, they had good hope to finde the Souther ſhore cleare, and ſo to paſſe vp towardes their Port. But being there becalmed and lying a hull openly vpon the great Bay which commeth out of the miſtaken ſtreights before ſpoken of, they were ſo ſuddenly compaſſed with yce round about by meanes of the ſwift Tydes which run in that place, that they were neuer afore ſo hardly beſet as now. And in ſeeking to auoyde theſe dangers in the darke weather, the Anne Francis loſt ſight of the other two Ships, who being likewiſe hardly diſtreſſed, ſignified their danger, as they ſince reported, by ſhooting off their ordinance, which the other could not heare, nor if they had heard, could haue giuen them any remedie, being ſo buſily occupied to winde themſelues out of their owne troubles.

The Moone.

The Fleeboate called the Moone, was here heaued aboue the water with the force of the yce, and receiued a great leake thereby. Likewiſe the Thomas of Ipſwich, and the Anne Francis were ſore bruſed at that inſtant, hauing their falſe ſtemmes borne away, and their ſhip ſides ſtroken quite through.

The Anne Francis, the Thomas of Ipſwich and the Moone conſult.

Now conſidering the continuall dangers and contraries, and the little leaſure that they had left to tarie in theſe partes, beſides that euery night the ropes of their Shippes were ſo frozen, that a man could not handle them without cutting his handes, together with the great doubt they had of the Fleetes ſafety, thinking it an impoſſibilitie for them to paſſe vnto their Port, as well for that they ſaw themſelues, as for that they heard by the former report of the Shippes which had prooued before, who affirmed that the ſtreights were all frozen ouer within: They thought it now very hie time to conſider of their eſtates and ſafeties that were yet left together. And hereupon the Captaines and maſters of theſe Shippes, deſired the Captaine of the Anne Francis to enter into conſideration with them of theſe matters. Wherefore Captaine Tanfield of the Thomas of Ipſwich, with his Pilot Richard Cox, and Captaine Vpcote of the Moone, with his maſter Iohn Lakes came aboorde the Anne Francis the eight of Auguſt to conſult of theſe cauſes. And being aſſembled together in the Captaines Cabin, ſundry doubts were there alledged. For the fearefuller ſort of Mariners being ouertyred with the continuall labour of the former dangers, coueted to returne homeward, ſaying that they would not againe tempt God ſo much, who had giuen them ſo many warnings, and deliuered them from ſo wonderfull dangers: that they rather deſired to loſe wages, fraight, and all, then to continue and follow ſuch deſperate fortunes. Againe, their Ships were ſo leake, and the men ſo wearie, that to amend the one, and refreſh the other, they muſt of neceſſitie ſeeke into harborough.

But on the other ſide it was argued againe to the contrary, that to ſeeke into harborough thereabouts, was but to ſubiect themſelues to double dangers: if happily they eſcaped the dangers of Rockes in their entring, yet being in, they were neuertheleſſe ſubiect there to the danger of the Ice, which with the ſwift tydes and currents is caryed in and out in moſt harboroughs thereabouts, and may thereby gaule their Cables aſunder, driue them vpon the ſhoare, and bring them to much trouble. Alſo the coaſt is ſo much ſubiect to broken ground and rockes, eſpecially in the mouth and entrance of euery Harborough, that albeit the Channell be ſounded ouer and ouer againe, yet are you neuer the neerer to diſcerne the dangers. For the bottome of the Sea holding like ſhape and forme as the Land, being full of hils, dales, and ragged Rocks, ſuffreth you not by your ſoundings to knowe and keepe a true geſſe of the depth. For you ſhall ſound vpon the ſide or hollowneſſe of one Hill or Rocke vnder water, and haue a hundreth, fiftie, or fourtie fadome depth: and before the next caſt, yer you ſhall be able to heaue your lead againe, you ſhall be vpon the toppe thereof, and come aground to your vtter confuſion.

Another reaſon againſt going to harborough was, that the colde ayre did threaten a ſudden freezing vp of the ſounds, ſeeing that euery night there was new congealed yce, euen of that water which remayned within their ſhippes. And therefore it ſhould ſeeme to be more ſafe to lye off and on at Sea, then for lacke of winde to bring them foorth of harborough, to hazard by ſudden froſts to be ſhut vp the whole yeere.

After many ſuch dangers and reaſons alledged, and large debating of theſe cauſes on both ſides, the Captaine of the Anne Francis deliuered his opinion vnto the company to this effect. Firſt concerning the queſtion of returning home, hee thought it ſo much diſhonorable, as not to grow in any farther queſtion: and againe to returne home at length (as at length they muſt needes) and not to be able to bring a certaine report of the Fleete, whether they were liuing or loſt, or whether any of them had recouered their Port or not, in the Counteſſes ſound, (as it was to bee thought the moſt part would if they were liuing) hee ſayde that it would be ſo great an argument eyther of want of courage or diſcretion in them, as hee reſolued rather to fall into any danger, then ſo ſhamefully to conſent to returne home, proteſting that it ſhould neuer bee ſpoken of him, that hee would euer returne without doing his endeuour to finde the Fleete, and knowe the certaintie of the Generals ſafetie. Hee put his company in remembrance of a Pinniſſe of fiue tunne burthen, which hee had within his Shippe, which was caryed in pieces, and vnmade vp for the vſe of thoſe which ſhould inhabite there the whole yeere, the which, if they could finde meanes to ioyne together, hee offered himſelfe to proue before therewith, whether it were poſſible for any Boate to paſſe for yce, whereby the Shippe might bee brought in after, and might alſo thereby giue true notice, if any of the Fleete were arriued at their Port or not.

Captaine Beſts reſolution.

A Pinniſſe for the inhabiters.

But notwithſtanding, for that he well perceiued that the moſt part of his company were addicted to put into harborough, hee was willing the rather for theſe cauſes ſomewhat to encline thereunto. As firſt, to ſearch alongſt the ſame coaſt, and the ſoundes thereabouts, hee thought it to be to good purpoſe, for that it was likely to finde ſome of the Fleete there, which being leake, and ſore bruſed with the yce, were the rather thought likely to be put into an yll harborough, being diſtreſſed with foule weather in the laſt ſtorme, then to hazard their vncertaine ſafeties amongſt the yce: for about this place they loſt them, and left the Fleete then doubtfully queſtioning of harborough.

It was likely alſo, that they might finde ſome fitte harborough thereabouts, which might bee behoouefull for them againſt another time. It was not likewiſe impoſſible to finde ſome Ore or Mine thereabouts wherewithall to fraight their Shippes, which would bee more commodious in this place, for the neereneſſe to Seaward, and for a better outlet, then farther within the ſtreights, being likely heere alwayes to loade in a ſhorter time, howſoeuer the ſtreight ſhould be peſtered with yce within, ſo that if it might come to paſſe that thereby they might eyther finde the Fleete, Mine, or conuenient harborough, any of theſe three would ſerue their preſent turnes, and giue ſome hope and comfort vnto their companies, which now were altogether comfortleſſe. But if that all fortune ſhould fall out ſo contrary, that they could neyther recouer their Port, nor any of theſe aforeſayde helpes, that yet they would not depart the Coaſt, as long as it was poſſible for them to tary there, but would lye off and on at Sea athwart the place. Therefore his finall concluſion was ſet downe thus, Firſt, that the Thomas of Ipſwich and the Moone ſhould conſort and keepe company together carefully with the Anne Francis, as neere as they could, and as true Engliſhmen and faithfull friends, ſhould ſupply one anothers want in all fortunes and dangers. In the morning following, euery Shippe to ſend off his Boate with a ſufficient Pylot, to ſearch out and ſound the harboroughs for the ſafe bringing in of their Shippes. And beeing arriued in harborough, where they might finde conuenient place for the purpoſe, they reſolued foorthwith to ioyne and ſette together the Pinneſſe, wherewithall the Captaine of the Anne Francis might, according to his former determination, diſcouer vp into the ſtreights.

After theſe determinations thus ſet downe, the Thomas of Ipſwich the night following loſt company of the other Shippes, and afterward ſhaped a contrary courſe homeward, which fell out as it manifeſtly appeared, very much againſt their Captaine Maſter Tanfieldes minde, as by due examination before the Lordes of her Maieſties moſt honourable priuie Counſell it hath ſince bene prooued, to the great diſcredite of the Pilot Cox, who ſpecially perſuaded his company againſt the opinion of his ſayd Captaine, to returne home.

And as the Captaine of the Anne Francis doeth witneſſe, euen at their conference togither, Captaine Tanfield tolde him, that he did not a little ſuſpect the ſayd Pilot Cox, ſaying that he had opinion in the man neither of honeſt ductie, manhoode, nor conſtancie. Notwithſtanding the ſayde Shippes departure, the Captaine of the Anne Francis being deſirous to put in execution his former reſolutions, went with his Shippeboate (being accompanied alſo with the Moones Skiffe) to prooue amongſt the Ilands which lye vnder Hattons Hedland, if any conuenient harborough, or any knowledge of the Fleete, or any good Ore were there to be found. The Shippes lying off and on at Sea the while vnder Sayle, ſearching through many ſounds, they ſawe them all full of many dangers and broken ground: yet one there was, which ſeemed an indifferent place to harborough in, and which they did very diligently ſound ouer, and ſearched againe.

Beſtes bleſſing.

Here the ſayde Captaine found a great blacke Iland, whereunto hee had good liking, and certifying the company thereof, they were ſomewhat comforted, and with the good hope of his wordes rowed cheerefully vnto the place: where when they arriued, they found ſuch plentie of blacke Ore of the ſame ſort which was brought into England this laſt yeere, that if the goodneſſe might anſwere the great plentie thereof, it was to be thought that it might reaſonably ſuffice all the golde-gluttons of the world. This Iland the Captaine for cauſe of his good hap, called after his owne name, Beſtes bleſſing, and with theſe good tydings returning aboord his Ship the ninth of Auguſt about tenne of the clocke at night, hee was ioyfully welcommed of his company, who before were diſcomforted, and greatly expected ſome better fortune at his handes.

Anne Francis in danger.

The Moone in harborough.

The next day being the tenth of Auguſt, the weather reaſonably fayre, they put into the foreſayde Harborough, hauing their Boate for their better ſecuritie ſounding before their Shippe. But for all the care and diligence that could bee taken in ſounding the Channell ouer and ouer againe, the Anne Francis came aground vpon a ſuncken Rocke within the Harborough, and lay thereon more then halfe drye vntill the next flood, when by Gods Almighty prouidence, contrary almoſt to all expectation, they came afloat againe, being forced all that time to vnderſette their Shippe with their mayne Yarde, which otherwiſe was likely to ouerſet and put thereby in danger the whole company. They had aboue two thouſand ſtrokes together at the Pumpe, before they could make their Shippe free of the water againe, ſo ſore ſhee was bruſed by lying vpon the Rockes. The Moone came ſafely, and roade at anchor by the Anne Francis, whoſe helpe in their neceſſitie they could not well haue miſſed.

Now whileſt the Mariners were romaging their Shippes, and mending that which was amiſſe, the Miners followed their labour for getting together of ſufficient quantitie of Ore, and the Carpenters indeuoured to doe their beſt for the making vp of the Boate or Pinneſſe: which to bring to paſſe, they wanted two ſpeciall and moſt neceſſarie things, that is, certaine principall tymbers that are called Knees, which are the chiefeſt ſtrength of any Boate, and alſo nayles, wherewithall to ioyne the plancks together. Whereupon hauing by chance a Smyth amongſt them, (and yet vnfurniſhed of his neceſſary tooles to worke and make nayles withall) they were faine of a gunne chamber to make an Anuile to worke vpon, and to vſe a pickare in ſtead of a ſledge to beate withall, and alſo to occupy two ſmall bellowes in ſteade of one payre of greater Smiths bellowes. And for lacke of ſmall Yron for the eaſier making of the nayles, they were forced to breake their tongs, grydiron, and fireſhouell in pieces.

The eleuenth of Auguſt the Captaine of the Anne Francis taking the Maſter of his Shippe with him, went vp to the toppe of Hattons Hedland, which is the higheſt land of all the ſtreights, to the ende to deſcry the ſituation of the Countrey vnderneath, and to take a true plotte of the place, whereby alſo to ſee what ſtore of Yce was yet left in the ſtreights, as alſo to ſearch what Mineral matter or fruite that ſoyle might yeeld: And the rather for the honour the ſaid Captaine doeth owe to that Honourable name which himſelfe gaue thereunto the laſt yeere, in the higheſt part of this Hedland he cauſed his company to make a Columne or Croſſe of ſtone, in token of Chriſtian poſſeſſion. In this place there is plentie of blacke Ore, and diuers pretie ſtones.

Hattons Hedland.

Pretie ſtones.

The ſeuenteenth of Auguſt the Captaines with their companies chaced and killed a great white Beare, which aduentured and gaue a fierce aſſault vpon twentie men being weaponed. And he ſerued them for good meate many dayes.

A mightie white Beare.

The eighteenth of Auguſt the Pinneſſe with much adoe being ſet together, the ſayde Captaine Beſt determined to depart vp the ſtreights, to prooue and make tryall, as before was pretended, ſome of his company greatly perſuading him to the contrary; and ſpecially the Carpenter that ſet the ſame together, who ſayde that hee would not aduenture himſelfe therein for fiue hundreth pounds, for that the boate hung together but onely by the ſtrength of the nayles, and lacked ſome of her principall knees and tymbers.

A Pinneſſe there built.

Theſe wordes ſomewhat diſcouraged ſome of the company which ſhould haue gone therein: Whereupon the Captaine, as one not altogether addicted to his owne ſelfe-will, but ſomewhat foreſeeing how it might be afterwards ſpoken, if contrary fortune ſhould happen him (Lo he hath followed his owne opinion and deſperate reſolutions, and ſo thereafter it is befallen him) calling the Maſter and Mariners of beſt iudgement together, declared vnto them how much the cauſe imported him in his credite to ſeeke out the Generall, as well to conferre with him of ſome cauſes of weight, as otherwiſe to make due examination and tryall of the goodneſſe of the Ore, whereof they had no aſſurance but by geſſe of the eye, and it was well like the other: which ſo to cary home, not knowing the goodneſſe thereof, might be as much as if they ſhould bring ſo many ſtones. And therefore hee deſired them to deliuer their plaine and honeſt opinion, whether the Pinneſſe were ſufficient for him ſo to aduenture in or no. It was anſwered, that by carefull heede taking thereunto amongſt the yce, and the foule weather, the Pinneſſe might ſuffice. And hereupon the Maſters mate of the Anne Francis called Iohn Gray, manfully and honeſtly offering himſelfe vnto his Captaine in this aduenture and ſeruice, gaue cauſe to others of his Mariners to follow the attempt.

And vpon the nineteenth of Auguſt the ſayd Captaine being accompanied with Captaine Vpcote of the Moone, and eighteene perſons in the ſmall Pinneſſe, hauing conuenient portion of victuals and things neceſſary, departed vpon the ſayd pretended Voyage, leauing their ſhippe at anchor in a good readineſſe for the taking in of their fraight. And hauing little winde to ſayle withall, they plyed alongſt the Souther ſhore, and paſſed aboue 30. leagues, hauing the onely helpe of mans labour with Oares, and ſo intending to keepe that ſhore aboord vntil they were got vp to the fartheſt and narroweſt of the ſtreights, minded there to croſſe ouer, and to ſearch likewiſe alongſt the Northerland vnto the Counteſſes ſound, and from thence to paſſe all that coaſt along, whereby if any of the Fleete had bene diſtreſſed by wrecke of rocke or yce, by that meanes they might be perceiued of them, and ſo they thereby to giue them ſuch helpe and reliefe as they could. They did greatly feare, and euer ſuſpect that ſome of the Fleete were ſurely caſt away, and driuen to ſeeke ſowre ſallets amongſt the colde cliffes.

They aduenture vp the ſtreight in a weake Pinneſſe.

And being ſhotte vp about fortie leagues within the Streights, they put ouer towardes the Norther ſhore, which was not a little dangerous for their ſmall boates. And by meanes of a ſudden flawe were dryuen, and faine to ſeeke harborough in the night amongſt all the rockes and broken ground of Gabriels Ilands, a place ſo named within the ſtreights aboue the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound: And by the way where they landed, they did finde certaine great ſtones ſet vp by the Countrey people as it ſeemed, for markes, where they alſo made many Croſſes of ſtone, in token that Chriſtians had bene there. The 22. of Auguſt they had ſight of the Counteſſes ſound, and made the place perfect from the toppe of a hill, and keeping along the Norther ſhore, perceiued the ſmoke of a fire vnder a hils ſide: whereof they diuerſly deemed. When they came 40. leagues within the ſtreights.

Gabriels Ilands.

neerer the place, they perceiued people which wafted vnto them, as it ſeemed, with a flagge or enſigne. And becauſe the Country people had vſed to doe the like, when they perceiued any of our boats to paſſe by, they ſuſpected them to be the ſame. And comming ſomewhat neerer, they might perceiue certaine tents, and diſcerne this enſigne to be of mingled colours, blacke and white, after the Engliſh faſhion. But becauſe they could ſee no Shippe, nor likelihood of harborough within fiue or ſixe leagues about, and knewe that none of our men were woont to frequent thoſe partes, they could not tell what to iudge thereof, but imagined that ſome of the ſhips being carried ſo high with the ſtorme and miſtes, had made ſhipwracke amongſt the yce or the broken Iſlands there, and were ſpoyled by the countrey people, who might vſe the ſundry coloured flagge for a policie, to bring them likewiſe within their danger. Whereupon the ſayd Captaine with his companies, reſolued to recouer the ſame enſigne, if it were ſo, from thoſe baſe people, or els to loſe their liues, and all together. In the ende they diſcerned them to be their countreymen, and then they deemed them to haue loſt their Ships, and ſo to be gathered together for their better ſtrength. On the other ſide, the company aſhoare feared that the Captaine hauing loſt his Shippe, came to ſeeke forth the Fleete for his reliefe in his poore Pinniſſe, ſo that their extremities cauſed eche part to ſuſpect the worſt.

Proximus ſum egomet mihi.

The Captaine now with his Pinniſſe being come neere the ſhoare, commanded his Boate carefully to be kept aflote, leſt in their neceſſitie they might winne the ſame from him, and ſeeke firſt to ſaue themſelues: for euery man in that caſe is next himſelfe. They haled one another according to the manner of the Sea, and demaunded what cheere? and either partie anſwered the other, that all was well: whereupon there was a ſudden and ioyfull outſhoote, with great flinging vp of caps, and a braue voly of ſhotte to welcome one another. And truely it was a moſt ſtrange caſe to ſee how ioyfull and gladde euery partie was to ſee themſelues meete in ſafetie againe, after ſo ſtrange and incredible dangers: Yet to be ſhort, as their dangers were great, ſo their God was greater.

Captain Yorke arriued.

And here the company were working vpon new Mines, which Captaine Yorke being here arriued not long before, had found out in this place, and it is named the Counteſſe of Suſſex Mine.

After ſome conference with our friends here, the Captaine of the Anne Francis departed towards the Counteſſe of Warwicks ſound, to ſpeake with the Generall, and to haue tryall made of ſuch mettall as he had brought thither, by the Goldfiners. And ſo he determined to diſpatch againe towards his ſhip. And hauing ſpoken with the General, he receiued order for all cauſes, and direction as well for the bringing vp of his Shippe to the Counteſſes ſound, as alſo to fraight his Ship with the ſame Oare which he himſelfe had found, which vpon triall made, was ſuppoſed to be very good.

The 23. of Auguſt, the ſayd Captaine mette together with the other Captaines (Commiſſioners in counſell with the Generall) aboorde the Ayde, where they conſidered and conſulted of ſundry cauſes, which being particularly regiſtred by the Notarie, were appoynted where and how to be done againſt another yeere.

None of the people will be taken.

The 24. of Auguſt, the Generall with two Pinniſſes and good numbers of men went to Beares ſound, commanding the ſayde Captaine with his Pinneſſe to attend the ſeruice, to ſee if he could encounter or apprehend any of the people: for ſundry times they ſhewed themſelues buſie thereabouts, ſometimes with ſeuen or eyght Boates in one company, as though they minded to encounter with our company which were working there at the Mines, in no great numbers. But when they perceiued any of our Shippes to ryde in that roade (being belike more amazed at the countenance of a Shippe, and a more number of men) they did neuer ſhewe themſelues againe there at all. Wherefore our men ſought with their Pinniſſes to compaſſe about the Iland where they did vſe, ſuppoſing there ſuddenly to intercept ſome of them. But before our men could come neere, hauing belike ſome watch in the toppe of the mountaines, they conueyed themſelues priuily away, and left (as it ſhould ſeeme) one of their great dartes behinde them for haſte, which we found neere to a place of their caues and houſing. Therefore, though our Generall were very deſirous to haue taken ſome of them to haue brought into England, they being now growen more wary by their former loſſes, would not at any time come within our dangers. About midnight of the ſame day, the captaine of the Anne Francis departed thence and ſet his courſe ouer the ſtreights towards Hattons Hedland, being about 15. leagues ouer, and returned aboord his Shippe the 25. of Auguſt, to the great comfort of his company, who long expected his comming, where hee found his Shippes ready rigged and loden. Wherefore he departed from thence againe the next morning towards the Counteſſes ſound, where he arriued the 28. of the ſame. By the way he ſet his Miners aſhore at Beares ſound, for the better diſpatch and gathering the Ore togither, for that ſome of the ſhips were behind hand with their fraight, the time of the yeere paſſing ſuddenly away.

The thirtith of Auguſt the Anne Francis was brought aground, and had 8. great leakes mended which ſhe had receiued by meanes of the rocks and yce. This day the Maſons finiſhed a houſe which Captaine Fenton cauſed to be made of lyme and ſtone vpon the Counteſſe of Warwickes Iſland, to the ende we might proue againſt the next yeere, whither the ſnow could ouerwhelme it, the froſt breake it vp, or the people diſmember the ſame. And the better to allure thoſe brutiſh and vnciuill people to courteſie againſt other times of our comming, we left therein diuers of our Countrey toyes, as belles, and kniues, wherein they ſpecially delight, one for the neceſſary vſe, and the other for the great pleaſure thereof. Alſo pictures of men and women in lead, men on horſebacke, looking glaſſes, whiſtles, and pipes. Alſo in the houſe was made an Ouen, and bread left baked therein for them to ſee and taſte.

A houſe builded and left there.

We buried the timber of our pretended fort. Alſo here we ſowed peaſe, corne, and other graine, to proue the fruitfulneſſe of the ſoyle againſt the next yeere.

Maſter Wolfall on Winters Fornace preached a godly ſermon, which being ended, he celebrated alſo a Communion vpon the land, at the partaking whereof was the Captaine of the Anne Francis, and many other Gentlemen and Souldiers, Mariners, and Miners with him. The celebration of the diuine myſtery was the firſt ſigne, ſeale, and confirmation of Chriſts name, death, and paſſion euer knowen in theſe quarters. The ſaid M. Wolfall made ſermons, and celebrated the Communion at ſundry other times, in ſeuerall and ſundry ſhips, becauſe the whole company could neuer meet together at any one place. The Fleet now being in ſome good readineſſe for their lading, the Generall calling together the Gentlemen and Captaines to conſult, told them that he was very deſirous that ſome further diſcouery ſhould be attempted, and that he would not onely by Gods helpe bring home his Ships laden with Ore, but alſo meant to bring ſome certificate of a further diſcouery of the Countrey, which thing to bring to paſſe (hauing ſometime therein conſulted) they found very hard, and almoſt inuincible. And conſidering that already they had ſpent ſometime in ſearching out the trending and faſhion of the miſtaken ſtraites, therefore it could not be ſayd, but that by this voyage they haue notice of a further diſcouery, and that the hope of the paſſage thereby is much furthered and encreaſed, as appeared before in the diſcourſe thereof. Yet notwithſtanding if any meanes might be further deuiſed, the Ceptaines were contented and willing, as the Generall ſhoulde appoynt and commaund, to take any enterpriſe in hand. Which after long debating was found a thing very impoſſible, and that rather conſultation was to be had of returning homeward, eſpecially for theſe cauſes following. Firſt the darke foggy miſts, the continuall falling ſnowe and ſtormy weather which they commonly were vexed with, and now daily euer more and more increaſed, haue no ſmall argument of the Winters drawing neere. And alſo the froſt euery night was ſo hard congealed within the ſound, that if by euill hap they ſhould bee long kept in with contrary winds, it was greatly to be feared, that they ſhould be ſhut vp there faſt the whole yeere, which being vtterly vnprouided, would be their vtter deſtruction. Againe, drinke was ſo ſcant throughout all the Fleet by meanes of the great leakage, that not onely the prouiſion which was layd in for the habitation was wanting and waſted, but alſo each ſhippes ſeuerall prouiſion ſpent and loſt, which many of our company to their great griefe found in their returne ſince, for all the way homewards they dranke nothing but water. And the great cauſe of this leakage and waſting was, for that the great timber and ſeacole, which lay ſo waighty vpon the barrels, brake, bruiſed, and rotted the hoopes inſunder. Yet notwithſtanding theſe reaſons alleaged the Generall himſelfe (willing the reſt of the Gentlemen and Captaines euery man to looke to his ſeuerall charge and lading, that againſt a day appointed, they ſhould be all in a readineſſe to ſet homeward) went in a Pinneſſe, and diſcouered further Northward in the ſtraights, and found that by Beares ſound and Halles Iſland, the land was not firme, as it was firſt ſuppoſed, but all broken Iſlands in maner of an Archipelagus, and ſo with other ſecret intelligence to himſelfe, he returned to the Fleet. Where preſently vpon his arriuall at the Counteſſes ſound, he began to take order for their returning homeward, and firſt cauſed certaine Articles to be proclamed, for the better keeping of orders and courſes in their returne, which Articles were deliuered to euery Captaine.

The Fleetes returning homeward.

Hauing now receiued Articles and directions for our returne homewards, all other things being in forwardneſſe and in good order, the laſt day of Auguſt the whole Fleete departed from the Counteſſes ſound, excepting the Iudith, and the Anne Francis, who ſtayed for the taking in of freſh water, and came the next day and mette the Fleete lying off and on, athwart Beares ſound, who ſtayed for the Generall, which then was gone aſhore to diſpatch the two Barkes and the Buſſe of Bridgewater, for their loading, whereby to get the companies and other things aboord. The Captaine of the Anne Francis hauing moſt part of his company aſhore, the firſt of September went alſo to Beares ſound in his Pinneſſe to fetch his men aboord, but the wind grewe ſo great immediatly vpon their landing, that the ſhippes at Sea were in great danger, and ſome of them forcibly put from their ankers, and greatly feared to be vtterly loſt, as the Hopewell, wherein was Captaine Carew and others, who could not tell on which ſide their danger was moſt: for hauing mightie rockes threatning on the one ſide, and driuing Iſlands of cutting yce on the other ſide, they greatly feared to make ſhipwracke, the yce driuing ſo neere them that it touched their bolt-ſprit. And by meanes of the Sea that was growne ſo hie, they were not able to put to ſea with their ſmall Pinneſſes to recouer their ſhippes. And againe, the ſhippes were not able to tarrie or lie athwart for them, by meanes of the outragious windes and ſwelling ſeas. The Generall willed the Captaine of the Anne Francis with his company, for that night to lodge aboord the Buſſe of Bridgewater, and went himſelfe with the reſt of his men aboord the Barkes. But their numbers were ſo great, and the prouiſion of the Barkes ſo ſcant, that they peſtered one another exceedingly. They had great hope that the next morning the weather would be faire, whereby they might recouer their ſhippes. But in the morning following it was much worſe, for the ſtorme continued greater, the Sea being more ſwollen, and the Fleete gone quite out of ſight. So that now their doubts began to grow great: for the ſhip of Bridgewater which was of greateſt receit, and whereof they had beſt hope and made moſt account, roade ſo farre to leeward of the harborowes mouth, that they were not able for the rockes (that lay betweene the wind and them) to lead it out to Sea with a ſaile. And the Barks were already ſo peſtered with men, and ſo ſlenderly furniſhed with prouiſion, that they had ſcarce meat for ſixe dayes for ſuch numbers.

Returne homeward.

The Generall in the morning departed to Sea in the Gabriel to ſeeke the Fleete, leauing the Buſſe of Bridgewater, and the Michael behind in Beares ſound. The Buſſe ſet ſayle, and thought by turning in the narrow channell within the harborow to get to windward: but being put to leeward more, by that meanes was faine to come to anker for her better ſafetie, amongſt a number of rockes, and there left in great danger of euer getting forth againe. The Michael ſet ſayle to follow the Generall, and could giue the Buſſe no reliefe, although they earneſtly deſired the ſame. And the Captaine of the Anne Francis was left in hard election of two euils: eyther to abide his fortune with the Buſſe of Bridgewater, which was doubtfull of euer getting forth, or elſe to bee towed in his ſmall Pinneſſe at the ſterne of the Michael thorow the raging Seas, for that the Barke was not able to receiue or relieue halfe his company, wherein his danger was not a little perillous.

So after hee reſolued to commit himſelfe with all his company vnto that fortune of God and Sea, and was dangerouſly towed at the ſterne of the Barke for many miles, vntill at length they eſpyed the Anne Francis vnder ſayle, hard vnder their Lee, which was no ſmall comfort vnto them. For no doubt, both theſe and a great number more had periſhed for lacke of victuals, and conuenient roome in the Barks without the helpe of the ſayd Ship. But the honeſt care that the Maſter of the Anne Francis had of his Captaine, and the good regarde of duetie towardes his Generall, ſuffered him not to depart, but honeſtly abode to hazard a dangerous roade all the night long, notwithſtanding all the ſtormy weather, when all the Fleete beſides departed. And the Pinneſſe came no ſooner aboord the ſhippe, and the men entred, but ſhee preſently ſhiuered and fell in pieces and ſunke at the ſhips ſterne, with all the poore mens furniture: ſo weake was the boat with towing, and ſo forcible was the ſea to bruiſe her in pieces. But (as God would) the men were all ſaued.

At this preſent in this ſtorme many of the Fleete were dangerouſly diſtreſſed, and were ſeuered almoſt all aſunder. Yet, thanks be to God, all the Fleete arriued ſafely in England about the firſt of October, ſome in one place and ſome in another. But amongſt other, it was moſt marueilous how the Buſſe of Bridgewater got away, who being left behind the Fleete in great danger of neuer getting forth, was forced to ſeeke a way Northward thorow an vnknowen channell full of rocks, vpon the backe ſide of Beares ſound, and there by good hap found out a way into the North ſea, a very dangerous attempt: ſaue that neceſſitie, which hath no law, forced them to trie maſteries. This aforeſayd North ſea is the ſame which lyeth vpon the backe ſide of Frobiſhers ſtraits, where firſt the Generall himſelfe in his Pinneſſes, and after ſome other of our company haue diſcouered (as they affirme) a great foreland, where they would haue alſo a great likelihood of the greateſt paſſage towards the South ſea, or Mar del Sur.

The Buſſe of Bridgewater, as ſhe came homeward, to the Southeaſtward of Friſeland, diſcouered a great Iſland in the latitude of 57 degrees and an halfe, which was neuer yet found before, and ſailed three dayes alongſt the coaſt, the land ſeeming to be fruitfull, full of woods, and a champion Countrey.

A fruitful new Iſland diſcouered.

There died in the whole Fleet in all this voyage not aboue forty perſons, which number is not great, conſidering how many ſhips were in the Fleet, and how ſtrange fortunes we paſſed.

A generall and briefe deſcription of the Countrey, and condition of the people, which are found in Meta Incognita.

Hauing now ſufficiently and truly ſet forth the whole circumſtance, and particuler handling of euery occurrent in the 3. voyages of our worthy Generall, Captaine Frobiſher, it ſhal not be from the purpoſe to ſpeake ſomewhat in generall of the nature of this Countrey called Meta Incognita, and the condition of the ſauages there inhabiting.

Firſt therefore touching the Topographical deſcription of the place, It is now found in the laſt voyage, that Queene Elizabeths Cape being ſituate in latitude at 61. degrees and a halfe, which before was ſuppoſed to be part of the firme land of America, and alſo al the reſt of the South ſide of Frobiſhers ſtraites, are all ſeuerall Iſlands and broken land, and likewiſe ſo will all the North ſide of the ſaid ſtraites fall out to be as I thinke. And ſome of our company being entred aboue 60. leagues within the miſtaken ſtraites in the third voyage mentioned, thought certainely that they had diſcryed the firme land of America towards the South, which I thinke will fall out ſo to be.

A Topographicall deſcription of Meta Incognita.

Theſe broken lands and Iſlands being very many in number, do ſeeme to make there an Archipelagus, which as they all differ in greatneſſe, forme, and faſhion one from another, ſo are they in goodneſſe, colour, and ſoyle much vnlike. They all are very high lands, mountaines, and in moſt parts couered with ſnow euen all the Sommer long. The Norther lands haue leſſe ſtore of ſnow, more graſſe, and are more plaine Countreys: the cauſe whereof may be, for that the Souther Iſlands receiue all the ſnow, that the cold winds and percing ayre bring out of the North. And contrarily, the North parts receiue more warme blaſts of milder ayre from the South, whereupon may grow the cauſe why the people couet to inhabit more vpon the North parts then the South, as farre as we can yet by our experience perceiue they doe. Theſe people I iudge to be a kind of Tartar, or rather a kind of Samoed, of the ſame ſort and condition of life that the Samoeds bee to the Northeaſtwards beyond Moſcouy, who are called Samoeds, which is as much to ſay in the Moſcouy tongue, as eaters of themſelues, and ſo the Ruſſians their borderers doe name them. And by late conference with a friend of mine (with whom I did ſometime trauell in the parts of Moſcouy) who hath great experience of thoſe Samoeds and people of the Northeaſt, I find that in all their maner of liuing, thoſe people of the Northeaſt, and theſe of the Northweſt are like. They are of the colour of a ripe Oliue, which how it may come to paſſe, being borne in ſo cold a climate, I referre to the iudgement of others, for they are naturally borne children of the ſame colour and complexion that all the Americans are, which dwell vnder the Equinoctiall line.

The people of Meta Incognita like vnto Samoeds.

Their natiue colour.

They are men very actiue and nimble. They are a ſtrong people and very warlike, for in our ſight vpon the toppes of the hilles they would often muſter themſelues, and after the maner of a ſkirmiſh trace their ground very nimbly, and mannage their bowes and dartes with great dexteritie. They go clad in coates made of the ſkinnes of beaſts, as of Seales, Deere, Beares, Foxes, and Hares. They haue alſo ſome garments of feathers, being made of the caſes of foules, finely ſowed and compact togither. Of all which ſorts wee brought home ſome with vs into England, which we found in their tents. In Sommer they vſe to weare the hairie ſide of their coates outward, and ſometime goe naked for too much heate. And in Winter (as by ſignes they haue declared) they weare foure or fiue folde vpon their bodies with the haire (for warmth) turned inward. Hereby it appeareth, that the ayre there is not indifferent, but either it is feruent hote, or els extreme cold, & farre more exceſſiue in both qualities, then the reaſon of the climate ſhould yeeld. For there it is colder, being vnder 62. degrees in latitude, then it is at Wardhouſe in the voyage to Saint Nicholas in Moſcouie, being at aboue 72. degrees in latitude. The reaſon hereof perhaps may be, that this Meta Incognita is much frequented and vexed with Eaſterne and Northeaſtern winds, which from the ſea and yce bringeth often an intollerable cold ayre, which was alſo the cauſe that this yeere our ſtraits were ſo long ſhut vp with ſo great ſtore of yce. But there is great hope and likelihood, that further within the Straights it will bee more conſtant and temperate weather.

Theſe people are in nature very ſubtill and ſharpe witted, ready to conceiue our meaning by ſignes, and to make anſwere well to be vnderſtood againe. And if they haue not ſeene the thing whereof you aſke them, they will wincke, or couer their eyes with their hands, as who would ſay, it hath bene hid from their ſight. If they vnderſtand you not whereof you aſke them, they wil ſtop their eares. They will teach vs the names of each thing in their language which wee deſire to learne, and are apt to learne any thing of vs. They delight in Muſicke aboue meaſure, and will keepe time and ſtroke to any tune which you ſhall ſing, both with their voyce, head, hand and feete, and will ſing the ſame tune aptly after you. They will row with our Ores in our boates, and keepe a true ſtroke with our Mariners, and ſeeme to take great delight therein. They liue in Caues of the earth, and hunt for their dinners or praye, euen as the beare or other wild beaſtes do. They eat raw fleſh and fiſh, and refuſe no meat howſoeuer it be ſtinking. They are deſperate in their fight, ſullen of nature, and rauenous in their maner of feeding.

The Sauages delight in Muſicke.

Hard kind of liuing.

Their ſullen & deſperate nature doth herein manifeſtly appeare, that a company of them being enuironed by our men on the top of a hie cliffe, ſo that they could by no meanes eſcape our hands, finding themſelues in this caſe diſtreſſed, choſe rather to caſt themſelues headlong down the rocks into the ſea, and ſo be bruiſed and drowned, rather then to yeeld themſelues to our mens mercies.

Their weapons.

For their weapons to offend their enemies or kill their prey withall, they haue darts, ſlings, bowes, and arrowes headed with ſharpe ſtones, bones, and ſome with yron. They are exceeding friendly and kind hearted one to the other, and mourne greatly at the loſſe or harme of their fellowes, and expreſſe their griefe of mind, when they part one from another with a mourneful ſong, and Dirges. They are very ſhamefaſt in bewraying the ſecrets of nature, and very chaſte in the maner of their liuing: for when the man, which wee brought from thence into England the laſt voyage, ſhould put off his coat or diſcouer his whole body for change, hee would not ſuffer the woman to bee preſent, but put her forth of his Cabin. And in all the ſpace of two or three moneths, while the man liued in company of the woman, there was neuer any thing ſeene or perceiued betweene them, more then might haue paſſed betweene brother and ſiſter: but the woman was in all things very ſeruiceable for the man, attending him carefully when he was ſicke, and he likewiſe in all the meates which they did eate together, woulde carue vnto her of the ſweeteſt, fatteſt, and beſt morſels they had. They wondred much at all our things, and were afraid of our horſes and other beaſts out of meaſure. They began to grow more ciuill, familiar, pleaſant, and docible amongſt vs in very ſhort time.

Their boates.

They haue boates made of leather, and couered cleane ouer ſauing one place in the middle to ſit in, planked within with timber, and they vſe to row therein with one Ore, more ſwiftly a great deale, then we in our boates can doe with twentie. They haue one ſort of greater boates wherein they can carrie aboue twentie perſons, and haue a Maſt with a ſaile thereon, which ſaile is made of thinne ſkinnes or bladders, ſowed togither with the ſinewes of fiſhes.

They are good Fiſhermen, and in their ſmall Boates being diſguiſed with their coates of Seales ſkinnes, they deceiue the fiſh, who take them rather for their fellow Seales, then for deceiuing men.

They are good marke-men. With their dart or arrow they will commonly kill a Ducke, or any other foule in the head, and commonly in the eye.

When they ſhoote at a great fiſh with any of their darts, they vſe to tye a bladder thereunto, whereby they may the better find them againe, and the fiſh not able to cary it ſo eaſily away (for that the bladder doth boy the dart) will at length be wearie, and dye therewith.

Traffique with ſome other nation vnknowen.

They vſe to traffike and exchange their commodities with ſome other people, of whom they haue ſuch things as their miſerable Countrey, and ignorance of Art to make, denieth them to haue, as barres of yron, heads of yron for their darts, needles made foure ſquare, certaine buttons of copper, which they vſe to weare vpon their forehads for ornament, as our Ladies in the Court of England doe vſe great pearle.

Gold.

Alſo they haue made ſignes vnto vs, that they haue ſeene gold, and ſuch bright plates of mettals, which are vſed for ornaments amongſt ſome people with whom they haue conference.

We found alſo in their tents a Guiny Beane of redde colour, the which doth vſually grow in they hote Countreys: whereby it appeareth they trade with other nations which dwell farre off, or elſe themſelues are great trauellers.

Their fewell.

They haue nothing in vſe among them to make fire withall, ſauing a kinde of Heath and Moſſe which groweth there.

And they kindle their fire with continuall rubbing and fretting one ſticke againſt another, as we doe with flints. They drawe with dogges in ſleads vpon the yce, and remooue their tents therewithall wherein they dwell in Sommer, when they goe a hunting for their praye and prouiſion againſt Winter. They doe ſometime parboyle their meat a little and ſeeth the ſame in kettles made of beaſts ſkins: they haue alſo pannes cut and made of ſtone very artificially: they vſe prety ginnes wherewith they take foule. The women carry their ſucking children at their backes, and doe feede them with raw fleſh, which firſt they do a little chaw in their owne mouths. The women haue their faces marked or painted ouer with ſmall blewe ſpots: they haue blacke and long haire on their heads, and trimme the ſame in a decent order. The men haue but little haire on their faces, and very thinne beards. For their common drinke, they eate yce to quench their thirſt withall. Their earth yeeldeth no graine or fruit of ſuſtenance for man, or almoſt for beaſt to liue vpon: and the people will eate graſſe and ſhrubs of the ground, euen as our kine doe. They haue no wood growing in their Countrey thereabouts, and yet wee find they haue ſome timber among them, which we thinke doth grow farre off to the Southwards of this place, about Canada, or ſome other part of New found land: for there belike, the trees ſtanding on the cliffes of the ſea ſide, by the waight of yce and ſnow in Winter ouercharging them with waight, when the Sommers thaw commeth aboue, and alſo the Sea vnderfretting them beneath, which winneth dayly of the land, they are vndermined and fall downe from thoſe cliffes into the Sea, and with the tydes and currents are driuen to and fro vpon the coaſtes further off, and by coniecture are taken vp here by theſe Countrey people, to ſerue them to planke and ſtrengthen their boates withall, and to make dartes, bowes, and arrowes, and ſuch other things neceſſarie for their vſe. And of this kind of drift wood we find all the Seas ouer great ſtore, which being cut or ſawed aſunder, by reaſon of long driuing in the Sea is eaten of wormes, and full of holes, of which ſort theirs is found to be.

How they make fire.

Their kettles and pannes.

The people eate graſſe and ſhrubs.

We haue not yet found any venemous Serpent or other hurtful thing in theſe parts, but there is a kind of ſmall flie or gnat that ſtingeth and offendeth ſorely, leauing many red ſpots in the face, and other places where ſhe ſtingeth. They haue ſnow and haile in the beſt time of their Sommer, and the ground froſen three fadome deepe.

A ſtrange kind of gnat.

Theſe people are great inchanters, and vſe many charmes of witchcraft: for when their heads doe ake, they tye a great ſtone with a ſtring vnto a ſticke, and with certaine prayers and wordes done to the ſticke, they lift vp the ſtone from ground, which ſometimes with all a mans force they cannot ſtirre, and ſometime againe they lift as eaſily as a fether, and hope thereby with certaine ceremonious wordes to haue eaſe and helpe. And they made vs by ſignes to vnderſtand, lying groueling with their faces vpon the ground, and making a noiſe downeward, that they worſhip the deuill vnder them.

Inchanters.

They haue great ſtore of Deere, Beares, Hares, Foxes, and innumerable numbers of ſundry ſorts of wild foule, as Seawmewes, Gulles, Wilmotes, Ducks, &c. whereof our men killed in one day fifteene hundred.

The beaſts and foules of the Countrey.

They haue alſo ſtore of haukes, as Falkons, Taſſels, &c. whereof two alighted vpon one of our ſhips at their returne, and were brought into England, which ſome thinke wil proue very good.

There are alſo great ſtore of rauens, larkes, and partridges, whereof the Countrey people feed.

All theſe foules are farre thicker clothed with downe and fethers, and haue thicker ſkinnes then any in England haue: for as that countrey is colder, ſo nature hath prouided a remedie thereunto.

Our men haue eaten of their Beares, Hares, Partridges, Larkes, and of their wild foule, and find them reaſonable good meat, but not ſo delectable as ours.

Their wild foule muſt be all fleine, their ſkins are ſo thicke: and they taſt beſt fryed in pannes.

The Countrey ſeemeth to be much ſubiect to Earthquakes.

The ayre is very ſubtile, piercing and ſearching, ſo that if any corrupted or infected body, eſpecially with the diſeaſe called Morbus Gallicus come there, it will preſently breake forth and ſhew it ſelfe, and cannot there by any kind of ſalue or medicine be cured.

Their longeſt Sommers day is of great length, without any darke night, ſo that in July al the night long, we might perfitly and eaſily write and reade whatſoeuer had pleaſed vs, which lightſome nights were very beneficiall vnto vs, being ſo diſtreſſed with abundance of yce as we were.

The Sunne ſetteth to them in the Euening at a quarter of an houre after tenne of the clocke, and riſeth againe in the morning at three quarters of an houre after one of the clocke, ſo that in Sommer their Sunne ſhineth to them twenty houres and a halfe, and in the night is abſent three houres and a halfe. And although the Sunne bee abſent theſe 3. houres and a halfe, yet it is not

A full reuolution of the Moone aboue their Horizon.

darke that time, for that the Sunne is neuer aboue three or foure degrees vnder the edge of their Horizon: the cauſe is, that the Tropicke of Cancer doth cut their Horizon at very vneuen and oblique Angles. But the Moone at any time of the yeere being in Cancer, hauing North latitude, doth make a full reuolution aboue their Horizon, ſo that ſometime they ſee the Moone aboue 24. houres togither. Some of our company of the more ignorant ſort, thought we might continually haue ſeene the Sunne and the Moone, had it not bene for two or three high mountaines.

The people are now become ſo warie, and ſo circumſpect, by reaſon of their former loſſes, that by no meanes we can apprehend any of them, although wee attempted often in this laſt voyage. But to ſay trueth, wee could not beſtow any great time in purſuing them, becauſe of our great buſineſſe in lading, and other things.

The Letters patents of the Queenes Maieſtie, granted to Maſter Adrian Gylbert and others, for the ſearch and diſcouery of the Northweſt Paſſage to China.

Elizabeth by the grace of God of England, France, and Ireland Queene, defender of the faith, &c. To all, to whome theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting: Forasmuch as our truſtie and welbeloued ſubiect Adrian Gylbert of Sandridge in the Countie of Deuon, Gentleman, to his great coſtes and charges, hath greatly and earneſtly trauelled and ſought, and yet doth trauell and ſeeke, and by diuers meanes indeuoureth and laboureth, that the Paſſage vnto China and the Iles of the Moluccas, by the Northweſtward, Northeaſtward, or Northward, vnto which part or partes of the world, none of our loyall Subiects haue hitherto had any traffique or trade, may be diſcouered, knowen, and frequented by the Subiects of this our Realme: Knowe yee therefore that for the conſiderations aforeſayd and for diuers other good conſiderations vs thereunto specially mouing, We of our grace eſpeciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe giue and grant free libertie, power, and full authoritie to the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, and to any other perſon by him or his heires to be aſſigned, and to thoſe his aſſociates and aſſiſtants, whoſe names are written in a Scedule hereunto annexed, and to their heires, and to one aſſignee of each of them, and each of their heires at all times, and at any time or times after the date of theſe preſents, vnder our Banners and Enſignes freely, without let, interruption, or reſtraint, of vs, our heires or ſucceſſors, any law, ſtatute, proclamation, patent, charter, or prouiſo to the contrary notwithſtanding, to ſaile, make voyage, and by any maner of meanes to paſſe and to depart out of this our Realme of England, or any our Realmes, Dominions, or Territories into all or any Iſles, Countreys, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Portes, Bayes, Creekes, armes of the Sea, and all Hauens, and all maner of other places whatſoeuer, that by the ſayde Northweſtward, Northeaſtward, or Northward, is to be by him, his aſſociates or aſſignes diſcouered, and for and in the ſayde ſayling, voyage, and paſſage, to haue and vſe ſo many ſhippes, Barkes, Pinneſſes, or other veſſels of any quantitie or burthen, with all the furniture of men, victuals, and all maner of neceſſary prouiſion, armour, weapons, ordinance, targets, and appurtinances whatſoeuer, as to ſuch a voyage ſhall or may be requiſite, conuenient or commodious, any lawe, ſtatute, ordinance or prouiſo to the contrary thereof notwithſtanding. And alſo we doe giue and grant to the ſayde Adrian Gylbert, and his ſayde aſſociates, and to ſuch aſſignee of him, and his heires, and to the heires and one aſſignee of euery of his ſayde aſſociates for euer, full power and abſolute authoritie to trade and make their reſiance in any of the ſayde Iſles, Countreys, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Portes, Bayes, and Hauens, and all maner of other places whatſoeuer with all commodities, profites, and emoluments in the ſayde places or any of them, growing and ariſing, with all maner of priuiledges, prerogatiues, iuriſdictions and royalties both by ſea and land whatſoeuer, yeelding and paying therefore vnto vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, the tenth part of all ſuch golde and ſiluer oare, pearles, iewels, and precious ſtones, or the value thereof, as the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and his ſayd aſſociates, their heires and aſſignes, ſeruants, factors, or workemen, and euery or any of them ſhall finde, the ſayd tenth to bee deliuered duely to our Cuſtomer, or other officers by vs, our heires or ſucceſſors thereunto aſſigned, in the Portes of London, Dartmouth, or Plimmouth, at which three places onely the ſayde Adrian Gylbert, and his ſayde aſſociates, their ſayde heires and aſſignes, ſhall lade, charge, arriue, and diſcharge all maner of wares, goods, and merchandizes whatſoeuer to the ſayde voyage, and newe trade belonging or appertaining. And moreouer, wee haue giuen, granted, and authorized, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, of our grace eſpeciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, doe giue, graunt, and authorize the ſayd Adrian Gilbert, and his ſayd aſſociats for euer, their heires and their ſaid aſſignes & euery of them, that if the aforeſayd Iles, Countreys, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Ports, Bayes, or Hauens, or any other of the premiſſes by the ſayd Adrian Gylbert or his aſſociats, their heires and their ſaid aſſignes or any of them, to be found by them, diſcouered and traffiqued vnto by any trade as aforeſayd, ſhall be by any other our ſubiects viſited, frequented, haunted, traded vnto or inhabited by the wayes aforeſayd, without the ſpecial licence in writing of the ſaid Adrian Gylbert and his aſſociats, and their heires and aſſignes for euer, or by the moſt part of them, ſo that the ſayd Adrian Gilbert, his heires or aſſignes be one of them, that then aſwell their ſhip, or ſhips in any ſuch voyage or voyages vſed, as all and ſinguler their goods, wares, and marchandizes, or any other things whatſoeuer, from or to any of the places aforeſayd tranſported, that ſo ſhall preſume to viſit, frequent, haunt, trade vnto, or inhabite, ſhall be forfaited and confiſcated, ipſo facto, the onehalfe of the ſame goods and marchandizes, or other things whatſoeuer, or the value thereof to be to the vſe of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, and the other moytie thereof to be to the vſe of the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and his ſayd aſſociats, their heires and aſſignes for euer: and vnto the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and his ſayd aſſociats, their heires and aſſignes wee impoſe, giue, aſſigne, create and confirme this name peculiar to be named by, to ſue and to be ſued by, that is to wit, by the name of the Colleagues of the fellowſhip for the diſcouerie of the Northweſt paſſage, and them for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours by that name doe incorporate, and doe erect and create as one body corporate to haue continuance for euer. Moreouer vnto the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, and his ſaid aſſociats, and vnto their heires and their ſayd aſſignes for euer, by name of the Colleagues of the fellowſhip, for the diſcouerie of the Northweſt paſſage, we haue giuen, graunted, and confirmed, and doe by theſe preſents giue, grant, and confirme full power and authoritie from time to time, and at all times hereafter, to make order, decree and enact, conſtitute and ordeine, and appoynt all ſuch ordinances, orders, decrees, lawes, and actes, as the ſayd new corporation or body politique, Colleagues of the fellowſhip for the diſcouerie of the Northweſt paſſage, ſhall thinke meete, neceſſary, and conuenient, ſo that they or any of them be not contrary to the lawes of this realme, and of this our preſent graunt.

The colleagues of the fellowſhip for the diſcouery of the Northweſt paſſage.

And we by our Royall prerogatiue, and fulneſſe of our authority, of our grace eſpeciall, certaine knowledge and meere motion, do eſtabliſh, confirme & ratifie all ſuch ordinances, orders, decrees, lawes and acts to be in ſo full and great power and authority, as we, our heires or ſucceſſours may or can in any ſuch caſe graunt, confirme, or ratifie. And further for the better incouragement of our louing ſubiects in this diſcouerie, we by our Royall prerogatiue, and fulneſſe of authority for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, doe giue, graunt, eſtabliſh, confirme, ordeine, ratifie and allow by theſe preſents, to the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and to his aſſociates, and to the heires and aſſignes of them and euery of them for euer, and to all other perſon or perſons of our louing ſubiects whatſoeuer that ſhall hereafter trauaile, ſayle, diſcouer, or make voyage as aforeſayd to any the Iles, Mainelands, Countreys or Territories whatſoeuer, by vertue of this our graunt to be diſcouered, that the heires and aſſignes of them and euery of them being borne within any of the Iles, Mainelands and Countreys, or Territories whatſoeuer before mentioned, ſhall haue and inioy all the priuileges of free Denizens, as perſons natiue borne within this our Realme of England, or within our allegiance for euer, in ſuch like ample maner and forme, as if they were or had bene borne and perſonally reſiant within our ſayd Realme, any law, ſtatute, proclamation, cuſtome or vſage to the contrary hereof in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

Free Denization granted.

Moreouer, for the conſideration aforeſayd by vertue hereof, we giue and graunt vnto the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, his heires and aſſignes for euer, free libertie, licence and priuilege, that during the ſpace of fiue yeeres next and immediatly enſuing the date hereof, it ſhall not be lawfull for any perſon or perſons whatſoeuer, to viſit, haunt, frequent, trade, or make voyage to any Iles, Mainlands, Countreys, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Ports, Bayes, and Hauens, nor to any other Hauens or places whatſoeuer hitherto not yet diſcouered by any of our ſubiects by vertue of this graunt to be traded vnto, without the ſpecial conſent and good liking of the ſaid Adrian Gylbert, his heires or aſſignes firſt had in writing. And if any perſon or perſons of the aſſociats of the ſayd Adrian, his heires or aſſignes, or any other perſon or perſons whatſoeuer, free of this diſcouery, ſhall do any act or acts contrary to the tenour and true meaning hereof, during the ſpace of the ſayd fiue yeeres, that then the partie and parties ſo offending, they and their heires for euer ſhall looſe (ipſo facto) the benefite and priuilege of this our graunt, and ſhall ſtand and remaine to all intents and purpoſes as perſons exempted out of this graunt.

This Patent remained in force fiue yeeres.

And further by vertue hereof wee giue and graunt, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours at all times during the ſpace of fiue yeers next enſuing the date hereof, libertie and licence, and full authoritie to the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, and his heires and aſſignes, that if it ſhall happen any one or moe in any ſhip or ſhips ſayling on their ſayd voyage, to become mutinous, ſeditious, diſordered, or any way vnruly to the preiudice or hinderance of the hope for the ſucceſſe in the attempt or proſecuting of this diſcouerie or trade intended, to vſe or execute vpon him or them ſo offending, ſuch puniſhment, correction, or execution, as the cauſe ſhall be found in iuſtice to require by the verdict of twelue of the companie ſworne thereunto, as in ſuch a caſe apperteineth: That expreſſe mention of the certaintie of the premiſſes, or of other gifts or graunts by vs to the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and his aſſociats before this time made is not mentioned in theſe preſents, or any other lawe, act, ſtatute, prouiſo, graunt, or proclamation heretofore made or hereafter to be made to the contrary hereof in any wiſe notwithſtanding. In witneſſe whereof we haue made theſe our Letters to bee made patents: Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter, the ſixt day of Februarie, in the ſixe and twentie yeere of our reigne.

Authoritie to proceede at Sea againſt mutiners.

The firſt voyage of M. Iohn Dauis, vndertaken in Iune 1585. for the diſcouerie of the Northweſt paſſage, Written by M. Iohn Ianes Marchant, ſometimes ſeruant to the worſhipfull Maſter William Sanderſon.

Certaine Honourable perſonages and worthy Gentlemen of the Court & Countrey, with diuers worſhipful Marchants of London and of the Weſt Countrey, mooued with deſire to aduance Gods glory and to ſeeke the good of their natiue Countrey, conſulting together of the likelyhood of the Diſcouerie of the Northweſt paſſage, which heretofore had bene attempted, but vnhappily giuen ouer by accidents vnlooked for, which turned the enterpriſers from their principall purpoſe, reſolued after good deliberation, to put downe their aduentures to prouide for neceſſarie ſhipping, and a fit man to be chiefe Conductour of this ſo hard an enterpriſe. The ſetting forth of this Action was committed by the aduenturers, eſpecially to the care of M. William Sanderſon Marchant of London, who was ſo forward therein, that beſides his trauaile which was not ſmall, hee became the greateſt aduenturer with his purſe, and commended vnto the reſt of the companie one M. Iohn Dauis, a man very well grounded in the principles of the Arte of Nauigation, for Captaine and chiefe Pilot of this exployt.

Thus therefore all things being put in a readines, wee departed from Dartmouth the ſeuenth of Iune, towards the diſcouerie of the aforeſayd Northweſt paſſage, with two Barkes, the one being of 50. tunnes, named the Sunneſhine of London, and the other being 35. tunnes, named the Mooneſhine of Dartmouth. In the Sunneſhine we had 23. perſons, whoſe names are theſe following, M. Iohn Dauis Captaine, William Eſton Maſter, Richard Pope Maſters mate, Iohn Iane Marchant, Henry Dauie gunner, William Croſſe boatſwayne, Iohn Bagge, Walter Arthur, Luke Adams, Robert Coxworthie, Iohn Ellis, Iohn Kelley, Edward Helman, William Dicke, Andrew Maddocke, Thomas Hill, Robert Wats Carpenter, William Ruſſell, Chriſtopher Gorney boy: Iames Cole, Francis Ridley, Iohn Ruſſell, Robert Corniſh Muſicians.

Muſicians.

The Mooneſhine had 19. perſons, William Bruton Captaine, Iohn Ellis Maſter, the reſt Mariners.

The 7. of Iune the Captaine and the Maſter drew out a proportion for the continuance of our victuals.

The 8. day the wind being at Southweſt and Weſt ſouthweſt, we put in for Falmouth, where we remained vntil the 13.

The 13. the wind blew at North, and being faire weather we departed.

The 14. with contrary wind we were forced to put into Silley.

The 15. wee departed thence, hauing the wind North and by Eaſt moderate and faire weather.

The 16. wee were driuen backe againe, and were conſtrained to arriue at newe Grymsby in Silley: here the winde remained contrary 12. dayes, and in that ſpace the Captaine, the Maſter and I went about all the Ilands, and the Captaine did plat out and deſcribe the ſituation of all the Ilands, rocks and harboroughs to the exact vſe of Nauigation, with lines and ſcale thereunto conuenient.

They depart from Silley.

The 28. in Gods name we departed the wind being Eaſterly, but calme.

July.

The firſt of Iuly wee ſawe great ſtore of Porpoſes; The Maſter called for an harping iron, and ſhot twiſe or thriſe: ſometimes he miſſed, and at laſt ſhot one and ſtrooke him in the ſide, and wound him into the ſhip: when we had him aboord, the Maſter ſayd it was a Darlie head.

The 2. we had ſome of the fiſh ſodden, and it did eat as ſweete as any mutton.

The 3. wee had more in ſight, and the Maſter went to ſhoote at them, but they were ſo great, that they burſt our yrons, and we loſt both fiſh, yrons, paſtime and all: yet neuertheleſſe the Maſter ſhot at them with a pike, and had welnigh gotten one, but he was ſo ſtrong that he burſt off the barres of the pike and went away: then he tooke the boat-hooke, and hit one with that, but all would not preuaile; ſo at length we let them alone.

The 6. we ſaw a very great Whale, and euery day we ſaw whales continually.

The 16. 17. and 18. we ſaw great ſtore of Whales.

Great ſtore of whales.

The 19. of July we fell into a great whirling and bruſſling of a tyde, ſetting to the Northwards: and ſayling about halfe a league wee came into a very calme Sea, which bent to the Southſouthweſt. Here we heard a mighty great roaring of the Sea, as if it had bene the breach of ſome ſhoare, the ayre being ſo foggie and full of thicke miſt, that we could not ſee the one ſhip from the other, being a very ſmall diſtance aſunder: ſo the Captaine and the Maſter being in diſtruſt how the tyde might ſet them, cauſed the Mooneſhine to hoyſe out her boate and to ſound, but they could not finde ground in 300. fathoms and better. Then the Captaine, Maſter, and I went towards the breach, to ſee what it ſhould be, giuing charge to our gunners that at euery glaſſe they ſhould ſhoote off a muſket-ſhot, to the intent we might keepe our ſelues from looſing them. Then comming nere to the breach, we met many Ilands of yce floting, which had quickly compaſſed vs about: then we went vpon ſome of them, and did perceiue that all the roaring which we heard, was cauſed onely by the rowling of this yce together: Our companie ſeeing vs not to returne according to our appoyntment, left off ſhooting muskets, and began to ſhoote falkonets, for they feared ſome miſhap had befallen vs, but before night we came aboord againe with our boat laden with yce, which made very good freſh water. Then wee bent our courſe toward the North, hoping by that meanes to double the land.

The rowling of the yce together made a great roaring.

Yce turned into water.

The 20. as we ſayled along the coaſt the fogge brake vp, and we diſcouered the land, which was the moſt deformed rockie and mountainous land that euer we ſaw: The firſt ſight whereof did ſhew as if it had bene in forme of a ſugar-loafe, ſtanding to our ſight aboue the cloudes, for that it did ſhew ouer the fogge like a white liſte in the ſkie, the tops altogether couered with ſnow, and the ſhoare beſet with yce a league off into the Sea, making ſuch yrkeſome noyſe as that it ſeemed to be the true patterne of deſolation, and after the ſame our Captaine named it, The land of Deſolation.

The land of Deſolation.

The 21. the winde came Northerly and ouerblew, ſo that we were conſtrained to bend our courſe South againe, for we perceiued that we were runne into a very deepe Bay, where wee were almoſt compaſſed with yce, for we ſaw very much toward the Northnortheaſt, Weſt, and Southweſt: and this day and this night wee cleared our ſelues of the yce, running Southſouthweſt along the ſhoare.

Upon Thurſday being the 22. of this moneth, about three of the clocke in the morning, wee hoyſed out our boate, and the Captaine with ſixe ſaylers went towards the ſhoare, thinking to find a landing place, for the night before we did perceiue the coaſt to be voyde of yce to our iudgement, and the ſame night wee were all perſwaded that we had ſeene a Canoa rowing along the ſhoare, but afterwards we fell in ſome doubt of it, but we had no great reaſon ſo to doe. The Captaine rowing towards the ſhoare, willed the Maſter to beare in with the land after him, and before he came neere the ſhoare by the ſpace of a league, or about two miles, hee found ſo much yce, that hee could not get to land by any meanes. Here our mariners put to their lines to ſee if they could get any fiſh, becauſe there were ſo many ſeales vpon the coaſt, and the birds did beate vpon the water, but all was in vaine: The water about this place was very blacke and thicke like to a filthy ſtanding poole, we ſounded and had ground in 120. fathoms. While the Captaine was rowing to the ſhoare, our men ſawe woods vpon the rocks like to the rocks of Newfoundland, but I could not diſcerne them, yet it might be ſo very well: for we had wood floting vpon the coaſt euery day, and the Mooneſhine tooke vp a tree at Sea not farre from the coaſt being ſixtie foote of length and foureteene handfuls about, hauing the roote vpon it: After this the Captaine came aboord, the weather being very calme and faire we bent our courſe toward the South, with intent to double the land.

Very blacke water.

Floting wood.

The 23. we coaſted the land which did lie Eaſtnortheaſt and Weſtſouthweſt.

The 24. the winde being very faire at Eaſt, we coaſted the land which did lie Eaſt and Weſt, not being able to come neere the ſhoare by reaſon of the great quantitie of yce. At this place, becauſe the weather was ſomewhat colde by reaſon of the yce, and the better to encourage our men, their allowance was increaſed: the captaine and the maſter tooke order that euery meſſe, being fiue perſons, ſhould haue halfe a pound of bread and a kan of beere euery morning to breakfaſt. The weather was not very colde, but the aire was moderate like to our April-weather in England: when the winde came from the land, or the ice, it was ſomewhat colde, but when it came off the ſea it was very hote.

Colde by reaſon of yce.

They ſaile Northweſtward aboue foure dayes.

The 25 of this moneth we departed from ſight of this land at ſixe of the clocke in the morning, directing our courſe to the Northweſtward, hoping in Gods mercy to finde our deſired paſſage, and ſo continued aboue foure dayes.

Land in 64 degrees 15 min.

The ſound where our ſhips did ride was called Gilberts ſound.

Muſicians.

The people of the countrey came and conferred with our men.

The 29 of Iuly we diſcouered land in 64 degrees 15 minutes of latitude, bearing Northeaſt from vs. The winde being contrary to goe to the Northweſtwards, we bare in with this land to take ſome view of it, being vtterly void of the peſter of yce and very temperate. Comming neere the coaſt, we found many faire ſounds and good roads for ſhipping, and many great inlets into the land, whereby we iudged this land to be a great number of Iſlands ſtanding together. Heere hauing mored our barke in good order, we went on ſhoare vpon a ſmall Iſland to ſeeke for water and wood. Vpon this Iſland we did perceiue that there had bene people: for we found a ſmall ſhoo and pieces of leather ſowed with ſinewes, and a piece of furre, and wooll like to Beuer. Then we went vpon another Iſland on the other ſide of our ſhippes: and the Captaine, the Maſter, and I, being got vp to the top of an high rocke, the people of the countrey hauing eſpied vs, made a lamentable noiſe, as we thought, with great outcries and ſkreechings: we hearing them, thought it had bene the howling of wolues. At laſt I hallowed againe, and they likewiſe cried. Then we perceiuing where they ſtood, ſome on the ſhoare, and one rowing in a Canoa about a ſmall Iſland faſt by them, we made a great noiſe, partly to allure them to vs, and partly to warne our company of them. Whereupon M. Bruton and the Maſter of his ſhippe, with others of their company, made great haſte towards vs, and brought our Muſicians with them from our ſhippe, purpoſing either by force to reſcue vs, if need ſhould ſo require, or with courteſie to allure the people. When they came vnto vs, we cauſed our Muſicians to play, our ſelues dancing, and making many ſignes of friendſhip. At length there came tenne Canoas from the other Iſlands, and two of them came ſo neere the ſhoare where we were, that they talked with vs, the other being in their boats a prety way off. Their pronunciation was very hollow thorow the throat, and their ſpeech ſuch as we could not vnderſtand: onely we allured them by friendly imbracings and ſignes of curteſie. At length one of them pointing vp to the Sunne with his hand, would preſently ſtrike his breaſt ſo hard that we might heare the blow. This hee did many times before he would any way truſt vs. Then Iohn Ellis the Maſter of the Mooneſhine was appointed to vſe his beſt policie to gaine their friendſhip; who ſtrooke his breaſt, and pointed to the Sunne after their order: which when he had diuers times done, they beganne to truſt him, and one of them came on ſhoare, to whom we threw our cappes, ſtockings and gloues, and ſuch other things as then we had about vs, playing with our muſicke, and making ſignes of ioy, and dauncing. So the night comming, we bade them farewell, and went aboord our barks.

Thirty ſeuen Canoas.

Their muſicke.

Great familiaritie with the Sauages.

The next morning being the 30 of Iuly there came 37 Canoas rowing by our ſhips, calling to vs to come on ſhoare: we not making any great haſte vnto them, one of them went vp to the toppe of the rocke, and leapt and daunced as they had done the day before, ſhewing vs a ſeales ſkinne, and another thing made like a timbrell, which he did beat vpon with a ſticke, making a noiſe like a ſmall drumme. Whereupon we manned our boats and came to them, they all ſtaying in their Canoas; we came to the water ſide where they were: and after we had ſworne by the Sunne after their faſhion, they did truſt vs. So I ſhooke hands with one of them, and he kiſſed my hand, and we were very familiar with them. We were in ſo great credit with them vpon this ſingle acquaintance, that we could haue any thing they had. We bought fiue Canoas of them: we bought their clothes from their backs, which were all made of ſeales ſkinnes & birds ſkinnes; their buſkins, their hoſe, their gloues, all being commonly ſowed and well dreſſed: ſo that we were fully perſwaded that they haue diuers artificers among them. We had a paire of buſkins of them full of fine wooll like beuer. Their apparell for heat was made of birds ſkinnes with their feathers on them. We ſaw among them leather dreſſed like Glouers leather, and thicke thongs like white leather of a good length. We had of their darts and oares, and found in them that they would by no meanes diſpleaſe vs, but would giue vs whatſoeuer we aſked of them, and would be ſatiſfied with whatſoeuer we gaue them. They tooke great care one of another: for when we had bought their boats, then two other would come and cary him away betweene them that had ſolde vs his. They are very tractable people, void of craft or double dealing, and eaſie to be brought to any ciuility or good order: but we iudge them to be idolaters and to worſhip the Sunne.

During the time of our abode among theſe Iſlands we found reaſonable quantity of wood, both firre, ſpruſe and iuniper; which whether it came floting any great diſtance to theſe places where we found it, or whether it grew in ſome great Iſlands neere the ſame place by vs not yet diſcouered, we know not; but we iudge that it groweth there further into the land then we were, becauſe the people had great ſtore of darts and oares which they made none account of, but gaue them to vs for ſmall trifles, as points and pieces of paper. We ſaw about this coaſt maruellous great abundance of ſeales ſkulling together like ſkuls of ſmall fiſh. We found no freſh water among theſe Iſlands, but onely ſnow water, whereof we found great pooles. The cliffes were all of ſuch oare as M. Frobiſher brought from Meta incognita. We had diuers ſhewes of Study or Muſcouy glaſſe ſhining not altogether vnlike to Chriſtall. We found an herbe growing vpon the rocks, whoſe fruit was ſweet, full of red iuice, and the ripe ones were like corinths. We found alſo birch and willow growing like ſhrubbes low to the ground. Theſe people haue great ſtore of furres as we iudge. They made ſhewes vnto vs the 30 of this preſent, which was the ſecond time of our being with them, after they perceiued we would haue ſkinnes and furres, that they would go into the countrey and come againe the next day with ſuch things as they had: but this night the winde comming faire, the captaine and the maſter would by no meanes detract the purpoſe of our diſcouery. And ſo the laſt of this moneth about foure of the clocke in the morning in Gods name we ſet ſaile, and were all that day becalmed vpon the coaſt.

Diuers ſorts of wood.

They may make much traine, if they had meanes how to vſe it.

Moſcouie glaſſe.

A fruit like corinths.

The firſt of Auguſt we had a faire winde, and ſo proceeded towards the Northweſt for our diſcouery.

Auguſt.

The ſixt of Auguſt we diſcouered land in 66 degrees 40 minuts of latitude, altogether void from the peſter of ice: we ankered in a very faire rode vnder a braue mount, the cliffes whereof were as orient as golde. This mount was named Mount Raleigh. The rode where our ſhips lay at anker was called Totnes rode. The ſound which did compaſſe the mount was named Exeter ſound. The foreland towards the North was called Diers cape. The foreland towards the South was named Cape Walſingham. So ſoone as we were come to an anker in Totnes rode vnder Mount Raleigh, we eſpied foure white beares at the foot of the mount: we ſuppoſing them to be goats or wolues, manned our boats and went towards them: but when we came neere the ſhore, we found them to be white beares of a monſtrous bigneſſe: we being deſirous of freſh victuall and the ſport, began to aſſault them, and I being on land, one of them came downe the hill right againſt me: my piece was charged with hailſhot & a bullet: I diſcharged my piece and ſhot him in the necke; he roared a litle, and tooke the water ſtraight, making ſmall account of his hurt. Then we followed him with our boat, and killed him with boare-ſpeares, & two more that night. We found nothing in their mawes; but we iudged by their dung that they fed vpon graſſe, becauſe it appeared in all reſpects like the dung of an horſe, wherein we might very plainly ſee the very ſtrawes.

Land in 66 degrees 40 min.

Foure white beares.

The 7 we went on ſhore to another beare which lay all night vpon the top of an Iſland vnder Mount Raleigh, and when we came vp to him he lay faſt aſleep. I leuelled at his head, and the ſtone of my piece gaue no fire: with that he looked vp, and layed downe his head againe: then I ſhot being charged with two bullets, and ſtrooke him in the head: he being but amazed fell backwards: whereupon we ran all vpon him with boare-ſpeares, and thruſt him in the body: yet for all that he gript away our boare-ſpeares, and went towards the water; and as he was going downe, he came backe againe. Then our Maſter ſhot his boare-ſpeare, and ſtrooke him in the head, and made him to take the water, and ſwimme into a coue faſt by, where we killed him, and brought him aboord. The breadth of his forefoot from one ſide to the other was foureteene inches ouer. They were very fat, ſo as we were conſtrained to caſt the fat away. We ſaw a rauen vpon Mount Raleigh. We found withies alſo growing like low ſhrubs & flowers like Primroſes in the ſayd place. The coaſt is very mountainous, altogether without wood, graſſe, or earth, and is onely huge mountaines of ſtone; but the braueſt ſtone that euer we ſaw. The aire was very moderate in this countrey.

A huge white beare.

The 8 we departed from Mount Raleigh, coaſting along the ſhoare, which lieth Southſouthweſt, and Eaſtnortheaſt.

The 9 our men fell in diſlike of their allowance, becauſe it was too ſmall as they thought: whereupon we made a new proportion; euery meſſe being fiue to a meſſe ſhould haue foure pound of bread a day, twelue wine quarts of beere, ſix Newland fiſhes; and the fleſh dayes a gill of peaſe more: ſo we reſtrained them from their butter and cheeſe.

The 11 we came to the moſt Southerly cape of this land, which we named The Cape of Gods mercy, as being the place of our firſt entrance for the diſcouery. The weather being very foggy we coaſted this North land; at length when it brake vp, we perceiued that we were ſhot into a very faire entrance or paſſage, being in ſome places twenty leagues broad, and in ſome thirty, altogether void of any peſter of ice, the weather very tolerable, and the water of the very colour, nature and quality of the maine ocean, which gaue vs the greater hope of our paſſage. Hauing ſailed Northweſt ſixty leagues in this entrance we diſcouered certaine Iſlands ſtanding in the midſt thereof, hauing open paſſage on both ſides. Wherupon our ſhips diuided themſelues, the one ſailing on the North ſide, the other on the South ſide of the ſayd Iſles, where we ſtayed fiue dayes, hauing the winde at Southeaſt, very foggy and foule weather.

The 14 we went on ſhoare and found ſignes of people, for we found ſtones layed vp together like a wall, and ſaw the ſkull of a man or a woman.

The 15 we heard dogs houle on the ſhoare, which we thought had bene wolues, and therefore we went on ſhoare to kill them. When we came on land the dogges came preſently to our boat very gently, yet we thought they came to pray vpon vs, and therefore we ſhot at them, and killed two: and about the necke of one of them we found a leatherne coller, wherupon we thought them to be tame dogs. There were twenty dogs like maſtiues with pricke eares and long buſh tailes: we found a bone in the pizels of their dogs. Then we went farther, and found two ſleads made like ours in England: the one was made of firre, ſpruſe and oken boords ſawen like inch boords: the other was made all of whale bone, & there hung on the tops of the ſleads three heads of beaſts which they had killed. We ſaw here larks, rauens, and partridges.

Fowle.

The 17 we went on ſhoare, and in a little thing made like an ouen with ſtones I found many ſmall trifles, as a ſmall canoa made of wood, a piece of wood made like an image, a bird made of bone, beads hauing ſmall holes in one end of them to hang about their necks, & other ſmall things. The coaſt was very barren without wood or graſſe: the rocks were very faire like marble, full of vaines of diuers colours. We found a ſeale which was killed not long before, being fleane, and hid vnder ſtones.

An image.

Probabilities for the paſſage.

Wee neuer came into any bay before or after, but the waters colour was altered very blackiſh.

Our Captaine and Maſter ſearched ſtill for probabilities of the paſſage, and firſt found, ‖ that this place was all Iſlands, with great ſounds paſſing betweene them.

Secondly, the water remained of one colour with the maine ocean without altering.

Thirdly, we ſaw to the Weſt of thoſe Iſles three or foure whales in a ſkull, which they iudged to come from a Weſterly ſea, becauſe to the Eaſtward we ſaw not any whale.

Alſo as we were rowing into a very great ſound lying Southweſt, frõ whence theſe whales came, vpon the ſudden there came a violent counter-checke of a tide from the Southweſt againſt the flood which we came with, not knowing from whence it was mainteined.

Fiftly, in ſailing twenty leagues within the mouth of this entrance we had ſounding in 90 fadoms, faire gray oſie ſand, and the further we ran into the Weſtwards the deeper was the water; ſo that hard aboord the ſhoare among theſe Iſles we could not haue ground in 330 fadoms.

Laſtly, it did ebbe and flow ſixe or ſeuen fadome vp and downe, the flood comming from diuers parts, ſo as we could not perceiue the chiefe maintenance thereof.

The 18 and 19 our Captaine and Maſter determined what was beſt to doe, both for the ſafegard of their credits, and ſatiſfying of the aduenturers, and reſolued, if the weather brake vp, to make further ſearch.

The 20 the winde came directly againſt vs: ſo they altered their purpoſe, and reaſoned both for proceeding and returning.

The 21 the winde being Northweſt, we departed from theſe Iſlands; and as we coaſted the South ſhoare we ſaw many faire ſounds, whereby we were perſwaded that it was no firme land but Iſlands.

The 23 of this moneth the wind came Southeaſt, with very ſtormy and foule weather: ſo we were conſtrained to ſeeke harborow vpon the South coaſt of this entrance, where we fell into a very faire ſound, & ankered in 25 fadoms greene oſie ſand. Here we went on ſhore, where we had manifeſt ſignes of people where they had made their fire, and layed ſtones like a wall. In this place we ſaw foure very faire faulcons; and M. Bruton tooke from one of them his prey, which we iudged by the wings and legs to be a ſnite, for the head was eaten off.

Faulcons.

The 24 in the afternoone, the winde comming ſomewhat faire, we departed from this road, purpoſing by Gods grace to returne for England.

Their returne.

The 26 we departed from ſight of the North land of this entrance, directing our courſe homewards vntill the tenth of the next moneth.

The 10.of September wee fell with The land of deſolation, thinking to goe on ſhoare, but we could get neuer a good harborough. That night wee put to ſea againe thinking to ſearch it the next day: but this night aroſe a very great ſtorme, and ſeparated our ſhips, ſo that we loſt the ſight of the Mooneſhine.

September.

The 13.about noone (hauing tried all the night before with a gooſe wing) we ſet ſaile, & within two houres after we had ſight of the Mooneſhine againe: this day we departed from this land.

They ſaile from The land of deſolation to England in 14. dayes.

The 27.of this moneth we fell with ſight of England. This night we had a marueilous ſtorme and loſt the Mooneſhine.

The 30.of September wee came into Dartmouth, where wee found the Mooneſhine being come in not two houres before.

The ſecond voyage attempted by M.Iohn Dauis with others, for the diſcouery of the Northweſt paſſage, in Anno 1586.

The 7.day of May, I departed from the port of Dartmouth for the diſcouery of the Northweſt paſſage, with a ſhip of an hundred and twentie tunnes named the Mermayd, a barke of 60.tunnes named the Sunneſhine, a barke of 35. tunnes named the Mooneſhine, and a pinneſſe of tenne tunnes named the North ſtarre.

And the 15.of Iune I diſcouered land in the latitude of 60.degrees, and in longitude from the Meridian of London Weſtward 47.degrees, mightily peſtered with yce and ſnow, ſo that there was no hope of landing: the yce lay in ſome places tenne leagues, in ſome 20.and in ſome 50.leagues off the ſhore; ſo that wee were conſtrained to beare into 57. degrees to double the ſame, and to recouer a free Sea, which through Gods fauourable mercy we at length obtained.

Land diſcouered in 60.degrees.

The 29.of Iune after many tempeſtuous ſtorms we againe diſcouered land, in longitude from the Meridian of London 58. degr. 30.min. and in latitude 64. being Eaſt from vs: into which courſe ſith it pleaſed God by contrary winds to force vs, I thought it very neceſſary to beare in with it, & there to ſet vp our pinneſſe, prouided in the Mermayd to be our ſcout for this diſcouery, and ſo much the rather becauſe the yere before I had bene in the ſame place, and found it very conuenient for ſuch a purpoſe, wel ſtored with flote wood, & poſſeſſed by a people of tractable conuerſation: ſo that the 29.of this moneth we arriued within the Iſles which lay before this land, lying North northweſt, and South ſoutheaſt, we know not how farre. This land is very high & mountainous, hauing before it on the Weſt ſide a mighty company of Iſles full of faire ſounds, and harboroughs. This land was very litle troubled with ſnow, and the ſea altogether voyd of yce.

The ſhips being within the ſounds wee ſent our boates to ſearch for ſhole water, where wee might anker, which in this place is very hard to finde: and as the boat went ſounding and ſearching, the people of the countrey hauing eſpied them, came in their Canoas towards them with many ſhoutes and cries: but after they had eſpied in the boat ſome of our company that were the yeere before here with vs, they preſently rowed to the boate, and tooke hold on the oare, and hung about the boate with ſuch comfortable ioy, as would require a long diſcourſe to be vttered: they came with the boates to our ſhips, making ſignes that they knewe all thoſe that the yeere before had bene with them. After I perceiued their ioy and ſmall feare of vs, my ſelfe with the Merchants & others of the company went a ſhoare, bearing with me twentie kniues: I had no ſooner landed, but they lept out of their Canoas and came running to mee and the reſt, and embraced vs with many ſignes of heartie welcome: at this preſent there were eighteene of them, and to eche of them I gaue a knife: they offred ſkinnes to me for reward, but I made ſignes that they were not ſolde, but giuen them of courteſie: and ſo diſmiſſed them for that time, with ſignes that they ſhould returne againe after certaine houres.

Gentle and louing Sauages.

The next day with all poſſible ſpeede the pinneſſe was landed vpon an Iſle there to be finiſhed to ſerue our purpoſe for the diſcouerie, which Iſle was ſo conuenient for that purpoſe, as that we were very wel able to defend our ſelues againſt many enemies. During the time that the pinneſſe, was there ſetting vp, the people came cõtinually vnto vs ſometime an hundred Canoas at a time, ſometime fourtie, fiftie, more and leſſe, as occaſion ſerued. They brought with them ſeale ſkinnes, ſtagge ſkinnes, white hares, Seale fiſh, ſamon peale, ſmal cod, dry caplin, with other fiſh, and birds ſuch as the countrey did yeeld.

An 100 Canoas with diuers commodities.

My ſelfe ſtill deſirous to haue a further ſearch of this place, ſent one of the ſhipboates to one part of the lande, and my ſelfe went to another part to ſearch for the habitation of this people, with ſtraight commandement that there ſhould be no iniurie offered to any of the people, neither any gunne ſhot.

Images, trane oyle, and Seale ſkins in tan tubs.

The boates that went from me found the tents of the people made with ſeale ſkinnes ſet vp vpon timber, wherein they found great ſtore of dried Caplin, being a litle fiſh no bigger then a pilchard: they found bags of Trane oyle, many litle images cut in wood, Seale ſkinnes in tan-tubs, with many other ſuch trifles, whereof they diminiſhed nothing.

A plaine champion countrey.
A goodly riuer.

They alſo found tenne miles within the ſnowy mountaines a plaine champion countrey, with earth and graſſe, ſuch as our moory and waſte grounds of England are: they went vp into a riuer (which in the narroweſt place is two leagues broad) about ten leagues, finding it ſtill to continue they knewe not howe farre: but I with my company tooke another riuer, which although at the firſt it offered a large inlet, yet it proued but a deepe bay, the ende whereof in foure houres I attained, and there leauing the boat well manned, went with the reſt of my company three or foure miles into the countrey, but found nothing, nor ſaw any thing, ſaue onely gripes, rauens, and ſmall birds, as larkes and linnets.

The third of Iuly I manned my boat, and went with fifty Canoas attending vpon me vp into another ſound where the people by ſignes willed mee to goe, hoping to finde their habitation: at length they made ſignes that I ſhould goe into a warme place to ſleepe, at which place I went on ſhore, and aſcended the toppe of an high hill to ſee into the countrey, but perceiuing my labor vaine, I returned againe to my boat, the people ſtill following me, and my company very diligent to attend vs, and to helpe vs vp the rockes, and likewiſe downe: at length I was deſirous to haue our men leape with them, which was done, but our men did ouerleape them: from leaping they went to wreſtling, we found them ſtrong and nimble, and to haue ſkil in wreſtling, for they caſt ſome of our men that were good wreſtlers.

The Tartars and people of Iapon are alſo ſmal eyed.

The fourth of Iuly we lanched our pinneſſe, and had fortie of the people to helpe vs, which they did very willingly: at this time our men againe wreſtled with them, and found them as before, ſtrong and ſkilfull. This fourth of Iuly the Maſter of the Mermayd went to certaine Ilands to ſtore himſelfe with wood, where he found a graue with diuers buried in it, only couered with ſeale ſkinnes, hauing a croſſe laid ouer them. The people are of good ſtature, wel in body proportioned, with ſmall ſlender hands and feet, with broad viſages, and ſmal eyes, wide mouthes, the moſt part vnbearded, great lips, and cloſe toothed. Their cuſtome is as often as they go from vs, ſtill at their returne to make a new truce, in this ſort, holding his hand vp to the Sun with a lowd voice he crieth Ylyaoute, and ſtriketh his breſt with like ſignes, being promiſed ſafety, he giueth credit. Theſe people are much giuen to bleed, and therefore ſtop their noſes with deeres haire, or the haire of an elan. They are idolaters and haue images geeat ſtore, which they weare about them, and in their boats, which we ſuppoſe they worſhip. They are witches, and haue many kinds of inchantments, which they often vſed, but to ſmall purpoſe, thankes be to God.

Their maner of kindling fire like to theirs in America.
A fire made of turfes.
Great theeues

Being among them at ſhore the fourth of Iuly, one of them making a long oration, beganne to kindle a fire in this maner: he tooke a piece of a board wherein was a hole halfe thorow: into that hole he puts the end of a round ſtick like vnto a bedſtaffe, wetting the end thereof in Trane, and in faſhion of a turner with a piece of lether, by his violent motion doeth very ſpeedily produce fire: which done, with turfes he made a fire, into which with many words and ſtrange geſtures, he put diuers things, which wee ſuppoſed to be a ſacrifice: my ſelfe and diuers of my company ſtanding by, they were deſirous to haue me go into the ſmoke, I willed them likewiſe to ſtand in the ſmoke, which they by no meanes would do. I then tooke one of them, and thruſt him into the ſmoke, and willed one of my company to tread out the fire, & to ſpurne it into the ſea, which was done to ſhew them that we did contemne their ſorcery. Theſe people are very ſimple in all their conuerſation, but marueilous theeuiſh, eſpecially for iron, which they haue in great accoũt. They began through our leuitie to ſhew their vile nature: they began to cut our cables: they cut away the Moonelights boat from her ſterne, they cut our cloth where it lay to aire, though we did carefully looke vnto it, they ſtole our oares, a caliuer, a boare ſpeare, a ſword, with diuers other things, wherat the company and Maſters being grieued, for our better ſecuritie, deſired me to diſſolue this new friendſhip, and to leaue the company of theſe theeuiſh miſcreants: whereupon there was a caliuer ſhot among them, and immediatly vpon the ſame a faulcon, which ſtrange noice did ſore amaze them, ſo that with ſpeed they departed: notwithſtanding their ſimplicitie is ſuch, that within ten houres after they came againe to vs to intreat peace: which being promiſed, we againe fell into a great league. They brought vs Seale ſkinnes, & ſammon peale, but ſeeing iron, they could in no wiſe forbeare ſtealing: which when I perceiued, it did but miniſter vnto mee an occaſion of laughter, to ſee their ſimplicitie, and I willed that in no caſe they ſhould bee any more hardly vſed, but that our owne company ſhould be the more vigilant to keepe their things, ſuppoſing it to be very hard in ſo ſhort time to make them know their cuſts. They eate all their meat raw, they liue moſt vpon fiſh, they drinke ſalt water, and eate graſſe and ice with delight: they are neuer out of the water, but liue in the nature of fiſhes, ſaue only when dead ſleepe taketh them, and then vnder a warme rocke laying his boat vpon the land, hee lyeth downe to ſleepe. Their weapons are all darts, but ſome of them haue bow and arrowes and ſlings. They make nets to take their fiſh of the finne of a whale: they do all their things very artificially: and it ſhould ſeeme that theſe ſimple theeuiſh Iſlanders haue warre with thoſe of the maine, for many of them are ſore wounded, which wounds they receiued vpon the maine land, as by ſignes they gaue vs to vnderſtand. We had among them copper oare, blacke copper, and red copper: they pronounce their language very hollow, and deepe in the throat: theſe words following we learned from them.

The 7. of Iuly being very deſirous to ſearch the habitation of this countrey, I went my ſelfe with our new pinneſſe into the body of the land, thinking it to be a firme continent, and paſſing vp a very large riuer, a great flaw of winde tooke me, whereby wee were conſtrained to ſeeke ſuccour for that night, which being had, I landed with the moſt part of my company, and went to the top of a high mountaine, hoping from thence to ſee into the countrey: but the mountaines were ſo many and ſo mighty as that my purpoſe preuailed not: whereupon I againe returned to my pinneſſe, and willing diuers of my company to gather muſcles for my ſupper, whereof in this place there was great ſtore, my ſelfe hauing eſpied a very ſtrange ſight, eſpecially to me that neuer before ſaw the like, which was a mighty whirlewinde taking vp the water in very great quantitie, furiouſly mounting it into the aire, which whirlewinde, was not for a puffe or blaſt, but continual, for the ſpace of three houres, with very little intermiſſion, which ſith it was in the courſe that I ſhould paſſe, we were conſtrained that night to take vp our lodging vnder the rocks.

Muſcles.

A ſtrange whirlewinde.

The next morning the ſtorme being broken vp, we went forward in our attempt, and ſailed into a mighty great riuer directly into the body of the land, and in briefe, found it to be no firme land, but huge, waſte, and deſert Iſles with mighty ſounds, and inlets paſſing betweene Sea and Sea. Whereupon we returned towards our ſhippes, and landing to ſtoppe a floud, wee found the burial of theſe miſcreants; we found of their fiſh in bagges, plaices, and caplin dried, of which wee tooke onely one bagge and departed. The ninth of this moneth we came to our ſhips, where wee found the people deſirous in their faſhion, of friendſhip and barter: our Mariners complained heauily againſt the people, and ſaid that my lenitie and friendly vſing of them gaue them ſtomacke to miſchiefe: for they haue ſtollen an anker from vs, they haue cut our cable very dangerouſly, they haue cut our boats from our ſterne, and nowe ſince your departure, with ſlings they ſpare vs not with ſtones of halfe a pound weight: and wil you ſtil indure theſe iniuries? It is a ſhame to beare them. I deſired them to be content, and ſaid, I doubted not but al ſhould be wel. The 10. of this moneth I went to the ſhore, the people following mee in their Canoas: I tolled them on ſhore, and vſed them with much courteſie, and then departed aboord, they following me, and my company. I gaue ſome of them bracelets, & cauſed ſeuen or eight of them to come aboord, which they did willingly, and ſome of them went into the top of the ſhip: and thus curteouſly vſing them, I let them depart: the Sunne was no ſooner downe, but they began to practiſe their deuiliſh nature, and with ſlings threw ſtones very fiercely into the Moonelight, and ſtrake one of her men then boatſwaine, that he ouerthrew withall: whereat being moued, I changed my curteſie, and grew to hatred, my ſelf in my owne boate well manned with ſhot, and the barks boat likewiſe purſued them, and gaue them diuers ſhot, but to ſmall purpoſe, by reaſon of their ſwift rowing: ſo ſmally content we returned.

The 11. of this moneth there came fiue of them to make a new truce: the maſter of the Admiral came to me to ſhew me of their comming, and deſired to haue them taken and kept as priſoners vntill we had his anker againe: but when he ſawe that the chiefe ringleader and maſter of miſchiefe was one of the fiue, he then was vehement to execute his purpoſe, ſo it was determined to take him: he came crying Iliaout, and ſtriking his breſt offered a paire of gloues to ſell, the maſter offered him a knife for them: ſo two of thẽ came to vs, the one was not touched, but the other was ſoone captiue among vs: then we pointed to him and his fellowes for our anker, which being had, we made ſignes that he ſhould be ſet at libertie: within one houre after he came aboord the winde came faire, whereupon we weyed and ſet ſaile, and ſo brought the fellow with vs: one of his fellowes ſtill following our ſhip cloſe aboord, talked with him and made a kinde of lamentation, we ſtill vſing him wel with Yliaout, which was the common courſe of curteſie. At length this fellow aboord vs ſpake foure or fiue words vnto the other and clapped his two hands vpon his face, whereupon the other doing the like, departed as we ſuppoſe with heauie chere. We iudged the couering of his face with his hands and bowing of his body downe, ſignified his death. At length he became a pleaſant companion among vs. I gaue him a new ſute of frize after the Engliſh faſhion, becauſe I ſaw he could not indure the colde, of which he was very ioyfull, he trimmed vp his darts, and all his fiſhing tooles, and would make okam, and ſet his hand to a ropes end vpon occaſion. He liued with the dry Caplin that I tooke when I was ſearching in the pinnis, and did eate dry Newland fiſh.

One of the people taken which after dyed.

All this while, God be thanked, our people were in very good health, onely one young man excepted, who dyed at ſea the fourteenth of this moneth, and the fifteenth, according to the order of the ſea, with praiſe giuen to God by ſeruice, was caſt ouerboord.

The 17 of this moneth being in the latitude of 63. degres 8. minuts, we fell vpon a moſt mighty and ſtrange quantitie of yce in one intire maſſe, ſo bigge as that we knew not the limits thereof, and being withall ſo very high in forme of a land, with bayes and capes and like high cliffe land, as that we ſuppoſed it to be land, and therefore ſent our pinneſſe off to diſcouer it: but at her returne we were certainely informed that it was onely yce, which bred great admiration to vs all conſidering the huge quantitie thereof, incredible to be reported in trueth as it was, and therefore I omit to ſpeake any further thereof. This onely I thinke, that the like before was neuer ſeene: and in this place we had very ſtickle and ſtrong currents.

A huge quantitie of yce in 63. degrees of latitude.

We coaſted this mightie maſſe of yce vntill the 30 of Iuly, finding it a mighty barre to our purpoſe: the ayre in this time was ſo contagious and the ſea ſo peſtered with yce, as that all hope was baniſhed of proceeding: for the 24 of Iuly all our ſhrowds, ropes and ſailes were ſo froſen, and compaſſed with yce, onely by a groſſe fogge, as ſeemed to me more then ſtrange, ſith the laſt yeere I found this ſea free and nauigable, without impediments.

The nature of fogges.

Our men through this extremity began to grow ſicke and feeble, and withall hopeleſſe of good ſucceſſe: whereupon very orderly, with good diſcretion they intreated me to regard the ſtate of this buſines, and withall aduiſed me, that in conſcience I ought to regard the ſaftie of mine owne life with the preſeruation of theirs, and that I ſhould not through my ouerboldnes leaue their widowes and fatherleſſe children to giue me bitter curſes. This matter in conſcience did greatly moue me to regard their eſtates: yet conſidering the excellencie of the buſineſſe if it might be attained, the great hope of certaintie by the laſt yeeres diſcouery, and that there was yet a third way not put in practiſe, I thought it would growe to my great diſgrace, if this action by my negligence ſhould grow into diſcredite: whereupon ſeeking helpe from God, the fountaine of all mercies, it pleaſed his diuine maieſtie to moue my heart to proſecute that which I hope ſhal be to his glory, and to the contentation of euery Chriſtian minde. Whereupon falling into conſideration that the Mermaid, albeit a very ſtrong & ſufficient ſhip, yet by reaſon of her burthen was not ſo conuenient and nimble as a ſmaller bark, eſpecially in ſuch deſperate hazzards: further hauing in account her great charge to the aduenturers being at 100. li. the moneth, and that in doubtfull ſeruice: all the premiſſes conſidered with diuers other things, I determined to furniſh the Moonelight with reuictualling and ſufficient men, and to proceede in this action as God ſhould direct me. Whereupon I altered our courſe from the yce, and bare Eaſtſoutheaſt to recouer the next ſhore where this thing might be performed: ſo with fauourable winde it pleaſed God that the firſt of Auguſt we diſcouered the land in Latitude 66. degrees, 33. min. and in longitude from the Meridian of London 70. degrees voyd of trouble without ſnow or ice.

The ſecond of Auguſt wee harboured our ſelues in a very excellent good road, where with all ſpeed we graued the Moonelight, and reuictualled her: wee ſearched this countrey with our pinneſſe while the barke was trimming, which William Eſton did: he found all this land to be onely Ilands, with a Sea on the Eaſt, a Sea on the Weſt, and a Sea on the North. In this place wee found it very hot, and wee were very much troubled with a flie which is called Muskyto, for they did ſting grieuouſly. The people of this place at our firſt comming in caught a Seale, and with bladders faſt tied to him ſent him vnto vs with the floud, ſo as hee came right with our ſhippes, which we tooke as a friendly preſent from them.

Great heat.

The fift of Auguſt I went with the two Maſters and others to the toppe of a hill, and by the way William Eſton eſpied three Canoas lying vnder a rocke, and went vnto them: there were in them ſkinnes, darts, with diuers ſuperſtitious toyes, whereof wee diminiſhed nothing, but left vpon euery boat a ſilke point, a bullet of lead, and a pinne. The next day being the ſixt of Auguſt, the people came vnto vs without feare, and did barter with vs for ſkinnes, as the other people did: they differ not from the other, neither in their Canoas nor apparel, yet is their pronuntiation more plaine then the others, and nothing hollow in the throat. Our Sauage aboord vs kept himſelfe cloſe, and made ſhew that he would faine haue another companion. Thus being prouided, I departed from this lande the twelft of Auguſt at ſixe of the clocke in the morning, where I left the Mermayd at an anker: the foureteenth ſailing Weſt about fiftie leagues, we diſcouered land, being in latitude 66. degrees 19. minuts: this land is 70. leagues from the other from whence we came. This fourteenth day from nine a clocke at night till three a clocke in the morning, wee ankered by an Iland of yce, twelue leagues off the ſhore, being mored to the yce.

66. degrees 19. minutes.

The fifteenth day at three a clocke in the morning we departed from this land to the South, and the eighteenth of Auguſt we diſcouered land Northweſt from vs in the morning, being a very faire promontory, in latitude 65. degrees, hauing no land on the South. Here wee had great hope of a through paſſage.

Great hope of a paſſage.

This day at three a clocke in the afternoone wee againe diſcouered lande Southweſt and by South from vs, where at night wee were becalmed. The nineteenth of this moneth at noone, by obſeruation, we were in 64. degrees 20. minuts. From the eighteenth day at noone vnto the nineteenth at noone, by preciſe ordinary care, wee had ſailed 15. leagues South and by Weſt, yet by art and more exact obſeruation, we found our courſe to be Southweſt, ſo that we plainely perceiued a great current ſtriking to the Weſt.

64. degr. 20. min.

A great current to the Weſt.

This land is nothing in ſight but Iſles, which increaſeth our hope. This nineteenth of Auguſt at ſixe a clocke in the afternoone, it began to ſnow, and ſo continued all night with foule weather, and much winde, ſo that we were conſtrained to lie at hull all night fiue leagues off the ſhore: In the morning being the twentieth of Auguſt, the fogge and ſtorme breaking vp, we bare in with the lande, and at nine a clocke in the morning wee ankered in a very faire and ſafe road and locke for all weathers. At tenne of the clocke I went on ſhore to the toppe of a very high hill, where I perceiued that this land was Iſlands: at foure of the clocke in the afternoone wee weyed anker, hauing a faire North northeaſt winde, with very faire weather: at ſix of the clocke we were cleare without the land, and ſo ſhaped our courſe to the South, to diſcouer the coaſt, whereby the paſſage may be through Gods mercy found.

Ilands.

We coaſted this land till the eight and twentieth of Auguſt, finding it ſtill to continue towards the South, from the latitude of 67. to 57. degrees: we found marueilous great ſtore of birds, guls and mewes, incredible to be reported, whereupon being calme weather, we lay one glaſſe vpon the lee, to proue for fiſh, in which ſpace we caught 100. of cod, although we were but badly prouided for fiſhing, not being our purpoſe. This eight and twentieth hauing great diſtruſt of the weather, we arriued in a very faire harbour in the latitude of 5*6.* degrees, and ſailed 10. leagues into the ſame, being two leagues broad, with very faire woods on both ſides: in this place wee continued vntil the firſt of September, in which time we had two very great ſtormes. I landed, & went ſixe miles by gheſſe into the countrey, and found that the woods were firre, pineapple, alder, yew, withy, and birch: here wee ſaw a blacke beare: this place yeeldeth great ſtore of birds, as fezant, partridge, Barbary hennes or the like, wilde geeſe, ducks, black birdes, ieyes, thruſhes, with other kinds of ſmall birds. Of the partridge and fezant we killed great ſtore with bow and arrowes: in this place at the harborough mouth we found great ſtore of cod.

They runne 8. dayes Southward from 67 to 57. degrees vpon the coaſt.

A harborough in 56. degrees.

Faire woods.

Store of cod.

The firſt of September at tenne a clocke wee ſet ſaile, and coaſted the ſhore with very faire weather. The thirde day being calme, at noone we ſtrooke ſaile, and let fall a cadge anker, to proue whether we could take any fiſh, being in latitude 54. degrees 30. minuts, in which place we found great abundance of cod, ſo that the hooke was no ſooner ouerboord, but preſently a fiſh was taken. It was the largeſt and the beſt fed fiſh that euer I ſawe, and diuers fiſher men that were with me ſayd that they neuer ſaw a more ſuaule or better ſkull of fiſh in their liues: yet had they ſeene great abundance.

A perfect hope of the paſſage about 54. degrees and an halfe.

The fourth of September at fiue a clocke in the afternoone we ankered in a very good road among great ſtore of Iſles, the countrey low land, pleaſant and very full of fayre woods. To the North of this place eight leagues, we had a perfect hope of the paſſage, finding a mightie great ſea paſſing betweene two lands Weſt. The South land to our iudgement being nothing but Iſles: we greatly deſired to goe into this ſea, but the winde was directly againſt vs. We ankered in foure fathome fine ſand. In this place is foule and fiſh mightie ſtore.

Two of our men ſlaine by the Sauages.

The ſixt of September hauing a faire Northnorthweſt winde, hauing trimmed our Barke we purpoſed to depart, and ſent fiue of our ſailers yong men a ſhore to an Iſland, to fetch certaine fiſh which we purpoſed to weather, and therefore left it al night couered vpon the Iſle: the brutiſh people of this countrey lay ſecretly lurking in the wood, and vpon the ſudden aſſaulted our men: which when we perceiued, we preſently let ſlip our cables vpon the halſe, and vnder our foreſaile bare into the ſhoare, and with all expedition diſcharged a double muſket vpon them twiſe, at the noyſe whereof they fled: notwithſtanding to our very great griefe, two of our men were ſlaine with their arrowes, and two grieuouſly wounded, of whom at this preſent we ſtand in very great doubt, onely one eſcaped by ſwimming, with an arrow ſhot thorow his arme. Theſe wicked miſcreants neuer offered parly or ſpeech, but preſently executed their curſed fury.

This preſent euening it pleaſed God further to increaſe our ſorowes with a mighty tempeſtuous ſtorme, the winde being Northnortheaſt, which laſted vnto the tenth of this moneth very extreme. We vnrigged our ſhip, and purpoſed to cut downe our maſts, the cable of our ſhut-anker brake, ſo that we onely expected to be driuen on ſhoare among theſe Canibals for their pray. Yet in this deepe diſtreſſe the mightie mercie of God, when hope was paſt, gaue vs ſuccour, and ſent vs a faire lee, ſo as we recouered our anker againe and newe mored our ſhip: where we ſaw that God manifeſtly deliuered vs: for the ſtraines of one of our cables were broken, and we only roade by an olde iunke. Thus being freſhly mored a new ſtorme aroſe, the winde being Weſtnorthweſt, very forcible, which laſted vnto the tenth day at night.

The eleuenth day with a faire Weſtnorthweſt winde we departed with truſt in Gods mercie, ſhaping our courſe for England, and arriued in the Weſt countrey in the beginning of October.

Maſter Dauis being arriued, wrote his letter to M. VVilliam Sanderſon of London, concerning his voyage, as followeth.

SIr, the Sunneſhine came into Dartmouth the fourth of this moneth: ſhe hath bene at Iſland, and from thence to Groenland, and ſo to Eſtotiland, from thence to Deſolation, and to our Marchants, where ſhe made trade with the people, ſtaying in the countrey twentie dayes. They haue brought home fiue hundred ſeale ſkinnes, and an hundred and fortie halfe ſkinnes and pieces of ſkinnes. I ſtand in great doubt of the pinneſſe, God be mercifull vnto the poore men, and preſerue them, if it be his bleſſed will.

I haue now experience of much of the Northweſt part of the world, & haue brought the paſſage to that likelihood, as that I am aſſured it muſt bee in one of foure places, or els not at all. And further I can aſſure you vpon the perill of my life, that this voyage may be performed without further charge, nay with certaine profite to the aduenturers, if I may haue but your fauour in the action. I hope I ſhall finde fauour with you to ſee your Card. I pray God it be ſo true as the Card ſhal be which I will bring you: and I hope in God, that your ſkill in Nauigation ſhall be gaineful vnto you, although at the firſt it hath not proued ſo. And thus with my humble commendations I commit you to God, deſiring no longer to liue, then I ſhall be yours moſt faithfully to command. Exon this fourteenth of October. 1586.

Yours to command

IOHN DAVIS.

The relation of the courſe which the Sunſhine a barke of fiftie tunnes, and the Northſtarre a ſmall pinneſſe, being two veſſels of the fleete of M. Iohn Dauis, helde after hee had ſent them from him to diſcouer the paſſage betweene Groneland and Iſland, written by Henry Morgan ſeruant to M. Willliam Sanderſon of London.

The ſeuenth day of May 1586. wee departed out of Dartmouth hauen foure ſailes, to wit, the Mermaid, the Sunſhine, the Mooneſhine, & the Northſtarre, In the Sunſhine were ſixteene men, whoſe names were theſe: Richard Pope Maſter, Marke Carter Maſters mate, Henry Morgan Purſer, George Draward, Iohn Mandie, Hugh Broken, Philip Iane, Hugh Hempſon, Richard Borden, Iohn Philpe, Andrew Madock, William Wolcome, Robert Wag carpenter, Iohn Bruſkome, William Aſhe, Simon Ellis.

May.

Our courſe was Weſtnorthweſt the ſeuenth and eight dayes: and the ninth day in the morning we were on head of the Tarroſe of Silley. Thus coaſting along the South part of Ireland the 11. day, we were on head of the Dorſes: and our courſe was Southſouthweſt vntill ſixe of the clocke the 12. day. The 13. day our courſe was Northweſt. We remained in the company of the Mermaid and the Mooneſhine vntil we came to the latitude of 60. degrees: and there it ſeemed beſt to our Generall M. Dauis to diuide his fleete, himſelfe ſayling to the Northweſt, and to direct the Sunſhine, wherein I was, and the pinneſſe called the Northſtarre, to ſeeke a paſſage Northward betweene Groenland and Iſland to the latitude of 80. degrees, if land did not let vs. So the ſeuenth day of Iune wee departed from them: and the ninth of the ſame we came to a firme land of yce, which we coaſted along the ninth, the tenth, and the eleuenth dayes of Iune: and the eleuenth day at ſixe of the clocke at night we ſaw land which was very high, which afterward we knew to be Iſland: and the twelft day we harboured there, and found many people: the land lyeth Eaſt and and by North in 66. degrees.

Their commodities were greene fiſh, and Iſland lings, and ſtockfiſh, and a fiſh which is called Scatefiſh: of all which they had great ſtore. They had alſo kine, ſheep, and horſes, and hay for their cattell, and for their horſes. Wee ſaw alſo of their dogs. Their dwelling houſes were made on both ſides with ſtones, and wood layd croſſe ouer them, which was couered ouer with turfes of earth, and they are flat on the tops, and many of theſe ſtood hard by the ſhore. Their boates were made with wood and yron all along the keele like our Engliſh boates: and they had nayles for to naile them withall, and fiſh-hookes and other things for to catch fiſh as we haue here in England. They had alſo braſen kettles, and girdles and purſes made of leather, and knoppes on them of copper, and hatchets, and other ſmall tooles as neceſſary as we haue. They drie their fiſh in the Sun, and when they are dry, they packe them vp in the top of their houſes. If we would goe thither to fiſhing more then we doe, we ſhould make it a very good voyage: for wee got an hundreth greene fiſh in one morning. Wee found heere two Engliſh men with a ſhippe, which came out of England about Eaſter day of this preſent yeere 1586, and one of them came aboord of vs, and brought vs two lambs. The Engliſh mans name was M. Iohn Roydon of Ipſwich marchant: hee was bound for London with his ſhip. And this is the ſumme of that which I obſerued in Iſland. We departed from Iſland the ſixteenth day of Iune in the morning, and our courſe was Northweſt, and we ſaw on the coaſt two ſmall barkes going to an harborough: we went not to them, but ſaw them a farre off. Thus we continued our courſe vnto the end of this moneth.

They departed from Iſland Northweſt.

The third day of Iuly we were in betweene two firme lands of yce, and paſſed in betweene them all that day vntill it was night: and then the Maſter turned backe againe, and ſo away we went towards Groenland. And the ſeuenth day of Iuly we did ſee Groenland, and it was very high, and it looked very blew: we could not come to harborough into the land, becauſe we were hindered by a firme land as it were of yce, which was along the ſhoares ſide: but we were within three leagues of the land, coaſting the ſame diuers dayes together. The ſeuenteenth day of Iuly wee ſaw the place which our Captaine M. Iohn Dauis the yeere before had named The land of Deſolation, where we could not goe on ſhore for yce. The eighteenth day we were likewiſe troubled with yce, and went in amongſt it at three of the clocke in the morning. After wee had cleared our ſelues thereof, wee ranged all along the coaſt of Deſolation vntill the ende of the aforeſayd moneth.

The third of day Auguſt we came in ſight of Gilberts ſound in the latitude of 64. deg. 15. min. which was the place where wee were appoynted to meete our Generall and the reſt of our Fleete. Here we came to an harborough at 6. of the clocke at night.

Auguſt.

The 4. day in the morning the Maſter went on ſhore with 10. of his men, and they brought vs foure of the people rowing in their boats aboord of the ſhip. And in the afternoone I went on ſhore with 6. of our men, and there came to vs ſeuen of them when we were on land. We found on ſhore three dead people, and two of them had their ſtaues lying by them, and their olde ſkinnes wrapped about them, and the other had nothing lying by, wherefore we thought it was a woman. We alſo ſaw their houſes neere the Sea ſide, which were made with pieces of wood on both ſides, and croſſed ouer with poles and then couered ouer with earth: we found Foxes running vpon the hilles: as for the place it is broken land all the way that we went, and full of broken Iſlands.

The houſes of Gronland.

The 21. of Auguſt the Maſter ſent the boate on ſhore for wood with ſixe of his men, and there were one and thirtie of the people of the countrey which went on ſhore to them, & they went about to kill them as we thought, for they ſhot their dartes towards them, and we that were aboord the ſhip did ſee them goe on ſhore to our men: whereupon the Maſter ſent the pinneſſe after them, and when they ſaw the pinneſſe comming towards them, they turned backe, and the Maſter of the pinneſſe did ſhoote off a caliuer to them the ſame time, but hurt none of them, for his meaning was onely to put them in feare. Diuers times they did waue vs on ſhore to play with them at the football, and ſome of our company went on ſhore to play with them, and our men did caſt them downe as ſoone as they did come to ſtrike the ball. And thus much of that which we did ſee and do in that harborough where we arriued firſt.

Our men play at footeball with the Sauages.

The 23. day wee departed from the Merchants Iſle, where wee had beene firſt, and our courſe from thence was South & by Weſt, and the wind was Northeaſt, and we ran that day and night about 5. or 6. leagues, vntill we came to another harborough.

The 24. about eleuen of the clocke in the forenoone wee entred into the aforeſayd new harborow, and as wee came in, we did ſee dogs running vpon the Iſlands. When we were come in, there came to vs foure of the people which were with vs before in the other harborough, and where we rode, we had ſandie ground. We ſaw no wood growing, but found ſmall pieces of wood vpon the Iſlands, & ſome ſmall pieces of ſweete wood among the ſame. We found great Harts hornes, but could ſee none of the Stagges where we went, but we found their footings. As for the bones which we receiued of the Sauages I cannot tell of what beaſts they be.

Sweete wood found.

The ſtones that we found in the countrey were black, and ſome white, as I thinke they be of no value, neuertheleſſe I haue brought examples of them to you.

The 30. of Auguſt we departed from this harborough towards England, & the wind tooke vs contrary, ſo that we were faine to go to another harborough the ſame day at 11. of the clocke. And there came to vs 39. of the people, and brought vs 13. Seale ſkins, and after we receiued theſe ſkins of them, the Maſter ſent the carpenter to change one of our boates which wee had bought of them before, and they would haue taken the boate from him perforce, and when they ſawe they could not take it from vs, they ſhot with their dartes at vs, and ſtroke one of our men with one of their dartes, and Iohn Filpe ſhot one of them into the breſt with an arrow. And they came to vs againe, and foure of our men went into the ſhipboate, and they ſhot with their dartes at our men: but our men tooke one of their people in his boate into the ſhipboate, and he hurt one of them with his knife, but we killed three of them in their boates: two of them were hurt with arrowes in the breſts, and he that was aboord our boat, was ſhot in with an arrow, and hurt with a ſword, and beaten with ſtaues, whome our men caſt ouerboord, but the people caught him and carried him on ſhore vpon their boates, and the other two alſo, and ſo departed from vs. And three of them went on ſhore hard by vs, where they had their dogs, and thoſe three came away from their dogs, and preſently one of their dogs came ſwimming towards vs hard aboord the ſhip, whereupon our Maſter cauſed the Gunner to ſhoote off one of the great pieces towards the people, and ſo the dog turned backe to land, and within an houre after there came of the people hard aboord the ſhip, but they would not come to vs as they did come before.

A ſkirmiſh betweene the Sauages and our men.

The 31. of Auguſt we departed from Gylberts ſound for England, and when we came out of the harborough there came after vs 17. of the people looking which way we went.

The 2. of September we loſt ſight of the land at 12. of the clocke at noone.

September.

The third day at night we loſt ſight of the Northſtarre our pinneſſe in a very great ſtorme, and lay a hull tarying for them the 4. day, but could heare no more of them. Thus we ſhaped our courſe the 5. day Southſoutheaſt, and ſayling vntill the 27. of the ſayd moneth, we came in ſight of Cape Clere in Ireland.

The pinneſſe neuer returned home.

The 30. day we entred into our owne chanell.

The 2. of October we had ſight of the Iſle of Wight.

The 3. we coaſted all along the ſhore, and the 4. and 5.

The 6. of the ſayd moneth of October wee came into the riuer of Thames as high as Ratliffe in ſafetie God be thanked.

The third voyage Northweſtward, made by M. Iohn Dauis Gentleman, as chiefe Captaine & Pilot generall, for the diſcouery of a paſſage to the Iſles of the Moluccas, or the coaſt of China, in the yeere 1587. Written by M. Iohn Ianes.

May.

The 19. of this preſent moneth about midnight wee weyed our ankers, ſet ſayle, and departed from Dartmouth with two Barkes and a Clincher, the one named the Elizabeth of Dartmouth, the other the Sunneſhine of London, and the Clincher called the Helene of Londō: thus in Gods name we ſet forwards with the wind at Northeaſt a good freſh gale. About 3. houres after our departure, the night being ſomewhat thicke with darkneſſe, we had loſt the pinneſſe: the Captaine imagining that the men had runne away with her, willed the Maſter of the Sunſhine to ſtand to Seawards, and ſee if we could deſcry them, we bearing in with the ſhore for Plimmouth. At length we deſcried her, bare with her, and demanded what the cauſe was: they anſwered that the tiller of their helme was burſt. So ſhaping our courſe Weſtſouthweſt, we went forward, hoping that a hard beginning would make a good ending, yet ſome of vs were doubtfull of it, falling in reckoning that ſhe was a Clincher; neuertheleſſe we put our truſt in God.

The 21 we met with the Red Lion of London, which came from the coaſt of Spaine, which was afrayd that we had bene men of warre, but we hailed them, and after a little conference, we deſired the Maſter to carie our letters for London directed to my vncle Sanderſon, who promiſed vs a ſafe deliuerie. And after wee had heaued them a lead and a line, whereunto wee had made faſt our letters, before they could get them into the ſhip, they fell into the Sea, and ſo all our labour and theirs alſo was loſt; notwithſtanding they promiſed to certifie our departure at London, and ſo we departed, and the ſame day we had ſight of Silley. The 22. the wind was at Northeaſt by Eaſt with faire weather, and ſo the 23. and 24. the like. The 25. we layd our ſhips on the Lee for the Sunneſhine, who was a romaging for a leake, they had 500. ſtrokes at the pumpe in a watch, the wind at Northweſt.

The 26. and 27. wee had faire weather, but this 27. the pinneſſes foremaſt was blowen ouerboord. The 28. the Elizabeth towed the pinneſſe, which was ſo much bragged of by the owners report before we came out of England, but at Sea ſhe was like a cart drawen with oxen. Sometimes we towed her becauſe ſhe could not ſaile for ſcant wind.

The 31. day our Captaine asked if the pinneſſe were ſtanch, Peerſon anſwered that ſhe was as ſound and ſtanch as a cup. This made vs ſomething glad, when we ſawe ſhe would brooke the Sea, and was not leake.

Iune.

The firſt 6. dayes wee had faire weather: after that for 5. dayes wee had fogge and raine, the winde being South. The 12. wee had cleare weather. The Mariners in the Sunneſhine and the Maſter could not agree: the Mariners would goe on their voyage a fiſhing, becauſe the yeere began to waſte: the Maſter would not depart till hee had the companie of the Elizabeth, whereupon the Maſter told our Captaine that hee was afrayd his men would ſhape ſome contrary courſe while he was aſleepe, and ſo he ſhould loſe vs. At length after much talke and many threatnings, they were content to bring vs to the land which we looked for daily.

The 14. day we diſcouered land at fiue of the clocke in the morning, being very great and high mountaines, the tops of the hils being couered with ſnow. Here the wind was variable, ſometimes Northeaſt, Eaſtnortheaſt, and Eaſt by North: but we imagined our ſelues to be 16. or 17. leagues off from the ſhore.

Land deſcried.

The 16. we came to an anker about 4. or 5. of the clocke after noone, the people came preſently to vs after the old maner, with crying Ilyaoute, and ſhewing vs Seales ſkinnes. The 17. we began to ſet vp the pinneſſe that Peerſon framed at Dartmouth, with the boords which hee brought from London.

The 18. Peerſon and the Carpenters of the ſhips began to ſet on the plankes. The 19. as we went about an Iſland, were found blacke Pumiſe ſtones, and ſalt kerned on the rockes very white and gliſtering. This day alſo the Maſter of the Sunneſhine tooke of the people a very ſtrong luſty yoong fellow.

Salt kerned on the rockes.

The 20. about two of the clocke in the morning, the Sauages came to the Iſland where our pinnace was built readie to bee launched, and tore the two vpper ſtrakes, and carried them away onely for the loue of the yron in the boords. While they were about this practiſe, we manned the Elizabeths boate to goe a ſhore to them: our men being either afrayd or amazed, were ſo long before they came to ſhore, that our Captaine willed them to ſtay, and made the Gunner giue fire to a Saker, and layd the piece leuell with the boate which the Sauages had turned on the one ſide becauſe wee ſhould not hurt them with our arrowes, and made the boate their bulwarke againſt the arrowes which we ſhot at them. Our Gunner hauing made all things readie, gaue fire to the piece, and fearing to hurt any of the people, and regarding the owners profite, thought belike hee would ſaue a Sakers ſhot, doubting wee ſhould haue occaſion to fight with men of warre, and ſo ſhot off the Saker without a bullet: we looking ſtil when the Sauages that were hurt ſhould run away without legs, at length wee could perceiue neuer a man hurt, but all hauing their legges could carrie away their bodies: wee had no ſooner ſhot off the piece, but the Maſter of the Sunneſhine manned his boate, and came rowing toward the Iſland, the very ſight of whom made each of them take that hee had gotten, and flee away as faſt as they could to another Iſland about two miles off, where they tooke the nayles out of the timber, and left the wood on the Iſle. when we came on ſhore, and ſaw how they had ſpoiled the boat, after much debating of the matter, we agreed that the Elizabeth ſhould haue her to fiſh withall: whereupon ſhe was preſently carryed aboord, and ſtowed.

Now after this trouble, being reſolued to depart with the firſt wind, there fell out another matter worſe then all the reſt, and that was in this maner. Iohn Churchyard one whom our Captaine had appoynted as Pilot in the pinnace, came to our Captaine, and maſter Bruton, and told them that the good ſhip which we muſt all hazard our liues in, had three hundred ſtrokes at one time as ſhe rode in the harbour: This diſquieted vs all greatly, and many doubted to goe in her. At length our Captaine by whom we were all to be gouerned, determined rather to end his life with credite, then to returne with infamie and diſgrace, and ſo being all agreed, wee purpoſed to liue and die together, and committed our ſelues to the ſhip. Now the 21. hauing brought all our things aboord, about 11. or 12. of the clocke at night, we ſet ſaile and departed from thoſe Iſles, which lie in 64. degrees of latitude, our ſhips being all now at Sea, and wee ſhaping our courſe to goe, coaſting the land to the Northwards vpon the Eaſterne ſhore, which we called the ſhore of our Marchants, becauſe there we met with people which traffiqued with vs, but here wee were not without doubt of our ſhip.

Iſles in 64. degrees.

Store of Whales in 67. degrees.

The 24. being in 67. degrees, and 40. minutes, wee had great ſtore of Whales, and a kinde of ſea birds which the Mariners call Cortinous. This day about ſixe of the clocke at night, we eſpied two of the countrey people at Sea, thinking at the firſt they had bene two great Seales, vntill wee ſawe their oares gliſtering with the Sunne: they came rowing towardes vs, as faſt as they could, and when they came within hearing, they held vp their oares, and cryed Ilyaoute, making many ſignes: and at laſt they came to vs, giuing vs birdes for bracelets, and of them I had a darte with a bone in it, or a piece of Unicorns horne, as I did iudge. This dart he made ſtore of, but when he ſaw a knife, he let it go, being more deſirous of the knife then of his dart: theſe people continued rowing after our ſhip the ſpace of 3. howres.

The 25. in the morning at 7. of the clocke we deſcried 30. Sauages rowing after vs, being by iudgement 10. leagues off from the ſhore: they brought vs Salmon Peales, Birdes, and Caplin, and we gaue them pinnes, needles, bracelets, nailes, kniues, bels, looking glaſſes, and other ſmall trifles, and for a knife, a naile or a bracelet, which they call Ponigmah, they would ſell their boate, coates, or any thing they had, although they were farre from the ſhore. Wee had but few ſkinnes of them, about 20. but they made ſignes to vs that if wee would goe to the ſhore, wee ſhould haue more ſtore of Chichſanege: they ſtayed with vs till 11. of the clocke, at which time wee went to prayer, and they departed from vs.

72. deg. 12. min.

The great variation of the compaſſe.

London coaſt.

The 28. and 29. were foggie with clowdes, the 30. day wee tooke the heigth, and found our ſelues in 72. degrees and 12. minutes of latitude both at noone and at night, the Sunne being 5. degrees aboue the Horizon. At midnight the compaſſe ſet to the variation of 28. degrees to the Weſtward. Now hauing coaſted the land, which wee called London coaſt, from the 21. of this preſent, till the 30. the Sea open all to the Weſtwards and Northwards, the land on ſtarboord ſide Eaſt from vs, the winde ſhifted to the North, whereupon we left that ſhore, naming the ſame Hope Sanderſon, and ſhaped our courſe Weſt, and ranne 40. leagues and better without the ſight of any land.

Betweene Groenland & the North of America about 40. leagues.

Iuly.

Iuly.

THe ſecond of Iuly wee fell with a mightie banke of yce Weſt from vs, lying North and South, which banke wee would gladly haue doubled out to the Northwards, but the winde would not ſuffer vs, ſo that we were faine to coaſt it to the Southwards, hoping to double it out, that wee might haue run ſo farre Weſt till wee had found land, or els to haue beene thorowly reſolued of our pretended purpoſe.

A mightie banke of yce lying North and South.

The 3. wee fell with the yce againe, and putting off from it, we ſought to the Northwards, but the wind croſſed vs.

The 4. was foggie: ſo was the 5. alſo with much wind at the North.

The 6. being very cleare, we put our barke with oares through a gap in the yce, ſeeing the Sea free on the Weſt ſide, as we thought, which falling out otherwiſe, cauſed vs to returne after we had ſtayed there betweene the yce. The 7. and the 8. about midnight, by Gods helpe we recouered the open Sea, the weather being faire and calme, and ſo was the 9. The 10, we coaſted the yce. The 11. was foggie, but calme.

The 12. we coaſted againe the yce, hauing the wind at Northnorthweſt. The 13. bearing off from the yce, we determined to goe with the ſhoare and come to an anker, and to ſtay 5. or 6. dayes for the diſſoluing of the yce, hoping that the Sea continually beating it, and the Sunne with the extreme force of heat which it had alwayes ſhining vpon it, would make a quicke diſpatch, that we might haue a further ſearch vpon the Weſterne ſhore. Now when we were come to the Eaſterne coaſt, the water ſomething deepe, and ſome of our companie fearefull withall, we durſt not come to an anker, but bare off into the Sea againe. The poore people ſeeing vs goe away againe, came rowing after vs into the Sea, the waues being ſomewhat loftie. We truckt with them for a few ſkinnes and dartes, and gaue them beads, nailes, pinnes, needles and cardes, they poynting to the ſhore, as though they would ſhew vs ſome great friendſhip: but we little regarding their curteſie, gaue them the gentle farewell, and ſo departed.

Extreme heate of the Sunne.

The 14. wee had the wind at South. The 15. there was ſome fault either in the barke, or the ſet of ſome current, for wee were driuen ſixe points beyond our courſe Weſt. The 16. wee fell with the banke of yce Weſt from vs. The 17. and 18. were foggie. The 19. at one a clocke after noone, wee had ſight of the land which we called Mount Raleigh, and at 12. of the clocke at night, we were thwart the ſtreights which we diſcouered the firſt yeere. The 20. wee trauerſed in the mouth of the ſtreight, the wind being at Weſt, with faire and cleare weather. The 21. and 22. wee coaſted the Northerne coaſt of the ſtreights. The 23. hauing ſayled threeſcore leagues Northweſt into the ſtreights, at two a clocke after noone wee ankered among many Iſles in the bottome of the gulfe, naming the ſame The Earle of Cumberlands Iſles, where riding at anker, a Whale paſſed by our ſhip and went Weſt in among the Iſles. Heere the compaſſe ſet at thirtie degrees Weſtward variation. The 23. wee departed, ſhaping our courſe Southeaſt to recouer the Sea. The 25. wee were becalmed in the bottome of the gulfe, the ayre being extreme hot. Maſter Bruton and ſome of the Mariners went on ſhoare to courſe dogs, where they found many Graues and Trane ſpilt on the ground, the dogs being ſo fat that they were ſcant able to run.

They were driuen Weſt ſixe points out of their courſe in 67. degrees, 45. minutes.

Mount Raleigh.

The Earle of Cumberlands Iſles.

The variation of the compaſſe 30. deg. Weſtward.

The 26. wee had a prety ſtorme, the winde being at Southeaſt. The 27. and 28. were faire. The 29. we were cleare out of the ſtreights, hauing coaſted the South ſhore, and this day at noone we were in 62. degrees of latitude. The 30. in the afternoone wee coaſted a banke of yce, which lay on the ſhore, and paſſed by a great banke or Inlet, which lay between 63. and 62. degrees of latitude, which we called Lumlies Inlet. We had oftentimes as, we ſailed alongſt the coaſt, great ruttes, the water as it were whirling and ouerfalling, as if it were the fall of ſome great water through a bridge.

The land trendeth from this place Southweſt and by South.

My lord Lumleys Inlet.

The 31. as we ſayled by a Headland, which we named Warwicks Foreland, we fell into one of thoſe ouerfals with a freſh gale of wind, and bearing all our ſailes, wee looking vpon an Iſland of yce betweene vs and the ſhoarre, had thought that our barke did make no way, which cauſed vs to take markes on the ſhoare: at length wee perceiued our ſelues to goe very faſt, and the Iſland of yce which we ſaw before, was carried very forcibly with the ſet of the current faſter then our ſhip went. This day and night we paſſed by a very great gulfe, the water whirling and roaring as it were the meetings of tydes.

Warwicks Foreland.

A very forcible current Weſtward.

Auguſt.

Chidleys cape.

The lord Darcies Iſland.

THe firſt of Auguſt hauing coaſted a banke of ice which was driuen out at the mouth of this gulfe, we fell with the Southermoſt cape of the gulfe, which we named Chidleis cape, which lay in 61 degrees and 10 minutes of latitude. The 2 and 3 were calme and foggie, ſo were the 4, 5, and 6. The 7 was faire and calme: ſo was the 8, with a litle gale in the morning. The 9 was faire, and we had a litle gale at night. The 10 we had a friſking gale at Weſtnorthweſt. The 11 faire. The 12 we ſaw fiue deere on the top of an Iſland, called by vs Darcies Iſland. And we hoiſed out our boat, and went aſhore to them, thinking to haue killed ſome of them. But when we came on ſhore, and had courſed them twiſe about the Iſland, they tooke the ſea and ſwamme towards Iſlands diſtant from that three leagues. When we perceiued that they had taken the ſea we gaue them ouer becauſe our boat was ſo ſmall that it could not carrie vs, and rowe after them, they ſwamme ſo faſt: but one of them was as bigge as a good prety Cow, and very fat, their feet as bigge as Oxe feet. Here vpon this Iſland I killed with my piece a gray hare.

The 13 in the morning we ſaw three or foure white beares, but durſt not go on ſhore to them for lacke of a good boat. This day we ſtroke a rocke ſeeking for an harborow, and receiued a leake: and this day we were in 54 degrees of latitude.

The 14 we ſtopt our leake in a ſtorme not very outragious, at noone.

The fiſhing place betweene 54 and 55 degrees of latitude.

The 15 being almoſt in 52 degrees of latitude, and not finding our ſhips, nor (according to their promiſe) any kinde of marke, token, or beacon, which we willed them to ſet vp, and they proteſted to do ſo vpon euery head land, Iſland or cape, within twenty leagues euery way off from their fiſhing place, which our captaine appointed to be betweene 54 and 55 degrees: This 15 I ſay we ſhaped our courſe homewards for England, hauing in our ſhip but litle wood, and halfe a hogſhead of freſh water. Our men were very willing to depart, and no man more forward then Peerſon, for he feared to be put out of his office of ſtewardſhip: but becauſe euery man was ſo willing to depart, we conſented to returne for our owne countrey: and ſo we had the 16 faire weather, with the winde at Southweſt.

Abundance of whales in 52 degrees.

The 17 we met a ſhip at ſea, and as farre as we could iudge it was a Biſkaine: we thought ſhe went a fiſhing for whales; for in 52 degrees or thereabout we ſaw very many.

The 18 was faire, with a good gale at Weſt.

The 19 faire alſo, with much winde at Weſt and by South.

They arriue at Dartmouth the 15 of September.

And thus after much variable weather and change of winds we arriued the 15 of September in Dartmouth anno 1587, giuing thanks to God for our ſafe arriuall.

A letter of the ſayd M. Iohn Dauis written to M. Sanderſon of London concerning his forewritten voyage.

GOod M. Sanderſon, with Gods great mercy I haue made my ſafe returne in health, with all my company, and haue ſailed threeſcore leagues further then my determination at my departure. I haue bene in 73 degrees, finding the ſea all open, and forty leagues betweene land and land. The paſſage is moſt probable, the execution eaſie, as at my comming you ſhall fully know.

Yeſterday the 15 of September I landed all weary; therefore I pray you pardon my ſhortneſſe.

Sandridge this 16 of September anno 1587.

Yours equall as mine owne, which by triall you ſhall beſt know,

A report of Maſter Iohn Dauis of his three Voyages made for the diſcouery of the Northweſt paſſage, taken out of a Treatiſe of his, Intituled The worlds Hydrographicall deſcription.

NOw there onely reſteth the North parts of America, vpon which coaſt my ſelfe haue had moſt experience of any in our age: for thriſe I was that waye imployed for the diſcouery of this notable paſſage, by the honourable care and ſome charge of Syr Francis Walſingham kinght, principall ſecretary to her Maieſtie, with whom diuers noble men and worſhipfull marchants of London ioyned in purſe and willingneſſe for the furtherance of that attempt, but when his honour dyed the voyage was friendleſſe, and mens mindes alienated from aduenturing therein.

The 1. voyage.

In my firſt voyage not experienced of the nature of thoſe climates, and hauing no direction either by Chart, Globe, or other certaine relation in what altitude that paſſage was to be ſearched, I ſhaped a Northerly courſe and ſo ſought the ſame toward the South, and in that my Northerly courſe I fell vpon the ſhore which in ancient time was called Groenland, fiue hundred leagues diſtant from the Durſeys Weſtnorthweſt Northerly, the land being very high and full of mightie mountaines all couered with ſnow, no viewe of wood, graſſe or earth to be ſeene, and the ſhore two leagues off into the ſea ſo full of yce as that no ſhipping could by any meanes come neere the ſame. The lothſome view of the ſhore, and irkſome noyſe of the yce was ſuch, as that it bred ſtrange conceites among vs, ſo that we ſuppoſed the place to be waſt and voyd of any ſenſible or vegitable creatures, whereupon I called the ſame Deſolation: ſo coaſting this ſhore towards the South in the latitude of ſixtie degrees, I found it to trend towards the Weſt, I ſtill followed the leading thereof in the ſame height, and after fifty or ſixtie leagues it fayled and lay directly North, which I ſtill followed, and in thirtie leagues ſayling vpon the Weſt ſide of this coaſt by me named Deſolation, we were paſt al the yce and found many greene & pleaſant Iſles bordering vpon the ſhore, but the hils of the maine were ſtill couered with great quantities of ſnow, I brought my ſhip among thoſe Iſles and there mored to refreſh our ſelues in our weary trauell, in the latitude of ſixtie foure degrees or there about. The people of the countery hauing eſpyed our ſhippes came downe vnto vs in their Canoas, & holding vp their right hand to the Sunne and crying Yliaout, would ſtrike their breaſts: we doing the like the people came aboard our ſhippes, men of good ſtature, vnbearded, ſmall eyed and of tractable conditions, by whome as ſignes would permit, we vnderſtood that towards the North and Weſt there was a great ſea, and vſing the people with kindenes in giuing them nayles and kniues which of all things they moſt deſired, we departed, and finding the ſea free from yce ſuppoſing our ſelues to be paſt al daunger we ſhaped our courſe Weſtnorthweſt thinking thereby to paſſe for China, but in the latitude of ſixtie ſixe degrees we fell with another ſhore, and there found another paſſage of twenty leagues broad directly Weſt into the ſame, which we ſuppoſed to be our hoped ſtraight, we entered into the ſame thirty or fortie leagues, finding it neither to wyden nor ſtreighten, then conſidering that the yeere was ſpent (for this was the fine of Auguſt) not knowing the length of the ſtraight and dangers thereof, we tooke it our beſt courſe to returne with notice of our good ſucceſſe for this ſmall time of ſearch. And ſo returning in a ſharpe fret of Weſterly windes the 29. of September we arriued at Dartmouth. And acquainting maſter Secretary Walſingham with the reſt of the honourable and worſhipfull aduenturers of all our proceedings, I was appointed againe the ſecond yere to ſearch the bottome of this ſtraight, becauſe by all likelihood it was the place and paſſage by vs laboured for. In this ſecond attempt the marchants of Exeter, and other places of the Weſt became aduenturers in the action, ſo that being ſufficiently furniſhed for ſixe moneths, and hauing direction to ſearch theſe ſtraights, vntill we found the ſame to fall into another ſea vpon the Weſt ſide of this part of America, we ſhould againe returne: for then it was not to be doubted, but ſhipping with trade might ſafely be conueied to China and the parts of Aſia. We departed from Dartmouth, and ariuing vpon the South part of the coaſt of Deſolation coaſted the ſame vpon his Weſt ſhore to the latitude of ſixetie ſixe degrees, and there ancored among the Iſles bordering vpon the ſame, where we refreſhed our ſelues, the people of this place came likewiſe vnto vs, by whom I vnderſtood through their ſignes that towards the North the ſea was large. At this place the chiefe ſhip whereupon I truſted, called the Mermayd of Dartmouth, found many occaſions of diſcontentment, and being vnwilling to proceed, ſhee there forſook me. Then conſidering how I had giuen my faith and moſt conſtant promiſe to my worſhipfull good friend maſter William Sanderſon, who of all men was the greateſt aduenturer in that action, and tooke ſuch care for the performance thereof, that he hath to my knowledge at one time diſburſed as much money as any fiue others whatſoeuer out of his owne purſe, when ſome of the companie haue bene ſlacke in giuing in their aduenture: And alſo knowing that I ſhould looſe the fauor of M. Secretary Walſingham, if I ſhould ſhrink from his direction; in one ſmall barke of 30 Tunnes, whereof M. Sanderſon was owner, alone without farther company I proceeded on my voyage, and arriuing at theſe ſtraights followed the ſame 80 leagues, vntill I came among many Iſlands, where the water did ebbe and flow ſixe fadome vpright, and where there had bene great trade of people to make traine. But by ſuch things as there we found, wee knew that they were not Chriſtians of Europe that had vſed that trade: in fine by ſearching with our boat, we found ſmall hope to paſſe any farther that way, and therefore recouered the ſea and coaſted the ſhore towards the South, and in ſo doing (for it was too late to ſearch towards the North) we found another great inlet neere 40 leagues broad, where the water entred in with violent ſwiftneſſe, this we alſo thought might be a paſſage: for no doubt the North partes of America are all Iſlands by ought that I could perceiue therein: but becauſe I was alone in a ſmall barke of thirtie tunnes, and the yeere ſpent, I entred not into the ſame, for it was now the ſeuenth of September, but coaſting the ſhore towardes the South wee ſaw an incredible number of birds: hauing diuers fiſhermen aboord our barke they all concluded that there was a great ſkull of fiſh, we being vnprouided of fiſhing furniture with a long ſpike nayle made a hooke, and faſtened the ſame to one of our ſounding lines, before the baite was changed we tooke more then fortie great Cods, the fiſh ſwimming ſo abundantly thicke about our barke as is incredible to bee reported, of which with a ſmall portion of ſalt that we had, we preſerued ſome thirtie couple, or thereaboutes, and ſo returned for England. And hauing reported to M. Secretarie Walſingham the whole ſucceſſe of this attempt, he commanded me to preſent vnto the moſt honourable Lord high Treaſurour of England, ſome part of that fiſh: which when his Lordſhip ſaw, & heard at large the relation of this ſecond attempt, I receiued fauourable countenance from his honour, aduiſing me to proſecute the action, of which his Lordſhip conceiued a very good opinion. The next yere, although diuers of the aduenturers fell from the Action, as all the Weſterne marchants, and moſt of thoſe in London: yet ſome of the aduenturers both honorable & worſhipfull continued their willing fauor and charge, ſo that by this meanes the next yere two ſhippes were appointed for the fiſhing and one pinneſſe for the diſcouerie.

The North parts of America, all Iſlands.

The 3. voyage.

Departing from Darmouth, through Gods mercifull fauour, I arriued at the place of fiſhing, and there according to my direction I left the two ſhips to follow that buſines, taking their faithful promiſe not to depart vntill my returne vnto them, which ſhould be in the fine of Auguſt, and ſo in the barke I proceeded for the diſcouerie: but after my departure, in ſixteene dayes the two ſhippes had finiſhed their voyage, and ſo preſently departed for England, without regard of their promiſe: my ſelfe not diſtruſting any ſuch hard meaſure proceeded for the diſcouerie, and followed my courſe in the free and open ſea betweene North and Northweſt to the latitude of 67 degrees, and there I might ſee America Weſt from me, and Gronland, which I called Deſolation, Eaſt: then when I ſaw the land of both ſides I began to diſtruſt it would prooue but a gulfe: notwithſtanding deſirous to know the full certainty I proceeded, and in 68 degrees the paſſage enlarged, ſo that I could not ſee the Weſterne ſhore: thus I continued to the latitude of 73 degrees, in a great ſea, free from yce, coaſting the Weſterne ſhore of Deſolation: the people came continually rowing out vnto me in their Canoas, twenty, forty, and one hundred at a time, and would giue me fiſhes dryed, Salmon, Salmon peale, Cod, Caplin, Lumpe, Stone-baſe and ſuch like, beſides diuers kinds of birds, as Partrige, Feſant, Guls, Sea birds and other kindes of fleſh: I ſtill laboured by ſignes to know from them what they knew of any ſea toward the North, they ſtill made ſinges of a great ſea as we vnderſtood them, thē I departed from that coaſt, thinking to diſcouer the North parts of America: & after I had ſailed towards the Weſt 40 leagues, I fel vpon a great banke of yce: the winde being North and blew much, I was conſtrained to coaſt the ſame toward the South, not ſeeing any ſhore Weſt from me, neither was there any yce towards the North, but a great ſea, free, large very ſalt and blew, & of an vnſearcheable depth: So coaſting towards the South I came to the place where I left the ſhips to fiſh, but found them not. Then being forſaken & left in this diſtreſſe referring my ſelf to the mercifull prouidence of God, I ſhaped my courſe for England, & vnhoped for of any, God alone releeuing me, I arriued at Dartmouth. By this laſt diſcouery it ſeemed moſt manifeſt that the paſſage was free & without impediment toward the North: but by reaſon of the Spaniſh fleet & vnfortunate time of M. Secretaries death, the voyage was omitted & neuer ſithens attempted. The cauſe why I vſe this particluar relation of all my proceedings for this diſcouery, is to ſtay this obiection, why hath not Dauis diſcouered this paſſage being thriſe that wayes imploied? How far I proceeded & in what forme this diſcouery lieth, doth appeare vpon the Globe which M. Sanderſon to his very great charge hath publiſhed, for the which he deſerueth great fauor & commendations.

The

The diſcouerie of the Iſles of Friſland, Iſeland, Engroneland, Eſtotilaud, Drogeo and Icaria: made by two brethren, namely M. Nicholas Zeno, and M. Antonio his brother: Gathered out of their letters by M. Franciſco Marcolino.

IN the yere of our Lord 1200 there was in the Citie of Venice a famous Gentleman, named Meſſer Marino Zeno, who for his great vertue and ſingular wiſedome, was called and elected gouernour in certaine common wealths of Italy: in the adminiſtration whereof he bore himſelfe ſo diſcretly, that he was beloued of all men, and his name greatly reuerenced of thoſe that neuer knew or ſaw his perſon. And amongſt ſundry his worthy workes, this is recorded of him, that he pacified certaine grieuous ciuile diſſentions that aroſe among the citizens of Verona: whereas otherwiſe, if by his graue aduiſe and great diligence they had not bene preuented, the matter was likely to breake out into hot broyles of warre. He was the firſt Podeſta, or Ruler, that the Common wealth of Venice appointed in Conſtantinople in the yeere 1205 when our ſtate had rule thereof with the French Barons. This Gentleman had a ſonne named Meſſer Pietro, who was the father of the Duke Rinieri, which Duke dying without iſſue, made his heire M. Andrea, the ſonne of M. Marco his brother. This M. Andrea was Captaine Generall and Procurator, a man of great reputation for many rare partes, that were in him. He had a ſonne M. Rinieri, a worthy Senatour and prudent Counſellour: of whom deſcended M. Pietro Captaine Generall of the league of the Chriſtians againſt the Turkes, who was called Dragon, for that in his ſhield, in ſtead of a Manfrone which was his armes at the firſt, he bare a Dragon. He was father to M. Carlo Il grande the famous Procurator and Captaine generall againſt the Genowayes in thoſe cruell warres, when as almoſt all the cheife Princes of Europe did oppugne and ſecke to ouerthrow our Empire and libertie, wherein by his great valiancie and proweſſe, as Furius Camillus deliuered Rome, ſo he deliuered his country from the preſent perill it was in, being ready to become a pray and ſpoile vnto the enemie: wherefore he was afterward ſurnamed the Lyon, and for an eternall remembrance of his fortitude and valiant exploits he gaue the Lyon in his armes. M. Carlo had two brethren, M. Nicolo, the knight and M. Antonio, the father of M. Dragon, of whom iſſued M. Caterino, the father M. Pietro da i Crocecchieri. This M. Pietro had ſonnes M. Caterino, that died the laſt yere, being brother vnto M. Franciſco, M. Carlo, M. Battiſta, and M. Vincenzo: Which M. Caterino was father to M. Nicolo, that is yet liuing.

Now M. Nicolo, the knight, being a man of great courage, after this aforeſaid Genouan warre of Chioggia that troubled ſo our predeceſſours, entred into a great deſire and fanſie to ſee the faſhions of the worlde and to trauell and acquaint himſelfe with the maners of ſundry nations and learne their languages, whereby afterwards vpon occaſions he might be the better able to doe ſeruice to his countrey, and purchaſe to himſelfe credite and honour. Wherefore he cauſed a ſhip to be made, and hauing furniſhed her at his proper charges (as he was very wealthy) he departed out of our ſeas and paſſing the ſtraites of Gibraltar, he ſailed for certaine dayes vpon the Ocean, keeping his courſe ſtill to the Northwards, with intent to ſee England and Flanders. Where being aſſalted in thoſe Seas by a terrible tempeſt, he was ſo toſſed for the ſpace of many dayes with the ſea and winde, that he knew not where he was, till at length he diſcouered land, and not being able any longer to ſuſteine the violence of the tempeſt the ſhip was caſt away vpon the Iſle of Friſeland. The men were ſaued, and moſt part of the goods that were in the ſhip. And this was in the yere 1380. The inhabitants of the Iſland came running in great multitudes with weapons to ſet vpon M. Nicolo and his men, who being ſore weather-beaten and ouer-laboured at ſea, and not knowing in what part of the world they were, were not able to make any reſiſtance at all, much leſſe to defend themſelues couragiouſly, as it behooued them in ſuch a dangerons caſe. And they ſhould haue bene doubtleſſe very diſcourteouſly intreated and cruelly handled, if by good hap there had not beene hard by the place a prince with armed people. Who vnderſtanding that there was euen at that preſent a great ſhip caſt away vpon the Iſland, came runing at the noyſe and outcryes that they made againſt our poore Mariners, and driuing away the inhabitants, ſpake in Latine and aſked them what they were and from whence they came, and perceiuing that they came from Italy and that they were men of the ſaid Countrey, he was ſurpriſed with maruelous great ioy. Wherefore promiſing them all, that they ſhould receiue no diſcourteſie, and that they were come into a place where they ſhould be well vſed and very welcome, he tooke them into his protection vpon his faith. This was a great Lord, and poſſeſſed certaine Iſlands called Porland, lying on the South ſide of Friſland, being the richeſt and moſt populous of all thoſe parts, his name was Zichmni: and beſide the ſaid little Iſlands, he was Duke of Sorani, lying ouer againſt Scotland.

The ſhip of M.N. Zeno caſt away vpon Friſland in Anno 1380.

A forraine prince happening to be in Friſland with armed men, when M. Zeno ſuffered ſhipwracke there came vnto him and ſpake Latine.

Zichmni prince of Porland or Duke of Zorani.

Of theſe North parts I thought good to draw the copie of a Sea carde, which amongſt other antiquities I haue in my houſe, which although it be rotten through many yeeres, yet it falleth out indifferent well: and to thoſe that are delighted in theſe things, it may ſerue for ſome light to the vnderſtanding of that, which without it cannot ſo eaſily be conceiued. Zichmni being Lord of thoſe Sygnories (as is ſaid) was a very warlike and valiant man and aboue all things famous in Sea cauſes. And hauing the yere before giuen the ouerthrow to the king of Norway, who was Lord of the Iſland, being deſirous to winne fame by feates of armes, hee was come on land with his men to giue the attempt for the winning of Friſland, which is an Iſland much bigger then Ireland. Wherefore ſeeing that M. Nicolo was a man of iudgement & diſcretion, and very expert both in ſea matters and martiall affaires, hee gaue him commiſſion to goe aboord his Nauy with all his men, charging the captaine to honour him and in all things to vſe his counſaile.

Friſland the king of Norwayes.

This Nauy of Zichmni was of thirteene veſſels, whereof two onely were rowed with oares, the reſt ſmall barkes and one ſhip, with the which they ſayled to the Weſtwards and with little paines wonne Ledouo and Ilofe and diuers other ſmall Iſlands: and turning into a bay called Sudero, in the hauen of the towne named Saneſtol, they tooke certaine ſmall barks laden with fiſh. And here they found Zichmni, who came by land with his armie conquering all the countrey as he went: they ſtayed here but a while, and led on their courſe to the Weſtwards till they came to the other Cape of the gulfe or bay, then turning againe, they found certaine Iſlandes and broken lands which they reduced al vnto the Signorie & poſſeſſion of Zichmni. Theſe ſeas, for as much as they ſailed, were in maner nothing but ſholds & rocks, in ſo much that if M. Nicolo and the Venetian mariners had not bene their Pilots, the whole fleete in iudgement of all that were in it, had bene caſt away, ſo ſmall was the ſkill of Zichmnis men, in reſpect of ours, who had bene trained vp in the arte and practiſe of Nauigation all the dayes of their life. Now the fleete hauing done ſuch things as are declared, the Captaine, by the counſaile of M. Nicolo, determined to goe a land, at a towne called Bondendon, to vnderſtand what ſucceſſe Zichmni had in his warres: where they heard to their great content, that he had fought a great battell and put to flight the armie of his enemie: by reaſon of which victory, they ſent Embaſſadours from all parts of the Iſland to yeeld the countrey vp into his handes, taking downe their enſignes in euery towne and caſtle: they thought good to ſtay in that place for his comming, it being reported for certaine that hee would be there very ſhortly. At his comming there was great congratulation and many ſignes of gladneſſe ſhewed, as well for the victory by land, as for that by ſea: for the which the Venetians were honoured and extolled of all men, in ſuch ſort that there was no talke but of them, and of the great valour of M. Nicolo. Wherefore the prince, who was a great fauourer of valiant men and eſpecially of thoſe that could behaue themſelues well at ſea, cauſed M. Nicolo to be brought before him, and after hauing commended him with many honourable ſpeeches, and prayſed his great induſtrie and dexteritie of wit, by the which two things he acknowledged himſelfe to haue receiued an ineſtimable benefite, as the ſauing of his fleet and the winning of many places without any great trouble, he made him knight, and rewarded his men with many rich & bountiful gifts. Then departing from thence they went in tryumphing maner toward Friſland, the chiefe citie of that Iſland, ſituate on the Southeaſt ſide of the Iſle, within a gulfe, as there are many in that Iſland. In this gulf or bay there is ſuch great abundance of fiſh taken, that many ſhips are laden therewith to ſerue Flanders, Britain, England, Scotland, Norway, and Denmarke, and by this trade they gather great wealth.

N. Zeno, made knight by Zichmni.

Ships laden with fiſh at Friſland, for Flanders, Britain, England, Scotland, Norway and Denmarke. But not to be proued that euer any came thence.

And thus much is taken out of a letter, that M. Nicolo ſent to M. Antonio his brother, requeſting that he would ſeeke ſome meanes to come to him. Wherefore he who had as great deſire to trauaile as his brother, bought a ſhip, and directed his courſe that way: & after he had ſailed a great while and eſcaped many dangers, he arriued at length in ſafetie with M. Nicolo, who receiued him very ioyfully, for that he was his brother not onely in fleſh and blood, but alſo in valour and good qualities. M. Antonio remained in Friſland and dwelt there for the ſpace of 14 yeres, 4 yeres with M. Nicolo, and 10 yeres alone. Where they came in ſuch grace and fauour with the Prince, that he made M. Nicolo Captaine of his Nauy, and with great preparation of warre they were ſent forth for the enterpriſe of Eſtland, which lyeth vpon the coaſt betweene Friſland and Norway, where they did many dammages: but hearing that the king of Norway was coming towardes them with a great fleet, they departed with ſuch a terrible flaw of winde, that they were driuen vpon certaine ſholds: were a great part of their ſhips were caſt away, the reſt were ſaued vpon Griſland, a great Iſland but diſhabited. The king of Norway his fleete being taken with the ſame ſtorme, did vtterly periſh in thoſe ſeas: Whereof Zichmni hauing notice, by a ſhip of his enemies that was caſt by chance vpon Griſland, hauing repayred his fleet, and perceiuing himſelf Northerly neere vnto the Iſlands, determined to ſet vpon Iſland, which together with the reſt, was ſubiect to the king of Norway: but he found the countrey ſo well fortified and defended, that his fleete being ſo ſmall, and very ill appointed both of weapons and men, he was glad to retire. And ſo he left that enterpriſe without performing any thing at all: and in the ſame chanels he aſſaulted the other Iſles called Iſlande, which are ſeuen, Talas, Broas, Iſcant, Trans, Mimant, Dambere, and Bres: and hauing ſpoyled them all, hee built a fort in Bres, where he left M. Nicolo, with certaine ſmall barkes and men and munition. And now thinking he had done wel for this voyage, with thoſe few ſhips which were left he returned ſafe into Friſland. M. Nicolo remaining nowe in Bres, determined in the ſpring to go forth and diſcouer land: wherefore arming out three ſmall barkes in the moneth of Iuly, he ſayled to the Northwards, and arriued in Engroneland. Where he found a Monaſterie of Friers, of the order of the Predicators, and a Church dedicated to Saint Thomas, hard by a hill that caſteth forth fire, like Veſuuius and Etna.

Engroneland. Preaching Fryers of Saint Thomas.

There is a fountaine of hot burning water with the which they heate the Church of the Monaſtery and the Fryers chambers, it commeth alſo into the kitchin ſo boyling hot, that they vſe no other fire to dreſſe their meate: and putting their breade into braſſe pots without any water, it doth bake as it were in an hot ouen. They haue alſo ſmal gardens couered ouer in the winter time, which being watered with this water, are defended from the force of the ſnow and colde, which in thoſe partes being ſituate farre vnder the pole, is very extreme, and by this meanes they produce flowers and fruites and herbes of ſundry ſorts, euen as in other temperate countries in their ſeaſons, in ſuch ſort that the rude and ſauage people of thoſe partes ſeeing theſe ſupernaturall effects, doe take thoſe Fryers for Gods, and bring them many preſents, as chickens, fleſh, and diuers other things, and haue them all in great reuerence as Lords. When the froſt and ſnowe is great, they heate their houſes in maner beforeſaid, and wil by letting in the water or opening the windowes, at an inſtant temper the heate and cold at their pleaſure. In the buildings of the Monaſterie they vſe no other matter but that which is miniſtred vnto them by the fire: for they take the burning ſtones that are caſt out as it were ſparkles or cinders at the fierie mouth of the hill, and when they are moſt enflamed, caſt water vpon them, whereby they are diſſolued and become excellent white lime and ſo tough that being contriued in building it laſteth for euer. And the very ſparkles after the fire is out of them doe ſerue in ſtead of ſtones to make walles and vautes: for being once colde they wil neuer diſſolue or breake, except they be cut with ſome iron toole, and the vautes that are made of them are ſo light that they need no ſuſtentacle or prop to holde them vp, and they will endure continually very faire and whole. By reaſon of theſe great commodities, the Fryers haue made there ſo many buildings and walles that it is a wonder to ſee. The couerts or rooſes of their houſes for the moſt part are made in maner following: firſt they rayſe vp the wall vp to his full height, then they make it enclining or bowing in by little and litle in fourme of a vaut. But they are not greatly troubled with raine in thoſe partes, becauſe the climate (as I haue ſaide) is extreme colde: for the firſt ſnow being fallen, it thaweth no more for the ſpace of nine moneths, for ſo long dureth their winter. They feede of the fleſh of wilde foule and of fiſh: for wheras the warme water falleth into the ſea, there is a large and wide hauen, which by reaſon of the heate of the water, doeth neuer freeze all the winter, by meanes whereof there is ſuch concourſe and flocks of ſea foule and ſuch aboundance of fiſh, that they take thereof infinite multitudes, wherby they maintaine a great number of people round about, which they kepe in continuall worke, both in building and taking of foules and fiſh, and in a thouſand other neceſſarie affaires and buſines about the Monaſterie.

Winter of 9. moneths.

Their houſes are built about the hill on euery ſide, in forme round, and 25 foote broad, and in mounting vpwards they goe narower and narower, leauing at the top a litle hole, whereat the aire commeth in to giue light to the houſe, and the flore of the houſe is ſo hot, that being within they feele no cold at all. Hither in the Summer time come many barkes from the Iſlands their about, and from the cape aboue Norway, and from Trondon, and bring to the Friers al maner of things that may be deſired, taking in change thereof fiſh, which they dry in the ſunne or in the cold, & ſkins of diuers kindes of beaſts. For the which they haue wood to burne and timber very artificially carued, and corne, and cloth to make them apparell. For in change of the two aforeſaid commodities all the nations bordering round about them couet to trafficke with them, and ſo they without any trauell or expences haue that which they deſire. To this Monaſterie reſort Fryers of Norway, of Suetia and of other countreys, but the moſt part are of Iſlande. There are continually in that part many barks, which are kept in there by reaſon of the ſea being frozen, waiting for the ſpring of the yere to diſſolue the yce. The fiſhers boates are made like vnto a weauers ſhuttle: taking the ſkins of fiſhes, they faſhion them with the bones of the ſame fiſhes, and ſowing them together in many doubles they make them ſo ſure and ſubſtanciall, that it is miraculous to ſee, howe in tempeſts they will ſhut themſelues cloſe within and let the ſea and winde cary them they care not whether, ther without any feare either of breaking or drowning. And if they chance to be driuen vpon any rocks, they remaine ſound without the leaſt bruſe in the world: & they haue as it were a ſleeue in the bottome, which is tyed faſt in the middle, and when there commeth any water into the boat, they put it into the one halfe of the ſleeue, then faſtening the ende thereof with two pieces of wood and looſing the band beneath, they conuey the water forth of the boat: and this they doe as often as they haue occaſion, without any perill or impediment at all.

Trade in ſummer time from Trondon to S. Thomas Friers in Groneland.

Reſort of Fryers from Norway and Sueden, to the Monaſtery in Engroneland, called S. Tho.

M. Frobiſher brought theſe kinde of boates from theſe parts into England.

Moreouer, the water of the Monaſtery, being of ſulphurious or brimſtonie nature, is conueyed into the lodgings of the principall Friers by certaine veſſelles of braſſe, tinne, or ſtone, ſo hot that it heateth the place as it were a ſtoue, not carying with it any ſtinke or other noyſome ſmell.

Beſides this they haue another conueyance to bring hot water with a wall vnder the ground, to the end it ſhould not freeze, vnto the middle of the court, where it falleth into a great veſſel of braſſe that ſtandeth in the middle of a boyling fountaine, and this is to heat their water to drinke & to water their gardens, & thus they haue from the hill the greateſt commodities that may be wiſhed: and ſo theſe Fryers employ al their trauaile and ſtudie for the moſt part in trimming their gardens and in making faire and beautifull buildings, but eſpecially handſome and commodious: neyther are they deſtitute of ingenious and painefull artificers for the purpoſe; for they giue very large payment, and to them that bring them fruits and ſeedes they are very bountifull, and giue they care not what. So that there is great reſort of workemen and maſters in diuers faculties, by reaſon of the good gaines and large allowance that is there.

In the Monaſtery of Saint Thomas moſt of them ſpake the Latine tongue. The end of the 2. letter.

The moſt of them ſpeake the Latine tongue, and ſpecially the ſuperiours and principals of the Monaſtery. And this is as much as is knowen of Engroneland, which is all by the relation of M. Nicolo, who maketh alſo particular deſcription of a riuer that he diſcouered, as is to be ſeene in the carde that I drew. And in the end M. Nicolo, not being vſed & acquainted with theſe cruell coldes, fel ſicke, and a litle while after returned into Friſland, where he dyed. He left behind him in Venice, two ſonnes, M. Giouanni and M. Toma, who had two ſonnes, M. Nicolo the father of the famous Cardinal Zeno, and M. Pietro of whom deſcended the other Zenos, that are liuing at this day.

N. Zeno dyed in Friſland.

Now M. Nicolo being dead. M. Antonio ſucceeded him both in his goods, and in his dignities and honour: and albeit he attempted diuers wayes, and made great ſupplication, he could neuer obtaine licence to returne into his countrey. For Zichmni, being a man of great courage and valour, had determined to make himſelf Lord of the ſea. Wherfore vſing alwayes the counſaile and ſeruice of M. Antonio, he determined to ſend him with certaine barks to the Weſtwards, for that towards thoſe parts, ſome of his fiſhermen had diſcouered certaine Iſlands very rich and populous: which diſcouery M. Antonio, in a letter to his brother M. Carlo, recounteth from point to point in this maner, ſauing that we haue changed ſome old words, leauing the matter entire as it was.

Sixe and twentie yeeres agoe there departed foure fiſher boats, the which, a mightie tempeſt ariſing, were toſſed for the ſpace of many dayes very deſperately vpon the Sea, when at length, the tempeſt ceaſing, and the wether waxing faire, they diſcouered an Iſland called Eſtotiland, lying to the Weſtwards aboue 1000 Miles from Friſland, vpon the which one of the boats was caſt away, and ſixe men that were in it were taken of the inhabitants and brought into a faire and populous citie, where the king of the place ſent for many interpreters, but there was none could be found that vnderſtood the language of the fiſhermen, except one that ſpake Latine, who was alſo caſt by chance vpon the ſame Iſland, who in the behalfe of the king asked them what countreymen they were: and ſo vnderſtanding their caſe, rehearſed it vnto the king, who willed that they ſhould tary in the countrey: wherefore they obeying his commandement, for that they could not otherwiſe doe, dwelt fiue yeres in the Iſland, & learned the language, and one of them was in diuers partes of the Iſland, and reporteths that it is a very rich countrey, abounding with all the commodities of the world, and that it is litle leſſe then Iſland, but farre more fruitfull, hauing in the middle thereof a very high mountaine, from the which there ſpring foure riuers that paſſe through the whole countrey.

Fiſhermen of Friſland ſpeake Latine.

Sixe were fiue yeeres in Eſtotiland.

One of the fiſhers of Friſland, reporteth of Eſtotiland.

The inhabitants are very wittie people, and haue all artes and faculties, as we haue: and it is credible that in time paſt they haue had trafficke with our men, for he ſaid, that he ſaw Latin bookes in the kings Librarie, which they at this preſent do not vnderſtand: they haue a peculiar language, and letters or caracters to themſelues. They haue mines of all maner of mettals, but eſpecial they abound with gold. They haue their trade in Engroneland, from whence they bring furres, brimſtone & pitch: and he ſaith, that to the Southwards, there is a great populous countrey very rich of gold. They ſow corne, and make beere and ale, which is a kinde of drinke that North people do vſe as we do wine. They haue mighty great woods, they make their buildings with wals, & there are many cities and caſtles. They build ſmall barks and haue ſayling, but they haue not the load ſtone, nor know not the vſe of the compaſſe. Wherefore theſe fiſhers were had in great eſtimation, inſomuch that the king ſent them with twelue barks to the Southwards to a countrey which they call Drogio: but in their voyage they had ſuch contrary weather, that they thought to haue periſhed in the ſea: but eſcaping that cruell death, they fell into another more cruell: for they were taken in the countrey and the moſt part of them eaten by the Sauage people, which fed vpon mans fleſh, as the ſweeteſt meat in their iudgements that is.

A countrey called Dorgio.

But that fiſher with his fellowes ſhewing them the maner of taking fiſh with nets, ſaued their liues: and would goe euery day a fiſhing to the ſea and in freſh riuers, and take great abundance of fiſh and giue it to the chiefe men of the countrey, whereby he gate himſelfe ſo great fauour, that he was very well beloued and honoured of euery one.

The 6 fiſhermen of Friſland onely ſaued, by ſhewing the maner to take fiſh.

The fame of this man being ſpread abroad in the countrey, there was a Lord there by, that was very deſirous to haue him with him, and to ſee how he vſed his miraculous arte of catching fiſh, in ſo much that he made warre with the other Lord with whom he was before, and in the end preuailing, for that he was more mightie and a better warriour, the fiſherman was ſent vnto him with the reſt of his company. And for the ſpace of thirteene yeres that he dwelt in thoſe parts, he ſaith, that he was ſent in this order to more then 25 Lords, for they had continuall war amongſt themſelues, this Lord with that Lord, and he with another, onely to haue him to dwell with them: ſo that wandring vp and downe the countrey without any certaine abode in one place, he knew almoſt all thoſe parts. He ſaith, that it is a very great countrey & as it were a new world: the people are very rude and voide of all goodneſſe, they goe all naked ſo that they are miſerably vexed with colde, neither haue they the wit to couer their bodyes with beaſts ſkins which they take in hunting, they haue no kinde of mettal, they liue by hunting, they cary certaine lances of wood made ſharpe at the point, they haue bowes, yͤ ſtrings wherof are made of beaſts ſkins: they are very fierce people, they make cruell warres one with another, and eate one another, they haue gouernours & certaine lawes very diuers among themſelues. But the farther to the Southweſtwards, the more ciuiltie there is, the ayre being ſomewhat temperate, ſo that there they haue cities and temples to idols, wherein they ſacrifice men and afterwards eate them, they haue there ſome knowledge and vſe of gold and ſiluer.

The chiefeſt of the 6 fiſhers, ſpecified before and his companions.

In the ſpace of 13 yeeres he ſerued 25 lords of Drogio.

Now this fiſherman hauing dwelt ſo many yeeres in thoſe countreys purpoſed, if it were poſſible, to returne home into his countrey, but his companions deſpairing euer to ſee it againe, let him goe in Gods name, and they kept themſelues where they were. Wherefore he bidding them farewell, fled through the woods towards Drogio, and was very well receiued of the Lord that dwelt next to that place; who knew him and was a great enemie of the other Lord: and ſo running from from one Lord to another, being thoſe by whom he had paſſed before, after long time & many trauels he came at length to Drogio, where he dwelt three yeres. When as by good fortune he heard by the inhabitants, that there were certaine boates arriued vpon the coaſt; wherefore entring into good hope to accompliſh his intent, he went to the ſea ſide, and aſking them of what countrey they were; they anſwered of Eſtotiland, whereat he was exceeding glad, and requeſted that they would take him in to them, which they did very willingly, and for that he had the language of the countrey, and there was none that could ſpeake it, they vſed him for their interpreter.

And afterward he frequented that trade with them in ſuch ſort, that he became very rich, and ſo furniſhing out a barke of his owne, he returned into Friſlande, where he made report vnto this Lord of that wealthy countrey.

He returned from Eſtotiland to Friſland.

And he is throughly credited becauſe of the mariners, who approue many ſtrange things, that he reporteth to be true. Wherfore this Lord is reſolued to ſend me forth with a fleet towards thoſe parts, and there are ſo many that deſire to go in the voyage, for the noueltie and ſtrangeneſſe of the thing, that I thinke we ſhall be very ſtrongly appointed, without any publike expence at all. And this is the tenor of the letter before mentioned, which I haue here ſet downe to giue intelligence of another voyage that M. Antonio made, being ſet out with many barkes, and men, notwithſtanding he was not captaine, as he had thought at the firſt he ſhould: for Zichmni went in his owne perſon: and concerning that matter I haue a letter in forme following.

Zichmni minded to ſend M. Antonio Zeno, with a fleete towards thoſe parts of Eſtotiland.

One great preparation for the voyage of Eſtotiland was begun in an vnlucky houre: for three dayes before our departure the fiſherman died that ſhould haue bene our guide: notwithſtanding this Lord would not giue ouer the enterprize, but inſtead of the fiſherman tooke certaine mariners that returned out of the Iſland with him: and ſo making our Nauigation to the Weſtwards, we diſcouered certaine Iſlands ſubiect to Friſland, and hauing paſſed certaine ſhelues we ſtayed at Ledouo for the ſpace of 7 daies to refreſh our ſelues, and to furniſh the fleet with neceſſarie prouiſion. Departing from thence we arriued the firſt of Iuly at the Iſle of Iloſe: and for that the wind made for vs, we ſtayed not there, but paſſed forth, and being vpon the maine ſea, there aroſe immediatly a cruel tempeſt, wherwith for eight dayes ſpace we were miſerably vexed, not knowing where we were, & a great part of the barks were caſt away, afterward the weather waxing faire, we gathered vp the broken peices of the barks that were loſt, and ſayling with a proſperous winde we diſcouered land at Weſt. Wherefore keeping our courſe directly vpon it, we arriued in a good and ſafe harborough, where we ſaw an infinit companie of people ready in armes, come running very furiouſly to the water ſide, as it were for defence of the Iſland.

Zichmni his diſcouerie of the Iſland Icaria.

Wherfore Zichmni cauſing his men to make ſignes of peace vnto them, they ſent 10 men vnto vs that could ſpeake ten languages, but we could vnderſtand none of them, except one that was of Iſland.

An Iſland man in Icaria.

He being brought before our prince and aſked, what was the name of the Iſland, and what people inhabited it, & who gouerned it, anſwered, that the Iſland was called Icaria, and that all the kings that reigned there, were called Icari, after the name of the firſt king of that place, which as they ſay was the ſonne of Dedalus king of Scotland, who conquered that Iſland, left his ſonne there for king, and left them thoſe lawes that they retaine to this preſent, and after this, he deſiring to ſayle further, in a great tempeſt that aroſe, was drowned, wherefore for a memoriall of his death, they call thoſe ſeas yet, the Icarian Sea, and the and the kings of the Iſland Icari, and for that they were contented with that ſtate, which God had giuen them, neither would they alter one iote of their lawes and cuſtomes, they would not receiue any ſtranger: wherefore they requeſted our prince, that hee would not ſeeke to violate their lawes, which they had receiued from that king of worthy memory and obſerued very duly to that preſent: which if he did attempt, it would redound to his manifeſt deſtruction, they being all reſolutely bent rather to leaue their life, then to looſe in any reſpect the vſe of their lawes.

The kings of of Icaria called Icari after the name of the firſt king of that place, who as they report, was ſonne to Dedalus king of Scots.

Icarian Sea.

Notwithſtanding, that we ſhould not thinke they did altogether refuſe conuerſation and traffick with other men, they tolde vs for concluſion that they would willingly receiue one of our men, & preferre him to be one of the chiefe amongſt them, onely to learne my language the Italian tongue, and to be informed of our manners and cuſtomes, as they had already receiued thoſe other ten of ten ſundry nations, that came into their Iſland.

The people of Icaria deſirous of the Italian tongue.

Ten men of ten ſundry nations.

To theſe things our Prince anſwered nothing at all, but cauſing his men to ſeke ſome good harbrough, he made ſignes as though he would depart, and ſayling round about the Iſland, he eſpied at length a harbrough on the Eaſt ſide of the Iſland, where hee put in with all his Fleet: the mariners went on land to take in wood and water, which they did with as great ſpeede as they could, doubting leaſt they ſhould be aſſaulted by the inhabitants, as it fell out in deed, for thoſe that dwelt therabouts, making ſignes vnto the other with fire and ſmoke, put themſelues preſently in armes and the other comming to them, they came all running downe to the ſea ſide vpon our men, with bowes and arrowes, and other weapons, ſo that many were ſlaine and diuers ſore wounded.

Infinite multitudes of armed men in Icaria.

And we made ſignes of peace vnto them, but it was to no purpoſe, for their rage increaſed more and more, as though they had fought for land and liuing. Wherefore we were forced to depart, and to ſayle along in a great circuite about the Iſlande, being alwayes accompanyed vpon the hil tops & the ſea coaſts with an infinite number of armed men: and ſo doubling the Cape of the Iſland towards the North, we found many great ſholdes, amongſt the which for the ſpace of ten dayes we were in continuall danger of looſing our whole fleet, but that it pleaſed God all that while to ſend vs faire weather.

Zichmni departed from Icaria Weſtwards.

Wherefore proceeding on till we came to the Eaſt cape, we ſaw the inhabitants ſtill on the hill tops and by the ſea coaſt keepe with vs, and in making great outcryes and ſhooting at vs a faire off, they vttered their old ſpitefull affection towards vs. Wherefore wee determined to ſtay in ſome ſafe harborough, and ſee if wee might ſpeake once againe with the Iſlander, but our determination was fruſtrate: for the people more like vnto beaſts then men, ſtood continually in armes with intent to beat vs back, if we ſhould come come on land. Wherefore Zichmni ſeeing he could not preuaile, and thinking if he ſhould haue perſeuered and followed obſtinately his purpoſe, their victuals would haue failed them, he departed with a faire wind and ſailed ſixe daies to the Weſtwards, but the winde changing to the Southweſt, and the ſea waxing rough, wee ſayling 4 dayes with the wind the powp, and at length diſcouering land, were afraid to approch nere vnto it, the ſea being growen, and we not knowing what land it was: but God ſo prouided for vs, that the winde ceaſing there came a great calme. Wherefore ſome of our company rowing to land with oares, returned & brought vs newes to our great comfort, that they had found a very good countery and a better harborough: vpon which newes we towed our ſhips and ſmal barks to land, and being entred into the harborough, we ſaw a farre off a great mountain, that caſt forth ſmoke, which gaue vs good hope that we ſhould finde ſome inhabitants in the Iſland, neither would Zichmni reſt, although it were a great way off, but ſent 100 ſouldiers to ſearch the countrey and bring report what people they were that inhabited it, & in the meane time they tooke in wood and water for the prouiſion of the fleet, and catcht great ſtore of fiſh and ſea foule and found ſuch aboundance of birds egges, that our men that were halfe famiſhed, were filled therewithall. Whiles we were riding here, began the moneth of Iune, at which time the aire in the Iſland was ſo temperate and pleaſant as is impoſſible to expreſſe: but when we could ſee no people at al, we ſuſpected greatly that this pleaſant place was deſolate and diſhabited. We gaue name to the heauen calling it Trin, and the point that ſtretched out into the ſea, we called Capo de Trin. The 100 ſouldiers that were ſent forth, 8 dayes after returned, and brought word that they had bene through the Iſland and at the mountaine, and that the ſmoke was a naturall thing proceeding from a great fire that was in the bottome of the hill, and that there was a ſpring from which iſſued a certaine water like pitch which ran into the ſea, and that thereabouts dwelt great multitudes of people halfe wilde, hiding themſelues in caues of the ground, of ſmall ſtature, and very fearefull; for as ſoone as they ſaw them they fled into their holes, and that there was a great riuer and a very good and ſafe harborough. Zichmni being thus informed, and ſeeing that it had a holeſome and pure aire, and a very fruitfull ſoyle and faire riuers, with ſundry commodities, fell into ſuch liking of the place, that he determined to inhabite it, and built there a citie. But his people being weary and faint with long and tedious trauell began to murmure, ſaying that they would returne into their countrey, for that the winter was at hand, and if they entred into the harborough, they ſhould not be able to come out againe before the next Summer. Wherefore he retaining onely the barks with Oares and ſuch as were willing to ſtay with him, ſent all the reſt with the ſhippes backe againe, and willed that I, (though vnwilling) ſhould be their captaine. I therefore departing, becauſe I could not otherwiſe chuſe, ſayled for the ſpace of twenty dayes to the Eaſtwards without ſight of any land; then turning my courſe towards the Southeaſt, in 5. dayes I diſcouered land, and found my ſelfe vpon the Iſle of Neome, and knowing the countrey, I perceiued I was paſt Iſland: wherefore taking in ſome freſh victuals of the inhabitants being ſubiect to Zichmni, I ſayled with a faire winde in three dayes to Friſland, where the people, who thought they had loſt their prince, becauſe of his long abſence, in this our voyage receiued vs very ioyfully.

The 100 ſouldiers returned which had bene through the Iſland, report what they ſaw and found.

M. Antonio Zeno, made chiefe captaine of thoſe ſhips which went back to Friſland.

What followed after this letter I know not but by coniecture, which I gather out of a piece of another letter, which I will ſet downe here vnderneath: That Zichmni built a towne in the port of the Iſland that he diſcouered, and that he ſearched the countrey very diligently and diſcouered it all, and alſo the riuers on both ſides of Engroneland, for that I ſee it particulary deſcribed in the ſea card, but the diſcourſe or narration is loſt. The beginning of the letter is thus.

The 5 letter.

Concerning thoſe things that you deſire to know of me, as of the men and their maners and cuſtomes, of the beaſts, and of the countries adioyning, I haue made therof a particuler booke, which by Gods help I will bring with me: wherein I haue deſcribed the countrey, the monſtrous fiſhes, the cuſtomes and lawes of Friſland, Iſland, Eſtland, the kingdome of Norway, Eſtotiland, Drogio, and in the end the life of M. Nicolo, the knight our brother, with the diſcouery which he made, and the ſtate of Groneland. I haue alſo written the life and acts of Zichmni, a prince as worthy of immortall memory, as any that euer liued, for his great valiancie and ſinguler humanitie, wherein I haue deſcribed the diſcouery of Engroneland on both ſides, and the citie that he builded. Therefore I will ſpeake no further hereof in this letter, hoping to be with you very ſhortly, and to ſatiſfie you in ſundry other things by word of mouth.

All theſe letters were written by M. Antonio to Meſſer Carlo his brother: and it grieueth me, that the booke and diuers other writings concerning theſe purpoſes, are miſerably loſt: for being but a child when they came to my hands, and not knowing what they were, (as the maner of children is) I tore them, and rent them in pieces, which now I cannot cal to remembrance but to my exceeding great griefe. Notwithſtanding, that the memory of ſo many good things ſhould not bee loſt: whatſoeuer I could get of this matter, I haue diſpoſed and put in order in the former diſcourſe, to the ende that this age might be partly ſatiſfied, to the which we are more beholding for the great diſcoueries made in thoſe partes, then to any other of the time paſt, being moſt ſtudious of the newe relations and diſcoueries of ſtrange countries, made by the great mindes, and induſtrie of our anceſtours.

For the more credite and confirmation of the former Hiſtorie of Meſſer Nicolas and Meſſer Antonio Zeni (which for ſome fewe reſpects may perhaps bee called in queſtion) I haue heere annexed the iudgement of that famous Coſmographer Abraham Ortelius, or rather the yealding and ſubmitting of his iudgement thereunto: who in his Theatrum Orbis, fol.6. next before the map of Mar del Zur, boroweth proofe and authoritie out of this relation, to ſhew that the Northeaſt parte of America called Eſtotiland, and in the original alwayes affirmed to bee an Iſlande, was about the yeere 1390 diſcouered by the aforeſayd Venetian Gentleman Meſſer Antonio Zeno, aboue 100 yeeres before euer Chriſtopher Columbus ſet ſaile for thoſe Weſterne Regions; and that the Northren Seas were euen then ſayled by our Europæan Pilots through the helpe of the loadſtone: with diuers other particulars concerning the cuſtomes, religion and wealth of the Southern Americans, which are moſt euidently confirmed by all the late and moderne Spaniſh Hiſtories of Nueua Eſpanna and Peru.

Eſtotiland firſt diſcouered.

The ſecond diſcouerie thereof.

AND here I ſhall not (as I ſuppoſe) commit any great inconuenience, or abſurditie, in adding vnto this Hiſtory of the new world, certaine particulars as touching the firſt diſcouery therof, not commonly known. Which diſcouerie al the writers of our time aſcribe (& that not vnworthily) vnto Chriſtopher Columbus. For by him it was in a maner firſt diſcouered, made knowen, and profitably communicated vnto the Chriſtian world, in the yeere of our Lord 1492. Howbeit I finde that the North part thereof called Eſtotiland, (which moſt of all extendeth toward our Europe and the Iſlands of the ſame, namely, Groneland, Iſland, and Friſland,) was long ago found out by certaine fiſhers of the Iſle of Friſland, driuen by tempeſt vpon the ſhore thereof: and was afterward about the yeere 1390 diſcouered a new, by one Antonio Zeno a gentleman of Venice; which ſayled thither vnder the conduct of Zichmni king of the ſaide Iſle of Friſland, a prince in thoſe parts of great valour, and renowned for his martiall exploits and victories. Of which expedition of Zichmni there are extant in Italian certaine collections or abridgements gathered by Franciſco Marcolino out of the letters of M. Nicolo and Antonio Zeni two gentlemen of Venice which liued in thoſe partes. Out of which collections I doe adde concerning the deſcription of Eſtotiland aforeſaid theſe particulars following.

Drogio,

Eſtotiland (ſaith he) aboundeth with all things neceſſary for mankinde. In the mids thereof ſtandeth an exceeding high mountaine, from which iſſue foure riuers that moiſten all the countrie. The inhabitans are wittie and moſt expert in all Mechanicall arts. They haue a kinde of peculiar language and letters. Howbeit in this Kings Librarie are preſerued certaine latine bookes, which they vnderſtand not, being perhaps left there not many yeeres before by ſome Europæans, which traffiqued thither. They haue all kinde of mettals; but eſpecially golde, wherewith they mightily abound. They trafficke with the people of Groneland: from whence they fetch ſkinnes, pitch and brimſtone. The inhabitants report that towardes the South, there are regions abounding with gold, and very populous: they haue many and huge woods, from whence they take timber for the building of ſhips and cities, whereof and of caſtles there are great ſtore. The vſe of the loadſtone for Nauigation is vnknowen vnto them. They make relation alſo of a certaine region toward the South, called Drogio, which is inhabited by Canibals, vnto whom mans fleſh is delicate meat: whereof being deſtitute they liue by fiſhing, which they vſe very much. Beyond this are large regions, and as it were a newe world: but the people are barbarous and goe naked: howbeit againſt the colde they cloth themſelues in beaſtes ſkinnes. Theſe haue no kinde of metall: and they liue by hunting. Their weapons are certaine long ſtaues with ſharpe points, and bowes. They wage warres one againſt another. They haue gouernours, and obey certaine lawes. But from hence more towardes the South the climate is much more temperate: and there are cities, and temples of idoles, vnto whom they ſacrifice liuing men, whoſe fleſh they afterwards deuoure. Theſe nations haue the vſe of ſiluer and gold.

Thus much of this tract of landes out of the aforeſaide collections or abridgements. Wherein this alſo is worthy the obſeruation, that euen then our Europæan Pilots ſayled thoſe ſeas by the helpe of the loadſtone. For concerning the vſe thereof in Nauigation, I ſuppoſe there is not to be found a more ancient teſtimonie. And theſe things I haue annexed the rather vnto this table of Mar del Zur; conſidering that none of thoſe Authours which haue written the Hiſtories of the Newe world, haue in any part of their writings, mentioned one word thereof. Hitherto Ortelius.

THE VOYAGES OF THE ENGLISH NATION TO NEVVFOVNDLAND, TO the Iſles of Ramea, and the Iſles of Aſſumption otherwiſe called Natiſcotec, ſituate at the mouth of the Riuer of Canada, and to the Coaſtes of Cape Briton, and Arambec, corruptly called Norumbega, with the Patents, letters, and aduertiſements thereunto belonging.

The voyage of the two ſhips, whereof the one was called the Dominus vobiſcum, ſet out the 20 day of May in the 19 yere of king Henry the eight, and in the yere of our Lord God 1527. for the diſcouerie of the North partes.

Maſter Robert Thorne of Briſtoll, a notable member and ornament of his country, as wel for his learning, as great charity to the poore, in a letter of his to king Henry the 8 and a large diſcourſe to doctor Leigh, his Ambaſſadour to Charles the Emperour, (which both are to be ſeene almoſt in the beginning of the firſt volume of this my work) exhorted the aforeſaid king with very waighty and ſubſtantial reaſons, to ſet forth a diſcouery euen to the North Pole. And that it may be knowne that this his motion tooke preſent effect, I thought it good herewithall to put downe the teſtimonies of two of our Chroniclers. M. Hall, and M. Grafton, who both write in this ſort. This ſame moneth (ſay they) king Henry the 8 ſent 2 faire ſhips wel manned & victualled, hauing in them diuers cunning men to ſeek ſtrange regions, & ſo they ſet forth out of the Thames the 20 day of May in the 19 yeere of his raigne, which was the yere of our Lord. 1527.

And whereas maſter Hal, and maſter Grafton ſay, that in thoſe ſhips there were diuers cunning men, I haue made great enquirie of ſuch as by their yeeres and delight in Nauigation, might giue me any light to know who thoſe cunning men ſhould be, which were the directers in the aforeſaid voyage. And it hath bene tolde me by ſir Martine Frobiſher, and M. Richard Allen, a knight of the Sepulchre, that a Canon of Saint Paul in London, which was a great Mathematician, and a man indued with wealth, did much aduance the action, and went therein himſelfe in perſon, but what his name was I cannot learne of any. And further they told me that one of the ſhips was called The Dominus vobiſcum, which is a name likely to be giuen by a religious man of thoſe dayes: and that ſayling very farre Northweſtward, one of the ſhips was caſt away as it entred into a dangerous gulph, about the great opening, betweene the North parts of Newfoundland, and the countrey lately called by her Maieſtie, Meta Incognita. Whereupon the other ſhip ſhaping her courſe towards Cape Briton, and the coaſtes of Arambec, and oftentimes putting their men on land to ſearch the ſtate of thoſe vnknowen regions, returned home about the beginning of October, of the yere aforeſayd. And thus much (by reaſon of the great negligence of the writers of thoſe times, who ſhould haue vſed more care in preſeruing of the memories of the worthy actes of our nation,) is all that hitherto I can learne, or finde out of this voyage.

The voyage of M. Hore and diuers other gentlemen, to Newfoundland, and Cape Briton, in the yere 1536 and in the 28 yere of king Henry the 8.

One maſter Hore of London, a man of goodly ſtature and of great courage, and giuen to the ſtudie of Coſmographie, in the 28 yere of king Henry the 8 and in the yere of our Lord 1536 encouraged diuers Gentlemen and others, being aſſiſted by the kings fauour and good countenance, to accompany him in a voyage of diſcouerie vpon the Northweſt parts of America: wherein his perſwaſions tooke ſuch effect, that within ſhort ſpace many gentlemen of the Innes of court, and of the Chancerie, and diuers others of good worſhip, deſirous to ſee the ſtrange things of the world, very willingly entred into the action with him, ſome of whoſe names were as followeth: M. Weekes a gentleman of the Weſt countrey of fiue hundred markes by the yeere liuing. M. Tucke a gentleman of Kent. M. Tuckfield. M. Thomas Buts the ſonne of Sir William Buts knight, of Norfolke, which was lately liuing, and from whoſe mouth I wrote moſt of this relation. M. Hardie, M. Biron, M. Carter, M. Wright, M. Raſtall Serieant Raſtals brother, M. Ridley, and diuers other, which all were in the Admyrall called the Trinitie, a ſhip of ſeuen ſcore tunnes, wherein M. Hore himſelfe was imbarked. In the other ſhip whoſe name was the Minion, went a very learned and vertuous gentleman one M. Armigil Wade, afterwardes Clerke of the Counſailes of king Henry the 8 and king Edward the ſixth, father to the worſhipfull M. William Wade now Clerke of the priuie Counſell, M. Oliuer Dawbeney marchant of London, M. Ioy afterward gentleman of the Kings Chappel, with diuers other of good account. The whole number that went in the two tall ſhips aforeſaid, to wit, the Trinitie and the Minion, were about ſixe ſcore perſons, whereof thirty were gentlemen, which all we muſtered in warlike maner at Graues-end, and after the receiuing of the Sacrament, they embarked themſelues in the ende of April. 1536.

M. Armigil Wade.

Cape Briton.

The Iſland of Penguin ſtandeth about the latitude of 30. degrees.

From the time of their ſetting out from Graueſend, they were very long at ſea, to witte, aboue two moneths, and neuer touched any land vntill they came to part of the Weſt Indies about Cape Briton, ſhaping their courſe thence Northeaſtwardes, vntill they came to the Iſland of Penguin, which is very full of rockes and ſtones, whereon they went and found it full of great foules white and gray, as big as geeſe, and they ſaw infinite numbers of their egges. They draue a great number of the foules into their boates vpon their ſayles, and tooke vp many of their egges, the foules they flead and their ſkinnes were very like hony combes full of holes being flead off: they dreſſed and eate them and found them to be very good and nouriſhing meat. They ſaw alſo ſtore of beares both blacke and white, of whome they killed ſome, and tooke them for no bad foode.

M. Dawbneys report to M. Richard Hakluyt of the Temple.

M. Oliuer Dawbeny, which (as it is before mentioned) was in this voyage, and in the Minion, told M. Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple theſe things following: to wit, That after their arriuall in Newfoundland, and hauing bene there certaine dayes at ancre, and not hauing yet ſeene any of the naturall people of the countrey, the ſame Dawbeney walking one day on the hatches, ſpied a boate with Sauages of thoſe parts, rowing downe the Bay toward them, to gaze vpon the ſhip and our people, and taking vewe of their comming aloofe, hee called to ſuch as were vnder the hatches, and willed them to come vp if they would ſee the natural people of the countrey, that they had ſo long and ſo much deſired to ſee: whereupon they came vp, and tooke viewe of the Sauages rowing toward them and their ſhip, and vpon the viewe they manned out a ſhip-boat to meet them and to take them. But they ſpying our ſhip-boat making towards them, returned with maine force and fled into an Iſland that lay vp in the Bay or riuer there, and our men purſued them into the Iſland, and the Sauages fledde and eſcaped: but our men found a fire, and the ſide of a beare on a wooden ſpit left at the ſame by the Sauages that were fled.

They beheld the Sauages of Newfounland.

There in the ſame place they found a boote of leather garniſhed on the outward ſide of the calfe with certaine braue trailes, as it were of rawe ſilke, and alſo found a certaine great warme mitten: And theſe caryed with them, they returned to their ſhippe, not finding the Sauages, nor ſeeing any thing elſe beſides the ſoyle, and the things growing in the ſame, which chiefly were ſtore of firre and pine trees.

Extreme famine.

And further, the ſaid M. Dawbeny told him, that lying there they grew into great want of victuals, and that there they found ſmall reliefe, more then that they had from the neſt of an Oſprey, that brought hourely to her yong great plentie of diuers ſorts of fiſhes. But ſuch was the famine that increaſed amongſt them from day to day, that they were forced to ſeeke to relieue themſelues of raw herbes and rootes that they ſought on the maine: but the famine increaſing, and the reliefe of herbes being to little purpoſe to ſatiſfie their inſatiable hunger, in the fieldes and deſerts here and there, the fellowe killed his mate while he ſtooped to take vp a roote for his reliefe, and cutting out pieces of his bodie whom he had murthered, broyled the ſame on the coles and greedily deuoured them.

Our men eate one another for famine.

The Captaines Oration.

By this meane the company decreaſed, and the officers knew not what was become of them; And it fortuned that one of the company driuen with hunger to ſeeke abroade for reliefe found out in the fieldes the ſauour of broyled fleſh, and fell out with one for that he would ſuffer him and his fellowes to ſterue, enioying plentie as he thought: and this matter growing to cruell ſpeaches, he that had the broyled meate, burſt out into theſe wordes: If thou wouldeſt needes know, the broyled meate that I had was a piece of ſuch a mans buttocke. The report of this brought to the ſhip, the Captaine found what became of thoſe that were miſſing, & was perſwaded that ſome of them were neither deuoured with wilde beaſtes, nor yet deſtroyed with Sauages: And hereupon hee ſtood vp and made a notable Oration, containing, Howe much theſe dealings offended the Almightie, and vouched the Scriptures from firſt to laſt, what God had in caſes of diſtreſſe done for them that called vpon him, and told them that the power of the Almighty was then no leſſe, then in al former time it had bene. And added, that if it had not pleaſed God to haue holpen them in that diſtreſſe, that it had bene better to haue periſhed in body, and to haue liued euerlaſtingly, then to haue relieued for a poore time their mortal bodyes, and to bee condemned euerlaſtingly both body and ſoule to the vnquenchable fire of hell. And thus hauing ended to that effect, he began to exhort to repentance, and beſought all the company to pray, that it might pleaſe God to looke vpon their miſerable preſent ſtate, and for his owne mercie to relieue the ſame. The famine increaſing, and the inconuenience of the men that were miſſing being found, they agreed amongſt themſelues rather then all ſhould periſh, to caſt lots who ſhould be killed: And ſuch was the mercie of God, that the ſame night there arriued a French ſhip in that port, well furniſhed with vittaile, and ſuch was the policie of the Engliſh, that they became maſters of the ſame, and changing ſhips and vittailing them, they ſet ſayle to come into England.

The Engliſh ſurpriſe a French ſhip, wherein they returned home.

In their iourney they were ſo farre Northwards, that they ſawe mighty Iſlands of yce in the ſommer ſeaſon, on which were haukes and other foules to reſt themſelues being weary of flying ouer farre from the maine. They ſawe alſo certaine great white foules with red bils and red legs, ſomewhat bigger then Herons, which they ſuppoſed to be Storkes. They arriued at S. Iues in Cornewall about the ende of October. From thence they departed vnto a certaine caſtle belonging to ſir Iohn Luttrell, where M. Thomas Buts, and M. Raſtall and other Gentlemen of the voyage were very friendly entertained: after that they came to the Earle of Bathe at Bathe, and thence to Briſtoll, ſo to London. M. Buts was ſo changed in the voyage with hunger and miſerie, that ſir William his father and my Lady his mother knew him not to be their ſonne, vntill they found a ſecret marke which was a wart vpon one of his knees, as hee told me Richard Hakluyt of Oxford himſelfe, to whom I rode 200. miles onely to learne the whole trueth of this voyage from his owne mouth, as being the onely man now aliue that was in this diſcouerie.

Haukes and other foules.

Foules ſuppoſed to be ſtorkes.

Certaine moneths after, thoſe Frenchmen came into England, and made complaint to king Henry the 8: the king cauſing the matter to be examined, and finding the great diſtreſſe of his ſubiects, and the cauſes of the dealing ſo with the French, was ſo mooued with pitie, that he puniſhed not his ſubiects, but of his owne purſe made full and royall recompence vnto the French.

The French royally recompenced by king Henry the 8.

In this diſtreſſe of famine, the Engliſh did ſomewhat relieue their vitall ſpirits, by drinking at the ſprings the freſh water out of certaine wooden cups, out of which they had drunke their Aqua compoſita before.

An act againſt the exaction of money or any other thing by any officer for licence to traffique into Iſeland & Newfoundland, made in An. 2. Edwardi ſexti.

FOraſmuch as within theſe few yeeres now laſt paſt, there haue bene leuied, perceiued & taken by certaine of the officers of the Admiraltie, of ſuch Marchants, and fiſhermen as haue vſed and practiſed the aduentures and iourneys into Iſeland, Newfoundland, Ireland, and other places commodious for fiſhing, and the getting of fiſh, in and vpon the Seas or otherwiſe, by way of Marchants in thoſe parties, diuers great exactions, as ſummes of money, doles or ſhares of fiſh, and ſuch other like things, to the great diſcouragement & hinderance of the ſame Marchants and fiſhermen, and to no little dammage of the whole common wealth, and thereof alſo great complaints haue bene made, & informations alſo yeerely to the kings Maieſties moſt honourable councell: for reformation whereof, and to the intent alſo that the ſayd Marchants and fiſhermen may haue occaſion the rather to practiſe & vſe the ſame trade of marchandizing, & fiſhing freely without any ſuch charges and exactions, as are before limited, wherby it is to be thought that more plentie of fiſh ſhall come into this Realme, and thereby to haue the ſame at more reaſonable prices: Be it therfore enacted by the king our ſoueraigne Lord, and the lords and commons in this preſent parliament aſſembled, and by authoritie of the ſame, that neither the Admiral, nor any officer, or miniſter, officers or miniſters of the Admiraltie for the time being, ſhall in any wiſe hereafter exact, receiue, or take by himſelfe, his ſeruant, deputie, ſeruants, or deputies of any ſuch Marchant or fiſherman, any ſumme or ſummes of money, doles or ſhares of fiſh, or any other reward, benefit or aduantage whatſoeuer it be, for any licence to paſſe this Realme to the ſayd voyages or any of them, nor vpon any reſpect concerning the ſaid voyages, nor any of them, vpon paine to forfeit for the firſt offence treble the ſumme, or treble the value of the reward, benefite or aduantage, that any ſuch officer or miniſter ſhall hereafter haue or take of any ſuch Marchants or fiſhermen. For the which forfeiture the party grieued, and euery other perſon or perſons whatſoeuer he or they be, ſhall and may ſue for the ſame by information, bill, plaint, or action of debt in any of the kings courts of recorde: The king to haue the one moitie, and the party complaining the other moitie: in which ſuite no eſſoigne protection, or wager of law ſhall be allowed. And for the ſecond offence the party ſo offending, not only to loſe and forfeite his or their office or offices in the Admiraltie, but alſo to make fine and ranſome at the kings will and pleaſure.

By this acte it appeareth, that the trade out of England to Newfound land was common and frequented about the beginning of the raigne of Edward the 6. namely in the yeere 1548. and it is much to be marueiled, that by the negligence of our men, the countrey in all this time hath bene no better ſearched.

A letter written to M. Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple, conteining a report of the true ſtate and commodities of Newfoundland, by M. Anthonie Parkhurſt Gentleman, 1578.

Maſter Hakluyt, after moſt heartie commendations, with like thankes for your manifold kindneſſe to me ſhewed, not for any merits that hitherto haue beene mine, but wholly proceeding, I muſt needs confeſſe, of your owne good nature, which is ſo ready preſt to benefit your countrey and all ſuch poore men as haue any ſparke in them of good deſires, that you do not onely become their friend, but alſo humble your ſelfe as a ſeruaunt in their affaires: for which I would to God I were once in place where I might cauſe your burning zeale to bee knowen to thoſe that haue authoritie, power, and abilitie to recompenſe your trauelling mind and pen, wherewith you ceaſe not day nor night to labour and trauell to bring your good and godly deſires to ſome paſſe, though not poſſibly to that happy ende that you moſt thirſt for: for ſuch is the malice of wicked men the deuils inſtruments in this our age, that they cannot ſuffer any thing (or at leaſt few) to proceed and proſper that tendeth to the ſetting forth of Gods glory, and the amplifying of the Chriſtian faith, wherein hitherto princes haue not bene ſo diligent as their calling required. Alas, the labourers as yet are few, the harueſt great, I truſt God hath made you an inſtrument to increaſe the number, and to moue men of power, to redeeme the people of Newfoundland and thoſe parts from out of the captiuitie of that ſpirituall Pharao, the deuill.

Now to anſwer ſome part of your letter touching the ſundry nauies that come to Newfoundland, or Terra noua, for fiſh: you ſhal underſtand that ſome fiſh not neere the other by 200. leagues, and therefore the certaintie is not knowen; and ſome yeres come many more then other ſome, as I

English. ſee the like among vs: who ſince my firſt trauell being but 4. yeeres, are increaſed from 30. ſayle to 50. which commeth to paſſe chiefly by the imagination of the Weſterne men, who thinke their neighbours haue had greater gaines then in very deed they haue, for that they ſee me to take ſuch paines yeerely to go in proper perſon: they alſo ſuppoſe that I find ſome ſecret commoditie by reaſon that I doe ſearch the harbors, creekes and hauens, and alſo the land much more then euer any Engliſhman hath done. Surely I am glad that it ſo increaſeth, whereof ſoeuer it ſpringeth. But to let this paſſe, you ſhall underſtand that I am informed that there are aboue 100. ſaile of Spani-

Spaniards. ards that come to take Cod (who make all wet, and do drie it when they come home) beſides 20. or 30. more that come from Biſkaie to kill Whale for Traine. Theſe be better appoynted for ſhipping and furniture of munition, then any nation ſauing the Engliſhmen, who commonly are lords of the harbors where they fiſh, and do vſe all ſtrangers helpe in fiſhing if need require, according to an old cuſtome of the countrey, which thing they do willingly, ſo that you take nothing from them more then a boat or twaine of ſalt, in reſpect of your protection of them againſt rouers or other violent intruders, who do often put them from good harbor, &c. As touching their tunnage, I thinke

Portugals. it may be neere fiue or ſixe thouſand tunne. But of Portugals there are not lightly aboue 50. ſaile, and they make all wet in like ſorte, whoſe tunnage may amount to three thouſand tuns, and not vp-

French. Britons. warde. Of the French nation and Britons, are about one hundred and fiftie ſailes, the moſt of their ſhipping is very ſmall, not paſt fortie tunnes, among which ſome are great and reaſonably well appointed, better then the Portugals, and not ſo well as the Spaniards, and the burden of them may be ſome 7000. tunne. Their ſhipping is from all parts of France and Britaine, and the Spaniards from moſt parts of Spaine, the Portugals from Auiero and Viana, and from 2. or 3. ports more. The trade that our nation hath to Iſland maketh, that the Engliſh are not there in ſuch numbers as other nations.

The fertility of Newfoundland. Now to certifie you of the fertilitie and goodneſſe of the countrey, you ſhall underſtand that I haue in ſundry places ſowen Wheate, Barlie, Rie, Oates, Beanes, Peaſe and ſeedes of herbes, kernels, Plumſtones, nuts, all which haue proſpered as in England. The countrey yeeldeth many good trees of fruit, as Filberds in ſome places, but in all places Cherie trees, and a kind of Peare-tree meet to graffe on. As for Roſes, they are as common as brambles here: Strawberies, Dewberies, and Raſpis, as common as graſſe. The timber is moſt Firre, yet plentie of Pineapple trees: fewe of theſe two kinds meete to maſte a ſhip of threeſcore and ten: but neere Cape Briton, and to the Southward, big and ſufficient for any ſhip. There be alſo Okes & thornes, there is in all the countrey plentie of Birch and Alder, which be the meeteſt wood for cole, and alſo Willow, which will ſerue for many other purpoſes. As touching the kindes of Fiſh beſide Cod, there are Herrings, Salmons, Thornebacke, Plaſe, or rather wee ſhould call them Flounders, Dog fiſh, and another moſt excellent of taſte called of vs a Cat, Oiſters, and Muſkles, in which I haue found pearles aboue 40. in one Muſkle, and generally all haue ſome, great or ſmall. I heard of a Portugall that found one woorth 300. duckets: There are alſo other kinds of Shel-fiſh, as Limpets, cockles, wilkes, lobſters, and crabs: alſo a fiſh like a *Smelt which commeth on ſhore, and another that hath the like propertie, called a Squid: theſe be the fiſhes, which (when I pleaſe to bee merie with my old companions) I ſay, doe come on ſhore when I commaund them in the name of the 5. ports, and coniure them by ſuch like words: Theſe alſo bee the fiſhes which I may ſweepe with broomes on a heape, and neuer wet my foote, onely pronouncing two or three wordes whatſoeuer they be appoynted by any man, ſo they heare my voyce: the vertue of the wordes be ſmall, but the nature of the fiſh great and ſtrange. For the Squid, whoſe nature is to come by night as well as by day, I tell them, I ſet him a candle to ſee his way, with which he is much delighted, or els commeth to wonder at it as doe our freſh water fiſh, the other commeth alſo in the night, but chiefly in the day, being forced by the Cod that would deuoure him, and therefore for feare comming ſo neere the ſhore, is driuen drie by the ſurge of the Sea on the pibble and ſands. Of theſe being as good as a Smelt you may take vp with a ſhoue-net as plentifully as you do Wheate in a ſhouell, ſufficient in three or foure houres for a whole Citie. There be alſo other fiſhes which I tell thoſe that are deſirous of ſtrange newes, that I take as faſt as one would gather vp ſtones, and them I take with a long pole and hooke. Yea marrie ſay they, wee beleeue ſo, and that you catch all the reſt you bring home in that ſort, from Portugals and Frenchmen. No ſurely, but thus I doe: with three hookes ſtretched foorth in the ende of a pole, I make as it were an Ele ſpeare, with which I pricke thoſe Flounders as faſt as you would take vp fritters with a ſharpe pointed ſticke, and with that toole I may take vp in leſſe then halfe a day Lobſters ſufficient to finde three hundred men for a dayes meate. This paſtime ended, I ſhewe them that for my pleaſure I take a great Maſtiue I haue, and ſay no more then thus: Goe fetch me this rebellious fiſh that obeyeth not this Gentleman that commeth from Kent and Chriſtendome, bringing them to the high water marke, and when hee doubteth that any of thoſe great Cods by reaſon of ſheluing ground bee like to tumble into the Sea againe, hee will warily take heede and carrie him vp backe to the heape of his fellowes. This doeth cauſe my friendes to wonder, and at the firſt hearing to iudge them notorious lies, but they laugh and are merrie when they heare the meanes howe each tale is true.

Seuerall ſortes of fiſh.

*Called by the Spaniards Anchouas, and by the Portugals Capelinas.

I tolde you once I doe remember how in my trauaile into Africa and America, I found trees that bare Oiſters, which was ſtrange to you, till I tolde you that their boughes hung in the water, on which both Oiſters and Muſkles did ſticke faſt, as their propertie is, to ſtakes and timber.

Nowe to let theſe merrie tales paſſe, and to come to earneſt matters againe, you ſhall vnderſtand, that Newfoundland is in a temperate Climate, and not ſo colde as fooliſh Mariners doe ſay, who finde it colde ſometimes when plentie of Iſles of yce lie neere the ſhore: but vp in the land they ſhall finde it hotter then in England in many parts of the countrey toward the South. This colde commeth by an accidentall meanes, as by the yce that commeth fleeting from the North partes of the worlde, and not by the ſituation of the countrey, or nature of the Climate. The countrey is full of little ſmall riuers all the yeere long proceeding from the mountaines, ingendred both of ſnow and raine: few ſprings that euer I could finde or heare of, except it bee towards the South: in ſome places or rather in moſt places great lakes with plentie of fiſh, the countrey moſt couered with woods of firre, yet in many places indifferent good graſſe, and plentie of Beares euery where, ſo that you may kill of them as oft as you liſt: their fleſh is as good as yong beefe, and hardly you may know the one from the other if it be powdred but two dayes. Of Otters we may take like ſtore. There are Sea Guls, Murres, Duckes, wild Geeſe, and many other kind of birdes ſtore, too long to write, eſpecially at one Iſland named Penguin, where wee may driue them on a planke into our ſhip as many as ſhall lade her. Theſe birdes are alſo called Penguins, and cannot flie, there is more meate in one of theſe then in a gooſe: the Frenchmen that fiſh neere the grand baie, doe bring ſmall ſtore of fleſh with them, but victuall themſelues alwayes with theſe birdes. Nowe againe, for Veniſon plentie, eſpecially to the North about the grand baie, and in the South neere Cape Race, and Pleſance: there are many other kinds of beaſts, as Luzarnes and other mighty beaſtes like to Camels in greatneſſe, and their feete clouen, I did ſee them farre off not able to diſcerne them perfectly, but their ſteps ſhewed that their feete were clouen, and bigger then the feete of Camels, I ſuppoſe them to bee a kind of Buffes which

I read to bee in the countreyes adiacent, and very many in the firme land. There bee alſo to the Northwards, Hares and Foxes in all parts ſo plentifully, that at noone dayes they take away our fleſh before our faces within leſſe then halfe a paire of buts length, where foure and twentie perſons were turning of drie fiſh, and two dogs in ſight, yet ſtoode they not in feare till wee gaue ſhot and ſet the dogs vpon them: the Beares alſo be as bold, which will not ſpare at midday to to take your fiſh before your face, and I beleeue aſſuredly would not hurt any bodie vnleſſe they be forced.

Nowe to ſhew you my fancie what places I ſuppoſe meeteſt to inhabite in thoſe parts diſcouered of late by our nation: There is neere about the mouth of the grand Bay, an excellent harbour called of the Frenchmen Chaſteaux, and one Iſland in the very entrie of the ſtreight called Bell Iſle, which places if they be peopled and well fortified (as there are ſtones and things meete for it throughout all Newfound land) wee ſhall bee lordes of the whole fiſhing in ſmall time, if it doe ſo pleaſe the Queenes Maieſtie, and from thence ſend wood and cole with all neceſſaries to Labrador lately diſcouered: but I am of opinion, and doe moſt ſtedfaſtly beleeue that we ſhall finde as rich Mines in more temperate places and Climates, and more profitable for fiſhing then any yet we haue vſed, where wee ſhall haue not farre from thence plentie of ſalt made by fire vndoubtedly, and very likely by the heate of the Sunne, by reaſon I finde ſalt kerned on the rockes in nine and fortie and better: theſe places may bee found for ſalte in three and fortie. I know more touching theſe two commodities laſt remembred then any man of our nation doeth; for that I haue ſome knowledge in ſuch matters, and haue moſt deſired the finding of them by painefull trauaile, and moſt diligent inquirie. Now to be ſhort, for I haue bene ouer long by Maſter Buclers means, who cryed on mee to write at large, and of as many things as I call to minde worthy of remembrance: wherefore this one thing more. I could wiſh the Iſland in the mouth of the riuer of Canada ſhould bee inhabited, and the riuer ſearched, for that there are many things which may riſe thereof, as I will ſhew you hereafter. I could find in my heart to make proofe whether it be true or no that I haue read and heard of Frenchmen and Portugals to bee in that riuer, and about Cape Briton. I had almoſt forgot to ſpeake of the plentie of wolues, and to ſhew you that there be foxes, blacke white & gray: other beaſts I know none ſaue thoſe before remembred. I found alſo certain Mines of yron and copper in S.Iohns, and in the Iſland of Yron, which things might turne to our great benefite, if our men had deſire to plant thereabout, for proofe whereof I haue brought home ſome of the oare of both ſortes. And thus I ende, aſſuring you on my faith, that if I had not beene deceiued by the vile Portugals deſcending of the Iewes and Iudas kinde, I had not failed to haue ſearched this riuer, and all the coaſt of Cape Briton, what might haue bene found to haue benefited our countrey: but they breaking their bands, and falſifying their faith and promiſe, diſappointed me of the ſalte they ſhould haue brought me in part of recompenſe of my good ſeruice in defending them two yeeres againſt French Rouers, that had ſpoyled them, if I had not defended them.

By meanes whereof they made me loſe not onely the ſearching of the countrey, but alſo forced mee to come home with great loſſe aboue 600. li. For recompence whereof I haue ſent my man into Portugall to demaund iuſtice at the Kings hand, if not, I muſt put vp my ſupplication to the Queenes Maieſty & her honourable councell, to grant me leaue to ſtay here ſo much of their goods as they haue damnified mee, or elſe that I may take of them in Newfound land, as much fiſh as ſhall be worth 600.li. or as much as the ſalte might haue made. I pray you aduertiſe mee what way I were beſt to take, and what hope there will bee of a recompence if I follow the ſuite: many there are that doe comfort me, and doe bid me proceede, for that her Maieſtie and the councell doe tender poore fiſher men, who with me haue ſuſteined three hundred pound loſſe in that voyage. And to conclude, if you and your friend ſhall thinke me a man ſufficient and of credite, to ſeeke the Iſle of S. Iohn, or the riuer of Canada, with any part of the firme land of Cape Briton, I ſhall giue my diligence for the true and perfect diſcouerie, and leaue ſome part of mine owne buſineſſe to further the ſame: and thus I end, committing you to God. From Briſtow the 13. of Nouember, 1578.

Yours to vſe and command

ANTHONY PARCKHVRST.

The Letters Patents graunted by her Maieſtie to Sir Humfrey Gilbert knight, for the inhabiting and planting of our people in America.

ELIZABETH by the grace of God Queene of England, &c. To all people to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting. Know ye that of our eſpeciall grace, certaine ſcience and meere motion, we haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, doe giue and graunt to our truſtie and welbeloued ſeruaunt Sir Humfrey Gilbert of Compton, in our Countie of Deuonſhire knight, and to his heires and aſſignes for euer, free libertie and licence from time to time and at all times for euer hereafter, to diſcouer, finde, ſearch out, and view ſuch remote, heathen and barbarous lands, countreys and territories not actually poſſeſſed of any Chriſtian prince or people, as to him, his heires & aſſignes, and to euery or any of them, ſhall ſeeme good: and the ſame to haue, hold, occupie and enioy to him, his heires and aſſignes for euer, with all commodities, iuriſdictions and royalties both by ſea and land: and the ſayd ſir Humfrey and all ſuch as from time to time by licence of vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, ſhall goe and trauell thither, to inhabite or remaine there, to build and fortifie at the diſcretion of the ſayde ſir Humfrey, and of his heires and aſſignes, the ſtatutes or actes of Parliament made againſt Fugitiues, or againſt ſuch as ſhall depart, remaine, or continue out of our Realme of England without licence, or any other acte, ſtatute, lawe, or matter whatſoeuer to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And wee doe likewiſe by theſe preſents, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, giue full authoritie and power to the ſaide Sir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them, that hee and they, and euery, or any of them, ſhall and may at all and euery time and times hereafter, haue, take, and lead in the ſame voyages, to trauell thitherward, and to inhabite there with him, and euery or any of them, ſuch and ſo many of our ſubiects as ſhall willingly accompany him and them, and euery or any of them, with ſufficient ſhipping, and furniture for their tranſportations, ſo that none of the ſame perſons, nor any of them be ſuch as hereafter ſhall be ſpecially reſtrained by vs, our heires and ſucceſſors. And further, that he the ſaid Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and euery or any of them ſhall haue, hold, occupy & enioy to him, his heires or aſſignes, and euery of them for euer, all the ſoyle of all ſuch lands, countries, & territories ſo to be diſcouered or poſſeſſed as aforeſaid, and of all Cities, Caſtles, Townes and Villages, and places in the ſame, with the rites, royalties and iuriſdictions, as well marine as other, within the ſayd lands or countreys of the ſeas thereunto adioyning, to be had or vſed with ful power to diſpoſe thereof, & of euery part thereof in fee ſimple or otherwiſe, according to the order of the laws of England, as nere as the ſame conueniently may be, at his, and their will & pleaſure, to any perſon then being, or that ſhall remaine within the allegiance of vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, paying vnto vs for all ſeruices, duties and demaunds, the fift part of all the oare of gold and ſiluer, that from time to time, and at all times after ſuch diſcouerie, ſubduing and poſſeſſing ſhall be there gotten: all which lands, countreys and territories, ſhall for euer bee holden by the ſayd Sir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes of vs, our heires and ſucceſſours by homage, and by the ſayd payment of the ſayd fift part before reſerued onely for all ſeruices.

And moreouer, we doe by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, giue and graunt licence to the ſayde Sir Humfrey Gilbert, his heires or aſſignes, and to euery of them, that hee and they, and euery or any of them ſhall, and may from time to time, and all times for euer hereafter, for his and their defence, encounter, expulſe, repell, and reſiſt, as well by Sea as by land, and by all other wayes whatſoeuer, all, and euery ſuch perſon and perſons whatſoeuer, as without the ſpeciall licence and liking of the ſayd Sir Humfrey, and of his heires and aſſignes, ſhall attempt to inhabite within the ſayd countreys, or any of them, or within the ſpace of two hundreth leagues neere to the place or places within ſuch countreys as aforeſayd, if they ſhall not bee before planted or inhabited within the limites aforeſayd, with the ſubiects of any Chriſtian prince, being in amitie with her Maieſty, where the ſaid ſir Humfrey, his heires or aſſignes, or any of them, or his or their, or any of their aſſociates or companies, ſhall within ſixe yeeres next enſuing, make their dwellings and abidings, or that ſhall enterpriſe or attempt at any time hereafter vnlawfully to annoy either by Sea or land, the ſaid ſir Humfrey, his heires or aſſignes, or any of them, or his or their, or any of their companies: giuing and graunting by theſe preſents, further power and authoritie to the ſayd ſir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter to take and ſurpriſe by all maner of meanes whatſoeuer, all and euery perſon and perſons, with their ſhippes, veſſels, and other goods and furniture, which without the licence of the ſayd ſir Humfrey, or his heires or aſſignes as aforeſayd, ſhall bee found traffiquing into any harborough or harboroughs, creeke or creekes within the limites aforeſayde, (the ſubiects of our Realmes and dominions, and all other perſons in amitie with vs, being driuen by force of tempeſt or ſhipwracke onely excepted) and thoſe perſons and euery of them with their ſhips, veſſels, goods, and furniture, to detaine and poſſeſſe, as of good and lawfull prize, according to the diſcretion of him the ſayd ſir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and of euery or any of them. And for vniting in more perfect league and amitie of ſuch countreys, landes and territories ſo to bee poſſeſſed and inhabited as aforeſayde, with our Realmes of England and Ireland, and for the better encouragement of men to this enterpriſe: wee doe by theſe preſents graunt, and declare, that all ſuch countreys ſo hereafter to bee poſſeſſed and inhabited as aforeſayd, from thenceforth ſhall bee of the allegiance of vs, our heires, and ſucceſſours. And wee doe graunt to the ſayd ſir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and to all and euery of them, and to all and euery other perſon and perſons, being of our allegiance, whoſe names ſhall be noted or entred in ſome of our courts of Record, within this our Realme of England, and that with the aſſent of the ſayd ſir Humfrey, his heires or aſſignes, ſhall nowe in this iourney for diſcouerie, or in the ſecond iourney for conqueſt hereafter, trauel to ſuch lands, countries and territories as aforeſaid, and to their and euery of their heires: that they and euery or any of them being either borne within our ſayd Realmes of England or Ireland, or within any other place within our allegiance, and which hereafter ſhall be inhabiting within any the lands, countreys and territories, with ſuch licence as aforeſayd, ſhall, and may haue, and enioy all the priuileges of free denizens and perſons natiue of England, and within our allegiance: any law, cuſtome, or vſage to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And foraſmuch, as vpon the finding out, diſcouering and inhabiting of ſuch remote lands, countreys and territories, as aforeſayd, it ſhall be neceſſarie for the ſafetie of all men that ſhall aduenture themſelues in thoſe iourneys or voiages, to determine to liue together in Chriſtian peace and ciuill quietneſſe each with other, whereby euery one may with more pleaſure and profit, enioy that whereunto they ſhall attaine with great paine and perill: wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours are likewiſe pleaſed and contented, and by theſe preſents doe giue and graunt to the ſayd ſir Humfrey and his heires and aſſignes for euer, that he and they, and euery or any of them, ſhall and may from time to time for euer hereafter within the ſayd mentioned remote lands and countreys, and in the way by the Seas thither, and from thence, haue full and meere power and authoritie to correct, puniſh, pardon, gouerne and rule by their, and euery or any of their good diſcretions and pollicies, as well in cauſes capitall or criminall, as ciuill, both marine and other, all ſuch our ſubiects and others, as ſhall from time to time hereafter aduenture themſelues in the ſayd iourneys or voyages habitatiue or poſſeſſiue, or that ſhall at any time hereafter inhabite any ſuch lands, countreys or territories as aforeſayd, or that ſhall abide within two hundred leagues of any the ſayd place or places, where the ſayd ſir Humfrey or his heires, or aſſignes, or any of them, or any of his or their aſſociats or companies, ſhall inhabite within ſixe yeeres next enſuing the date hereof, according to ſuch ſtatutes, lawes and ordinances, as ſhall be by him the ſaid ſir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, or euery, or any of them deuiſed or eſtabliſhed for the better gouernement of the ſaid people as aforeſayd: ſo alwayes that the ſayd ſtatutes, lawes and ordinances may be as neere as conueniently may, agreeable to the forme of the lawes & pollicy of England: and alſo, that they be not againſt the true Chriſtian faith or religion now profeſſed in the church of England, nor in any wiſe to withdraw any of the ſubiects or people of thoſe lands or places from the allegiance of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, as their immediate Soueraignes vnder God. And further we doe by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, giue and graunt full power and authority to our truſtie and welbeloued counſeller, ſir William Cecill knight, lord Burleigh, our high treaſurer of England, and to the lord treaſurer of England of vs, for the time being, and to the priuie counſell of vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, or any foure of them for the time being, that he, they, or any foure of them, ſhall, and may from time to time and at all times hereafter, vnder his or their handes or ſeales by vertue of theſe preſents, authorize and licence the ſayd ſir Humfrey Gilbert, his heires and aſſignes, and euery or any of them by him and themſelues, or by their or any of their ſufficient atturneys, deputies officers, miniſters, factors and ſeruants, to imbarke and tranſport out of our Realmes of England and Ireland, all, or any of his or their goods, and all or any the goods of his or their aſſociates and companies, and euery or any of them, with ſuch other neceſſaries and commodities of any our Realmes, as to the ſaid lord treaſurer or foure of the priuie counſell of vs, our heires, or ſucceſſours for the time being, as aforeſayd, ſhall be from time to time by his or their wiſedoms or diſcretions thought meete and conuenient for the better reliefe and ſupportation of him the ſayd ſir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and euery or any of them, and his and their, and euery or any of their ſaid aſſociates and companies, any act, ſtatute, lawe, or other thing to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

Prouided alwayes, and our will and pleaſure is, and wee doe hereby declare to all Chriſtian Kings, princes and ſtates, that if the ſaid Sir Humfrey, his heires or aſſignes, or any of them, or any other by their licence or appointment, ſhall at any time or times hereafter robbe or ſpoile by Sea or by land, or doe any act of vniuſt and vnlawfull hoſtilitie to any of the Subiects of vs, our heires, or ſucceſſours, or any of the Subiects of any King, prince, ruler, gouernour or ſtate being then in perfect league and amitie with vs, our heires or ſucceſſours: and that vpon ſuch iniurie, or vpon iuſt complaint of any ſuch prince, ruler, gouernour or ſtate, or their ſubiects, wee our heires or ſucceſſors ſhall make open proclamation within any the portes of our Realme of England commodious, that the ſaid Sir Humfrey, his heires or aſſignes, or any other to whom theſe our Letters patents may extend, ſhall within the terme to be limited by ſuch proclamations, make full reſtitution and ſatiſfaction of all ſuch iniuries done, ſo as both we and the ſaide Princes, or others ſo complayning, may holde vs and themſelues fully contended: And that if the ſaide Sir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, ſhall not make or cauſe to bee made ſatiſfaction accordingly, within ſuch time ſo to be limited: that then it ſhall bee lawfull to vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, to put the ſaid Sir Humfrey, his heires and aſſignes, and adherents, and all the inhabitants of the ſaid places to be diſcouered as is aforeſaide, or any of them out of our allegiance and protection, and that from and after ſuch time of putting out of protection the ſaide Sir Humfrey, and his heires, aſſignes, adherents and others ſo to be put out, and the ſaid places within their habitation, poſſeſſion and rule, ſhal be out of our protection and allegiance, and free for all Princes and others to purſue with hoſtilitie as being not our Subiects, nor by vs any way to bee aduowed, maintained or defended, nor to be holden as any of ours, nor to our protection, dominion or allegiance any way belonging, for that expreſſe mention, &c. In witneſſe whereof, &c. Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter the 11. day of Iune, the twentieth yeere of our raigne. Anno Dom. 1578.

A report of the voyage and ſucceſſe thereof, attempted in the yeere of our Lord 1583 by ſir Humfrey Gilbert knight, with other gentlemen aſſiſting him in that action, intended to diſcouer and to plant Chriſtian inhabitants in place conuenient, vpon thoſe large and ample countreys extended Northward from the cape of Florida, lying vnder very temperate Climes, eſteemed fertile and rich in Minerals, yet not in the actuall poſſeſſion of any Chriſtian prince, written by M. Edward Haies gentleman, and principall actour in the ſame voyage, who alone continued vnto the end, and by Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance returned home with his retinue ſafe and entire.

Many voyages haue bene pꝛetended, yet hitherto neuer any thoꝛowly accompliſhed by our nation of exact diſcouery into the bowels of thoſe maine, ample and vaſt countreys, extended infinitely into the Noꝛth from 30 degrees, oꝛ rather from 25 degrees of Septentrionall latitude, neither hath a right way bene taken of planting a Chꝛiſtian habitation and regiment vpon the ſame, as well may appeare both by the little we yet do actually poſſeſſe therein, & by our ignoꝛance of the riches and ſecrets within thoſe lands, which vnto this day we knew chiefly by the trauell and report of other nations, and moſt of the French, who albeit they can not challenge ſuch right and intereſt vnto the ſayd countreys as we, neither theſe many yeeres haue had opportunity nor meanes ſo great to diſcouer and to plant (being vexed with the calamities of inteſtine warres) as we haue had by the ineſtimable benefit of our long and happy peace: yet haue they both waies performed more, and had long ſince attained a ſure poſſeſſion and ſetled gouernment of many prouinces in thoſe Northerly parts of America, if their many attempts into thoſe forren and remote lands had not bene impeached by their garboils at home.

The coaſts frō Florida Northward firſt diſcouered by the Engliſh natiō.

The firſt diſcouery of theſe coaſts (neuer heard of before) was well begun by Iohn Cabot the father, and Sebaſtian his ſonne, an Engliſhman borne, who were the firſt finders out of all that great tract of land ſtretching from the cape of Florida vnto thoſe Iſlands which we now call the Newfoundland: all which they brought and annexed vnto the crowne of England. Since when, if with like diligence the ſearch of inland countreys had bene followed, as the diſcouery vpon the coaſt, and out-parts therof was performed by thoſe two men: no doubt her Maieſties territories and reuenue had bene mightily inlarged and aduanced by this day. And which is more; the ſeed of Chriſtian religion had bene ſowed amongſt thoſe pagans, which by this time might haue brought foorth a moſt plentifull harueſt and copious congregation of Chriſtians; which muſt be the chiefe intent of ſuch as ſhall make any attempt that way: or els whatſoeuer is builded vpon other foundation ſhall neuer obtaine happy ſucceſſe nor continuance.

And although we can not preciſely iudge (which onely belongeth to God) what haue bene the humours of men ſtirred vp to great attempts of diſcouering and planting in thoſe remote countreys, yet the euents do ſhew that either Gods cauſe hath not bene chiefly preferred by them, or els God hath not permitted ſo abundant grace as the light of his word and knowledge of him to be yet reuealed vnto thoſe infidels before the appointed time.

But moſt aſſuredly, the only cauſe of religion hitherto hath kept backe, and will alſo bring forward at the time aſſigned by God, an effectuall and compleat diſcouery & poſſeſſion by Chriſtians both of thoſe ample countreys and the riches within them hitherto concealed: whereof notwithſtanding God in his wiſdome hath permitted to be reuealed from time to time a certaine obſcure and miſty knowledge, by little and little to allure the mindes of men that way (which els will be dull enough in the zeale of his cauſe) and thereby to prepare vs vnto a readineſſe for the execution of his will againſt the due time ordeined, of calling thoſe pagans vnto Chriſtianity.

In the meane while, it behoueth euery man of great calling, in whom is any inſtinct of inclination vnto this attempt, to examine his owne motions: which if the ſame proceed of ambition or auarice, he may aſſure himſelfe it commeth not of God, and therefore can not haue confidence of Gods protection and aſſiſtance againſt the violence (els irreſiſtable) both of ſea, and infinite perils vpon the land; whom God yet may vſe an inſtrument to further his cauſe and glory ſome way, but not to build vpon ſo bad a foundation.

Otherwiſe, if his motiues be deriued from a vertuous & heroycall minde, preferring chiefly the honour of God, compaſſion of poore infidels captiued by the deuill, tyrannizing in moſt woonderfull and dreadfull maner ouer their bodies and ſoules; aduancement of his honeſt and well diſpoſed countreymen, willing to accompany him in ſuch honourable actions; reliefe of ſundry people within this realme diſtreſſed: all theſe be honorable purpoſes, imitating the nature of the munificent God, wherwith he is well pleaſed, who will aſſiſt ſuch an actour beyond expectation of men. And the ſame, who feeleth this inclination in himſelfe, by all likelihood may hope, or rather confidently repoſe in the preordinance of God, that in this laſt age of the world (or likely neuer) the time is compleat of receiuing alſo theſe Gentiles into his mercy, and that God will raiſe him an inſtrument to effect the ſame: it ſeeming probable by euent of precedent attempts made by the Spanyards and French ſundry times, that the countreys lying North of Florida, God hath reſerued the ſame to be reduced vnto Chriſtian ciuility by the Engliſh nation. For not long after that Chriſtopher Columbus had diſcouered the Iſlands and continent of the Weſt Indies for Spaine, Iohn and Sebaſtian Cabot made diſcouery alſo of the reſt from Florida Northwards to the behoofe of England.

Probable coniectures ỹ theſe lands North of Florida, are reſerued for the Engliſh nation to poſſeſſe.

And whenſoeuer afterwards the Spanyards (very proſperous in all their Southerne diſcoueries) did attempt any thing into Florida and thoſe regions inclining towards the North, they proued moſt vnhappy, and were at length diſcouraged vtterly by the hard and lamentable ſucceſſe of many both religious and valiant in armes, endeuouring to bring thoſe Northerly regions alſo vnder the Spaniſh iuriſdiction; as if God had preſcribed limits vnto the Spaniſh nation which they might not exceed: as by their owne geſts recorded may be aptly gathered.

The Spanyards proſperous in the Southerne diſcoueries, yet vnhappy in theſe Northerne.

The French, as they can pretend leſſe title vnto theſe Northerne parts then the Spanyard, by how much the Spanyard made the firſt diſcouery of the ſame continent ſo far Northward as vnto Florida, and the French did but reuiew that before diſcouered by the Engliſh nation, vſurping vpon our right, and impoſing names vpon countreys, riuers, bayes, capes, or headlands, as if they had bene the firſt finders of thoſe coaſts; which iniury we offered not vnto the Spanyards, but left off to diſcouer when we approched the Spaniſh limits: euen ſo God hath not hitherto permitted them to eſtabliſh a poſſeſſion permanent vpon anothers right, notwithſtanding their manifolde attempts, in which the iſſue hath bene no leſſe tragicall then that of the Spanyards, as by their owne reports is extant.

The French are but vſurpers vpon our right.

The Frēch alſo infortunate in thoſe North parts of America.

Then ſeeing the Engliſh nation onely hath right vnto theſe countreys of America from the cape of Florida Northward by the priuilege of firſt diſcouery, vnto which Cabot was authoriſed by regall authority, and ſet forth by the expenſe of our late famous king Henry the ſeuenth: which right alſo ſeemeth ſtrongly defended on our behalfe by the powerfull hand of almighty God, withſtanding the enterpriſes of other nations: it may greatly incourage vs vpon ſo iuſt ground, as is our right, and vpon ſo ſacred an intent, as to plant religion (our right and intent being meet foundations for the ſame) to proſecute effectually the full poſſeſſion of thoſe ſo ample and pleaſant countreys apperteining vnto the crowne of England: the ſame (as is to be coniectured by infallible arguments of the worlds end approching) being now arriued vnto the time by God preſcribed of their vocation, if euer their calling vnto the knowledge of God may be expected. Which alſo is very probable by the reuolution and courſe of Gods word and religion, which from the beginning hath moued from the Eaſt, towards, & at laſt vnto the Weſt, where it is like to end, vnleſſe the ſame begin againe where it did in the Eaſt, which were to expect a like world againe. But we are aſſured of the contrary by the propheſie of Chriſt, whereby we gather, that after his word preached thorowout the world ſhalbe the end. And as the Goſpel when it deſcended Weſtward began in the South, and afterward ſpread into the North of Europe: euen ſo, as the ſame hath begunne in the South countreys of America, no leſſe hope may be gathered that it will alſo ſpread into the North.

A good incouragement for the Engliſh nation, to proceed in the conqueſts of the North of America.

The due time approcheth by all likelihood of calling theſe heathens vnto Chriſtianity.

The word of God moueth circularly.

Theſe conſiderations may helpe to ſuppreſſe all dreads riſing of hard euents in attempts made this way by other nations, as alſo of the heauy ſucceſſe and iſſue in the late enterpriſe made by a worthy gentleman our countryman ſir Humfrey Gilbert knight, who was the firſt of our nation that caried people to erect an habitation and gouernment in thoſe Northerly countreys of America. About which, albeit he had conſumed much ſubſtance, and loſt his life at laſt, his people alſo periſhing for the moſt part: yet the myſtery thereof we muſt leaue vnto God, and iudge charitably both of the cauſe (which was iuſt in all pretence) and of the perſon, who was very zealous in proſecuting the ſame, deſeruing honourable remembrance for his good minde, and expenſe of life in ſo vertuous an enterpriſe. Whereby neuertheleſſe, leaſt any man ſhould be diſmayd by example of other folks calamity, and miſdeeme that God doth reſiſt all attempts intended that way: I thought good, ſo farre as my ſelfe was an eye witneſſe, to deliuer the circumſtance and maner of our proceedings in that action: in which the gentleman was ſo infortunately incumbred with wants, and worſe matched with many ill diſpoſed people, that his rare iudgement and regiment premeditated for thoſe affaires, was ſubiected to tolerate abuſes, & in ſundry extremities to holde on a courſe, more to vpholde credit, then likely in his owne conceit happily to ſucceed.

The iſſue of ſuch actions, being alwayes miſerable, not guided by God, who abhorreth confuſion and diſorder, hath left this for admonition (being the firſt attempt by our nation to plant) vnto ſuch as ſhall take the ſame cauſe in hand hereafter not to be diſcouraged from it: but to make men well aduiſed how they handle his ſo high and excellent matters, as the cariage is of his word into thoſe very mighty and vaſt countreys. An action doubtleſſe not to be intermedled with baſe purpoſes; as many haue made the ſame but a colour to ſhadow actions otherwiſe ſcarſe iuſtifiable: which doth excite Gods heauy iudgements in the end, to the terrifying of weake mindes from the cauſe, without pondering his iuſt proceedings: and doth alſo incenſe forren princes againſt our attempts how iuſt ſoeuer, who can not but deeme the ſequele very dangerous vnto their ſtate (if in thoſe parts we ſhould grow to ſtrength) ſeeing the very beginnings are entred with ſpoile.

Ill actions coloured by pretence of planting vpon remote lands.

And with this admonition denounced vpon zeale towards Gods cauſe, alſo towards thoſe in whom appeareth diſpoſition honourable vnto this action of planting Chriſtian people and religion in thoſe remote and barbarous nations of America (vnto whom I wiſh all happineſſe) I will now proceed to make relation briefly, yet particularly, of our voyage vndertaken with ſir Humfrey Gilbert, begun, continued, and ended aduerſly.

When firſt Sir Humfrey Gilbert vndertooke the Weſterne diſcouery of America, and had procured procured from her Maieſty a very large commiſſion to inhabit & poſſeſſe at his choice all remote and heathen lands not in the actuall poſſeſſion of any Chriſtian prince, the ſame commiſſion exemplified with many priuileges, ſuch as in his diſcretion he might demand, very many gentlemen of good eſtimation drew vnto him, to aſſociate him in ſo commendable an enterpriſe, ſo that the preparation was expected to grow vnto a puiſſant fleet, able to encounter a kings power by ſea: neuertheleſſe, amongſt a multitude of voluntary men, their diſpoſitions were diuers, which bred a iarre, and made a diuiſion in the end, to the confuſion of that attempt euen before the ſame was begun. And when the ſhipping was in a maner prepared, & men ready vpon the coaſt to go aboord: at that time ſome brake conſort, and followed courſes degenerating from the voyage before pretended: Others failed of their promiſes contracted, and the greater number were diſperſed, leauing the Generall with few of his aſſured friends, with whom he aduentured to ſea: where hauing taſted of no leſſe miſfortune, he was ſhortly driuen to retire home with the loſſe of a tall ſhip, and (more to his griefe) of a valiant gentleman Miles Morgan.

A conſtant reſolution of ſir Humfey Gilbert.

Hauing buried onely in a preparation a great maſſe of ſubſtance, wherby his eſtate was impaired, his minde yet not diſmaid, he continued his former deſignment & purpoſe to reuiue this enterpriſe, good occaſion ſeruing. Upon which determination ſtanding long, without meanes to ſatisfy his deſire; at laſt he granted certaine aſſignments out of his cōmiſſion to ſundry perſons of meane ability, deſiring the priuilege of his grant, to plant & fortifie in the North parts of America about the riuer of Canada, to whō if God gaue good ſucceſſe in the North parts (where then no matter of moment was expected) the ſame (he thought) would greatly aduance the hope of the South, & be a furtherance vnto his determination that way. And the worſt that might happen in that courſe might be excuſed without preiudice vnto him by the former ſuppoſition, that thoſe North regions were of no regard: but chiefly a poſſeſſion taken in any parcell of thoſe heathen countreys, by vertue of his grant, did inueſt him of territories extending euery way two hundred leagues: which induced ſir Humfry Gilbert to make thoſe aſſignments, deſiring greatly their expedition, becauſe his commiſſion did expire after ſix yeres, if in that ſpace he had not gotten actuall poſſeſſion.

A ſecond preparation of ſir Humfrey Gilbert.

Time went away without any thing done by his aſſignes: inſomuch that at laſt he muſt reſolue himſelfe to take a voyage in perſon, for more aſſurance to keepe his patent in force, which then almoſt was expired or within two yeres.

In furtherance of his determination, amongſt others, ſir George Peckam knight ſhewed himſelfe very zealous to the action, greatly aiding him both by his aduice & in the charge. Other gentlemen to their ability ioyned vnto him, reſoluing to aduenture their ſubſtance & liues in the ſame cauſe. Who beginning their preparation from that time, both of ſhipping, munition, victual, men, and things requiſit, ſome of them cōtinued the charge two yeres compleat without intermiſſion. Such were the difficulties and croſſe accidents oppoſing theſe proceedings, which tooke not end in leſſe then two yeres: many of which circumſtances I will omit.

The laſt place of our aſſembly, before we left the coaſt of England, was in Cauſet bay neere vnto Plimmouth: then reſolued to put vnto the ſea with ſhipping and prouiſion, ſuch as we had, before our ſtore yet remaining, but chiefly the time and ſeaſon of the yeere, were too farre ſpent. Neuertheleſſe it ſeemed firſt very doubtfull by what way to ſhape our courſe, and to begin our intended diſcouery, either from the South Northward, or from the North Southward.

Conſultation about our courſe.

The firſt, that is, beginning South, without all controuerſie was the likelieſt, wherein we were aſſured to haue commodity of the current, which from the cape of Florida ſetteth Northward, and would haue furthered greatly our nauigation, diſcouering from the foreſayd cape along towards cape Briton, and all thoſe lands lying to the North.

Comodities in diſcouering from South Northward.

Alſo the yere being farre ſpent, and arriued to the moneth of Iune, we were not to ſpend time in Northerly courſes, where we ſhould be ſurpriſed with timely Winter, but to couet the ſouth, which we had ſpace enough then to haue attained; and there might with leſſe detriment haue wintred that ſeaſon, being more milde and ſhort in the South then in the North where winter is both long and rigorous.

Theſe and other like reaſons alleged in fauour of the Southerne courſe firſt to be taken, to the contrary was inferred: that foraſmuch as both our victuals, and many other needfull prouiſions were diminiſhed and left inſufficient for ſo long a voyage, and for the wintering of ſo many men, we ought to ſhape a courſe moſt likely to miniſter ſupply; and that was to take the Newfoundland in our way, which was but ſeuen hundred leagues from our Engliſh coaſt. Where being vſually at that time of the yere, and vntill the fine of Auguſt, a multitude of ſhips repairing thither for fiſh, we ſhould be relieued abundantly with many neceſſaries, which after the fiſhing ended, they might well ſpare, and freely impart vnto vs.

Not ſtaying long vpon that Newland coaſt, we might proceed Southward, and follow ſtill the Sunne, vntill we arriued at places more temperate to our content.

By which reaſons we were the rather induced to follow this Northerly courſe, obeying vnto neceſſity, which muſt be ſupplied. Otherwiſe, we doubted that ſudden approch of Winter, bringing with it continuall fogge, and thicke miſts, tempeſt and rage of weather; alſo contrariety of currents deſcending from the cape of Florida vnto cape Briton and cape Raſe, would fall out to be great and irreſiſtable impediments vnto our further proceeding for that yeere, and compell vs to Winter in thoſe North and colde regions.

Cauſe why we began our diſcouery frō the North.

Incommodities in begining North.

Wherfore ſuppreſſing all obiections to the contrary, we reſolued to begin our courſe Northward, and to follow directly as we might, the trade way vnto Newfoundland: from whence after our refreſhing and reparation of wants, we intended without delay (by Gods permiſſion) to proceed into the South, not omitting any riuer or bay which in all that large tract of land appeared to our view worthy of ſearch. Immediatly we agreed vpon the maner of our courſe and orders to be obſerued in our voyage; which were deliuered in writing vnto the captaines and maſters of euery ſhip a copy in maner following.

Euery ſhippe had deliuered two bullets or ſcrowles, the one ſealed vp in waxe, the other left open: in both which were included ſeuerall watch-words. That open, ſeruing vpon our owne coaſt or the coaſt of Ireland: the other ſealed, was promiſed on all hands not to be broken vp vntill we ſhould be cleere of the Iriſh coaſt; which from thenceforth did ſerue vntill we arriued and met altogether in ſuch harbors of the Newfoundland as were agreed for our Rendez vouz. The ſayd watch-words being requiſit to know our conſorts whenſoeuer by night, either by fortune of weather, our fleet diſperſed ſhould come together againe; or one ſhould hale another; or if by ill watch and ſteerage one ſhip ſhould chance to fall aboord of another in the darke.

The reaſon of the bullet ſealed was to keepe ſecret that watch-word while we were vpon our owne coaſt, leſt any of the company ſtealing from the fleet might betray the ſame; which knowen to an enemy, he might boord vs by night without miſtruſt, hauing our owne watch-word.

Orders agreed vpon by the Captaines and Maſters to be obſerued by the fleet of Sir Humfrey Gilbert.

First the Admirall to cary his flag by day, and his light by night.

2 Item, if the Admirall ſhall ſhorten his ſaile by night, then to ſhew two lights vntill he be anſwered againe by euery ſhip ſhewing one light for a ſhort time.

3 Item, if the Admirall after his ſhortening of ſaile, as aforeſayd, ſhall make more ſaile againe: then he to ſhew three lights one aboue another.

4 Item, if the Admirall ſhall happen to hull in the night, then to make a wauering light ouer his other light, wauering the light vpon a pole.

5 Item, if the fleet ſhould happen to be ſcattered by weather, or other miſhap, then ſo ſoone as one ſhall deſcry another, to hoiſe both toppe ſailes twiſe, if the weather will ſerue, and to ſtrike them twiſe againe: but if the weather ſerue not, then to hoiſe the maine top ſaile twiſe, and forthwith to ſtrike it twiſe againe.

6 Item, if it ſhall happen a great fogge to fall, then preſently euery ſhippe to beare vp with the admirall, if there be winde: but if it be a calme, then euery ſhip to hull, and ſo to lie at hull till it be cleere. And if the fogge do continue long, then the Admirall to ſhoot off two pieces euery euening, and euery ſhip to anſwere it with one ſhot: and euery man bearing to the ſhip, that is to leeward ſo neere as he may.

7 Item, euery maſter to giue charge vnto the watch to looke out well, for laying aboord one of another in the night, and in fogges.

8 Item, euery euening euery ſhip to haile the admirall, and ſo to fall aſterne him, ſailing thorow the Ocean: and being on the coaſt, euery ſhip to haile him both morning and euening.

9 Item, if any ſhip be in danger any way, by leake or otherwiſe, then ſhe to ſhoot off a piece, and preſently to hang out one light, whereupon euery man to beare towards her, anſwering her with one light for a ſhort time, and ſo to put it out againe; thereby to giue knowledge that they haue ſeene her token.

10 Item, whenſoeuer the Admirall ſhall hang out her enſigne in the maine ſhrowds, then euery man to come aboord her, as a token of counſell.

11 Item, if there happen any ſtorme or contrary winde to the fleet after the diſcouery, whereby they are ſeparated: then euery ſhip to repaire vnto their laſt good port, there to meet againe.

Our courſe agreed vpon.

The courſe firſt to be taken for the diſcouery is to beare directly to cape Raſe, the moſt Southerly cape of Newfound land; and there to harbour our ſelues either in Rogneux or Fermous, being the firſt places appointed for our Rendez vous, and the next harbours vnto the Northward of cape Raſe: and therefore euery ſhip ſeparated from the fleet to repaire to that place ſo faſt as God ſhall permit, whether you ſhall fall to the Southward or to the Northward of it, and there to ſtay for the meeting of the whole fleet the ſpace of ten dayes; and when you ſhall depart, to leaue marks.

A direction of our courſe vnto the Newfound land.

BEginning our courſe from Silley, the neereſt is by Weſtſouthweſt (if the winde ſerue) vntill ſuch time as we haue brought our ſelues in the latitude of 43 or 44 degrees, becauſe the Ocean is ſubiect much to Southerly windes in Iune and Iuly. Then to take trauerſe from 45 to 47 degrees of latitude, if we be inforced by contrary windes: and not to go to the Northward of the height of 47 degrees of Septentrionall latitude by no meanes; if God ſhall not inforce the contrary; but to do your indeuour to keepe in the height of 46 degrees, ſo nere as you can poſſibly, becauſe cape Raſe lieth about that height.

Notes.

IF by contrary windes we be driuen backe vpon the coaſt of England, then to repaire vnto Silley for a place of our aſſembly or meeting.

If we be driuen backe by contrary winds that we can not paſſe the coaſt of Ireland, then the place of our aſſembly to be at Beare hauen or Baltimore hauen.

If we ſhall not happen to meet at cape Raſe, then the place of Rendez vous to be at cape Briton, or the neereſt harbour vnto the Weſtward of cape Briton.

If by meanes of other ſhipping we may not ſafely ſtay there, then to reſt at the very next ſafe port to the Weſtward; euery ſhip leauing their marks behinde them for the more certainty of the after commers to know where to finde them.

The marks that euery man ought to leaue in ſuch a caſe, were of the Generals priuate deuice written by himſelfe, ſealed alſo in cloſe waxe, and deliuered vnto euery ſhippe one ſcroule, which was not to be opened vntil occaſion required, whereby euery man was certified what to leaue for inſtruction of after commers: that euery of vs comming into any harbour or riuer might know who had bene there, or whether any were ſtill there vp higher into the riuer, or departed, and which way.

Beginning of the voyage.

Orders thus determined, and promiſes mutually giuen to be obſerued, euery man withdrew himſelfe vnto his charge, the ankers being already weyed, and our ſhippes vnder ſaile, hauing a ſoft gale of winde, we began our voyage vpon Tueſday the eleuenth day of Iune, in the yere of our Lord 1583, hauing in our fleet (at our departure from Cauſet bay) theſe ſhippes, whoſe names and burthens, with the names of the captaines and maſters of them, I haue alſo inſerted, as followeth:

1 The Delight aliàs The George, of burthen 120 tunnes, was Admirall: in which went the Generall, and William Winter captaine in her and part owner, and Richard Clearke maſter.

2 The Barke Raleigh ſet forth by M. Walter Raleigh, of the burthen of 200 tunnes, was then Vice-admirall: in which went M. Butler captaine, and Robert Dauis of Briſtoll maſter.

3 The Golden hinde, of burthen 40 tunnes, was then Reare-admirall: in which went Edward Hayes captaine and owner, and William Cox of Limehouſe maſter.

4 The Swallow, of burthen 40 tunnes: in her was captaine Maurice Browne.

5 The Squirrill, of burthen 10 tunnes: in which went captaine William Andrewes, and one Cade maſter.

Our fleet conſiſted of fiue sailes, in which we had about 260 men.
Prouiſions fit for ſuch diſcoueries.

We were in number in all about 260 men: among whom we had of euery faculty good choice, as Shipwrights, Maſons, Carpenters, Smithes, and ſuch like, requiſite to ſuch an action: alſo Minerall men and Refiners. Beſides, for ſolace of our people, and allurement of the Sauages, we were prouided of Muſike in good variety: not omitting the leaſt toyes, as Morris dancers, Hobby horſſe, and Maylike conceits to delight the Sauage people, whom we intended to winne by all faire meanes poſſible. And to that end we were indifferently furniſhed of all petty haberdaſhrie wares to barter with thoſe ſimple people.

June 11.

In this maner we ſet forward, departing (as hath bene ſaid) out of Cauſon bay the eleuenth day of June being Tueſday, the weather and winde faire and good all day, but a great ſtorme of thunder and winde fell the ſame night.

June 13.

Obſerue.

Thurſday following, when we hailed one another in the euening (according to the order before ſpecified) they ſignified vnto vs out of the Vizadmirall, that both the Captaine, and very many of the men were fallen ſicke. And about midnight the Vizeadmirall forſooke vs, notwithſtanding we had the winde Eaſt, faire and good. But it was after credibly reported, that they were infected with a contagious ſickneſſe, and arriued greatly diſtreſſed at Plimmoth: the reaſon I could neuer vnderſtand. Sure I am, no coſt was ſpared by their owner Maſter Raleigh in ſetting them forth: Therefore I leaue it vnto God.

By this time we were in 48 degrees of latitude, not a little grieued with the loſſe of the moſt puiſſant ſhip in our fleete: after whoſe departure, the Golden Hind ſucceeded in the place of Vizadmirall, and remooued her flagge from the mizon vnto the foretop.

From Saturday the 15 of June vntill the 28, which was vpon a Friday, we neuer had faire day without fogge or raine, and windes bad, much to the Weſt northweſt, whereby we were driuen Southward vnto 41 degrees ſcarſe.

About this time of the yere the winds are commonly Weſt towards the Newfound land, keeping ordinarily within two points of Weſt to the South or to the North, whereby the courſe thither falleth out to be long and tedious after June, which in March, Aprill & May, hath bene performed out of England in 22 dayes and leſſe. We had winde alwayes ſo ſcant from Weſt northweſt, and from Weſt ſouthweſt againe, that our trauerſe was great, running South vnto 41 degrees almoſt, and afterward North into 51 degrees.

July 20.
Great fogges vpon the Ocean ſea Northward.

Alſo we were incombred with much fogge and miſts in maner palpable, in which we could not keepe ſo well together, but were diſſeuered, loſing the companie of the Swallow and the Squirrill vpon the 20 day of July, whom we met againe at ſeuerall places vpon the Newfound land coaſt the third of Auguſt, as ſhalbe declared in place conuenient.

July 27.

Saturday the 27 of July, we might deſcry not farre from vs, as it were mountaines of yce driuen vpon the ſea, being then in 50 degrees, which were caried Southward to the weather of vs: whereby may be coniectured that ſome current doth ſet that way from the North.

The banke in length vnknowen, ſtretcheth from North into South, in bredth 10. leagues, in depth of water vpon it 30 fadome.

Before we come to Newfound land about 50 leagues on this ſide, we paſſe the banke, which are high grounds riſing within the ſea and vnder water, yet deepe enough and without danger, being commonly not leſſe then 25 and 30 fadome water vpon them: the ſame (as it were ſome vaine of mountaines within the ſea) doe runne along, and from the Newfound land, beginning Northward about 52 or 53 degrees of latitude, & do extend into the South infinitly. The bredth of this banke is ſomewhere more, and ſomewhere leſſe: but we found the ſame about 10 leagues ouer, hauing ſounded both on this ſide thereof, and the other toward Newfound land, but found no ground with almoſt 200 fadome of line, both before & after we had paſſed the banke. The Portugals, and French chiefly, haue a notable trade of fiſhing vpon this banke, where are ſometimes an hundred or more ſailes of ſhips: who commonly beginne the fiſhing in Aprill, and haue ended by July. That fiſh is large, alwayes wet, hauing no land neere to drie, and is called Corre fiſh.

A great fiſhing vpon yͤ banke.

During the time of fiſhing, a man ſhall know without ſounding when he is vpon the banke, by the incredible multitude of ſea foule houering ouer the ſame, to pray vpon the offalles & garbiſh of fiſh throwen out by fiſhermen, and floting vpon the ſea.

Abundance of foules.

July 30.

Firſt ſight of land.

Upon Tueſday the 11 of June, we forſooke the coaſt of England. So againe Tueſday the 30 of July (ſeuen weekes after) we got ſight of land, being immediatly embayed in the Grand bay, or ſome other great bay: the certainty whereof we could not iudge, ſo great haſe and fogge did hang vpon the coaſt, as neither we might diſcerne the land well, nor take the ſunnes height. But by our beſt computation we were then in the 51 degrees of latitude.

Forſaking this bay and vncomfortable coaſt (nothing appearing vnto vs but hideous rockes and mountaines, bare of trees, and voide of any greene herbe) we followed the coaſt to the South, with weather faire and cleare.

Iland and a foule named Penguin.

We had ſight of an Iland named Penguin, of a foule there breeding in abundance, almoſt incredible, which cannot flie, their wings not able to carry their body, being very large (not much leſſe then a gooſe) and exceeding fat: which the French men vſe to take without difficulty vpon that Iland, and to barrell them vp with ſalt. But for lingering of time we had made vs there the like prouiſion.

An Iland called Baccalaos, of the fiſh taken there.

Trending this coaſt, we came to the Iland called Baccalaos, being not paſt two leagues from the maine: to the South therof lieth Cape S. Francis, 5. leagues diſtant from Baccalaos, between which goeth in a great bay, by the vulgar ſort called the bay of Conception. Here we met with the Swallow againe, whom we had loſt in the fogge, and all her men altered into other apparell: wherof it ſeemed their ſtore was ſo amended, that for ioy and congratulation of our meeting, they ſpared not to caſt vp into the aire and ouerboord, their caps & hats in good plenty. The Captaine albeit himſelfe was very honeſt and religious, yet was he not appointed of men to his humor and deſert: who for the moſt part were ſuch as had bene by vs ſurpriſed vpon the narrow ſeas of England, being pirats and had taken at that inſtant certaine Frenchmen laden, one barke with wines, and another with ſalt. Both which we reſcued, & tooke the man of warre with all her men, which was the ſame ſhip now called the Swallow, following ſtill their kind ſo oft, as (being ſeparated from the Generall) they found opportunitie to robbe and ſpoile. And becauſe Gods iuſtice did follow the ſame company, euen to deſtruction, and to the ouerthrow alſo of the Captaine (though not conſenting to their miſdemeanor) I will not conceale any thing that maketh to the manifeſtation and approbation of his iudgements, for examples of others, perſwaded that God more ſharpely tooke reuenge vpon them, and hath tolerated longer as great outrage in others: by how much theſe went vnder protection of his cauſe and religion, which was then pretended.

Miſdemeanor of them in the Swallow.

Therefore vpon further enquiry it was knowen, how this cōpany met with a barke returning home after the fiſhing with his fraight: and becauſe the men in the Swallow were very neere ſcanted of victuall, and chiefly of apparell, doubtful withall where or when to find and meete with their Admiral, they beſought the captaine they might go aboord this Newlander, only to borrow what might be ſpared, the rather becauſe the ſame was bound homeward. Leaue giuen, not without charge to deale fauorably, they came aboord the fiſherman, whō they rifled of tackle, ſailes, cables, victuals, & the men of their apparell: not ſparing by torture (winding cords about their heads) to draw out elſe what they thought good. This done with expedition (like men ſkilfull in ſuch miſchiefe) as they tooke their cocke boat to go aboord their own ſhip, it was ouerwhelmed in the ſea, and certaine of theſe men there drowned: the reſt were preſerued euen by thoſe ſilly ſoules whom they had before ſpoyled, who ſaued and deliuered them aboord the Swallow. What became afterward of the poore Newlander, perhaps deſtitute of ſayles and furniture ſufficient to carry them home (whither they had not leſſe to runne then 700 leagues) God alone knoweth, who tooke vengeance not long after of the reſt that eſcaped at this inſtant; to reueale the fact, and iuſtifie to the world Gods iudgements inflicted vpon them, as ſhalbe declared in place conuenient.

Engliſh ſhips are the ſtrongeſt and Admirals of other fleetes, fiſhing vpon the South parts of Newfound land.

Thus after we had met with the Swallow, we held on our courſe Southward, vntill we came againſt the harbor called S. Iohn, about 5. leagues from the former Cape of S. Francis: where before the entrance into the harbor, we found alſo the Frigate or Squirrill lying at anker. Whom the Engliſh marchants (that were & alwaies be Admirals by turnes interchangeably ouer the fleetes of fiſhermen within the ſame harbor) would not permit to enter into the harbor. Glad of ſo happy meeting both of the Swallow and Frigate in one day (being Saturday the 3. of Auguſt) we made readie our fights, & prepared to enter the harbor, any reſiſtance to the contrarie notwithſtanding, there being within of all nations, to the number of 36 ſailes. But firſt the Generall diſpatched a boat to giue them knowledge of his comming for no ill intent, hauing Commiſſion from her Maieſtie for his voiage he had in hand. And immediatly we followed with a ſlacke gale, and in the very entrance (which is but narrow, not aboue 2 buts length) the Admirall fell vpon a rocke on the larboord ſide by great ouerſight, in that the weather was faire, the rocke much aboue water faſt by the ſhore, where neither went any ſea gate. But we found ſuch readineſſe in the Engliſh Marchants to helpe vs in that danger, that without delay there were brought a number of boates, which towed off the ſhip, and cleared her of danger.

Hauing taken place conuenient in the road, we let fall ankers, the Captaines and Maſters repairing aboord our Admirall: whither alſo came immediatly the Maſters and owners of the fiſhing fleete of Engliſhmen, to vnderſtand the Generals intent and cauſe of our arriuall there. They were all ſatiſfied when the General had ſhewed his commiſſion, and purpoſe to take poſſeſſion of thoſe lands to the behalfe of the crowne of England, and the aduancement of Chriſtian religion in thoſe Paganiſh regions, requiring but their lawfull ayde for repayring of his fleete, and ſupply of ſome neceſſaries, ſo farre as conueniently might be afforded him, both out of that and other harbors adioyning. In lieu whereof, he made offer to gratifie them with any fauour and priuiledge, which vpon their better aduiſe they ſhould demand, the like being not to bee obteyned hereafter for greater price. So crauing expedition of his demand, minding to proceede further South without long detention in thoſe partes, he diſmiſſed them, after promiſe giuen of their beſt indeuour to ſatiſfie ſpeedily his ſo reaſonable requeſt. The marchants with their Maſters departed, they cauſed foorthwith to be diſcharged all the great Ordinance of their fleete in token of our welcome.

It was further determined that euery ſhip of our fleete ſhould deliuer vnto the marchants and Maſters of that harbour a note of all their wants: which done, the ſhips aſwell Engliſh as ſtrangers, were taxed at an eaſie rate to make ſupply. And beſides, Commiſſioners were appointed, part of our owne companie and part of theirs, to go into other harbours adioyning (for our Engliſh marchants command all there) to leauie our prouiſion: whereunto the Portugals (aboue other nations) did moſt willingly and liberally contribute. Inſomuch as we were preſented (aboue our allowance) with wines, marmalads, moſt fine ruſke or biſket, ſweet oyles and ſundry delicacies. Alſo we wanted not of freſh ſalmons, trouts, lobſters and other freſh fiſh brought daily vnto vs. Moreouer as the maner is in their fiſhing, euery weeke to chooſe their Admirall a new, or rather they ſucceede in orderly courſe, and haue weekely their Admirals feaſt ſolemnized: euen ſo the General, Captaines and maſters of our fleete were continually inuited and feaſted. To grow ſhort, in our abundance at home, the intertainment had bene delightfull, but after our wants and tedious paſſage through the Ocean, it ſeemed more acceptable and of greater contentation, by how much the ſame was vnexpected in that deſolate corner of the world: where at other times of the yeare, wilde beaſts and birds haue only the fruition of all thoſe countries, which now ſeemed a place very populous and much frequented.

Good order taken by Engliſh marchãts for our ſupply in Newfound land.

Good entertainment in Newfound land.

No Sauages in the South part of Newfound land.

The next morning being Sunday and the 4 of Auguſt, the Generall and his company were brought on land by Engliſh marchants, who ſhewed vnto vs their accuſtomed walks vnto a place they call the Garden. But nothing appeared more then Nature it ſelfe without art: who confuſedly hath brought foorth roſes abundantly, wilde, but odoriferous, and to ſenſe very comfortable. Alſo the like plentie of raſpis berries, which doe grow in euery place.

Auguſt 4.

Munday following, the General had his tent ſet vp, who being accompanied with his own followers, ſommoned the marchants and maſters, both Engliſh and ſtrangers to be preſent at his taking poſſeſſion of thoſe Countries. Before whom openly was read & interpreted vnto the ſtrangers his Commiſſion: by vertue whereof he tooke poſſeſſion in the ſame harbour of S. Iohn, and 200 leagues euery way, inueſted the Queenes Maieſtie with the title and dignitie thereof, had deliuered vnto him (after the cuſtome of England) a rod & a turffe of the ſame ſoile, entring poſſeſſion alſo for him, his heires and aſſignes for euer: And ſignified vnto al men, that from that time forward, they ſhould take the ſame land as a territorie appertaining to the Queene of England, and himſelfe authoriſed vnder her Maieſtie to poſſeſſe and enioy it, And to ordaine lawes for the gouernement thereof, agreeable (ſo neere as conueniently might be) vnto the lawes of England: vnder which all people comming thither hereafter, either to inhabite, or by way of traffique, ſhould be ſubiected and gouerned. And eſpecially at the ſame time for a beginning, he propoſed & deliuered three lawes to be in force immediatly. That is to ſay: the firſt for Religion, which in publique exerciſe ſhould be according to the Church of England. The 2. for maintenance of her Maieſties right and poſſeſſion of thoſe territories, againſt which if any thing were attempted preiudiciall, the partie or parties offending ſhould be adiudged and executed as in caſe of high treaſon, according to the lawes of England. The 3. if any perſon ſhould vtter words ſounding to the diſhonour of her Maieſtie, he ſhould looſe his eares, and haue his ſhip and goods confiſcate.

Auguſt 5.

Poſſeſſion taken.

Three lawes.

Theſe contents publiſhed, obedience was promiſed by generall voyce and conſent of the multitude aſwell of Engliſhmen as ſtrangers, praying for continuance of this poſſeſſion and gouernement begun. After this, the aſſembly was diſmiſſed. And afterward were erected not farre from that place the Armes of England ingrauen in lead, and infixed vpon a pillar of wood. Yet further and actually to eſtabliſh this poſſeſſion taken in the right of her Maieſtie, and to the behoofe of Sir Humfrey Gilbert knight, his heires and aſſignes for euer: the Generall granted in fee farme diuers parcels of land lying by the water ſide, both in this harbor of S. Iohn, and elſewhere, which was to the owners a great commoditie, being thereby aſſured (by their proper inheritance) of grounds conuenient to dreſſe and to drie their fiſh, whereof many times before they did faile, being preuented by them that came firſt into the harbor. For which grounds they did couenant to pay a certaine rent and ſeruice vnto ſir Humfrey Gilbert, his heires or aſſignes for euer, and yeerely to maintaine poſſeſſion of the ſame, by themſelues or their aſſignes.

Actuall poſſeſſion maintained in Newfound land.

Now remained only to take in prouiſion granted, according as euery ſhippe was taxed, which did fiſh vpon the coaſt adioyning. In the meane while, the Generall appointed men vnto their charge: ſome to repaire and trim the ſhips, others to attend in gathering togither our ſupply and prouiſions: others to ſearch the commodities and ſingularities of the countrey, to be found by ſea or land, and to make relation vnto the Generall what eyther themſelues could knowe by their owne trauaile and experience, or by good intelligence of Engliſh men or ſtrangers, who had longeſt frequented the ſame coaſt. Alſo ſome obſerued the eleuation of the pole, and drewe plats of the countrey exactly graded. And by that I could gather by each mans ſeuerall relation, I haue drawen a briefe deſcription of the Newfound land, with the commodities by ſea or lande alreadie made, and ſuch alſo as are in poſſibilitie and great likelihood to be made: Neuertheleſſe the Cardes and plats that were drawing, with the due gradation of the harbors, bayes, and capes, did periſh with the Admirall: wherefore in the deſcription following, I muſt omit the particulars of ſuch things.

A briefe relation of the New found lande, and the commodities thereof.

New found land is al Ilands or broke lands

Goodly roads and harbours.

That which we doe call the Newfound land, and the Frenchmen Bacalaos, is an Iland, or rather (after the opinion of ſome) it conſiſteth of ſundry Ilands and broken lands, ſituate in the North regions of America, vpon the gulfe and entrance of the great riuer called S. Laurence in Canada. Into the which, nauigation may be made both on the South and North ſide of this Iland. The land lyeth South and North, containing in length betweene three & 400 miles, accounting from cape Race (which is in 46 degrees 25 minuts) vnto the Grand bay in 52 degrees of Septentrionall latitude. The Iland round about hath very many goodly bayes and harbors, ſafe roads for ſhips, the like not to be found in any part of the knowen world.

New found land is habitable.

Cold by accidentall meanes

The common opinion that is had of intemperature & extreme cold that ſhould be in this countrey, as of ſome part it may be verified, namely the North, where I grant it is more colde then in countries of Europe, which are vnder the ſame eleuation: euen ſo it cannot ſtand with reaſon and nature of the clime, that the South parts ſhould be ſo intemperate as the brute hath gone. For as the ſame doe lie vnder the climats of Briton, Aniou, Poictou in France, betweene 46 and 49 degrees, ſo can they not ſo much differ from the temperature of thoſe countries: vnleſſe vpon the outcoaſt lying open vnto the Ocean and ſharpe windes, it muſt in deede be ſubiect to more colde, then further within the land, where the mountaines are interpoſed, as walles and bulwarkes, to defend and to reſiſt the aſperitie and rigor of the ſea and weather. Some hold opinion, that the Newfound land might be the more ſubiect to cold, by how much it lyeth high and neere vnto the middle region. I grant that not in Newfound land alone, but in Germany, Italy and Afrike, euen vnder the Equinoctiall line, the mountaines are extreme cold, and ſeeldome vncouered of ſnow, in their culme and higheſt tops, which commeth to paſſe by the ſame reaſon that they are extended towards the middle region: yet in the countries lying beneth them, it is found quite contrary. Euen ſo all hils hauing their diſcents, the valleis alſo and low grounds muſt be likewiſe hot or temperate, as the clime doeth giue in Newfound land: though I am of opinion that the Sunnes reflection is much cooled, and cannot be ſo forcible in the Newfound land, nor generally throughout America, as in Europe or Afrike: by how much the Sunne in his diurnall courſe from Eaſt to Weſt, paſſeth ouer (for the moſt part) dry land and ſandy countries, before he arriueth at the Weſt of Europe or Afrike, whereby his motion increaſeth heate, with little or no qualification by moyſt vapours. Where, on the contrarie he paſſeth from Europe and Afrike vnto America ouer the Ocean, from whence it draweth and carieth with him abundance of moyſt vapours, which doe qualifie and infeeble greatly the Sunnes reuerberation vpon this countrey chiefly of Newfound land, being ſo much to the Northward. Neuertheleſſe (as I ſayd before) the cold cannot be ſo intollerable vnder the latitude of 46 47 and 48 (eſpeciall within land) that it ſhould be vnhabitable, as ſome doe ſuppoſe, ſeeing alſo there are very many people more to the North by a great deale. And in theſe South parts there be certaine beaſtes, Ounces or Leopards, and birdes in like maner which in the Sommer we haue ſeene, not heard of in countries of extreme and vehement coldneſſe. Beſides, as in the monethes of Iune, Iuly, Auguſt and September, the heate is ſomewhat more then in England at thoſe ſeaſons: ſo men remaining vpon the South parts neere vnto Cape Rece, vntill after Hollandtide, haue not found the cold ſo extreme, nor much differing from the temperature of England. Thoſe which haue arriued there after Nouember and December, haue found the ſnow exceeding deepe, whereat no maruaile, conſidering the ground vpon the coaſt, is rough and vneuen, and the ſnow is driuen into the places moſt declyning, as the like is to be ſeene with vs. The like depth of ſnow happily ſhall not be found within land vpon the playner countries, which alſo are defended by the mountaines, breaking off the violence of winds and weather. But admitting extraordinary cold in thoſe South parts, aboue that with vs here: it can not be ſo great as in Swedland, much leſſe in Moſcouia or Ruſſia: yet are the ſame countries very populous, and the rigor of cold is diſpenſed with by the commoditie of Stoues, warme clothing, meats and drinkes: all which neede not to be wanting in the Newfound land, if we had intent there to inhabite.

Commodities.

In the South parts we found no inhabitants, which by all lilkelihood haue abandoned thoſe coaſtes, the ſame being ſo much frequented by Chriſtians: But in the North are ſauages altogether harmeleſſe. Touching the commodities of this countrie, ſeruing either for ſuſtentation of inhabitants, or for maintenance of traffique, there are & may be made diuers: ſo ẏ it ſeemeth Nature hath recompenced that only defect and incommoditie of ſome ſharpe cold, by many benefits: viz. With incredible quantitie, and no leſſe varietie of kindes of fiſh in the ſea and freſh waters, as Trouts, Salmons and other fiſh to vs vnknowen: Alſo Cod, which alone draweth many nations thither, and is become the moſt famous fiſhing of the world. Abundance of Whales, for which alſo is a very great trade in the bayes of Placentia & the Grand bay, where is made Trane oiles of the Whale: Herring the largeſt that haue bene heard of, and exceeding the Malſtrond herring of Norway: but hitherto was neuer benefit taken of the herring fiſhing. There are ſundry other fiſh very delicate, namely the Bonito, Lobſters, Turbut, with others infinite not ſought after: Oyſters hauing pearle but not orient in colour: I tooke it by reaſon they were not gathered in ſeaſon.

Fiſh of ſea and freſh water.

Concerning the inland commodities, aſwel to be drawen from this land, as from the exceeding large countries adioyning: there is nothing which our Eaſt and Northerly countries of Europe doe yeelde, but the like alſo may be made in them as plentifully by time and induſtrie: Namely, roſen, pitch, tarre, ſopeaſhes, dealboord, maſtes for ſhips, hides, furres, flaxe, hempe, corne, cables, cordage, linnen-cloth, mettals and many more. All which the countries will afford, and the ſoyle is apt to yeelde.

The trees for the moſt in thoſe South parts, are Firretrees, Pine and Cypreſſe, all yeelding Gumme and Turpentine.

Cherrie trees bearing fruit no bigger then a ſmall peaſe. Alſo peare trees, but fruitleſſe. Other trees of ſome ſorts to vs vnknowen.

The ſoyle along the coaſt is not deepe of earth, bringing foorth abundantly peaſon ſmall, yet good feeding for cattel. Roſes paſſing ſweet, like vnto our muſke roſes in forme, raſpaſes, a berry which we call Harts, good and holeſome to eat. The graſſe and herbe doth fat ſheepe in very ſhort ſpace, proued by Engliſh marchants which haue caried ſheepe thither for freſh victuall and had them raiſed exceeding fat in leſſe then three weekes. Peaſon which our countreymen haue ſowen in the time of May, haue come vp faire, and bene gathered in the beginning of Auguſt, of which our Generall had a preſent acceptable for the rareneſſe, being the firſt fruits comming vp by art and induſtrie in that deſolate and diſhabited land.

Lakes or pooles of freſh water, both on the tops of mountaines and in the vallies. In which are ſaid to be muſkles not vnlike to haue pearle, which I had put in triall, if by miſchance falling vnto me, I had not bene letted from that and other good experiments I was minded to make.

Foule both of water and land in great plentie and diuerſitie. All kind of greene foule: Others as bigge as Buſtards, yet not the ſame. A great white foule called of ſome a Gaunt.

Vpon the land diuers ſorts of haukes, as faulcons, and others by report: Partridges moſt plentifull larger then ours, gray and white of colour, and rough footed like doues, which our men after one flight did kill with cudgels, they were ſo fat and vnable to flie. Birds ſome like blackbirds, linnets, canary birds, and other very ſmall. Beaſts of ſundry kindes, red deare, buffles or a beaſt, as it ſeemeth by the tract & foote very large in maner of an oxe. Beares, ounces or leopards, ſome greater & ſome leſſer, wolues, foxes, which to the Northward a litle further are black, whoſe furre is eſteemed in ſome Countries of Europe very rich. Otters, beuers, marternes: And in the opinion of moſt men that ſaw it, the Generall had brought vnto him a Sable aliue, which he ſent vnto his brother ſir Iohn Gilbert knight of Deuonſhire: but it was neuer deliuered, as after I vnderſtood. We could not obſerue the hundreth part of creatures in thoſe vnhabited lands: but theſe mentioned may induce vs to glorifie the magnificent God, who hath ſuperabundantly repleniſhed the earth with creatures ſeruing for the vſe of man, though man hath not vſed the fift part of the ſame, which the more doth aggrauate the fault and fooliſh ſlouth in many of our nation, chuſing rather to liue indirectly, and very miſerably to liue & die within this realme peſtered with inhabitants, then to aduenture as becommeth men, to obtaine an habitation in thoſe remote lands, in which Nature very prodigally doth miniſter vnto mens endeuours, and for art to worke vpon.

Newfound land doth miniſter commodities abundantly for art & induſtrie.

For beſides theſe alreadie recounted and infinite moe, the mountaines generally make ſhew of minerall ſubſtance: Iron very common, lead, and ſomewhere copper. I will not auerre of richer mettals: albeit by the circumſtances following, more then hope may be conceiued thereof.

For amongſt other charges giuen to inquire out the ſingularities of this countrey, the Generall was moſt curious in the ſearch of mettals, commanding the minerall man and refiner, eſpecially to be diligent. The ſame was a Saxon borne, honeſt, and religious, named Daniel. Who after ſearch brought at firſt ſome ſort of Ore, ſeeming rather to be yron then other mettall. The next time he found Ore, which with no ſmal ſhew of contentment he deliuered vnto the General, vſing proteſtation, that if ſiluer were the thing which might ſatiſfie the Generall & his followers, there it was, aduiſing him to ſeeke no further: the perill whereof he vndertooke vpon his life (as deare vnto him as the Crowne of England vnto her Maieſtie, that I may vſe his owne words) if it fell not out accordingly.

Siluer Ore brought vnto the Generall.

My ſelfe at this inſtant liker to die then to liue, by a miſchance, could not follow this confident opinion of our refiner to my owne ſatiſfaction: but afterward demanding our Generals opinion therein, and to haue ſome part of the Ore, he replied: Content your ſelfe, I haue ſeene ynough, and were it but to ſatiſfie my priuate humor, I would proceede no further. The promiſe vnto my friends, and neceſſitie to bring alſo the South countries within compaſſe of my Patent neere expired, as we haue alreadie done theſe North parts, do only perſwade me further. And touching the Ore, I haue ſent it aboord, whereof I would haue no ſpeech to be made ſo long as we remaine within harbor: here being both Portugals, Biſcains and Frenchmen not farre off, from whom muſt be kept any bruit or muttering of ſuch matter. When we are at ſea proofe ſhalbe made: if it be to our deſire, we may returne the ſooner hither againe. Whoſe anſwere I iudged reaſonable, and contenting me well: wherewith I will conclude this narration and deſcription of the Newfound land, and proceede to the reſt of our voyage, which ended tragically.

Reaſons why no further ſearch was made for the ſiluer mine.

Miſdemeanor in our companie.

While the better ſort of vs were ſeriouſly occupied in repairing our wants, and contriuing of matters for the commoditie of our voyage: others of another ſort & diſpoſition were plotting of miſchiefe. Some caſting to ſteale away our ſhipping by night, watching oportunitie by the Generals and Captaines lying on the ſhore: whoſe conſpiracies diſcouered, they were preuented. Others drew togither in company, and caried away out of the harbors adioyning, a ſhip laden with fiſh, ſetting the poore men on ſhore. A great many more of our people ſtole into the woods to hide themſelues, attending time and meanes to returne home by ſuch ſhipping as daily departed from the coaſt. Some were ſicke of fluxes, and many dead: and in briefe, by one meanes or other our company was diminiſhed, and many by the Generall licenſed to returne home. Inſomuch as after we had reuiewed our people, reſolued to ſee an end of our voyage, we grewe ſcant of men to furniſh all our ſhipping: it ſeemed good therefore vnto the Generall to leaue the Swallowe with ſuch prouiſion as might be ſpared for tranſporting home the ſicke people.

God brought togither theſe men into the ſhip ordained to periſh, who before had cõmitted ſuch outrage.

The Captaine of the Delight or Admirall returned into England, in whoſe ſtead was appointed Captaine Maurice Browne, before Captaine of the Swallow: who alſo brought with him into the Delight all his men of the Swallow, which before haue bene noted of outrage perpetrated and committed vpon fiſhermen there met at ſea.

Why ſir Humf. Gilbert went in the Frigate.

The Generall made choiſe to goe in his frigate the Squirrell (whereof the Captaine alſo was amongſt them that returned into England) the ſame Frigate being moſt conuenient to diſcouer vpon the coaſt, and to ſearch into euery harbor or creeke, which a great ſhip could not doe. Therefore the Frigate was prepared with her nettings & fights, and ouercharged with baſes and ſuch ſmall Ordinance, more to giue a ſhew, then with iudgement to foreſee vnto the ſafetie of her and the men, which afterward was an occaſion alſo of their ouerthrow.

Liberalitie of the Portugals.

Now hauing made readie our ſhipping, that is to ſay, the Delight, the golden Hinde, and the Squirrell, and put aboord our prouiſion, which was wines, bread or ruſke, fiſh wette and drie, ſweete oiles: beſides many other, as marmalades, figs, lymmons barrelled, and ſuch like: Alſo we had other neceſſary prouiſions for trimming our ſhips, nets and lines to fiſh withall, boates or pinneſſes fit for diſcouery. In briefe, we were ſupplied of our wants commodiouſly, as if we had bene in a Countrey or ſome Citie populous and plentifull of all things.

Auguſt 20
S. Iohns in 47 deg. 40 min.

We departed from this harbour of S. Iohns vpon Tueſday the twentieth of Auguſt, which we found by exact obſeruation to be in 47 degrees 40 minutes. And the next day by night we were at Cape Race, 25 leagues from the ſame harborough.

Cape Race in 46 degrees 25 minutes.

This Cape lyeth South Southweſt from S. Iohns: it is a low land, being off from the Cape about halfe a league: within the ſea riſeth vp a rocke againſt the point of the Cape, which thereby is eaſily knowen: It is in latitude 46 degrees 25 minutes.

Vnder this Cape we were becalmed a ſmall time, during which we layd out hookes and lines to take Codde, and drew in leſſe then two houres, fiſh ſo large and in ſuch abundance, that many dayes after we fed vpon no other prouiſion.

Fiſh large and plentifull.

From hence we ſhaped our courſe vnto the Iſland of Sablon, if conueniently it would ſo fall out, alſo directly to Cape Briton.

Sablon lieth to the ſea-ward of Cape Briton about 25 leagues, whither we were determined to goe vpon intelligence we had of a Portugal, (during our abode in S. Iohns) who was himſelfe preſent, when the Portugals (aboue thirty yeeres paſt) did put into the ſame Iſland both Neat and Swine to breede, which were ſince exceedingly multiplied. This ſeemed vnto vs very happy tidings, to haue in an Iſland lying ſo neere vnto the maine, which we intended to plant vpon, ſuch ſtore of cattell, whereby we might at all times conueniently be relieued of victuall, and serued of ſtore for breed.

Cattel in the Iſle of Sablon.

In this courſe we trended along the coaſt, which from Cape Race ſtretcheth into the Northweſt, making a bay which ſome called Trepaſſa. Then it goeth out againe toward the Weſt, and maketh a point, which with Cape Race lieth in maner Eaſt and Weſt. But this point inclineth to the North: to the Weſt of which goeth in the bay of Placentia. We ſent men on land to take view of the ſoyle along this coaſt, whereof they made good report, and ſome of them had wil to be planted there. They ſaw Peaſe growing in great abundance euery where.

Good ſoile.

The diſtance betweene Cape Race and Cape Briton is 87 leagues. In which Nauigation we ſpent 8 dayes, hauing many times the wind indifferent good: yet could we neuer attaine ſight of any land all that time, ſeeing we were hindred by the current. At laſt we fell into ſuch flats and dangers, that hardly any of vs eſcaped: where neuertheleſſe we loſt our Admiral with al the men and prouiſion, not knowing certainly the place. Yet for inducing men of ſkill to make coniecture, by our courſe and way we held from Cape Race thither (that thereby the flats and dangers may be inſerted in ſea Cards, for warning to others that may follow the ſame courſe hereafter) I haue ſet downe the beſt reckonings that were kept by expert men, William Cox Maſter of the Hind, and Iohn Paul his mate, both of Limehouſe.

Our courſe we held in clearing vs of theſe flats was Eaſtſoutheaſt, and Southeaſt, and South 14 leagues with a marueilous ſcant winde.

The maner how our Admirall was loſt.

August 27. Vpon Tewſday the 27 of Auguſt, toward the euening, our Generall cauſed them in his frigat to ſound, who found white ſande at 35 fadome, being then in latitude about 44 degrees.

Wedneſday toward night the wind came South, and wee bare with the land all that night, Weſtnorthweſt, contrary to the mind of maſter Cox: neuertheleſſe wee followed the Admirall, depriued of power to preuent a miſchiefe, which by no contradiction could be brought to hold other courſe, alleaging they could not make the ſhip to worke better, nor to lie otherwaies.

Predictions before the wracke. The euening was faire and pleaſant, yet not without token of ſtorme to enſue, and moſt part of this Wedneſday night, like the Swanne that ſingeth before her death, they in the Admiral, or Delight, continued in ſounding of Trumpets, with Drummes, and Fifes: alſo winding the Cornets, Haughtboyes: and in the end of their iolitie, left with the battell and ringing of dolefull knels.

Towards the euening alſo we caught in the Golden Hinde a very mighty Porpoſe, with a harping yron, hauing firſt ſtriken diuers of them, and brought away part of their fleſh, ſticking vpon the yron, but could recouer onely that one. Theſe alſo paſſing through the Ocean, in heardes, did portend ſtorme. I omit to recite friuolous reportes by them in the Frigat, of ſtrange voyces, the ſame night, which ſcarred ſome from the helme.

Loſſe of our Admirall. Thurſday the 29 of Auguſt, the wind roſe, and blew vehemently at South and by Eaſt, bringing withal raine, and thicke miſt, ſo that we could not ſee a cable length before vs. And betimes in the morning we were altogether runne and folded in amongſt flats and ſands, amongſt which we found ſhoale and deepe in euery three or foure ſhippes length, after wee began to ſound: but firſt we were vpon them vnawares, vntill maſter Cox looking out, diſcerned (in his iudgement) white cliffes, crying (land) withall, though we could not afterward deſcrie any land, it being very likely the breaking of the ſea white, which ſeemed to be white cliffes, through the haze and and thicke weather.

Immediatly tokens were giuen vnto the Delight, to caſt about to ſeaward, which, being the greater ſhip, and of burden 120 tunnes, was yet formoſt vpon the breach, keeping ſo ill watch, that they knew not the danger, before they felt the ſame, too late to recouer it: for preſently the Admirall ſtrooke a ground, and had ſoone after her ſterne and hinder partes beaten in pieces: whereupon the reſt (that is to ſay, the Frigat, in which was the Generall and the Golden Hinde) caſt about Eaſtſoutheaſt, bearing to the South, euen for our liues into the windes eye, becauſe that way caried vs to the ſeaward. Making out from this danger, wee ſounded one while ſeuen fadome, then fiue fadome, then foure fadome and leſſe, againe deeper, immediatly foure fadome, then but three fadome, the ſea going mightily and high. At laſt we recouered (God be thanked) in ſome deſpaire, to ſea roome enough.

In this diſtreſſe, wee had vigilant eye vnto the Admirall, whom wee ſawe caſt away, without power to giue the men ſuccour, neither could we eſpie any of the men that leaped ouerboord to ſaue themſelues, either in the ſame Pinneſſe or Cocke, or vpon rafters, and ſuch like meanes, preſenting themſelues to men in thoſe extremities: for we deſired to ſaue the men by euery poſſible meanes. But all in vaine, ſith God had determined their ruine: yet all that day, and part of the next, we beat vp and downe as neere vnto the wracke as was poſſible for vs, looking out, if by good hap we might eſpie any of them.

This was a heauy and grieuous euent, to loſe at one blow our chiefe ſhippe fraighted with great prouiſion, gathered together with much trauell, care, long time, and difficultie. But more was the loſſe of our men, which periſhed to the number almoſt of a hundreth ſoules. Stephanus Parmenius a learned Hungarian. Amongſt whom was drowned a learned man, an Hungarian, borne in the citie of Buda, called thereof Budæus, who of pietie and zeale to good attempts, aduentured in this action, minding to record in the Latine tongue, the geſts and things worthy of remembrance, happening in this diſcouerie, to the honour of our nation, the ſame being adorned with the eloquent ſtile of this Orator, and rare Poet of our time.

Daniel a refiner of metals. Here alſo periſhed our Saxon Refiner and Diſcouerer of ineſtimable riches, as it was left amongſt ſome of vs in vndoubted hope.

No leſſe heauy was the loſſe of the Captaine Maurice Browne, a vertuous, honeſt, and diſ creete Gentleman, ouerſeene onely in libertie giuen late before to men, that ought to haue bene reſtrained, who ſhewed himſelfe a man reſolued, and neuer vnprepared for death, as by his laſt act of this tragedie appeared, by report of them that eſcaped this wracke miraculouſly, as ſhall bee hereafter declared. For when all hope was paſt of recouering the ſhip, and that men began to giue ouer, and to ſaue themſelues, the Captaine was aduiſed before to ſhift alſo for his life, by the Pinneſſe at the ſterne of the ſhip: but refuſing that counſell, he would not giue example with the firſt to leaue the ſhippe, but vſed all meanes to exhort his people not to deſpaire, nor ſo to leaue off their labour, chooſing rather to die, then to incurre infamie, by forſaking his charge, which then might be thought to haue periſhed through his default, ſhewing an ill preſident vnto his men, by leauing the ſhip firſt himſelfe. With this mind hee mounted vpon the higheſt decke, where hee attended imminent death, and vnauoidable: how long, I leaue it to God, who withdraweth not his comfort from his ſeruants at ſuch times.

In the meane ſeaſon, certaine, to the number of fourteene perſons, leaped into a ſmall Pinneſſe (the bignes of a Thames barge, which was made in the New found land) cut off the rope wherewith it was towed, and committed themſelues to Gods mercy, amiddeſt the ſtorme, and rage of ſea and windes, deſtitute of foode, not ſo much as a droppe of freſh water. The boate ſeeming ouercharged in foule weather with company, Edward Headly a valiant ſouldier, and well reputed of his companie, preferring the greater to the leſſer, thought better that ſome of them periſhed then all, made this motion to caſt lots, and them to bee throwen ouerboord vpon whom the lots fell, thereby to lighten the boate, which other wayes ſeemed impoſſible to liue, offred himſelfe with the firſt, content to take his aduenture gladly: which neuertheles Richard Clarke, that was Maſter of the Admirall, and one of this number, refuſed, aduiſing to abide Gods pleaſure, who was able to ſaue all, as well as a few.

A wonderfull ſcape and deliuerance.
A great diſtreſſe.
A deſperate reſolution.

The boate was caried before the wind, continuing ſixe dayes and nights in the Ocean, and arriued at laſt with the men (aliue, but weake) vpon the New found land, ſauing that the foreſayd Headly, (who had bene late ſicke) and another called of vs Braſile, of his trauell into thoſe Countreys, died by the way, famiſhed, and leſſe able to holde out, then thoſe of better health. For ſuch was theſe poore mens extremitie, in cold and wet, to haue no better ſuſtenance then their owne vrine, for ſixe dayes together.

Two men famiſhed.

Thus whom God deliuered from drowning, hee appointed to be famiſhed, who doth giue limits to mans times, and ordaineth the manner and circumſtance of dying: whom againe he will preſerue, neither Sea, nor famine can confound. For thoſe that arriued vpon the Newe found land, were brought into France by certaine French men, then being vpon that coaſt.

After this heauie chance, wee continued in beating the ſea vp and downe, expecting when the weather would cleere vp, that we might yet beare in with the land, which we iudged not farre off, either the continent or ſome Iſland. For we many times, and in ſundry places found ground at 50,45,40 fadomes, and leſſe. The ground comming vpon our lead, being ſometimes oazie ſand, and otherwhile a broad ſhell, with a little ſand about it.

Our people loſt courage dayly after this ill ſucceſſe, the weather continuing thicke and bluſtering, with increaſe of cold, Winter drawing on, which tooke from them all hope of amendement, ſetling an aſſurance of worſe weather to grow vpon vs euery day. The Leeſide of vs lay full of flats and dangers ineuitable, if the wind blew hard at South. Some againe doubted we were ingulfed in the Bay of S. Laurence, the coaſt full of dangers, and vnto vs vnknowen. But aboue all, prouiſion waxed ſcant, and hope of ſupply was gone, with loſſe of our Admirall.

Cauſes inforcing vs to returne home againe.

Thoſe in the Frigat were already pinched with ſpare allowance, and want of clothes chiefly: Whereupon they beſought the Generall to returne for England, before they all periſhed. And to them of the Golden Hinde, they made ſignes of their diſtreſſe, pointing to their mouthes, and to their clothes thinne and ragged: then immediately they alſo of the Golden Hinde, grew to be of the ſame opinion and deſire to returne home.

The former reaſons hauing alſo moued the Generall to haue compaſſion of his poore men, in whom he ſaw no want of good will, but of meanes fit to performe the action they came for, reſolued vpon retire: and calling the Captaine and Maſter of the Hinde, he yeelded them many reaſons, inforcing this vnexpected returne, withall proteſting himſelfe greatly ſatiſfied with that hee had ſeene, and knew already.

Reiterating theſe words, Be content, we haue ſeene enough, and take no care of expence paſt: I will ſet you foorth royally the next Spring, if God ſend vs ſafe home. Therefore I pray you let vs no longer ſtriue here, where we fight againſt the elements.

Omitting circumſtance, how vnwillingly the Captaine & Maſter of the Hinde condeſcended to this motion, his owne company can teſtifie: yet comforted with the Generals promiſes of a ſpeedie returne at Spring, and induced by other apparant reaſons, prouing an impoſſibilitie, to accompliſh the action at that time, it was concluded on all hands to retire.

August 31.

A monſter of the ſea.

So vpon Saturday in the afternoone the 31 of Auguſt, we changed our courſe, and returned backe for England, at which very inſtant, euen in winding about, there paſſed along betweene vs and towards the land which we now forſooke a very lion to our ſeeming, in ſhape, hair and colour, not ſwimming after the maner of a beaſt by moouing of his feete, but rather ſliding vpon the water with his whole body (excepting the legs) in ſight, neither yet diuing vnder, and againe riſing aboue the water, as the maner is, of Whales, Dolphins, Tuniſe, Porpoſes, and all other fiſh: but confidently ſhewing himſelfe aboue water without hiding: Notwithſtanding, we preſented our ſelues in open view and geſture to amaſe him, as all creatures will be commonly at a ſudden gaze and ſight of men. Thus he paſſed along turning his head to and fro, yawning and gaping wide, with ougly demonſtration of long teeth, and glaring eies, and to bidde vs a farewell (comming right againſt the Hinde) he ſent forth a horrible voyce, roaring or bellowing as doeth a lion, which ſpectacle wee all beheld ſo farre as we were able to diſcerne the ſame, as men prone to wonder at euery ſtrange thing, as this doubtleſſe was, to ſee a lion in the Ocean ſea, or fiſh in ſhape of a lion. What opinion others had thereof, and chiefly the Generall himſelfe, I forbeare to deliuer: But he tooke it for Bonum Omen, reioycing that he was to warre againſt ſuch an enemie, if it were the deuill.

The wind was large for England at our returne, but very high, and the ſea rough, inſomuch as the Frigat wherein the Generall went was almoſt ſwalowed vp.

September 2.

Munday in the afternoone we paſſed in the ſight of Cape Race, hauing made as much way in little more then two dayes and nights backe againe, as before wee had done in eight dayes from Cape Race, vnto the place where our ſhip periſhed. Which hindrance thitherward, and ſpeed backe againe, is to be imputed vnto the ſwift current, as well as to the winds, which we had more large in our returne.

This munday the Generall came aboord the Hind, to haue the Surgeon of the Hind to dreſſe his foote, which he hurt by treading vpon a naile: At what time we comforted ech other with hope of hard ſucceſſe to be all paſt, and of the good to come. So agreeing to cary out lights alwayes by night, that we might keepe together, he departed into his Frigat, being by no meanes to be intreated to tarie in the Hind, which had bene more for his ſecurity. Immediatly after followed a ſharpe ſtorme, which we ouerpaſſed for that time. Prayſed be God.

Our laſt conference with our Generall.

The weather faire, the Generall came aboord the Hind againe, to make merrie together with the Captaine, Maſter, and company, which was the laſt meeting, and continued there from morning vntill night. During which time there paſſed ſundry diſcourſes, touching affaires paſt, and to come, lamenting greatly the loſſe of his great ſhip, more of the men, but moſt of all of his bookes and notes, and what els I know not, for which hee was out of meaſure grieued, the ſame doubtles being ſome matter of more importance then his bookes, which I could not draw from him: yet by circumſtance I gathered, the ſame to be yͤ Ore which Daniel the Saxon had brought vnto him in the Mew found land. Whatſoeuer it was, the remembrance touched him ſo deepe, as not able to containe himſelfe, he beat his boy in great rage, euen at the ſame time, ſo long after the miſcarying of the great ſhip, becauſe vpon a faire day, when wee were becalmed vpon the coaſt of the New found land, neere vnto Cape Race, he ſent his boy aboord the Admirall, to fetch certaine things: amongſt which, this being chiefe, was yet forgotten and left behind. After which time he could neuer conueniently ſend againe aboord the great ſhip, much leſſe hee doubted her ruine ſo neere at hand.

Circumſtances to be well obſerued in our Generall, importing the Ore to be of a ſiluer mine.

Herein my opinion was better confirmed diuerſly, and by ſundry coniectures, which maketh me haue the greater hope of this rich Mine. For where as the Generall had neuer before good conceit of theſe North parts of the world: now his mind was wholly fixed vpon the Mew found land. And as before he refuſed not to grant aſſignements liberally to them that required the ſame into theſe North parts, now he became contrarily affected, refuſing to make any ſo large grants, eſpecially of S. Iohns, which certaine Engliſh merchants made ſuite for, offering to imploy their money and trauell vpon the ſame: yet neither by their owne ſuite, nor of others of his owne company, whom he ſeemed willing to pleaſure, it could be obtained.

Alſo laying downe his determination in the Spring following, for diſpoſing of his voyage then to be reattempted: he aſſigned the Captaine & Maſter of the Golden Hind, vnto the South diſcouery, and reſerued vnto himſelfe the North, affirming that this voyage had wonne his heart from the South, and that he was now become a Northerne man altogether.

Laſt, being demanded what meanes he had at his arriuall in England, to compaſſe the charges of ſo great preparation as he intended to make the next Spring: hauing determined vpon two fleetes, one for the South, another for the North: Leaue that to mee (hee replied) I will aſke a pennie of no man. I will bring good tidings vnto her Maieſty, who wil be ſo gracious, to lend me 10000 pounds, willing vs therefore to be of good cheere: for he did thanke God (he ſayd) with al his heart, for that he had ſeene, the ſame being enough for vs all, and that we needed not to ſeeke any further. And theſe laſt words he would often repeate, with demonſtration of great feruencie of mind, being himſelfe very confident, and ſetled in beliefe of ineſtimable good by this voyage: which the greater number of his followers neuertheles miſtruſted altogether, not being made partakers of thoſe ſecrets, which the Generall kept vnto himſelfe. Yet all of them that are liuing, may be witneſſes of his words and proteſtations, which ſparingly I haue deliuered.

Leauing the iſſue of this good hope vnto God, who knoweth the trueth only, & can at his good pleaſure bring the ſame to light: I will haſten to the end of this tragedie, which muſt be knit vp in the perſon of our Generall. And as it was Gods ordinance vpon him, euen ſo the vehement perſwaſion and intreatie of his friends could nothing auaile, to diuert him from a wilfull reſolution of going through in his Frigat, which was ouercharged vpon their deckes, with fights, nettings, and ſmall artillerie, too cumberſome for ſo ſmall a boate, that was to paſſe through the Ocean ſea at that ſeaſon of the yere, when by courſe we might expect much ſtorme of foule weather, whereof indeed we had enough.

Wilfulnes in the Generall.

But when he was intreated by the Captaine, Maſter, and other his well willers of the Hinde, not to venture in the Frigat, this was his anſwere: I will not forſake my little company going homeward, with whom I haue paſſed ſo many ſtormes, and perils. And in very trueth, hee was vrged to be ſo ouer hard, by hard reports giuen of him, that he was afraid of the ſea, albeit this was rather raſhnes, then aduiſed reſolution, to preferre the wind of a vaine report to the weight of his owne life.

A token of a good mind.

Seeing he would not bend to reaſon, he had prouiſion out of the Hinde, ſuch as was wanting aboord his Frigat. And ſo we committed him to Gods protection, & ſet him aboord his Pinneſſe, we being more then 300 leagues onward of our way home.

By that time we had brought the Iſlands of Açores South of vs, yet wee then keeping much to the North, vntil we had got into the height and eleuation of England: we met with very foule weather, and terrible ſeas, breaking ſhort and high Pyramid wiſe. The reaſon whereof ſeemed to proceede either of hilly grounds high and low within the ſea, (as we ſee hilles and dales vpon the land) vpon which the ſeas doe mount and fall: or elſe the cauſe proceedeth of diuerſitie of winds, ſhifting often in ſundry points: al which hauing power to moue the great Ocean, which againe is not preſently ſetled, ſo many ſeas do encounter together, as there had bene diuerſitie of windes. Howſoeuer it commeth to paſſe, men which all their life time had occupied the Sea, neuer ſaw more outragious Seas. We had alſo vpon our maine yard, an apparition of a little fire by night, which ſeamen doe call Caſtor and Pollux. But we had onely one, which they take an euill ſigne of more tempeſt: the ſame is vſuall in ſtormes.

Munday the ninth of September, in the afternoone, the Frigat was neere caſt away, oppreſſed by waues, yet at that time recouered: and giuing foorth ſignes of ioy, the Generall ſitting abaft with a booke in his hand, cried out vnto vs in the Hind (ſo oft as we did approch within hearing) We are as neere to heauen by ſea as by land. Reiterating the ſame ſpeech, well beſeeming a ſouldier, reſolute in Ieſus Chriſt, as I can teſtifie he was.

A reſolute and Chriſtianlike ſaying in a diſtreſſe.

The ſame Monday night, about twelue of the clocke, or not long after, the Frigat being ahead of vs in the Golden Hinde, ſuddenly her lights were out, whereof as it were in a moment, we loſt the ſight, and withall our watch cryed, the Generall was caſt away, which was too true. For in that moment, the Frigat was deuoured and ſwallowed vp of the Sea. Yet ſtill we looked out all that night, and euer after, vntill wee arriued vpon the coaſt of England: Omitting no ſmall ſaile at ſea, vnto which we gaue not the tokens betweene vs, agreed vpon, to haue perfect knowledge of each other, if we ſhould at any time be ſeparated.

Sir Humfrey Gilbert drowned.

In great torment of weather, and perill of drowning, it pleaſed God to ſend ſafe home the Golden Hinde, which arriued in Falmouth, the 22 day of September, being Sonday, not without as great danger eſcaped in a flaw, comming from the Southeaſt, with ſuch thicke miſt, that we could not diſcerne land, to put in right with the Hauen.

Arriuall in England of the Golden Hinde.

From Falmouth we went to Dartmouth, & lay there at anker before the Range, while the captaine went aland, to enquire if there had bene any newes of the Frigat, which ſayling well, might happily haue bene before vs. Alſo to certifie Sir Iohn Gilbert, brother vnto the Generall of our hard ſucceſſe, whom the Captaine deſired (while his men were yet aboord him, and were witneſſes of all occurrents in that voyage,) It might pleaſe him to take the examination o of euery perſon particularly, in diſcharge of his and their faithfull endeuour. Sir Iohn Gilbert refuſed ſo to doe, holding himſelfe ſatiſfied with report made by the Captaine: and not altogether diſpairing of his brothers ſafetie, offered friendſhip and curteſie to the Captaine and his company, requiring to haue his Barke brought into the harbour: in furtherance whereof, a boate was ſent to helpe to tow her in.

Neuertheleſſe, when the Captaine returned aboord his ſhip, he found his men bent to depart, euery man to his home: and then the winde ſeruing to proceede higher vpon the coaſt: they demanded money to carie them home, ſome to London, others to Harwich, and elſe where, (if the barke ſhould be caried into Dartmouth, and they diſcharged, ſo farre from home) or elſe to take benefite of the wind, then ſeruing to draw neerer home, which ſhould be a leſſe charge vnto the Captaine, and great eaſe vnto the men, hauing els farre to goe.

An ill recompenſe.

Reaſon accompanied with neceſſitie perſwaded the Captaine, who ſent his lawfull excuſe and cauſe of his ſudden departure vnto ſir Iohn Gilbert, by the boate of Dartmouth, and from thence the Golden Hind departed, and tooke harbour at Waimouth. Al the men tired with the tediouſnes of ſo vnprofitable a voiage to their ſeeming: in which their long expence of time, much toyle and labour, hard diet and continuall hazard of life was vnrecompenſed: their Captaine neuertheleſſe by his great charges, impaired greatly thereby, yet comforted in the goodnes of God, and his vndoubted prouidence following him in all that voyage, as it doth alwaies thoſe at other times, whoſoeuer haue confidence in him alone. Yet haue we more neere feeling and perſeuerance of his powerfull hand and protection, when God doth bring vs together with others into one ſame peril, in which he leaueth them, and deliuereth vs, making vs thereby the beholders, but not partakers of their ruine.

Euen ſo, amongſt very many difficulties, diſcontentments, mutinies, conſpiracies, ſickneſſes mortalitie, ſpoylings, and wracks by ſea, which were afflictions, more then in ſo ſmall a Fleete, or ſo ſhort a time may be ſuppoſed, albeit true in euery particularitie, as partly by the former relation may be collected, and ſome I ſuppreſſed with ſilence for their ſakes liuing, it pleaſed God to ſupport this company, (of which onely one man died of a maladie inueterate, and long infeſted: the reſt kept together in reaſonable contentment and concord, beginning, continuing, and ending the voyage, which none els did accompliſh, either not pleaſed with the action, or impatient of wants, or preuented by death.

Conſtancie in ſir Humfrey Gilbert.

Thus haue I deliuered the contents of the enterpriſe and laſt action of ſir Humfrey Gilbert knight, faithfully, for ſo much as I thought meete to be publiſhed: wherein may alwaies appeare, (though he be extinguiſhed) ſome ſparkes of his vertues, he remaining firme and reſolute in a purpoſe by all pretence honeſt and godly, as was this, to diſcouer, poſſeſſe, and to reduce vnto the ſeruice of God, and Chriſtian pietie, thoſe remote and heathen Countreys of America, not actually poſſeſſed by Chriſtians, and moſt rightly appertaining vnto the Crowne of England: vnto the which, as his zeale deſerueth high commendation: euen ſo, he may iuſtly be taxed of temeritie and preſumption (rather) in two reſpects.

His temeritie and preſumption.

Firſt, when yet there was onely probabilitie, not a certaine & determinate place of habitation ſelected, neither any demonſtration of commoditie there in eſſe, to induce his followers: neuertheles, he both was too prodigall of his owne patrimony, and too careles of other mens expences, to imploy both his and their ſubſtance vpon a ground imagined good. The which falling, very like his aſſociates were promiſed, and made it their beſt reckoning to bee ſalued ſome other way, which pleaſed not God to proſper in his firſt and great preparation.

Secondly, when by his former preparation he was enfeebled of abilitie and credit, to performe his deſignements, as it were impatient to abide in expectation better opportunitie and meanes, which God might raiſe, he thruſt himſelfe againe into the action, for which he was not fit, preſuming the cauſe pretended on Gods behalfe, would carie him to the deſired ende. Into which, hauing thus made reentrie, he could not yeeld againe to withdraw, though hee ſawe no encouragement to proceed, leſt his credite foyled in his firſt attempt, in a ſecond ſhould vtterly be diſgraced. Betweene extremities, hee made a right aduenture, putting all to God and good fortune, and which was worſt, refuſed not to entertaine euery perſon and meanes whatſoeuer, to furniſh out this expedition, the ſucceſſe whereof hath bene declared.

Afflictions needfull in the children of God.

But ſuch is the infinite bountie of God, who from euery euill deriueth good. For beſides that fruite may growe in time of our trauelling into thoſe Northweſt lands, the croſſes, turmoiles, and afflictions, both in the preparation and execution of this voyage, did correct the intemperate humors, mors, which before we noted to bee in this Gentleman, and made vnſauorie, and leſſe delightfull his other manifold vertues.

Then as he was refined, and made neerer drawing vnto the image of God: ſo it pleaſed the diuine will to reſume him vnto himſelfe, whither both his, and euery other high and noble minde, haue alwayes aſpired.

STEPHANVS PARMENIVS
Budeius, tuus.

The ſame in Engliſh.

To the worſhipfull, Maſter Richard Hakluit at Oxford in Chriſtchurch Maſter of Arts, and Philoſophie, his friend and brother.

I Had not purpoſed to write vnto you, when the promiſe of your letters came to my mind: You thought in Iune laſt to haue followed vs your ſelfe, and therefore I had left order that you ſhould be aduertiſed of my ſtate, by Maſter Doctor Humfrey: but ſo you would not be ſatiſfied: I will write therefore to you almoſt in the ſame words, becauſe I haue no leaſure at this time, to meditate new matters, and to vary or multiply words.

The 11. of Iune we ſet ſaile at length from England in good earneſt, and departed, leauing the hauen and land behind vs at Plimmouth: our Fleete conſiſted of fiue ſhippes: the greateſt, which the Admirals brother had lent vs, withdrew her ſelfe from vs the third day, wee know not vpon what occaſion: with the reſt we ſailed ſtill together till the 23. of Iuly: at which time our view of one another being intercepted by the the great miſts, ſome of vs ſailed one way, and ſome another: to vs alone the firſt land appeared, the firſt of Auguſt, about the latitude of 50. degrees, when as before we had deſcended beyond 41. degrees in hope of ſome Southerly windes, which notwithſtanding neuer blew to vs at any fit time.

It is an Iſland which your men call Penguin, becauſe of the multitude of birdes of the ſame name. Yet wee neither ſawe any birds, nor drew neere to the land, the winds ſeruing for our courſe directed to another place, but wee mette altogether at that place a little before the Hauen, whereunto by common Councell we had determined to come, and that within the ſpace of two houres by the great goodneſſe of God, and to our great ioy. The place is ſituate in Newfound land, betweene 47. and 48. degrees, called by the name of Saint Iohns: the Admirall himſelfe by reaſon of the multitude of the men, and the ſmalneſſe of his ſhip, had his company ſomewhat ſickly, and had already loſt two of the ſame company, which died of the Flixe: of the reſt we conceiue good hope. Of our company (for I ioyned my ſelfe with Maurice Browne, a very proper Gentleman) two perſons by a miſchance were drowned, the reſt are in ſafetie, and ſtrong, and for mine owne part I was neuer more healthy. Wee arriued at this place the third of Auguſt: and the fift the Admirall tooke poſſeſſion of the Countrey, for himſelfe and the kingdome of England: hauing made and publiſhed certaine Lawes, concerning religion, and obedience to the Queene of England: at this time our fare is ſomewhat better, and daintier, then it was before: for in good ſooth, the experience of ſo long time hath taught vs what contrary winds wee haue found, and what great trauell wee may endure hereafter: and therefore wee will take ſuch order, that wee will want nothing: for we found in this place about twenty Portugall and Spaniſh ſhippes, beſides the ſhippes of the Engliſh: which being not able to match vs, ſuffer vs not to bee hunger ſtarued: the Engliſh although they were of themſelues ſtrong ynough, and ſafe from our force, yet ſeeing our authoritie, by the Queenes letters patents, they ſhewed vs all maner of duety and humanitie.

The maner of this Countrey and people remaine now to be ſpoken of. But what ſhall I ſay, my good Hakluyt, when I ſee nothing but a very wilderneſſe? Of fiſh here is incredible abundance, whereby great gaine growes to them, that trauell to theſe parts: the hooke is no ſooner throwne out, but it is eftſoones drawne vp with ſome goodly fiſh: the whole land is full of hilles and woods. The trees for the moſt part are Pynes and of them ſome are very olde, and ſome yong: a great part of them being fallen by reaſon of their age, doth ſo hinder the ſight of the land, and ſtoppe the way of thoſe that ſeeke to trauell, that they can goe no whither: all the graſſe here is long, and tall, and little differeth from ours. It ſeemeth alſo that the nature of this ſoyle is fit for corne: for I found certaine blades and eares in a manner bearded, ſo that it appeareth that by manuring and ſowing, they may eaſily be framed for the vſe of man: here are in the woodes buſh berries, or rather ſtraw berries growing vp like trees, of great ſweeteneſſe. Beares alſo appeare about the fiſhers ſtages of the Countrey, and are ſometimes killed, but they ſeeme to bee white, as I coniectured by their ſkinnes, and ſomewhat leſſe then ours. Whether there bee any people in the Countrey I knowe not, neither haue I ſeene any to witneſſe it. And to ſay trueth, who can, when as it is not poſſible to paſſe any whither: In like ſort it is vnknowne, whither any mettals lye vnder the hilles: the cauſe is all one, although the very colour and hue of the hilles ſeeme to haue ſome Mynes in them: we mooued the Admirall to ſet the woods a fire, that ſo wee might haue ſpace, and entrance to take view of the Countrey, which motion did nothing diſpleaſe him, were it not for feare of great inconuenience that might thereof inſue: for it was reported and confirmed by very credible perſons, that when the like happened by chance in another Port, the fiſh neuer came to the place about it, for the ſpace of 7. whole yeeres after, by reaſon of the waters made bitter by the Turpentine, and Roſen of the trees, which ranne into the riuers vpon the firing of them. The weather is ſo hote this time of the yeere, that except the very fiſh, which is layd out to be dryed by the ſunne, be euery day turned, it cannot poſſibly bee preſerued from burning: but how cold it is in the winter, the great heapes, and mountaines of yce, in the middeſt of the Sea haue taught vs: ſome of our company report, that in May, they were ſometimes kept in, with ſuch huge yce, for 16. whole dayes together, as that the Iſlands thereof were threeſcore fathoms thicke, the ſides whereof which were toward the Sunne, when they were melted, the whole maſſe or heape was ſo inuerted and turned in maner of balancing, that that part which was before downeward roſe vpward, to the great perill of thoſe that are neere them, as by reaſon wee may gather. The ayre vpon land is indifferent cleare, but at Sea towards the Eaſt there is nothing els but perpetuall miſts, and in the Sea it ſelfe, about the Banke (for ſo they call the place where they find ground fourty leagues diſtant from the ſhore, and where they beginne to fiſh) there is no day without raine. When We haue ſerued, and ſupplied our neceſſitie in this place, we purpoſe by the helpe of God to paſſe towards the South, with ſo much the more hope euery day, by how much the greater the things are, that are reported of thoſe Countreys, which we go to diſcouer. Thus much touching our eſtate,

Now I deſire to know ſomewhat concerning you, but I feare in vaine, but ſpecially I deſire out of meaſure to know how my Patrone maſter Henry Vmpton doth take my abſence: my obedience, and duetie ſhall alwayes bee ready toward him as long as I liue: but in deede I hope, that this iourney of ours ſhalbe profitable to his intentions. It remaineth that you thinke me to be ſtill yours, and ſo yours as no mans more. The ſonne of God bleſſe all our labors, ſo farre, as that you your ſelfe may be partaker of our bleſſing. Adieu, my moſt friendly, moſt ſweete, moſt vertuous Hakluyt: In Newfound land, at Saint Iohns Port, the 6. of Auguſt. 1583.

STEVEN PARMENIVS of Buda, yours.

A relation of Richard Clarke of VVeymouth, maſter of the ſhip called the Delight, going for the diſcouery of Norembega, with Sir Humfrey Gilbert 1583. Written in excuſe of that fault of caſting away the ſhip and men, imputed to his ouerſight.

DEparting out of Saint Iohns Harborough in the Newfound land the 20. of Auguſt vnto Cape Raz, from thence we directed our courſe vnto the Ile of Sablon or the Iſle of Sand, which the Generall Sir Humfrey Gilbert would willingly haue ſeene. But when we came within twentie leagues of the Iſle of Sablon, we fell to controuerſie of our courſe. The Generall came vp in his Frigot and demanded of mee Richard Clarke maſter of the Admirall what courſe was beſt to keepe: I ſaid that Weſtſouthweſt was beſt: becauſe the wind was at South and night at hand and vnknowen ſands lay off a great way from the land. The Generall commanded me to go Weſtnorthweſt. I told him againe that the Iſle of Sablon was Weſtnorthweſt

20. Leagues from the Iſle of Sablon.

15. Leagues from the Iſle of Sablon.

Herein Clarke vntruely chargeth ſir Humfrey Gilbert.

The ſhip caſt away on Thurſday being the 29 of Auguſt 1583.

and but 15. leagues off, and that he ſhould be vpon the Iſland before day, if hee went that courſe. The Generall ſayd, my reckoning was vntrue, and charged me in her Maieſties name, and as I would ſhewe my ſelfe in her Countrey, to follow him that night. I fearing his threatnings, becauſe he preſented her Maieſties perſon, did follow his commaundement; and about ſeuen of the clocke in the morning the ſhip ſtroke on ground, where ſhee was caſt away. Then the Generall went off to Sea, the courſe that I would haue had them gone before, and ſaw the ſhip caſt away men and all, and was not able to ſaue a man, for there was not water vpon the ſand for either of them much leſſe for the Admirall that drew foureteene foote. Now as God would the day before it was very calme, and a Souldier of the ſhip had killed ſome foule with his piece, and ſome of the company deſired me that they might hoyſe out the boat to recouer the foule, which I granted them: and when they came aboord they did not hoyſe it in againe that night. And whē the ſhip was caſt away the boate was a ſterne being in burthen one tunne and an halfe: there was left in the boate one oare and nothing els. Some of the company could ſwimme, and recouered the boate and did hale in out of the water as many men as they coulde: among the reſt they had a care to watch for the Captaine or the Maſter: They happened on my ſelfe being the maſter, but could neuer ſee the Captaine: Then they halled into the boate as many men as they could in number 16. whoſe names hereafter I will rehearſe. And when the 16. were in the boate, ſome had ſmall remembrance, and ſome had none: for they did not make account to liue, but to prolong their liues as long as it pleaſed God, and looked euery moment of an houre when the Sea would eate them vp, the boate being ſo little and ſo many men in her, and ſo foule weather, that it was not poſſible for a ſhippe to brooke halfe a coarſe of ſayle. Thus while wee remayned two dayes and two nights, and that wee ſaw it pleaſed God our boate liued in the Sea (although we had nothing to helpe vs withall but one oare, which we kept vp the boate withall vpon the Sea, and ſo went euen as the Sea would driue vs) there was in our company one maſter Hedly that put foorth this queſtion to me the Maſter. I doe ſee that it doth pleaſe God, that our boate lyueth in the Sea, and it may pleaſe God that ſome of vs may come to the land if our boate were not ouerladen. Let vs make ſixteene lots, and thoſe foure that haue the foure ſhorteſt lots we will caſt ouerboord preſeruing the Maſter among vs all. I replied vnto him, ſaying, no, we will liue and die together. Maſter Hedly asked me if my remembrance were good: I anſwered I gaue God prayſe it was good, and knewe how farre I was off the land, and was in hope to come to the lande within two or three dayes, and ſayde they were but threeſcore leagues from the lande, (when they were ſeuentie) all to put them in comfort. Thus we continued the third and fourth day without any ſuſtenance, ſaue onely the weedes that ſwamme in the Sea, and ſalt water to drinke. The fifth day Hedly dyed and another moreouer: then wee deſired all to die: for in all theſe fiue dayes and fiue nights we ſaw the Sunne but once and the Starre but one night, it was ſo foule weather. Thus we did remaine the ſixt day: then we were very weake and wiſhed all to die ſauing onely my ſelfe which did comfort them and promiſed they ſhould come ſoone to land by the helpe of God: but the company were very importunate, and were in doubt they ſhould neuer come to land, but that I promiſed them the ſeuenth day they ſhould come to ſhore, or els they ſhould caſt me ouer boord: which did happen true the ſeuenth day, for at eleuen of the clocke wee had ſight of the land, and at 3. of the clocke at afternoone we came on land. All theſe ſeuen dayes and ſeuen nights the wind kept continually South. If the wind had in the meane time ſhifted vpon any other point, wee had neuer come to land: we were no ſooner come to the land, but the wind came cleane contrary at North within halfe an houre after our arriuall. But we were ſo weake that one could ſcarcely helpe another of vs out of the boate, yet with much adoe being come all on ſhore we kneeled downe vpon our knees and gaue God praiſe that he had dealt ſo mercifully with vs. Afterwards thoſe which were ſtrongeſt holpe their fellowes vnto a freſh brooke, where we ſatiſfied our ſelues with water and berries very well. There were of al ſorts of berries plentie, & as goodly a Countrey as euer I ſaw: we found a very faire plaine Champion ground that a man might ſee very farre euery way: by the Sea ſide was here and there a little wood with goodly trees as good as euer I ſaw any in Norway, able to maſt any ſhippe, of pyne trees, ſpruſe trees, firre, and very great birch trees. Where we came on land we made a little houſe with boughes, where we reſted all that night. In the morning I deuided the company three and three to goe euery way to ſee what foode they could find to ſuſtaine themſelues, and appointed them to meete there all againe at noone with ſuch foode as they could get. As we went aboord we found great ſtore of peaſon as good as any wee haue in England: a man would thinke they had bene ſowed there. We reſted there three dayes and three nights and liued very well with peaſe and berries, wee named the place Saint Laurence, becauſe it was a very goodly riuer like the riuer of S. Laurence in Canada, and we found it very full of Salmons. When wee had well reſted our ſelues wee rowed our boate along the ſhore, thinking to haue gone to the Grande Bay to haue come home with ſome Spanyards which are yeerely there to kill the Whale: And when we were hungry or a thirſt we put our boate on land and gathered peaſe and berries. Thus wee rowed our boate along the ſhore fiue dayes: about which time we came to a very goodly riuer that ranne farre vp into the Countrey and ſaw very goodly growen trees of all ſortes. There we happened vpon a ſhip of Saint Iohn de Luz, which ſhip brought vs into Biskay to an Harborough called The Paſſage. The Maſter of the ſhippe was our great friend, or elſe we had bene put to death if he had not kept our counſayle. For when the viſitors came aboord, as it is the order in Spaine, they demaunding what we were, he ſayd we were poore fiſhermen that had caſt away our ſhip in Newfound land, and ſo the viſitors inquired no more of the matter at that time. Aſſoone as night was come he put vs on land and bad vs ſhift for our ſelues. Then had wee but tenne or twelue miles into France, which we went that night, and then cared not for the Spanyard. And ſo ſhortly after we came into England toward the end of the yeere 1583.

Fourteene of our men brought out of Newfound land in a ſhip of S. Iohn de Luz.

A true Report of the late diſcoueries, and poſſeſſion taken in the right of the Crowne of England of the Newfound Lands, By that valiant and worthy Gentleman, Sir Humfrey Gilbert Knight.

Wherein is alſo briefly ſet downe, her higneſſe lawfull Title thereunto, and the great and manifold commodities, that are likely to grow therby, to the whole Realme in generall, and to the Aduenturers in particular: Together with the eaſineſſe and ſhortneſſe of the Voyage.

Written by Sir George Peckham Knight, the chiefe aduenturer, and furtherer of Sir Humfrey Gilberts voyage to Newfound Land.

The firſt Chapter, wherein the Argument of the Booke is contained.

IT was my fortune (good Reader) not many dayes paſt, to meete with a right honeſt and diſcreete Gentleman, who accompanied that valiant and worthy Knight Sir Humfrey Gilbert, in this laſt iourney for the Weſterne diſcoueries, and is owner and Captaine of the onely veſſell which is as yet returned from thence.

Maſter Edward Hays.

By him I vnderſtand that Sir Humfrey departed the coaſt of England the eleuenth of Iune laſt paſt, with fiue ſayle of Shippes, from Cauſhen bay neere Plimmouth, whereof one of the beſt forſooke his company, the thirteenth day of the ſame moneth, and returned into England.

The other foure (through the aſſiſtance of Almighty God) did arriue at Saint Iohns Hauen, in Newfound land, the 3. of Auguſt laſt. Vpon whoſe arriuall all the Maſters and chiefe Mariners of the Engliſh Fleet, which were in the ſaid Hauen before, endeuoring to fraight themſelues with fiſh, repaired vnto Sir Humfrey, whom he made acquainted with the effect of his Commiſſion: which being done, he promiſed to intreat them and their goods well and honourably as did become her Maieſties Lieutenant. They did all welcome him in the beſt ſort that they could, and ſhewed him and his all ſuch courteſies as the place could afford or yeelde.

Sir Humfrey Gilbert did arriue at Saint Iohns Hauen in Newfound land, the 3. of Auguſt. Anno 1583.

Then he went to view the Countrey, being well accompanied with moſt of his Captaines and ſouldiers. They found the ſame very temperate, but ſomewhat warmer then England at that ſeaſon of the yeere, replenished with Beaſts and great ſtore of Foule of diuers kinds: And Fiſh of ſundry ſortes, both in the ſalt water, and in the freſh, in ſo great plentie as might ſuffice to victuall an Armie, and they are very eaſily taken. What ſundry other commodities for this Realme right neceſſarie, the ſame doeth yeelde, you ſhall vnderſtand in this treatiſe hereafter, in place more conuenient.

Among theſe there was found the tract of a beaſt of 7. ynches and a halfe ouer.

On Munday being the fift of Auguſt, the Generall cauſed his tent to be ſet vpon the ſide of an hill, in the viewe of all the Fleete of Engliſh men and ſtrangers, which were in number betweene thirtie and fourtie ſayle: then being accompanied with all his Captaines, Maſters, Gentlemen and other ſouldiers, he cauſed all the Maſters, and principall Officers of the ſhips, aſwell Engliſhmen as Spanyards, Portugales, and of other nations, to repayre vnto his tent: And then and there, in the preſence of them all, he did cauſe his Commiſſion vnder the great Seale of England to bee openly and ſolemnely read vnto them, whereby were granted vnto him, his heires, and aſſignes, by the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, many great and large royalties, liberties, and priuiledges. The effect whereof being ſignified vnto the ſtrangers by an Interpreter, hee tooke poſſeſſion of the ſayde land in the right of the Crowne of England by digging of a Turffe and receiuing the ſame with an Haſell wand, deliuered vnto him, after the maner of the law and cuſtome of England.

Sir Humfrey tooke poſſeſſion of the New found land in right of the Crowne of England.

Then he ſignified vnto the company both ſtrangers and others, that from thenceforth, they were to liue in that land, as the Territories appertayning to the Crowne of England, and to be gouerned by ſuch Lawes as by good aduiſe ſhould be ſet downe, which in all points (ſo neere as might be) ſhould be agreeable to the Lawes of England: And for to put the ſame in execution, preſently he ordained and eſtabliſhed three Lawes.

Three lawes eſtabliſhed there by Sir Humfrey.

Firſt, that Religion publiquely exerciſed, ſhould be ſuch, and none other, then is vſed in the Church of England.

The ſecond, that if any perſon ſhould bee lawfully conuicted of any practiſe againſt her Maieſtie, her Crowne and dignitie, to be adiudged as traitors according to the Lawes of England.

The third, if any ſhould ſpeake diſhonourably of her Maieſtie, the partie ſo offending, to looſe his eares, his ſhip and goods, to be confiſcate to the vſe of the Generall.

All men did very willingly ſubmit themſelues to theſe Lawes, Then he cauſed the Queenes Maieſties Armes to be ingraued, ſet vp, and erected with great ſolemnitie. After this, diuers Engliſhmen made ſute vnto Sir Humfrey to haue of him by inheritance; their accuſtomed ſtages, ſtandings & drying places, in ſundry places of that land for their fiſh, as a thing that they doe make great accompt of, which he granted vnto them in fee farme. And by this meanes he hath poſſeſſion maintained for him, in many parts of that Countrey. To be briefe, he did let, ſet, giue and diſpoſe of many things, as abſolute Gouernor there, by vertue of her Maieſties letters patents.

Sundry perſons became Tenants to Sir Humfrey, and doe maintaine poſſeſſion for him in diuers places there.

And after their ſhips were repaired, whereof one he was driuen to leaue behind, both for want of men ſufficient to furniſh her, as alſo to carrie home ſuch ſicke perſons as were not able to proceede any further: He departed from thence the 20. of Auguſt, with the other three, namely, the Delight, wherein was appointed Captaine in M. William Winters place, (that thence returned immediatly for England) M. Maurice Browne: the Golden hinde, in which was Captaine and owner, M. Edward Hays: and the little Frigat where the Generall himſelfe did goe, ſeeming to him moſt fit to diſcouer and approch the ſhore.

The 21. day they came to Cape Race, toward the South partes whereof, lying a while becalmed, they tooke Cod in largenes and quantitie, exceeding the other parts of Newfound land, where any of them had bene. And from thence, trending the coaſt Weſt, toward the Bay of Placentia, the Generall ſent certaine men a ſhore, to view the Countrey, which to them as they ſayled along, ſeemed pleaſant. Whereof his men at their returne gaue great commendation, liking ſo well of the place, as they would willingly haue ſtayed and wintred there. But hauing the wind faire and good, they proceeded on their courſe towards the firme of America, which by reaſon of continuall fogs, at that time of the yeere eſpecially, they could neuer ſee, till Cox Maſter of the Golden Hinde did diſcerne land, and preſently loſt ſight thereof againe, at what time they were all vpon a breach in a great and outragious ſtorme, hauing vnder 3. fathome water. But God deliuered the Frigat and the Golden Hind, from this great danger. And the Delight in the preſence of them all was loſt, to their vnſpeakeable griefe, with all their chiefe victuall, munition, and other neceſſary prouiſions, and other things of value not fit here to be named. Whereupon, by reaſon alſo that Winter was come vpon them, and foule weather increaſed with fogs and miſts that ſo couered the land, as without danger of periſhing they could not approch it: Sir Humfrey Gilbert and M. Hays were compelled much againſt their willes to retyre homewards: And being 300. leagues on their way, were after by tempeſtuous weather ſeparated the one from the other, the ninth of September laſt, ſince which time M. Hays with his Barke is ſafely arriued, but of Sir Humfrey as yet they heare no certaine newes, Vpon this report (together with my former intent, to write ſome briefe diſcourſe in the commendation of this ſo noble and worthy an enterpriſe) I did call to my remembrance, the Hiſtorie of Themyſtocles the Grecian, who (being a right noble and valiant Captaine) ſignified vnto his Countreymen the Citizens of Athens, that he had inuented a deuiſe for their common wealth very profitable: but it was of ſuch importance and ſecrecie, that it ought not to be reuealed, before priuate conference had with ſome particular prudent perſon of their choyſe.

Plutarch.

The Athenians knowing Ariſtides the Philoſopher, to be a man indued with ſingular wiſedome and vertue, made choyſe of him to haue conference with Themyſtcles, and thereupon to yeelde his opinion to the Citizens concerning the ſayd deuiſe: which was, that they might ſet on fire the Nauie of their enemies, with great facilitie, as he had layde the plot: Ariſtides made relation to the Citizens, that the ſtratageme deuiſed by Themyſtocles was a profitable practiſe for the common wealth but it was diſhoneſt. The Athenians (without further demaund what the ſame was) did by common conſent reiect and condemne it, preferring honeſt and vpright dealing before profite.

By occaſion of this Hiſtorie, I drewe my ſelfe into a more deepe conſideration of this late vndertaken Voyage, whether it were as well pleaſing to almightie God, as profitable to men: as lawfull, as it ſeemed honourable: as well gratefull to the Sauages, as gainefull to the Chriſtians. And vpon mature deliberation I found the action to be honeſt and profitable, and therefore allowable by the opinion of Ariſtides if he were now aliue: which being by me herein ſufficiently prooued, (as by Gods grace I purpoſe to doe) I doubt not but that all good mindes will endeuour themſelues to be aſſiſtants to this ſo commendable an enterpriſe, by the valiant and worthy Gentlemen our Countrey men already attempted and vndertaken.

Now whereas I doe vnderſtand that Sir Humfrey Gilbert his adherents, aſſociates and friends doe meane with a conuenient ſupply (with as much ſpeede as may be) to maintaine, purſue and follow this intended voyage already in part performed, and (by the aſſiſtance of almightie God) to plant themſelues and their people in the continent of the hither part of America, betweene the degrees of 30. and 60. of ſeptentrionall latitude: Within which degrees by computation Aſtronomicall and Coſmographicall are doubtleſſe to bee found all things that be neceſſarie, profitable, or delectable for mans life: The clymate milde and temperate, neyther too hote nor too colde, ſo that vnder the cope of heauen there is not any where to be found a more conuenient place to plant and inhabite in: which many notable Gentlemen, both ‖ of our owne nation and ſtrangers, (who haue bene trauailers) can teſtifie: and that thoſe Countries are at this day inhabited with Sauages (who haue no knowledge of God:) Is it not therefore (I ſay) to be lamented, that theſe poore Pagans, ſo long liuing in ignorance and idolatry, and in ſort thirſting after Chriſtianitie, (as may appeare by the relation of ſuch as haue trauailed in thoſe partes) that our hearts are ſo hardened, that fewe or none can be found which will put to their helping hands, and apply themſelues to the relieuing of the miſerable and wretched eſtate of theſe ſillie ſoules?

Whoſe Countrey doeth (as it were with armes aduanced) aboue the climates both of Spaine and France, ſtretch out it ſelfe towards England only: In maner praying our ayde and helpe, as it is not onely ſet forth in Mercators generall Mappe, but it is alſo found to be true by the diſcouerie of our nation, and other ſtrangers, who haue oftentimes trauailed vpon the ſame coaſts.

Chriſtopher Columbus of famous memorie, the firſt inſtrument to manifeſt the great glory and mercy of Almightie God in planting the Chriſtian faith, in thoſe ſo long vnknowen regions, hauing in purpoſe to acquaint (as he did) that renowmed Prince, the Queenes Maieſties grandfather King Henry the ſeuenth, with his intended voyage for the Weſterne diſcoueries, was not onely derided and mocked generally euen here in England, but afterward became a laughing ſtocke to the Spaniards themſelues, who at this day (of all other people) are moſt bounden to laude and prayſe God, who firſt ſtirred vp the man to that enterpriſe.

God doeth not alwayes begin his greateſt workes by the greateſt perſons.

And while he was attending there to acquaint the King of Caſtile (that then was) with his intended purpoſe, by how many wayes and meanes was he derided? Some ſcorned the piloneſſe of his garments, ſome tooke occaſion to ieſt at his ſimple and ſilly lookes, others aſked if this were he that lowts ſo lowe, which did take vpon him to bring men into a Countrey that aboundeth with Golde, Pearle, and Precious ſtones? If hee were any ſuch man (ſayd they) he would carry another maner of countenance with him, and looke ſomewhat loftier. Thus ſome iudged him by his garments, and others by his looke and countenance, but none entred into the conſideration of the inward man.

His cuſtome was to bowe himſelfe very lowe in making of curteſie.

In the ende, what ſucceſſe his Voyage had, who liſt to reade the Decades, the Hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies, the conqueſt of Hernando Cortes about Mexico, and thoſe of Franciſco Pizarro in Peru about Caſamalcha and Cuſco, may know more particularly. All which their diſcoueries, trauailes and conqueſts are extant to be had in the Engliſh tongue. This deuiſe was then accounted a fantaſticall imagination, and a drowſie dreame.

Hernando Cortes.
Franciſco Pizarro.

But the ſequele thereof hath ſince awaked out of dreames thouſands of ſoules to knowe their Creator, being thereof before that time altogether ignorant: And hath ſince made ſufficient proofe, neither to be fantaſticke, nor vainely imagined.

Withall, how mightily it hath inlarged the dominions of the Crowne of Spaine, and greatly inriched the ſubiects of the ſame, let all men conſider. Beſides, it is well knowen, that ſithence the time of Columbus his firſt diſcouerie, through the planting, poſſeſſing, and inhabiting thoſe partes, there hath bene tranſported and brought home into Europe greater ſtore of Golde, Siluer, Pearle, and Precious ſtones, then heretofore hath bene in all ages ſince the creation of the worlde.

I doe therefore heartily wiſh, that ſeeing it hath pleaſed almightie God of his infinite mercy, at the length to awake ſome of our worthy Countrey men out of that drowſie dreame, wherein we haue ſo long ſlumbered:

That wee may now not ſuffer that to quaile for want of maintenance, which by theſe valiant Gentlemen our Countreymen is ſo nobly begun & enterpriſed. For which purpoſe, I haue taken vpon me to write this ſimple ſhort Treatiſe, hoping that it ſhall be able to perſwade ſuch as haue bene, and yet doe continue detractors and hinderers of this iourney, (by reaſon perhaps that they haue not deliberately and aduiſedly entred into the iudgement of the matter) that yet now vpon better conſideration they will become fauourable furtherers of the ſame. And that ſuch as are already well affected thereunto, will continue their good diſpoſition: And withall, I moſt humbly pray all ſuch as are no nigards of their purſes in buying of coſtly and rich apparel, and liberall Contributors in ſetting forth of games, paſtimes, feaſtings and banquets, (whereof the charge being paſt, there is no hope of publique profite or commoditie) that henceforth they will beſtowe and employ their liberality (heretofore that way expended) to the furtherance of theſe ſo commendable purpoſed proceedings.

A reaſonable requeſt.

And to this ende haue I taken pen in hand, as in conſcience thereunto mooued, deſiring much rather, that of the great multitude which this Realme doeth nouriſh, farre better able to handle this matter then I my ſelfe am, it would haue pleaſed ſome one of them to haue vndertaken the ſame. But ſeeing they are ſilent, and that it falleth to my lotte to put pen to the paper, I will endeuour my ſelfe, and doe ſtand in good hope (though my ſkill and knowledge bee ſimple, yet through the aſſiſtance of almightie God) to prooue that the Voyage, lately enterpriſed for trade, traffique, and planting in America, is an action tending to the lawfull enlargement of her Maieſties Dominions, commodious to the whole Realme in generall, profitable to the aduenturers in particular, beneficiall to the Sauages, and a matter to be atteined without any great danger or difficultie.

The argument of the booke.

And laſtly, (which is moſt of all) A thing likewiſe tending to the honour and glory of Almightie God. And for that the lawfulneſſe to plant in thoſe Countreyes in ſome mens iudgements ſeemeth very doubtfull, I will beginne the proofe of the lawfulneſſe of trade, traffique, and planting.

The ſecond Chapter ſheweth, that it is lawfull and neceſſarie to trade and traffique with the Sauages: And to plant in their Countries: And diuideth planting into two ſorts.

AND firſt for traffique, I ſay that the Chriſtians may lawfully trauell into thoſe Countries and abide there: whom the Sauages may not iuſtly impugne and forbidde in reſpect of the mutuall ſocietie and fellowſhippe betweene man and man preſcribed by the Law of Nations.

For from the firſt beginning of the creation of the world, and from the renewing of the ſame after Noes flood, all men haue agreed, that no violence ſhould be offered to Ambaſſadours: That the Sea with his Hauens ſhould be common: That ſuch as ſhould fortune to be taken in warre, ſhould be ſeruants or ſlaues: And that ſtrangers ſhould not bee driuen away from the place or Countrey whereunto they doe come;

If it were ſo then, I demaund in what age, and by what Law is the ſame forbidden or denied ſince? For who doubteth but that it is lawfull for Chriſtians to vſe trade and traffique with Infidels or Sauages, carrying thither ſuch commodities as they want, and bringing from thence ſome part of their plentie?

A thing ſo commonly and generally practiſed, both in theſe our dayes, and in times paſt, beyond the memorie of man, both by Chriſtians and Infidels, that it needeth no further proofe.

And foraſmuch as the vſe of trade and traffique (be it neuer ſo profitable) ought not to be preferred before the planting of Chriſtian faith: I will therefore ſomewhat intreate of planting, (without which, Chriſtian Religion can take no roote, be the Preachers neuer ſo carefull and diligent) which I meane to diuide into two ſortes.

The principall cauſes why this voyage is vndertaken.

The firſt, when Chriſtians by the good liking and willing aſſent of the Sauages, are admitted by them to quiet poſſeſſion.

The ſecond, when Chriſtians being vniuſtly repulſed, doe ſeeke to attaine and manteine the right for which they doe come.

And though in regard of the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtian Religion, eyther of both may be lawfully and iuſtly exerciſed: (Whereof many examples may be found, as well in the time of Moyſes and Ioſua, and other Rulers before the birth of Chriſt, as of many vertuous Emperours and Kings ſithence his incarnation:) yet doe I wiſh, that before the ſecond be put in practiſe, a proofe may be made of the firſt, ſauing that for their ſafetie as well againſt the Sauages, as all other forreigne enemies, they ſhould firſt well and ſtrongly fortifie themſelues: which being done, then by all fayre ſpeeches, and euery other good meanes of perſwaſion to ſeeke to take away all occaſions of offence.

As letting them to vnderſtand, how they came not to their hurt, but for their good, and to no other ende, but to dwell peaceably amongſt them, and to trade and traffique with them for their owne commoditie, without moleſting or grieuing them any way: which muſt not be done by wordes onely but alſo by deedes.

For albeit, to maintaine right and repell iniury, be a iuſt cauſe of warre: yet muſt there hereof be heedefull care had, that whereas the Sauages be fearefull by nature, and fond otherwiſe, the Chriſtians ſhould doe their beſt endeuour to take away ſuch feare as may growe vnto them by reaſon of their ſtrange apparell, Armour, and weapon, or ſuch like, by quiet and peaceable conuerſation, and letting them liue in ſecuritie, and keeping a meaſure of blameleſſe defence, with as little diſcommoditie to the Sauages as may bee: for this kinde of warre would be onely defenſiue and not offenſiue.

And queſtionleſſe there is great hope and likelyhoode, that by this kinde of meanes we ſhould bring to paſſe all effects to our deſired purpoſes: Conſidering that all creatures, by conſtitution of nature, are rendred more tractable and eaſier wonne for all aſſayes, by courteſie and mildneſſe, then by crueltie or roughneſſe: and therefore being a principle taught vs by naturall reaſon, it is firſt to be put in vre.

For albeit as yet the Chriſtians are not ſo throughly furniſhed with the perfectneſſe of their language, eyther to expreſſe their mindes to them, or againe to conceiue the Sauages intent: Yet for the preſent opportunitie, ſuch policie may be vſed by friendly ſignes, and courteous tokens towards them, as the Sauages may eaſily perceiue (were their ſences neuer ſo groſſe) an aſſured friendſhip to be offered them, and that they are encountered with ſuch a nation, as brings them benefite, commoditie, peace, tranquilitie and ſafetie. To further this, and to accompliſh it in deedes, there muſt bee preſented vnto them gratis, ſome kindes of our pettie marchandizes and trifles: As looking glaſſes, Belles, Beades, Bracelets, Chaines, or collers of Bewgle, Chryſtall, Amber, Iet, or Glaſſe &c. For ſuch be the things, though to vs of ſmall value, yet accounted by them of high price and eſtimation: and ſooneſt will induce their Barbarous natures to a liking and a mutuall ſocietie with vs.

Moreouer, it ſhall be requiſite eyther by ſpeeche, if it be poſſible, either by ſome other certaine meanes, to ſignifie vnto them, that once league of friendſhip with all louing conuerſation being admitted betweene the Chriſtians and them: that then the Chriſtians from thenceforth will alwayes be ready with force of Armes to aſſiſt and defend them in their iuſt quarrels, from all inuaſions, ſpoyles and oppreſſions offered them by any Tyrants, Aduerſaries, or their next borderers: and a benefite is ſo much the more to be eſteemed, by how much the perſon vpon whom it is beſtowed ſtandeth in neede thereof.

For it appeareth by the relation of a Countryman of ours, namely Dauid Ingram, (who trauelled in thoſe countries xi. Moneths and more) That the Sauages generally for the moſt part, are at continuall warres with their next adioyning neighbours, and eſpecially the Cannibals, being a cruell kinde of people, whoſe foode is mans fleſh, and haue teeth like dogges, and doe purſue them with rauenous mindes to eate their fleſh, and deuoure them.

And it is not to be doubted, but that the Chriſtians may in this caſe iuſtly and lawfully ayde the Sauages againſt the Cannibals. So that it is very likely, that by this meanes we ſhall not onely mightily ſtirre and inflame their rude mindes gladly to embrace the louing company of the Chriſtians, proffering vnto them both commodities, ſuccour, and kindneſſe: But alſo by their franke conſents ſhall eaſily enioy ſuch competent quantity of Land, as euery way ſhall be correſpondent to the Chriſtians expectation and contentation, conſidering the great abundance that they haue of Land, and how ſmall account they make thereof, taking no other fruites thereby then ſuch as the ground of it ſelfe doeth naturally yeelde. And thus much concerning the firſt ſort of planting, which as I aſſuredly hope, ſo I moſt heartily pray may take effect and place.

But

The ſeconde kinde of planting.

But if after theſe good and fayre meanes vſed, the Sauages neuertheleſſe will not bee herewithall ſatiſfied, but barbarouſly will goe about to practiſe violence eyther in repelling the Chriſtians from their Ports & ſafe landings, or in withſtanding them afterwards to enioy the rights for which both painfully and lawfully they haue aduentured themſelues thither:

Then in ſuch a caſe I holde it no breach of equitie for the Chriſtians to defend themſelues, to purſue reuenge with force, and to doe whatſoeuer is neceſſarie for the atteining of their ſafetie: For it is allowable by all Lawes in ſuch diſtreſſes, to reſiſt violence with violence: And for their more ſecuritie to increaſe their ſtrength by building of Forts for auoyding the extremitie of iniurious dealing.

Wherein if alſo they ſhal not be ſuffered in reaſonable quietneſſe to continue, there is no barre (as I iudge) but that in ſtoute aſſemblies the Chriſtians may iſſue out, and by ſtrong hand purſue their enemies, ſubdue them, take poſſeſſion of their Townes, Cities, or Villages, and (in auoyding murtherous tyrannie) to vſe the Law of Armes, as in like caſe among all Nations at this day is vſed: and moſt eſpecially to the ende they may with ſecuritie holde their lawfull poſſeſſion, leſt happily after the departure of the Chriſtians, ſuch Sauages as haue bene conuerted, ſhould afterwards through compulſion and enforcement of their wicked Rulers, returne to their horrible idolatrie (as did the children of Iſrael, after the deceaſe of Ioſhua) and continue their wicked cuſtome of moſt vnnaturall ſacrificing of humane creatures.

And in ſo doing, doubtleſſe the Chriſtians ſhall no whit at all tranſgreſſe the bonds of equitie or ciuilitie, foraſmuch as in former ages, (yea, before the incarnation of Chriſt) the like hath bene done by ſundry Kings and Princes, Gouernours of the children of Iſrael: chiefly in reſpect to begin their planting, for the eſtabliſhment of Gods worde: as alſo ſince the Natiuitie of Chriſt, mightie and puiſſant Emperours and Kings haue performed the like, I ſay to plant, poſſeſſe, and ſubdue. For proofe whereof, I will alledge you examples of both kindes.

Wee reade in the olde Teſtament, how that after Noes flood was ceaſed, reſtauration of mankinde began onely of thoſe fewe of Noes children and familie as were by God preelected to bee ſaued in the Arke with him, whoſe ſeede in proceſſe of time, was multiplyed to infinite numbers of Nations, which in diuers ſortes diuided themſelues to ſundry quarters of the earth. And foraſmuch as all their poſteritie being mightily encreaſed, followed not the perfect life of Noe their predeceſſour, God choſe out of the multitude a peculiar people to himſelfe, to whom afterwardes being vnder the gouernment of Moyſes in Mount Sinay, hee made a graunt to inherite the Land of Canaan, called the Land of promiſe, with all the other rich and fertile Countries next adioyning thereunto. Neuertheleſſe, before they came to poſſeſſion thereof, hauing bene afflicted with many grieuous puniſhments and plagues for their ſinnes, they fell in deſpayre to enioy the ſame.

But being encouraged and comforted by their Rulers, (men of God) they proceeded, arming themſelues with all patience, to ſuffer whatſoeuer it ſhould pleaſe God to ſend: and at laſt attaining to the Land, they were encountered with great numbers of ſtrong people, and mighty Kings.

Ioſua 6.

Notwithſtanding, Ioſua their Leader repleniſhed with the Spirite of God, being aſſured of the iuſtneſſe of his quarell, gathered the chiefe ſtrength of the children of Iſrael together, to the number of 40000. with whom he ſafely paſſed the huge riuer Iordan, and hauing before ſent priuie ſpies for the diſcouerie of the famous citie Ierico, to vnderſtand the certaintie of the Citizens eſtate, he forthwith came thither, and enuironed it round about with his whole power the ſpace of ſeuen dayes.

In which reſpite, perceiuing none of the Gentiles diſpoſed to yeeld or call for mercie, he then commanded (as God before had appointed) that both the citie Ierico ſhould be burned, yea, and all the inhabitants, as well olde as young, with all their cattell ſhould be deſtroyed, onely excepted Rahab, her kindred and familie, becauſe ſhee before had hid ſecretly the meſſengers of Ioſua, that were ſent thither as ſpies. As for all their golde, ſiluer, precious ſtones, or veſſels of braſſe, they were reſerued and conſecrated to the Lords treaſurie.

Iudg.11.13.

In like maner he burned the citie Hay, ſlew the inhabitants thereof, and hanged vp their King. But for ſo much as the Gebionites (fearing the like euent) ſent Ambaſſadours vnto Ioſua to intreate for grace, fauour, and peace: hee commaunded that all their liues ſhould bee ſaued, and that they ſhould be admitted to the company of the children of Iſrael. Yet vnderſtanding afterwards they wrought this by a policie, he vſed them as drudges to hewe wood and to carie water, and other neceſſaries for his people. Thus beganne this valiant Captaine his conqueſt, which he purſued and neuer left till hee had ſubdued all the Hethites, Amorites, Cananites, Pereſites, Heuites, and Iebuſites, with all their princes and Kings, being thirtie and one in number, & diuers other ſtrange nations, beſides whoſe lands & dominions he wholy diuided among Gods people.

After that Ioſua was deceaſed, Iuda was conſtituted Lord ouer the armie, who receiuing like charge from God, purſued the proceedings of the holy captaine Ioſua, and vtterly vanquiſhed many Gentiles, Idolaters, and aduerſaries to the children of Iſrael, with all ſuch Rulers or Kings as withſtoode him, and namely Adonibezek the moſt cruell tyrant: whoſe thumbes and great toes he cauſed to be cut off, for ſo much as hee had done the like before vnto ſeuentie Kings, whom being his priſoners, he forced to gather vp their victuals vnderneath his table. In this God ſhewed his iuſtice to reuenge tyrannie. We reade likewiſe, that Gedeon a moſt puiſſant and noble warriour ſo behaued himſelfe in following the worthy acts of Ioſua and Iuda, that in ſhort time he not onely deliuered the children of Iſrael from the hands of the multitude of the fierce Madianites, but alſo ſubdued them and their Tyrants, whoſe landes he cauſed Gods people to poſſeſſe and inherite.

Iudg. 1.

A good note for al Conquerers to be mercifull.

Iudg. 6. 7.

I could recite diuers other places out of the Scripture, which aptly may be applyed hereunto, were it not I doe indeuour my ſelfe by all meanes to be briefe. Now in like maner will I alledge ſome fewe Inductions out of the autenticall writings of the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtoriographers, all tending to the like argument. And firſt to begin withall, we doe reade: That after our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt had ſuffered his paſſion, the Apoſtles being inſpired with the holy Ghoſt, and the knowledge of all ſtrange languages, did immediatly diſperſe themſelues to ſundry parts of the world, to the preaching of the Goſpel. Yet not in ſo generall a maner, but that there remayned ſome farre remote Countries vnviſited by them; among the which it is reported that India the great, called the vttermoſt India, as yet had receiued no light of the word. But it came to paſſe, that one Metrodorus a very learned and wiſe Philoſopher in that age, being deſirous to ſearch out vnknowen lands, did firſt diſcouer the ſame, finding it wonderfull populous and rich, which vpon his returne being publiſhed, and for certaine vnderſtood, there was another graue Philoſopher of Tyrus called Meropius, being a Chriſtian, who did reſolue himſelfe (following the example of Metrodorus) to trauaile thither, and in a ſhort time aſſiſted but with a fewe, in a ſmall Veſſel arriued there, hauing in his company two yong youths, Edeſius and Frumentius; whom (being his ſchollers) he had throughly inſtructed both in liberall Sciences, and chriſtian Religion. Now after that Meropius ſomewhile ſtaying there, had (as hee thought) ſufficient vnderſtanding of the Indians whole eſtate: He determined to depart, and to bring notice thereof vnto the Emperour, whom he meant to exhort to the conqueſt of the ſame.

Ruffinus lib. 1. cap. 9.

But by misfortune he was preuented, for being in the middeſt of his courſe on the Sea homeward, a ſore tempeſt aroſe, and perforce droue him backe againe, to an vnknowen Port of the ſayd land: where he by the moſt cruell barbarous Indians on the ſudden was ſlaine with all his company, except the two young ſchollers aforeſayde, whom the barbarous Indians, by reaſon they were of comely ſtature and beautifull perſonages, tooke, and forthwith preſented them to their King and Queene: which both being very well liked of, the King courteouſly entreated, and ordeined Edeſius to be his Butler, and Frumentius his Secretarie, and in few yeeres by reaſon of their learning and ciuill gouernment, they were had in great fauour, honour, and eſtimation with the Princes. But the King departing this life, left the Queene his wife with her yong ſonne to gouerne, and gaue free ſcope and libertie to the two Chriſtians, at their beſt pleaſure to paſſe to their natiue ſoyles, allowing them all neceſſaries for the ſame. Yet the Queene who highly fauoured them was very ſorowfull they ſhould depart, and therefore moſt earneſtly intreated them to tarie and aſſiſt her in the gouernment of her people, till ſuch time as her young ſonne grewe to ripe yeeres, which requeſt they fulfilled.

Meropius ſlaine.

Edeſius and Frumentius preſerued by the Indians.

And Frumentius excelling Edeſius farre in all wiſedome, ruled both the Queene and her ſubiects at his diſcretion, whereby he tooke occaſion to put in practiſe priuily, that the foundation of Chriſtian religion might be planted in the hearts of ſuch as with whom he thought his perſwaſion might beſt preuaile, and that ſooneſt would giue eare vnto him: which being brought to paſſe accordingly, hee then with his fellow Edeſius tooke leaue of the Queene to returne to his natiue countrey. And ſo ſoone as he was arriued there, he reuealed to the Emperour Conſtantine, the effect of all thoſe euents: who both commending his deedes and wholy allowing thereof, by the aduiſe and good liking of Athanaſius then Biſhop of Alexandria, did arme and ſet forth a conuenient power for the ayde of Frumentius, in this his ſo godly a purpoſe. And by this meanes came the Emperour afterwards by faire promiſes, and by force of armes together, vnto the poſſeſſion of all the Indians countrey. The author of this ſtorie Ruffinus receiued the trueth hereof from the very mouth of Edeſius companion to Frumentius.

Moreouer

Euſeb. in his eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie teſtifieth how that Conſtantine the great did enlarge his dominions by ſubduing of Infidels and Idolatrous nations.
Euſebius lib. 1. de vita Conſtant. cap. 4. et cap. 9.
Euſeb. eod. lib. cap. 39.

Moreouer Euſebius in his Hiſtorie Eccleſiaſticall in preciſe termes, and in diuers places maketh mention how Conſtantine the great not onely enlarged his Empire by the ſubduing of his next neighbours, but alſo endeuoured by all meanes to ſubiect all ſuch remote Barbarous and Heathen nations, as then inhabited the foure quaters of the worlde. For (as it is written) the Emperour throughly ayded with a puiſſant armie of valiant ſouldiers whom he had before perſwaded to Chriſtian religion, in proper perſon himſelfe came euen vnto this our country of England, then called the Iſland of Britaines, bending from him full Weſt, which he wholy conquered, made tributarie, and ſetled therein Chriſtian faith, and left behinde him ſuch Rulers thereof, as to his wiſedome ſeemed beſt. From thence hee turned his force towardes the North coaſt of the world, and there vtterly ſubdued the rude and cruell Nation of the Scythians, whereof part by friendly perſwaſions, part by maine ſtrength, hee reduced the whole to Chriſtian faith. Afterwards he determined with himſelfe to ſearch out what ſtrange people inhabited in the vttermoſt parts of the South. And with great hazard and labour, making his iourney thither, at laſt became victour ouer them all, euen to the countrey of the Blemmyans, and the remote Æthiopians, that now are the people of Presbyter Iohn, who yet till this day continue and beare the name of Chriſtians.

In the Eaſt likewiſe, what Nation ſoeuer at that time he could haue notice of, he eaſily wonne and brought in ſubiection to the Empire. So that to conclude, there was no region in any part of the world, the inhabitants whereof being Gentiles, though vnknowen vnto him, but in time he ouercame and vanquiſhed.

Theodoret. in eccle lib. 5. cap. 20.

Theodoretus cap. 26. eodem lib.

This worthy beginning of Conſtantine, both his ſonnes ſucceeding his roome, and alſo diuers other Emperours afterward to their vttermoſt endeuour followed and continued, which all the bookes of Euſebius more at large ſet forth. Theodoretus likewiſe in his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie maketh mention how Theodoſius the vertuous Emperour imployed earneſtly all his time, as well in conquering the Gentiles to the knowledge of the holy Goſpel, vtterly ſubuerting their prophane Temples and abominable Idolatry, as alſo in extinguiſhing of ſuch vſurping tyrants as with Paganiſme withſtood the planting of Chriſtian religion. After whoſe deceaſe his ſonnes Honorius and Arcadius were created Emperours, the one of the Eaſt, the other of the Weſt, who with all ſtout godlineſſe moſt carefully imitated the foreſteps of their Father, eyther in enlarging their territories, or increaſing the chriſtian flocke.

Moreouer, it is reported by the ſayd author, that Theodoſius iunior the Emperour, no whit inferiour in vertuous life to any of the aboue named Princes, with great ſtudie and zeale purſued and proſecuted the Gentiles, ſubdued their tyrants and countries, and vtterly deſtroyed all their idolatry, conuerting their ſoules to acknowledge their onely Meſſias and Creator, and their Countries to the enlargement of the Empire. To be briefe, who ſo liſteth to read Euſebius Pamphilus, Socrates Scholaſticus, Theodoritus, Hermia, Sozomen, and Euagrius Scholaſticus, which all were moſt ſage Eccleſiaſticall writers, ſhall finde great ſtore of examples of the worthy liues of ſundry Emperours, tending all to the confirmation of my former ſpeeches.

And for like examples of later time; (yea euen in the memorie of man) I ſhall not neede to recite any other then the conqueſt made of the Weſt and Eaſt Indies by the Kings of Spaine and Portugall, whereof there is particular mention made in the laſt Chapter of this booke. Herein haue I vſed more copy of examples then otherwiſe I would haue done, ſauing that I haue bene in place, where this maner of planting the Chriſtian faith hath bene thought of ſome to be ſcarce lawfull, yea, ſuch as doe take vpon them to be more then meanely learned. To theſe examples could I ioyne many moe, but whoſoeuer is not ſatiſfied with theſe fewe, may ſatiſfie himſelfe in reading at large the Authors laſt aboue recited. Thus haue I (as I truſt) prooued that we may iuſtly trade and traffique with the Sauages, and lawfully plant and inhabite their Countries.

The third Chapter doeth ſhew the lawfull title which the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie hath vnto thoſe Countries, which through the ayde of Almighty God are meant to be inhabited.

Owen Gwyneth was then Prince of Northwales.
Nullum tempus occurit Regi.

AND it is very euident that the planting there ſhal in time right amply enlarge her Maieſties Territories and Dominions, or (I might rather ſay) reſtore her to her Highneſſe ancient right and intereſt in thoſe Countries, into the which a noble and worthy perſonage, lineally deſcended from the blood royall, borne in Wales, named Madock ap Owen Gwyneth, departing from the coaſt of England, about the yeere of our Lord God 1170, arriued and there planted himſelfe and his Colonies, and afterward returned himſelfe into England, leauing certaine of his people there, as appeareth in an ancient Welſh Chronicle, where he then gaue to certaine Iſlands, beaſtes, and foules ſundry Welſh names, as the Iland of Pengwin, which yet to this day beareth the ſame.

This Iſland was diſcouered by Sir Humfrey and his company, in this his laſt iourney

There is likewiſe a foule in the ſaide countreys called by the ſame name at this day, and is as much to ſay in Engliſh, as Whitehead, and in trueth the ſaid foules haue white heads. There is alſo in thoſe countreis a fruit called Gwynethes which is likewiſe a Welſh word. Moreouer there are diuers other Welſh wordes at this day in vſe, as Dauid Ingram aforeſaid reporteth in his relations. All which moſt ſtrongly argueth, the ſayd prince with his people to haue inhabited there. And the ſame in effect is confirmed by Mutezuma that mightie Emperour of Mexico, who in an Oration vnto his ſubiects for the better pacifying of them, made in the preſence of Hernando Cortes vſed theſe ſpeeches following.

MY kinſmen, friends, and ſeruants, you doe well know that eighteene yeres I haue bene your King, as my fathers and grandfathers were, and alwayes I haue bene vnto you a louing Prince, and you vnto me good and obedient ſubiects, and ſo I hope you will remaine vnto mee all the dayes of my life. You ought to haue in remembrance, that either you haue heard of your fathers, or elſe our diuines haue inſtructed you, that wee are not naturally of this countrey, nor yet our kingdome is durable, becauſe our forefathers came from a farre countrey, and their King and Captaine, who brought them hither, returned againe to his naturall Countrey, ſaying that he would ſend ſuch as ſhould rule and gouerne vs, if by chance he himſelfe returned not, &c.

Mutezuma his Oration to his ſubiects in preſence of Hernando Cortes, which Oration was made about the yeere 1520.

Theſe be the very wordes of Mutezuma ſet downe in the Spaniſh Chronicles, the which being throughly conſidered, becauſe they haue relation to ſome ſtrange noble perſon, who long before had poſſeſſed thoſe countreys, doe all ſufficiently argue the vndoubted title of her Maieſtie: foraſmuch as no other Nation can truely by any Chronicles they can finde, make preſcription of time for themſelues, before the time of this Prince Madoc. Beſides all this, for further proofe of her highneſſe title ſithence the arriuall of this noble Briton into thoſe parts (that is to ſay) in the time of the Queenes grandfather of worthy memory, King Henry the ſeuenth, Letters patents were by his Maieſtie granted to Iohn Cabota an Italian, to Lewis, Sebaſtian and Sancius his three ſonnes, to diſcouer remote, barbarous and heathen Countreys, which diſcouery was afterwardes executed to the vſe of the Crowne of England, in the ſayde Kings time, by Sebaſtian and Sancius his ſonnes, who were borne here in England: in true teſtimony whereof there is a faire hauen in Newfoundland, knowen, and called vntill this day by the name of Sancius hauen, which proueth that they firſt diſcouered vpon that coaſt from the height of 63 vnto the cape of Florida, as appeareth in the Decades.

And this may ſtand for another title to her Maieſty: but any of the foreſayd titles is as much or more then any other Chriſtian Prince can pretend to the Indies, before ſuch time as they had actuall poſſeſſion thereof, obtained by the diſcouery of Chriſtopher Columbus, and the conqueſt of Vaſques Nunnes de Balboa, Hernando Cortes, Franciſco Pizarro, and others. And therefore I thinke it needleſſe to write any more touching the lawfulneſſe of her Maieſties title.

The fourth chapter ſheweth how that the trade, traffike, and planting in thoſe countreys, is likely to proue very profitable to the whole realme in generall.

NOw to ſhew how the ſame is likely to proone very profitable and beneficiall generally to the whole realme: it is very certaine, that the greateſt iewell of this realme, and the chiefeſt ſtrength and force of the ſame, for defence or offence in marſhall matter and maner, is the multitude of ſhips, maſters and mariners, ready to aſſiſt the moſt ſtately and royall nauy of her Maieſty, which by reaſon of this voyage ſhall haue both increaſe and maintenance. And it is well knowen that in ſundry places of this realme ſhips haue beene built and ſet forth of late dayes, for the trade of fiſhing onely: yet notwithſtanding the fiſh which is taken and brought into England by the Engliſh nauy of fiſhermen, will not ſuffice for the expenſe of this realme foure moneths, if there were none els brought of ſtrangers. And the chiefeſt cauſe why our Engliſh men doe not goe ſo farre Weſterly as the eſpeciall fiſhing places doe lie, both for plenty and greatneſſe of fiſh, is for that they haue no ſuccour and knowen ſafe harbour in thoſe parts. But if our nation were once planted there, or neere thereabouts; whereas they now fiſh but for two moneths in the yeere, they might then fiſh ſo long as pleaſed themſelues, or rather at their comming finde ſuch plenty of fiſh ready taken, ſalted, and dried, as might be ſufficient to fraught them home without long delay (God granting that ſalt may be found there) whereof Dauid Ingram (who trauelled in thoſe countreys as aforeſayd) ſayth that there is great plenty: and withall the climate doth giue great hope, that though there were none naturally growing, yet it might as well be made there by art, as it is both at Rochel and Bayon, or elſewhere. Which being brought to paſſe, ſhall increaſe the number of our ſhippes and mariners, were it but in reſpect of fiſhing onely: but much more in regard of the ſundry merchandizes and commodities which are there found, and had in great abundance.

Moreouer, it is well knowen that all Sauages, as well thoſe that dwell in the South, as thoſe that dwell in the North, ſo ſoone as they ſhall begin but a little to taſte of ciuility, will take marueilous delight in any garment, be it neuer ſo ſimple; as a ſhirt, a blew, yellow, red, or greene cotten caſſocke, a cap, or ſuch like, and will take incredible paines for ſuch a trifle.

For I my ſelfe haue heard this report made ſundry times by diuers of our countreymen, who haue dwelt in the Southerly parts of the West Indies, ſome twelue yeeres together, and ſome of leſſe time; that the people in thoſe parts are eaſily reduced to ciuility both in maners and garments. Which being ſo, what vent for our Engliſh clothes will thereby enſue, and how great benefit to all ſuch perſons and artificers, whoſe names are quoted in the margent, I do leaue to the iudgement of ſuch as are diſcreet.

And queſtionleſſe, hereby it will alſo come to paſſe, that all ſuch townes and villages as both haue beene, and now are vtterly decayed and ruinated (the poore people thereof being not ſet on worke, by reaſon of the tranſportation of raw wooll of late dayes more exceſſiuely then in times paſt) ſhal by this meanes be reſtored to their priſtinate wealth and eſtate: all which doe likewiſe tend to the inlargement of our nauy, and maintenance of our nauigation.

To what end need I endeuour my ſelfe by arguments to proue that by this voyage our nauie and nauigation ſhalbe inlarged, when as there needeth none other reaſon then the manifeſt & late example of the neere neighbours to this realme, the kings of Spaine and Portugall, who ſince the firſt diſcouery of the Indies, haue not onely mightily inlarged their dominions, greatly inriched themſelues and their ſubiects: but haue alſo by iuſt account trebled the number of their ſhippes, maſters and mariners, a matter of no ſmall moment and importance.

The idle perſons of this realme ſhall by occaſion of this iourney bee well imployed & ſet on worke.

Beſides this, it will proue a generall benefit vnto our countrey, that through this occaſion, not onely a great number of men which do now liue idlely at home, and are burthenous, chargeable, & vnprofitable to this realme, ſhall hereby be ſet on worke, but alſo children of twelue or fourteene yeeres of age, or vnder, may bee kept from idleneſſe, in making of a thouſand kindes of trifling things, which wil be good merchandize for that countrey. And moreouer, our idle women (which the Realme may well ſpare) ſhall alſo be imployed on plucking, drying, and ſorting of feathers, in pulling, beating, and working of hempe, and in gathering of cotton, and diuers things right neceſſary for dying. All which things are to be found in thoſe countreys moſt plentifully. And the men may imploy themſelues in dragging for pearle, woorking for mines, and in matters of huſbandry, and likewiſe in hunting the Whale for Trane, and making caskes to put the ſame in: beſides in fiſhing for cod, ſalmon, and herring, drying ſalting and barrelling the ſame, and felling of trees, hewing and ſawing of them, and ſuch like worke, meete for thoſe perſons that are no men of Art or ſcience.

Hempe doeth grow neere S. Laurence riuer naturally.

Many other things may bee found to the great reliefe and good employments of no ſmall number of the naturall Subiects of this Realme, which doe now liue here idlely to the common annoy of the whole ſtate. Neither may I here omit the great hope and likelyhood of a paſſage beyond the Grand Bay into the South Seas, confirmed by ſundry authours to be found leading to Cataia, the Moluccas and Spiceries, whereby may enſue as generall a benefite to the Realme, or greater then yet hath bene ſpoken of, without either ſuch charges, or other inconueniences, as by the tedious tract of time and perill, which the ordinary paſſage to thoſe parts at this day doeth miniſter.

Read the beginning of the booke intituled, Diuers voyages touching the diſcouery of America.

And to conclude this argument withall, it is well knowen to all men of ſound iudgement, that this voyage is of greater importance, and will be found more beneficiall to our countrey, then all other voyages at this day in vſe and trade amongſt vs.

The fift chapter ſheweth, that the trading and planting in thoſe countreis is likely to proue to the particular profit of all aduenturers.

I Muſt now according to my promiſe ſhew foorth ſome probable reaſons that the aduenturers in this iourney are to take particular profit by the ſame. It is therefore conuenient that I doe diuide the aduenturers into two ſorts: the noblemen and gentlemen by themſelues, and the Merchants by themſelues. For, as I doe heare, it is meant that there ſhall be one ſocietie of the Noblemen and Gentlemen, and another ſocietie of the merchants. And yet not ſo diuided, but that eche ſociety may freely and frankely trade and traffique one with the other.

And firſt to bend my ſpeech to the noblemen and gentlemen, who doe chiefly ſeeke a temperate climate, wholeſome ayre, fertile ſoile, and a ſtrong place by nature whereupon they may fortifie, and there either plant themſelues, or ſuch other perſons as they ſhall thinke good to ſend to bee lords of that place and countrey: to them I ſay, that all theſe things are very eaſie to be found within the degrees of 30 and 60 aforeſaid, either by South or North, both in the Continent, and in Iſlands thereunto adioyning at their choiſe: but the degree certaine of the eleuation of the pole, and the very climate where theſe places of force and fertility are to be found, I omit to make publike, for ſuch regard as the wiſer ſort can eaſily coniecture: the rather becauſe I doe certainly vnderſtand, that ſome of thoſe which haue the managing of this matter, knowe it as well or better then I my ſelfe, and do meane to reueale the ſame, when cauſe ſhall require, to ſuch perſons whom it ſhall concerne, and to no other: ſo that they may ſeat & ſettle themſelues in ſuch climate as ſhall beſt agree with their owne nature, diſpoſition, and good liking: and in the whole tract of that land, by the deſcription of as many as haue bene there, great plentie of minerall matter of all ſorts, and in very many places, both ſtones of price, pearle and chriſtall, and great ſtore of beaſts, birds, and fowles both for pleaſure and neceſſary vſe of man are to be found.

And for ſuch as take delight in hunting, there are Stagges, Wilde bores, Foxes, Hares, Cunnies, Badgers, Otters, and diuers other ſuch like for pleaſure. Alſo for ſuch as haue delight in hauking, there are haukes of ſundry kinds, and great ſtore of game, both for land and riuer, as Fezants, Partridges, Cranes, Heronſhawes, Ducks, Mallards, and ſuch like. There is alſo a kinde of beaſt much bigger then an Oxe, whoſe hide is more then eighteene foote long, of which ſort a countreyman of ours, one Walker a ſea man, who was vpon that coaſt, did for a trueth report in the preſence of diuers honourable and worſhipfull perſons, that he and his company did finde in one cottage aboue two hundred and fortie hides, which they brought away and ſolde in France for fortie ſhillings an hide: and with this agreeth Dauid Ingram, and deſcribeth that beaſt at large, ſuppoſing it to be a certaine kinde of Buffe; there are likewiſe beaſts and fowles of diuers kinds, which I omit for breuities ſake, great ſtore of fiſh both in the ſalt water and in the freſh, plentie of grapes as bigge as a mans thumbe, and the moſt delicate wine of the Palme tree, of which wine there be diuers of good credit in this realme that haue taſted: and there is alſo a kind of graine called Maiz, Potato rootes, and ſundry other fruits naturally growing there: ſo that after ſuch time as they are once ſetled, they ſhall neede to take no great care for victuall.

Beaſts for pleaſure.

Hides ſolde for fortie ſhillings a piece.

Great grapes. Wine of the Palme tree.

And now for the better contentation and ſatiſfaction of ſuch worſhipfull, honeſt minded, and well diſpoſed Merchants, as haue a deſire to the furtherance of euery good and commendable action, I will firſt ſay vnto them, as I haue done before to the Noblemen and Gentlemen, that within the degrees aboueſayde, is doubtleſſe to bee found the moſt wholeſome and beſt temperature of ayre, fertilitie of ſoyle, and euery other commoditie or merchandize, for the which, with no ſmall perill we doe trauell into Barbary, Spaine, Portugall, France, Italie, Moſcouie and Eaſtland. All which may be either preſently had, or at the leaſt wiſe in very ſhort time procured from thence with leſſe danger then now we haue them. And yet to the ende my argument ſhall not altogether ſtand vpon likelihoods and preſumptions, I ſay that ſuch perſons as haue diſcouered and trauelled thoſe parets, doe teſtifie that they haue found in thoſe countreyes all theſe things following, namely:

Of beaſts for furres.
Marterns.
Beauers.
Foxes, blacke and white.
Leopards.

Of wormes.
Silke wormes great & large

Of Birds.
Hawkes.
Bitters.
Curlewes.
Herons.
Partridges.
Cranes.
Mallards.
Wilde geeſe.
Stocke dooues.
Margaus.
Blacke birds.
Parrots.
Pengwins.

Of Fiſhes.
Codde.
Salmon.
Seales.
Herrings.

Of Trees.
Palme trees yeelding ſweet wines.
Cedars.
Firres.
Saſafras.
Oake.
Elme.
Poplet.

And ſundry other ſtrange Trees, to vs vnknowen.

Of fruites.
- Grapes very large.
- Muskemellons.
- Limons.
- Dates great.
- Orrenges.
- Figges.
- Prunes.
- Raiſins great and ſmall.
- Pepper.
- Almonds.
- Citrons.

Of Mettals.
- Golde.
- Siluer
- Copper.
- Lead.
- Tinne.

Of Stones.
- Turkeis.
- Rubies.
- Pearls great & faire.
- Marble, of diuers kindes.
- Iaſper.
- Chriſtall.

Sundry other commodities of all ſorts.
- Roſen.
- Pitch.
- Tarre.
- Turpentine.
- Frankincenſe.
- Honny.
- Waxe.
- Rubarbe.
- Oyle Oliue.
- Traine oyle.
- Muske codde.
- Salt.
- Tallow.
- Hides.
- Hempe.
- Flaxe.
- Cochenello & dies of diuers ſorts.
- Feathers of ſundrie ſorts, as for pleaſure and filling of Featherbeds.

And ſeeing that for ſmall coſts, the trueth of theſe things may be vnderſtood (whereof this intended ſupply will giue vs more certaine aſſurance) I doe finde no cauſe to the contrary, but that all well minded perſons ſhould be willing to aduenture ſome competent portion for the furtherance of ſo good an enterpriſe.

Now for the triall hereof, conſidering that in the articles of the ſocietie of the aduenturers in this voyage, there is prouiſion made, that no aduenturer ſhall be bound to any further charge then his firſt aduenture: and yet notwithſtanding keepe ſtill to himſelfe his children, his apprentiſes and ſeruants, his and their freedome for trade and traffique, which is a priuiledge that aduenturers in other voyages haue not: and in the ſaid articles it is likewiſe prouided, that none other then ſuch as haue aduentured in the firſt voyage, or ſhal become aduenturers in this ſupply, at any time hereafter are to be admitted in the ſaid ſociety, but as redemptionaries, which will be very chargeable: therefore generally I ſay vnto all ſuch according to the old prouerbe, Nothing venture, nothing haue. For if it do ſo fall out, according to the great hope and expectation had, (as by Gods grace it will) the gaine which now they reape by traffique into other farre countries, ſhal by this trade returne with leſſe charge, greater gaine, and more ſafety: Leſſe charge, I ſay, by reaſon of the ample and large deepe riuers at the very banke, whereof there are many, whereby both eaſily and quietly they may tranſport from the innermoſt parts of the main land, all kind of merchandize, yea in veſſels of great burden, and that three times, or twiſe in the yere at the leaſt. But let vs omit all preſumptions how vehement ſoeuer, and dwel vpon the certainty of ſuch commodities as were diſcouered by S. Humfrey Gilbert, & his aſſiſtants in Newfound land in Auguſt laſt. For there may be very eaſily made Pitch, Tarre, Roſen, Sope aſhes, in great plenty, yea, as it is thought, inough to ſerue the whole realme of euery of theſe kindes: And of Traine oyle ſuch quantity, as if I ſhould ſet downe the value that they doe eſteeme it at, which haue bene there, it would ſeeme incredible.

Commodities found in Auguſt laſt.

It is hereby intended, that theſe commodities in this abundant maner, are not to be gathered from thence, without planting and ſetling there. And as for other things of more value, and that of more ſorts and kindes then one or two (which were likewiſe diſcouered there) I doe holde them for ſome reſpects, more meete for a time to be concealed then vttered.

Of the fiſhing I doe ſpeake nothing, becauſe it is generally knowen: and it is not to be forgotten, what trifles they be that the Sauages doe require in exchange of theſe commodities: yea, for pearle, golde, ſiluer, and precious ſtones. All which are matters in trade and traffique of great moment. But admit that it ſhould ſo fall out, that the aboue ſpecified commodities ſhall not happily be found out within this firſt yeere: Yet it is very cleere that ſuch and ſo many may be found out as ſhall miniſter iuſt occaſion to thinke all coſt and labour well beſtowed. For it is very certaine, that there is one ſeat fit for fortification, of great ſafety, wherein theſe commodities following, eſpecially are to be had, that is to ſay, Grapes for wine, Whales for oyle, Hempe for cordage, and other neceſſary things, and fiſh of farre greater ſiſe and plenty, then that of Newfound land, and of all theſe ſo great ſtore, as may ſuffice to ſerue our whole realme.

Beſides all this, if credit may be giuen to the inhabitants of the ſame ſoile, a certaine riuer doth thereunto adioyne, which leadeth to a place abounding with rich ſubſtance: I doe not hereby meane the paſſage to the Moluccaes, whereof before I made mention.

And it is not to be omitted, how that about two yeeres paſt, certaine merchants of S. Malo in France, did hyre a ſhip out of the Iſland of Ierſey, to the ende that they would keepe that trade ſecret from their Countreymen, and they would admit no mariner, other then the ſhip boy belonging to the ſayd ſhip, to goe with them, which ſhippe was about 70. tunne. I doe know the ſhippe and the boy very well, and am familiarly acquainted with the owner, which voyage prooued very beneficiall.

To conclude, this which is already ſayd, may ſuffice any man of reaſonable diſpoſition to ſerue for a taſte, vntill ſuch time as it ſhall pleaſe almightie God through our owne induſtrie, to ſend vs better tydings. In the meane ſeaſon, if any man well affected to this iourney, ſhall ſtand in doubt of any matter of importance touching the ſame, he may ſatiſfie himſelfe with the iudgement and liking of ſuch of good calling and credite, as are principall dealers herein. For it is not neceſſary in this treatiſe, publikely to ſet forth the whole ſecrets of the voyage.

The ſixt Chapter ſheweth that the traffique and planting in thoſe countries, ſhall be vnto the Sauages themſelues very beneficiall and gainefull.

NOw to the end it may appeare that this voyage is not vndertaken altogether for the peculiar commodity of our ſelues and our country (as generally other trades and iourneis be) it ſhall fall out in proofe, that the Sauages ſhall hereby haue iuſt cauſe to bleſſe the houre when this enterpriſe was vndertaken.

Firſt and chiefly, in reſpect of the moſt happy and gladſome tidings of the moſt glorious Goſpel of our Sauiour Jeſus Chriſt, whereby they may be brought from falſhood to trueth, from darkneſſe to light, from the hie way of death to the path of life, from ſuperſtitious idolatrie to ſincere Chriſtianity, from the deuill to Chriſt, from hell to heauen. And if in reſpect of all the commodities they can yeelde vs (were they many moe) that they ſhould but receiue this onely benefit of Chriſtianity, they were more then fully recompenced.

But heereunto it may bee obiected, that the Goſpel muſt bee freely preached, for ſuch was the example of the Apoſtles: vnto whom although the authorities and examples before alledged of Emperors, Kings and Princes, aſwel before Chriſts time as ſince, might ſufficiently ſatiſfie: yet for further anſwere, we may ſay with S. Paul, If wee haue ſowen vnto you heauenly things, doe you thinke it much that we ſhould reape your carnall things? And withall, The workman is worthy of his hire. Theſe heauenly tidings which thoſe labourers our countreymen (as meſſengers of Gods great goodneſſe and mercy) will voluntarily preſent vnto them, doe farre exceed their earthly riches. Moreouer, if the other inferiour worldly and temporall things which they ſhall receiue from vs, be weighed in equall ballance, I aſſure my ſelfe, that by equal iudgement of any indifferent perſon, the benefits which they then receiue, ſhall farre ſurmount thoſe which they ſhall depart withall vnto vs. And admit that they had (as they haue not) the knowledge to put their land to ſome vſe: yet being brought from brutiſh ignorance to ciuilitie and knowledge, and made then to vnderſtand how the tenth part of their Land may be ſo manured and employed, as it may yeeld more commodities to the neceſſary vſe of mans life, then the whole now doeth: What iuſt cauſe of complaint may they haue? And in my priuate opinion, I do verily thinke that God did create land, to the end that it ſhould by culture and huſbandry yeeld things neceſſary for mans life.

2. Corinth. 9.

But this is not all the benefit which they ſhall receiue by the Chriſtians: for, ouer and beſide the knowledge how to till and dreſſe their grounds, they ſhal be reduced from vnſeemely cuſtomes to honeſt maners, from diſordered riotous routs and companyes to a well gouerned common wealth, and withall, ſhalbe taught mechanicall occupations, arts, and liberall ſciences: and which ſtandeth them moſt vpon, they ſhalbe defended from the cruelty of their tyrannicall and blood ſucking neighbors the Canibals, whereby infinite number of their liues ſhalbe preſerued. And laſtly, by this meanes many of their poore innocent children ſhall be preſerued from the bloody knife of the ſacrificer, a moſt horrible and deteſtable cuſtome in the ſight of God and man, now and euer heretofore vſed amongſt them. Many other things could I heere alledge to this purpoſe, were it not that I doe feare leſt I haue already more then halfe tired the reader.

This bargen cannot be vniuſt, where both parties are gainers.

The ſeuenth Chapter ſheweth that the planting there, is not a matter of ſuch charge or difficultie, as many would make it ſeeme to be.

NOw therefore for proofe, that the planting in theſe parts is a thing that may be done without the ayde of the Princes power and purſe, contrary to the allegation of many malicious perſons, who wil neither be actors in any good action themſelues, nor ſo much as afoord a good word to the ſetting forward thereof: and that worſe is, they will take vpon them to make molehilles ſeeme mountaines, and flies elephants, to the end they may diſcourage others, that be very well or indifferently affected to the matter, being like vnto Eſops dogge, which neither would eate Hay himſelfe, nor ſuffer the poore hungry aſſe to feede thereon:

I ſay and affirme that God hath prouided ſuch meanes for the furtherance of this enterpriſe, as doe ſtand vs in ſtead of great treaſure: for firſt by reaſon that it hath pleaſed God of his great goodneſſe, of long time to hold his merciful hand ouer this realme, in preſeruing the people of the ſame, both from ſlaughter by the ſword, and great death by plague, peſtilence, or otherwiſe, there are at this day great numbers (God he knoweth) which liue in ſuch penurie & want, as they could be contented to hazard their liues, and to ſerue one yeere for meat, drinke and apparell only, without wages, in hope thereby to amend their eſtates: which is a matter in ſuch like iourneyes, of no ſmall charge to the prince. Moreouer, things in the like iournyes of greateſt price and coſt, as victuall (whereof there is great plentie to be had in that countrey without money) and powder, great artillery, or corſelets are not needefull in ſo plentifull and chargeable maner, as the ſhew of ſuch a iourney may preſent: for a ſmall quantitie of all theſe, to furniſh the Fort only, will ſuffice vntill ſuch time as diuers commodities may be found out in thoſe parts, which may be thought well worthy a greater charge. Alſo the peculiar benefit of archers which God hath bleſſed this land withall before all other nations, will ſtand vs in great ſtead amongſt thoſe naked people.

Another helpe we haue alſo, which in ſuch like caſes is a matter of marueilous coſt, and will be in this iourney procured very eaſily (that is to ſay) To tranſport yeerely aſwell our people, as all other neceſſaries needfull for them into thoſe parts by the fleet of merchants, that yeerely venture for fiſh in Newfound-land, being not farre diſtant from the countrey meant to be inhabited, who commonly goe with emptie veſſels in effect, ſauing ſome litle fraight with ſalt. And thus it appeareth that the ſouldiers wages, and the tranſportation may be defrayed for farre leſſe ſummes of money then the detractors of this enterpriſe haue giuen out. Againe, this intended voyage for conqueſt, hath in like maner many other ſingular priuiledges wherewith God hath, as it were, with his holy hand bleſſed the ſame before all others. For after once we are departed the coaſt of England, wee may paſſe ſtraightway thither, without danger of being driuen into any the countries of our enemies, or doubtfull friends: for commonly one winde ſerueth to bring vs thither, which ſeldome faileth from the middle of Ianuarie to the middle of May, a benefite which the mariners make great account of, for it is a pleaſure that they haue in few or none of other iourneyes. Alſo the paſſage is ſhort, for we may goe thither in thirtie or fortie dayes at the moſt, hauing but an indifferent winde, and returne continually in twenty or foure and twentie dayes at the moſt. And in the ſame our iourney, by reaſon it is in the Ocean, and quite out of the way from the intercourſe of other countreyes, we may ſafely trade and traffique without peril of piracy: neither ſhall our ſhips, people, or goods there, be ſubiect to arreſt or moleſtation of any Pagan potentate, Turkiſh tyrant, yea, or Chriſtian prince, which heretofore ſometimes vpon ſlender occaſion in other parts haue ſtayed our ſhips and merchandizes, whereby great numbers of our countreymen haue bene vtterly vndone, diuers put to ranſome, yea, and ſome loſt their liues: a thing ſo freſh in memorie as it needeth no proofe, and is well worthy of conſideration.

Beſides, in this voyage we doe not croſſe the burnt line, whereby commonly both beuerage and victuall are corrupted, and mens health very much impayred, neither doe we paſſe the frozen ſeas, which yeelde ſundry extreme dangers: but haue a temperate climate at all times of the yeere, to ſerue our turnes. And laſtly, there neede no delayes by the way for taking in of freſh water and fewell, (a thing vſually done in long iournies) becauſe, as I ſayd aboue, the voyage is not long, and the freſh waters taken in there, our men here in England at their returne home haue found ſo wholſome and ſweete, that they haue made choiſe to drinke it before our beere and ale.

Behold heere, good countreymen, the manifold benefits, commodities and pleaſures heretofore vnknowen, by Gods eſpeciall bleſſing not onely reuealed vnto vs, but alſo as it were infuſed into our boſomes, who though hitherto like dormice haue ſlumbered in ignorance thereof, being like the cats that are loth for their prey to wet their feet: yet if now therefore at the laſt we would awake, and with willing mindes (ſetting friuolous imaginations aſide) become induſtrious inſtruments to our ſelues, queſtionleſſe we ſhould not only hereby ſet forth the glory of our heauenly father, but alſo eaſily attaine to the end of all good purpoſes that may be wiſhed or deſired.

And may it not much encourage vs to hope for good ſucceſſe in the countrey of theſe Sauages, being a naked kinde of people, voyde of the knowledge of the diſcipline of warre, ſeeing that a noble man, being but a ſubiect in this realme (in the time of our king Henry the ſecond) by name Strangbow, then earle of Chepſtow in South Wales, by himſelfe and his allies and aſſiſtants, at their owne proper charges paſſed ouer into Ireland, and there made conqueſt of the now countrey, and then kingdome of Lyneſter, at which time it was very populous and ſtrong, which Hiſtory our owne chronicles do witneſſe: And why ſhould we be diſmayed more then were the Spanyards, who haue bene able within theſe few yeeres to conquer, poſſeſſe, and enioy ſo large a tract of the earth, in the Weſt Indies, as is betweene the two tropikes of Cancer and Capricorne, not onely in the maine firme land of America, which is 47. degrees in latitude from South to North, and doth containe 2820. Engliſh miles at the leaſt, that the king of Spaine hath there in actuall poſſeſſion, beſides many goodly and rich Iſlands, as Hiſpaniola, now called S. Domingo, Cuba, Iamaica, and diuers other, which are both beautifull and full of treaſure, not ſpeaking any whit at all, how large the ſaid land is from Eaſt to Weſt, which in ſome places is accounted to be 1500. Engliſh miles at the leaſt from Eaſt to Weſt, betweene the one Sea and the other.

Or why ſhould our noble nation be diſmaid, more then was Vaſques Nunnes de Valboa, a priuate gentleman of Spaine, who with the number of 70. Spaniards at Tichiri, gaue an ouerthrow vnto that mighty king Chemacchus, hauing an armie of an hundred Canoas and 5000. men, and the ſaid Vaſques Nunnes not long after, with his ſmall number, did put to flight king Chiapes his whole armie.

2. Decad lib. 5. fol. 77. of the Weſt Indies, in Engliſh.
Canoa is a kind of boat.
3. Decad lib. 1. fol 97.

Likewiſe Hernando Cortes, being alſo but a priuate gentleman of Spaine, after his departure from the Iſlands of Cuba and Acuzamil, and entring into the firme of America, had many moſt victorious & triumphant conqueſts, as that at Cyntla, where being accompanied with leſſe then 500. Spaniſh footmen, thirteene horſemen, and ſixe pieces of Ordinance only, he ouerthrew 40000. Indians. The ſame Cortes with his ſayd number of Spanyards, tooke priſoner that mighty Emperour Mutezuma in his moſt chiefe and famous citie of Mexico, which at that inſtant had in it aboue the number of 50000. Indians at the leaſt, and in ſhort time after obteined not onely the quiet poſſeſſion of the ſaid citie, but alſo of his whole Empire.

About the yere of our Lord 1511.

Conqueſt of the Weſt Indies. fol. 43. and 45. Engliſh.

And in like maner in the Countrey of Peru, which the king of Spaine hath now in actuall poſſeſſion, Franciſco Pyſarro, with the onely ayd of Diego de Almagro, and Hernando Luche, being all three but priuate gentlemen, was the principall perſon that firſt attempted diſcouerie and conqueſt of the large and rich countrey of Peru, which through the ayd of the almighty, he brought to paſſe and atchieued in the Tambo of Caxamalca, (which is a large place of ground, encloſed with walles) in which place he tooke the great and mightie prince Atabalipa priſoner, amidſt the number of 60000. Indians his ſubiects, which were euer before that day accounted to bee a warlike kind of people, which his great victorie it pleaſed God to grant vnto him in the yeere of our Lord God 1533. he not hauing in his company aboue the number of 210. Spanyards, whereof there were not paſt threeſcore horſemen in all: after the taking of which prince Atabalipa, he offered vnto Pyzarro for his ranſome, to fill a great large hall full of gold and ſiluer, and ſuch golde and ſiluer veſſels as they then vſed, euen as high as a man might reach with his arme. And the ſayd prince cauſed the ſame hall to be marked round about at the ſayd height, which ranſome Pyzarro granted to accept. And after, when as this mighty prince had ſent to his vaſſals & ſubiects to bring in gold and ſiluer for the filling of the hall, as aforeſaid, as namely to the cities or townes of Quito, Paciacama and Cuſco, as alſo to the Calao of Lima, in which towne, as their owne writers doe affirme, they found a large and faire houſe, all ſlated and couered with gold: and when as the ſaid hall was not yet a quarter ful, a mutinie aroſe amongſt the Spanyards, in which it was commonly giuen out, that the ſaid prince had politikely offered this great ranſome vnder pretence to raiſe a much more mightie power, whereby the Spanyards ſhould be taken, ſlaine and ouerthrowen: whereupon they grew to this reſolution, to put the ſayd prince to death, and to make partition of the golde and ſiluer already brought in, which they preſently put in execution. And comming to make perfect Inuentorie of the ſame, as wel for the Emperour then king of Spaine, his fift part, as otherwiſe, there was found to be already brought in into the ſayd hall, the number of 132425. pound weight of ſiluer, and in golde the number of 1828125. pezos, which was a riches neuer before that nor ſince ſeene of any man together, of which there did appertaine to the Emperour for his fift part of golde 365625. pezos, and for his fift part of ſiluer 26485. pound waight, and to euery horſeman eight thouſand pezos of gold, and 67. pound waight of ſiluer. Euery ſouldiour had 4550. pezos of gold, and 280. pound waight of ſiluer. Euery Captaine had ſome 30000. ſome 20000. pezos of gold and ſiluer, proportionally anſwerable to their degrees and calling, according to the rate agreed vpon amongſt them.

A marueilous victorie.

Francis Pizarro as their generall, according to his decree and calling proportionally, had more then any of the reſt, ouer and beſides the maſſie table of gold which Atabalipa had in his Litter, which waighed 25000. pezos of gold: neuer were there before that day ſouldiours ſo rich in ſo ſmall a time, and with ſo little danger. And in this iourney for want of yron, they did ſhooe their horſes, ſome with gold, and ſome with ſiluer. This is to bee ſeene in the generall hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies, where as the doings of Pizarro, and the conqueſt of Peru is more at large ſet forth.

To this may I adde the great diſcoueries and conqueſts which the princes of Portugall haue made round about the Weſt, the South, and the Eaſt parts of Africa, and alſo at Calicut, and in the Eaſt Indies, and in America, at Braſile and elſewhere in ſundry Iſlands, in fortifying, peopling and planting all along the ſayd coaſtes and Iſlands, euer as they diſcouered: which being rightly weyed and conſidered, doth miniſter iuſt cauſe of incouragement to our Countreymen, not to account it ſo hard and difficult a thing for the ſubiects of this noble realme of England, to diſcouer, people, plant and poſſeſſe the like goodly lands and rich countreys not farre from vs, but neere adioyning & offring themſelues vnto vs (as is aforeſayd) which haue neuer yet heretofore bene in the actuall poſſeſſion of any other Chriſtian prince, then the princes of this Realme. All which (as I thinke) ſhould not a little animate and encourage vs to looke out and aduenture abroad, vnderſtanding what large Countreys and Iſlands the Portugals with their ſmall number haue within theſe few yeeres diſcouered, peopled and planted, ſome part whereof I haue thought it not amiſſe, briefly in particular to name both the Townes, Countreys & Iſlands, ſo neere as I could vpon the ſudden call them to remembrance: for the reſt I doe referre the Reader to the hiſtories, where more at large the ſame is to be ſeene. Firſt, they did winne and conquere from the princes of Barbary the Iſland of Geiſera & towne of Arzila, not paſt an 140. mile diſtant from their Metropolitane & chiefe city of Feſſe: and after that they wonne alſo from the ſaid princes the townes of Tanger, Ceuta, Mazigam, Azamor, and Azaffi, all alongſt the Sea coaſts. And in the yeere of our Lord, 1455. Alouis de Cadomoſta a Gentleman Venetian, was hee that firſt diſcouered for their vſe Cape Verd, with the Iſlands adioyning, of which he then peopled and planted thoſe of Bonauiſta and Sant Iago diſcouering alſo the riuer Senega, otherwiſe called Niger, and Cape Roxo & Sierra Leone, and in a few yeeres after they did diſcouer the coaſt of Guinea, and there peopled and built the caſtle of Mina: then diſcouered they further to the countreys of Melegettes, Benin, and Congo, with the Iſlands of Principe, da Nobon, S. Matthewe, and S. Thomas vnder the Equinoctiall line, which they peopled, and built in the ſaid Iſland of S. Thomas the hauen towne or port of Pauoſan. After that, about the yeere of our Lord, 1494. one Bartholomew Dias was ſent foorth, who was the firſt man that diſcouered and doubled that great and large Cape called de Bon Eſperanze, & paſſing the currents that run vpon the ſaid coaſt, on the Southeaſt part of Africa, betweene the ſaid maine land & the Iſland of S. Laurence, otherwiſe called of the ancients, Madagaſcar, he diſcouered to ẏ harbor named the Riuer of ẏ Infant. After that ſince the yeere of our Lord God, 1497. and before the ful accompliſhment of the yeere of Chriſt, 1510. through the trauailes and diſcoueries of Vaſques de Gama, Peter Aluares, Thomas Lopes, Andrew Corſale, Iohn de Empoli, Peter Sintra, Sancho de Toar, and that noble and worthy gentleman Alonſo de Albuquerque, they did diſcouer, people, and plant at Ceffala, being vpon the Eaſt ſide of Africa, in the twenty degrees of latitude of the ſouth Pole, and direct Weſt from the Iland of S. Laurence (at which port of Ceffala, diuers doe affirme that king Salomon did fetch his gold) as alſo vpon the ſaid Eaſt ſide of Africa, they did afterward diſcouer, people, and plant at Mozambique, Quiola, Monbaza and Melinde, two degrees of Southerly latitude, and ſo vp to the ſtreight of Babel-Mandell at the entring of the red ſea, all vpon the Eaſt coaſt of Africa, from whence they put off at the Cape of Guarda Fu, and paſt the great gulfe of Arabia, and the Indian Sea Eaſt to Sinus Perſicus, and the Iſland of Ormus, and ſo paſſing the large and great riuer Indus, where he hath his fall into the maine Ocean, in 23. degrees and an halfe, vnder the tropike of Cancer, of Septentrional latitude, they made their courſe againe directly towards the South, and began to diſcouer, people, and plant vpon the Weſt ſide of the hither India at Goa, Mangalor, Cananor, Calecut and Cochin, and the Iſland of Zeilam.

Ceffala accounted to be the place where the noble and wiſe king Salomon did fetch his gold.

And here I thinke good to remember to you, that after their planting vpon this coaſt, their forces grew ſo great that they were able to compell all the Moores, the ſubiectes of the mightie Emperour of the Turkes to pay tribute vnto them, euer as they paſſed the gulfe of Arabia, from the port of Mecca in Arabia Fœlix, where Mahomet lieth buried, or any of the other portes of the ſayd land, euer as they paſſed to and from the hauens of Cochin, Calecut and Cananor, and by their martiall maner of diſcipline practiſed in thoſe partes, the great and mightie prince the Sophie Emperour of the Perſians, and profeſſed enemie to the Turke, came to the knowledge and vſe of the Caliuer ſhot, and to enterlace and ioyne footemen with his horſemen, ſithence which time the Perſians haue growen to that ſtrength and force, that they haue giuen many mightie and great ouerthrowes to the Turke, to the great quiet of all Chriſtendome.

And from the Iſland of Zeilam aforeſayd, they alſo diſcouered more Eaſt in paſſing the gulfe of Bengala, and ſo paſſed the notable and famous riuer of Ganges, where hee hath his fall into the maine Ocean, vnder the tropike of Cancer, and to the Cape of Malaca, and vnto the great and large Iſlands of Sumatra, Iaua maior, Iaua minor, Mindanao, Palobane, Celebes, Gilolo, Tidore, Mathin, Borneo, Machian, Terenate, and all other the Iſlands of Molucques and Spiceries, and ſo Eaſt alongſt the coaſts of Cathaia, to the portes of China, Zaiton and Quinſay, and to the Iſland of Zipango and Iapan, ſituate in the Eaſt, in 37. degrees of Septemtrionall latitude and in 195. of longitude. Theſe are their noble and worthie diſcoueries. Here alſo is not to bee forgotten, that in the yere of our Lord, 1501. that famous and worthy gentleman Americus Veſpucius did diſcouer, people, and plant to their vſe the holdes and forts which they haue in Braſill, of whom (he being but a priuate gentleman) the whole countrey or firme land of the Weſt Indies, is commonly called and knowen by the name of America.

Theſe are the furtheſt partes of the world from England. At theſe Ilands hath ſir Francis Drake bene, where the fame of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie was renowmed.

I doe greatly doubt leaſt I ſeeme ouer tedious in the recitall of the particular diſcoueries and conqueſts of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, wherein I was the more bold to vrge the patience of the Reader, to the end it might moſt manifeſtly and at large appeare, to all ſuch as are not acquainted with the hiſtories, how the king of Portugall, whoſe Countrey for popularity and number of people, is ſcarce comparable to ſome three ſhires of England, and the king of Spaine like wiſe; whoſe natural Countrey doth not greatly abound with people, both which princes by meanes of their diſcoueries within leſſe then 90. yeeres paſt, haue as it appeareth both mightily and maruellouſly enlarged their territories and dominions through their owne induſtrie by the aſſiſtance of the omnipotent, whoſe aid we ſhall not need to doubt, ſeeing the cauſe and quarell which we take in hand tendeth to his honour and glory, by the enlargement of the Chriſtian faith.

To conclude, ſince by Chriſtian dutie we ſtand bound chiefly to further all ſuch acts as do tend to the encreaſing the true flock of Chriſt by reducing into the right way thoſe loſt ſheepe which are yet aſtray: And that we ſhall therein follow the example of our right vertuous predeceſſors of renowmed memorie, and leaue vnto our poſteritie a diuine memoriall of ſo godly an enterpriſe: Let vs I ſay for the conſiderations alledged, enter into iudgement with our ſelues, whether this action may belong to vs or no, the rather for that this voyage through the mighty aſſiſtance of the omnipotent God, ſhall take our deſired effect (whereof there is no iuſt cauſe of doubt.) Then ſhal her Maieſties dominions be enlarged, her highneſſe ancient titles iuſtly confirmed, all odious idleneſſe from this our Realme vtterly baniſhed, diuers decayed townes repaired, and many poore and needy perſons relieued, and eſtates of ſuch as now liue in want ſhall be embettered, the ignorant and barbarous idolaters taught to know Chriſt, the innocent defended from their bloodie tyrannicall neighbours, the diabolicall cuſtome of ſacrificing humane creatures aboliſhed.

All which (no man doubteth) are things gratefull in the ſight of our Sauiour Chriſt, and tending to the honour and glory of the Trinitie. Bee of good cheere therefore, for hee that cannot erre hath ſayd: That before the ende of the world, his word ſhall bee preached to all nations; Which good worke I truſt is reſerued for our nation to accompliſh in theſe parts: Wherefore my deere countreymen, be not diſmayed: for the power of God is nothing diminiſhed, nor the loue that he hath to the preaching and planting of the Goſpell any whit abated. Shall wee then doubt he will be leſſe ready moſt mightily and miraculouſly to aſſiſt our nation in this quarell, which is chiefly and principally vndertaken for the enlargement of the Chriſtian faith abroad, and the baniſhment of idlenes at home, then he was to Columbus, Vaſques Nunnes, Hernando Cortes, and Francis Pizarro in the Weſt: and Vaſques de Gama, Peter Aluares, & Alonſo de Albuquerque in the Eaſt: Let vs therefore with cheerefull minds and couragious hearts, giue the attempt, and leaue the ſequell to almightie God: for if he be on our part, what forceth it who bee againſt vs? Thus leauing the correction and reformation vnto the gentle Reader, whatſoeuer is in this treatiſe too much or too little, otherwiſe vnperfect, I take leaue, and ſo end.

A letter of Sir Francis VValſingham to M. Richard Hakluyt then of Chriſtchurch in Oxford, incouraging him in the ſtudy of Coſmographie, and of furthering new diſcoueries, &c.

I Vnderſtand aſwel by a letter I long ſince receiued from the Maior of Briſtoll, as by conference with ſir George Pekham, that you haue endeuoured, & giuen much light for the diſcouery of the Weſterne partes yet vnknowen: as your ſtudie in theſe things is very cōmendable, ſo I thanke you much for the ſame; wiſhing you do continue your trauell in theſe and like matters, which are like to turne not only to your owne good in priuate, but to the publike benefite of this Realme. And ſo I bid you farewell. From the Court the 11. of March. 1582.

Your louing Friend,
FRANCIS WALSINGHAM.

A letter of Sir Francis VValſingham to Maſter Thomas Aldworth merchant, and at that time Maior of the Citie of Briſtoll, concerning their aduenture in the Weſterne diſcouerie.

After my heartie commendations, I haue for certaine cauſes deferred the anſwere of your letter of Nouember laſt till now, which I hope commeth all in good time. Your good inclination to the Weſterne diſcouerie I cannot but much commend. And for that ſir Humfrey Gilbert, as you haue heard long ſince, hath bene preparing into thoſe parts being readie to imbarke within theſe 10. dayes, who needeth ſome further ſupply of ſhipping then yet he hath, I am of opinion that you ſhall do well if the ſhip or 2. barkes you write of, be put in a readineſſe to goe alongſt with him, or ſo ſoone after as you may. I hope this trauell wil proue profitable to the Aduenturers and generally beneficiall to the whole realme: herein I pray you conferre with theſe bearers, M. Richard Hackluyt, and M. Thomas Steuenton, to whome I referre you: And ſo bid you heartily farewell. Richmond the 11. of March. 1582.

Your louing Friend.
FRANCIS WALSINGHAM.

A letter written from M. Thomas Aldworth merchant and Maior of the Citie of Briſtoll, to the right honourable Sir Francis Walſingham principall Secretary to her Maieſtie, concerning a Weſterne voyage intended for the diſcouery of the coaſt of America, lying to the Southweſt of Cape Briton.

Right honourable, vpon the receit of your letters directed vnto me and deliuered by the bearers hereof M. Richard Hakluyt and M. Steuenton, bearing date the 11. of March, I preſently conferred with my friends in priuate, whom I know moſt affectionate to this godly enterpriſe, eſpecially with M. William Salterne deputie of our company of merchants: whereupon my ſelfe being as then ſicke, with as conuenient ſpeede as he could, hee cauſed an aſſembly of the merchants to be gathered: where after dutifull mention of your honourable diſpoſition for the benefite of this citie, he by my appointment cauſed your letters being directed vnto me priuatly, to be read in publike, and after ſome good light giuen by M. Hakluyt vnto them that were ignorant of the Countrey and enterpriſe, and were deſirous to be reſolued, the motion grew generally ſo well to be liked, that there was eftſoones ſet downe by mens owne hands then preſent, & apparently knowen by their owne ſpeach, and very willing offer, the ſumme of 1000. markes and vpward: which ſumme if it ſhould not ſuffice, we doubt not but otherwiſe to furniſh out for this Weſterne diſcouery, a ſhip of threeſcore, and a barke of 40. tunne, to bee left in the countrey vnder the direction and gouernment of your ſonne in law M. Carlile, of whom we haue heard much good, if it ſhall ſtand with your honors good liking and his acceptation. In one of which barks we are alſo willing to haue M. Steuenton your honours meſſenger, and one well knowen to vs, as captains. And here in humble maner, deſiring your honour to vouchſafe vs of your further direction by a generall letter to my ſelfe, my brethren, and the reſt of the merchants of this city, at your honors beſt and moſt conuenient leiſure, becauſe we meane not to deferre the finall proceeding in this voyage, any further then to the end of April next comming, I ceaſe, beſeeching God long to bleſſe and proſper your honourable eſtate. Briſtoll. March 27. 1583.

A briefe and ſummary diſcourſe vpon the intended voyage to the hithermoſt parts of America: written by Captaine Carlile in April, 1583. for the better inducement to ſatiſfie ſuch Merchants of the Moſcouian companie and others, as in diſburſing their money towards the furniture of the preſent charge, doe demand forthwith a preſent returne of gaine, albeit their ſaid particular diſburſements are required but in very ſlender ſummes, the higheſt being 25. li. the ſecond at 12. li. 10. s. and the loweſt at 6. pound fiue ſhillings.

When the Goldſmith deſireth to finde the certaine goodneſſe of a piece of golde, which is newly offered vnto him, he preſently bringeth the ſame to the Touchſtone, where, by comparing the ſhewe or touch of this new piece with the touch or ſhew of that which he knoweth of old, he forthwith is able to iudge what the value is of that, which is newly offered vnto him. After the example whereof I haue thought it good to make ſome briefe repetition of the particular eſtate of many other forren voyages and trades already frequented and knowen vnto vs, whereby we may be the better able to conceiue and iudge what certaine likelihood of good there is to be expected in the voyage, which is preſently recommended vnto your knowledge and reſolution.

Moſcouie.

And firſt to lay downe that of Moſcouia, whoſe beginning is yet in the remembrance of many: It is well knowen, that what by the charges of the firſt diſcouery, and by the great gifts beſtowed on the Emperour and his Nobilitie, togither with the leud dealing of ſome of their ſeruants, who thought themſelues ſafe enough from orderly puniſhment, it coſt the company aboue foureſcore thouſand pounds, before it could be brought to any profitable reckoning. And now that after ſo long a patience and ſo great a burthen of expences, the ſame began to frame to ſome good courſe and commoditie: It falleth to very tickliſh termes, and to as ſlender likelihood of any further goodneſſe, as any other trade that may be named.

For firſt the eſtate of thoſe Countreys and the Emperours dealings, are things more fickle then are by euery body vnderſtood.

Dutchmen.

Next, the Dutchmen are there ſo crept in as they daily augment their trade thither, which may well confirme that vncertainty of the Emperors diſpoſition to keepe promiſe with our nation.

Thirdly, the qualitie of the voyage, ſuch as may not be performed but once the yeere.

Fourthly, the charges of all Ambaſſadours betweene that Prince and her Maieſty, are alwayes borne by the merchants ſtocke.

Denmarke.

And laſtly, the danger of the king of Denmarke, who beſides that preſently he is like to enforce a tribute on vs, hath likewiſe an aduantage vpon the ſhips in their voyage, either homewards or outwards whenſoeuer he liſteth to take the opportunitie.

Eaſterlings.

The badde dealings of the Eaſterlings are ſufficiently knowen to be ſuch towards our merchants of that trade, as they doe not onely offer them many iniuries ouerlong to bee written, but doe ſeeke all the meanes they can, to depriue them wholy of their occupying that way: and to the ſame purpoſe haue of late cleane debarred them their accuſtomed and ancient priuiledges in all their great townes.

Turkie.

The traffique into Turkie, beſides that by ſome it is thought a hard point to haue ſo much familiaritie with the profeſſed and obſtinate enemie of Chriſt: It is likewiſe a voyage which can not be made but at the deuotion, and as it were in the danger of many ſtates, who for ſundry reſpects are apt to quarell with vs vpon ſudden occaſions, and the preſents to be giuen away in Turkie this yeere, coſt little leſſe then two thouſand pounds.

Leuant.

As for the trades into all the partes of Italie, it may eaſily be conſidered by euery one of iudgement, that the ſame ſtand in the like termes touching the paſſages, as that of Turkie, and that many times our ſhippes being taken in the way by the Gallies of Alger, our poore Mariners after the loſſe of their goods and trauell, are ſet at ſuch exceſſiue ranſoms before they can bee freed of their ſlauerie, as for the moſt part they are no way able to diſcharge. As for example, at this inſtant there are ſome priſoners, poore ordinarie Mariners, for whoſe releaſing there muſt be payed two hundred Duckets the man, for ſome three hundred, yea, foure or fiue hundred Duckets the man for ſome of them. And how enuiouſly the Venetians doe already oppoſe themſelues againſt our frequenting into their parts, may appeare by the late cuſtoms which they haue impoſed as well vpon our Engliſh merchandize which we bring them, as alſo vpon ſuch their merchandize which we fetch from them.

Barbarie.

The trade into Barbarie groweth likewiſe to worſe termes then before times, and when it was at the beſt, our merchants haue bene in danger of all their goods they had there, whenſoeuer it happened the king to die. For vntill a new were choſen, the libertie of all diſordered perſons is ſuch, as they ſpoile and wrong whom they liſt, without any redreſſe at all.

Spaine.
Portugall.

Touching Spaine and Portugall, with whom wee haue very great trade, and much the greater, by meanes of their venting a good part of our wares in their Indies, as alſo of the prouiſion they haue from the ſame, wherewith are made many of our returnes from them againe: It falleth out that twiſe the yeere ordinarily we ſend our Fleetes into thoſe parts: So that whenſoeuer the king of Spaine liſteth to take the opportunitie, hee may at theſe ſeaſons depriue vs not onely of a great number of our very good ſhips, but alſo of our honeſteſt and ableſt ſort of Mariners that are to bee found in our whole Realme againe, which is a matter of no ſmall conſequence: for it is to be noted, that when hee ſhall take a quarell in hand, though it be but his owne particularly, yet hath he the meanes to put in hazard as well thoſe our ſhippes which are in his owne Countreys of Spaine and Portugall, as alſo all others which ſhall bee bound to any the partes of all Italie or of Turkie either. And further whoſoeuer hee bee that is but meanely affected in Religion, as of neceſſitie becommeth euery ordinarie man and good Chriſtian to be, cannot but be agrieued in

Remember the great arreſt of the Hollanders. An. 1598 his heart to conſider, that his children and ſeruants whom hee deſireth to haue well brought vp, are in theſe trades of Spaine and Portugall, and all Italie, forced to denie their owne profeſſion, and made to acquaint themſelues with that which the Parents and Maſters doe vtterly deny and refuſe, yea which many of them doe in their owne hearts abhorre as a deteſtable and moſt wicked doctrine.

But who ſhall looke into the qualitie of this voyage, being directed to the latitude of fortie degrees or thereabouts, of that hithermoſt part of America, ſhal find it hath as many points of good moment belonging vnto it, as may almoſt be wiſhed for.

Commodities of this voyage in ſhortneſſe.

1 As firſt it is to be vnderſtood, that it is not any long courſe, for it may be perfourmed too and fro in foure moneths after the firſt diſcouerie thereof.

2 Secondly, that one wind ſufficeth to make the paſſage, whereas moſt of your other voyages of like length, are ſubiect to 3. or 4. winds.

3 Thirdly, that it is to be perfourmed at all times of the yeere.

4 Fourthly, that the paſſage is vpon the high ſea, wherby you are not bound to the knowledge of dangers, on any other coaſt, more then of that Countrey, and of ours here at home.

5 Fiftly, that thoſe parts of England and Ireland, which lie apteſt for the proceeding outward or homeward vpon this voyage, are very well ſtored of goodly harbours.

6 Sixtly, that it is to bee accounted of no danger at all as touching the power of any forreine prince or ſtate, when it is compared with any the beſt of all other voyages before recited.

7 And to the godly minded, it hath this comfortable commoditie, that in this trade their Factours, bee they their ſeruants or children, ſhall haue no inſtruction or confeſſions of Idolatrous Religion enforced vpon them, but contrarily ſhall be at their free libertie of conſcience, and ſhall find the ſame Religion exerciſed, which is moſt agreeable vnto their Parents and Maſters.

Commodities of the countrey more then thoſe of Moſcouie.

As for the merchandiſing, which is the matter eſpecially looked for, albeit that for the preſent we are not certainely able to promiſe any ſuch like quantitie, as is now at the beſt time of the Moſcouian trade brought from thence: So likewiſe is there not demanded any ſuch proportion of daily expences, as was at the firſt, and as yet is conſumed in that of Moſcouia and other.

But when this of America ſhall haue bene haunted and practiſed thirtie yeeres to an ende, as the other hath bene, I doubt not by Gods grace, that for the tenne ſhippes that are now commonly employed once the yeere into Moſcouia, there ſhall in this voyage twiſe tenne be imployed well, twiſe the yeere at the leaſt. And if for the preſent time there doe fall out nothing els to bee found then the bare Fiſhing, yet doubt I not after the firſt yeeres planting, but by that matter onely to ſerue halfe a dozen of your beſt ſort of ſhips, although my ſupply of people doe not follow me ſo ſubſtantially, as in all reaſon may be well looked for.

The ſeuerall merchandiſe.

But when it is asked what may be hoped from thence after ſome yeeres, it is firſt to be conſidered, that this ſituation in fourtie degrees, ſhall bee very apt to gather the commodities either of thoſe parts which ſtand to the Southward of it, as alſo of thoſe which are to the Northward.

In the Northerlie may be expected not onely an eſpeciall good fiſhing for Salmon, Codde, and Whales, but alſo any other ſuch commodities, as the Eaſterne Countreys doe yeeld vs now: as Pitch, Tarre, Hempe, and thereof cordage, Maſts, Loſhe hides, rich Furres, and other ſuch like, without being in any ſort beholding to a king of Denmarke, or other prince or ſtate that ſhall be in ſuch ſort able to command our ſhippes at their pleaſure, as thoſe doe at this day, by meanes of their ſtrait paſſages and ſtrong ſhipping.

As for thoſe partes which lie Weſt and to the Southwardes, it may well bee hoped they will yeeld Wines with a ſmall helpe, ſince the grapes doe growe there of themſelues alreadie very faire and in great abundance. Oliues being once planted, will yeelde the like Oyle as Spaine, Prouince and Italie. The Countrey people being made to know, that for Waxe and honie, we will giue them ſuch trifling things as they deſire of vs, and ſhewing them once the meanes how to prouide the ſame, the labour thereof being ſo light, no doubt but in ſhort time they will earneſtly care to haue the ſame in good quantitie for vs. Beſides, what great likelihoode there is of good meanes to make Salt, which may ſerue for the fiſhing of thoſe partes, may well enough appeare vnto them, who can iudge the qualitie of ſuch places as are required to make the ſame in.

A lake of ſalt in Vaſques his voyage.

Thus much for the beginning, becauſe they may bee had with an eaſie kinde of trauell: but when it may haue pleaſed God to eſtabliſh our people there any ſuch time as they may haue planted amongſt them in ſundry partes of the Countrey, and that by gentle and familiar entreating them, they bee made to ſee what is better for them then they doe as yet vnderſtand of, and that in ſo many ſorts of occaſions as were infinite to be ſet downe: It is to bee aſſuredly hoped, that they will daily by little and little forſake their barbarous and ſauage liuing, and growe to ſuch order and ciuilitie with vs, as there may be well expected from thence no leſſe quantitie and diuerſitie of merchandize then is now had out of Dutchland, Italie, France or Spaine. And as the bordering neighbours are commonly the apteſt to fall out with vs, ſo theſe parts being ſomewhat remote, are the liker to take, or giue leſſe occaſion of diſquiet. But when it is conſidered that they are our own kindred, and eſteemed our own countrey nation which haue the gouernment, meaning by thoſe who ſhall be there planted, who can looke for any other then the dealing of moſt louing and moſt aſſured friends?

There are further to be conſidered theſe two poynts of good importance, concerning the matter of trade. The one is, that by the good proſpering of this action, there muſt of neceſſitie fall out a very liberall vtterance of our Engliſh Clothes into a maine Country, deſcribed to bee bigger then all Europe, the larger part whereof bending to the Northward, ſhall haue wonderfull great vſe of our ſayde Engliſh Clothes, after they ſhall come once to knowe the commoditie thereof. The like will bee alſo of many other things, ouer many to bee reckoned, which are made here by our Artificers and labouring people, and of neceſſitie muſt bee prouided from hence.

The other is, if there be any poſſible meanes to finde a ſea paſſage or other freſh water courſe, which may ſerue in ſome reaſonable and conuenient ſort, to tranſport our marchandize into the Eaſt Indian Sea, through any of theſe Northerly partes of America, it ſhall be ſooneſt and moſt aſſuredly perfourmed by theſe who ſhall inhabite and firſt grow into familiaritie with the Inland people.

What Minerall matter may fall out to bee found, is a thing left in ſuſpence, vntill ſome better knowledge, becauſe there be many men, who hauing long ſince expected ſome profits herein, vpon the great promiſes that haue bene made them, and being as yet in no point ſatiſfied, doe thereupon conceiue that they be but wordes purpoſely caſt out for the inducing of men to bee the more ready and willing to furniſh their money towards the charge of the firſt diſcouerie.

But nowe to anſwere ſome others who begin with an other obiection, ſaying: That it is not for the Marchants purſe to continue the charges of tranſporting and planting: and that ſince theſe hundred men which are nowe to bee planted, will coſt foure thouſand pound: It is then to bee thought, that the charge of a farre greater number, will bee alſo a farre greater ſumme of money.

Obiection.

Whereunto I anſwere, that in all attemptes vnknowen, eſpecially ſuch a one as this is, wherewith wee are preſently in hand, the firſt charges are commonly aduentured in more deſperate kinde, then thoſe that followe vpon ſome better knowledge: and therewith it falleth out, that whereas one aduentureth in the firſt enterpriſe, an hundred for that one will of themſelues bee willing and deſirous to aduenture in the next, if there bee neuer ſo little more appearance, that the intended matter is by ſome knowledge of our owne, found true in ſome poynts of our firſt preſumption.

Answere.

The examples are many, and may eaſily bee remembred by thoſe who be Marchants, euen in their ordinarie and dayly trades, as well as in extraordinarie attempts, which of late yeeres haue fallen into thoſe termes of ſome likelyhood, as is aforeſayde. So then no doubt, but when certaine reports ſhall bee brought by them who directly come from thence, that ſuch a Countrey and people they haue themſelues ſeene as is by vs ſpoken of, but that then there will come forwarde a greater number of thoſe, who nowe neither haue heard any thing of the matter, as alſo of others, who preſently make ſuch friuolous ſcruple, and will not otherwiſe be ſatiſfied, then by the report of Saint Thomas. I ſpeake not this by the Marchants whom for their freedoms of trade I would not haue preſſed to any further charge then this firſt preparation, but rather by ſuch as haue great affection to hazard the changing of their eſtates, and would be well content to goe in the voyage if they might onely be aſſured that there is ſuch a Countrey, & that their money ſhould not be waſted to nothing in the preparations.

The ewer of metal brought by M. Frobiſher, caused two generall ſupplies, the two yeeres next following, whereof the latter was of thirteene tall ſhips.

The right examination of this point muſt bee the contrary ſequell of the common Prouerbe that is vſed, Nothing venture, nothing haue: ſo on the other ſide by venturing, many great good profites are found out, to the wonderfull benefite of the Common weale and to thoſe eſpecially in priuate, who take on them the hazard of their life and trauell, or ſubſtance in the firſt attempts: and therefore I would wiſh that they, who (God be thanked) are well able to ſpare that which is required of each one towardes the vndertaking of this aduenture, be well content and willing to imploy the ſame, ſince the ſequell in good and ſubſtantiall reaſon doth promiſe, not onely a great commoditie in particular to the Marchant, who ſhall here at home exerciſe the trade of Marchandiſe: but alſo to an infinite number of other, who preſently liue in poore eſtate, and may by taking the opportunitie of this diſcouerie, alter the ſame to a far better degree. Wherefore to make ſome concluſion vpon this point of the Marchants miſdoubt, who ſuſpecteth leſt this firſt diſburſſement without returne of preſent gaine, ſhould not be all his charge, but that afterwards he might yet further be vrged to continue the like again, as hath happened in the diſcouery of the Moſcouian trade: It may ſuffice to conſider, that this is not an action which concerneth onely the Marchants particularly, but a great deale more the generall ſort of people throughout all England: And that when ſuch relation ſhall be returned, as that it may bee found a matter worthy the following, the whole generalitie wil not refuſe to contribute towards the furtherance thereof, rather then it ſhould ſinke for want of any reaſonable ſupply.

But as it is a very little time, ſince I haue beene throughly reſolued to trie my fortune in the matter, ſo it is more then time the preparation were in hand already, and therefore no fit time now to make any number of ignorant men to vnderſtand with reaſon the circumſtance that belongeth to a matter of ſo great conſideration and importance.

To thoſe who haue any forward mindes in well doing to the generalitie of mankind, I ſay thus much more, that Chriſtian charitie doth as greatly perſwade the furtherance of this action, as any other that may be layed before vs, in as much as thereby wee ſhall not onely doe a moſt excellent worke, in reſpect of reducing the ſauage people to Chriſtianitie and ciuilitie, but alſo in reſpect of our poore ſorte of people, which are very many amongſt vs, liuing altogether vnprofitable, and often times to the great diſquiet of the better ſort. For who knoweth not, how by the long peace, happie health, and bleſſed plentifulneſſe, wherewith God hath endued this Realme, that the people is ſo mightily encreaſed, as a great number being brought vp, during their youth in their parents houſes, without any inſtruction how to get their liuings after their parents deceaſe, are driuen to ſome neceſſitie, whereby very often for want of better education they fall into ſundry diſorders, and ſo the good ſort of people, as I ſayde before, are by them ordinarily troubled, and themſelues led on to one ſhamefull ende or other, whereas if there might bee found ſome ſuch kinde of imployment as this would be, no doubt but a greater part of them would be withheld from falling into ſuch vile deedes: and in ſteade thereof, prooue greatly ſeruiceable in thoſe affaires, where they might be ſo imployed.

Maſter Carliles owne experience.

This I ſpeake of mine owne experience, hauing ſeene diuers come ouer to the warres of the lowe Countreys during my reſidence in the ſame, who here had beene very euill and idle liuers, and by ſome little continuance with vs, haue growen to be very induſtrious in their facultie, which I can aſſure you, was a more painefull maner of liuing then in this action is like to fall out, and withall to a purpoſe of farre leſſe value, in reſpect of their particular recompence, then with an aſſured kind of good hope is looked for in this.

Thus you ſee in euery point that may bee wiſhed for in a good action and voyage, there is matter and reaſon enough to ſatiſfie the well diſpoſed. But nowe to growe ſomewhat neerer the quicke, and to ſhewe you ſome greater appearance, then hath beene yet ſpoken of touching the trade which is the onely ſubiect wherewith I doe meane to intermeddle at this time, becauſe my addreſſe hereby is chiefly to men of ſuch like facultie: you may vnderſtande by that which followeth, the circumſtance of a little diſcourſe, which doeth concerne theſe matters very directly.

In the yeere 1534. Iames Carthier of S. Malo made his firſt diſcouerie of thoſe partes of America, which lie to the Weſtwardes, and as it were on the backeſide of Newfoundland. In which voyage his principall intention was to ſeeke out the paſſage, which hee preſumed might haue beene found out into the Eaſt Indian Sea, otherwiſe called the paſſage to Cathaya, but this yere he went no higher then the Iſland of the Aſſumption in the great bay of S. Laurence, and ſo returned backe into France.

The next yeere following hee went with greater prouiſion into the Grand bay againe, where he keping the Northerly ſhoare, ran vp the great Riuer that comes downe from Canada and other places, vntill at laſt with his ſmall pinneſſes, (hauing left his great ſhipping by the way) he arriued at Hochelaga towne, being three hundreth leagues within the entrance of the Grand bay. In which trauaile hee had ſpent ſo much of the yeere, that it was nowe the moneth of October, and therefore thought it conuenient, for the better enforming himſelfe at large in this diſcouerie, to winter it out in thoſe partes, which he did at a place called by himſelfe Holy Croſſe. This winter fell out to bee a very long and hard winter, as many times the like happeneth with vs in theſe partes, and the ſauage people, who for the moſt part make but a ſlender kinde of prouiſion, euen as it were from hande to mouth, fell into ſome ſcarcitie of victuals; yet did they not refuſe to ſerue the Frenchmen, with any thing they had all the winter long, albeit at ſomewhat higher prices towardes the ende when the neede was moſt, as with our ſelues the like happeneth at ſuch times.

But when the French had their wants ſerued all the yeere, and that as yet they ſawe not any appearance of their intended matter, which was the diſcouerie of the paſſage, and yet imagining by the ſignes wherewith the willing people endeuoured to declare their knowledge in that poynt, that ſome good matter might bee had from them, if they might haue beene well vnderſtoode, they reſolued with themſelues to take ſome of the ſufficiẽteſt men of that countrey home into France, and there to keepe them ſo long, as that hauing once atchieued the French tongue, they might declare more ſubſtantially their minde, and knowledge in the ſayde paſſage, concluding this to be the meane of leaſt charge, of leaſt trauaile, and of leaſt hazard.

And when they came to bethinke themſelues, who might bee meeteſt for it, they determined to take the King, as the perſon who might bee beſt infourmed of ſuch partes as were ſomewhat remote from his owne Countrey, as alſo that for the reſpect of him, the people would bee alwayes readie, and content to doe them any further ſeruice, when it ſhould happen them to returne thither againe about the diſcouerie.

Thus the poore king of the Countrey, with two or three others of his chiefe companions comming aboorde the French ſhippes, being required thither to a banquet, was traiterouſly caryed away into France, where hee liued foure yeeres, and then dyed a Chriſtian there, as Theuet the French Kings Coſmographer doeth make mention. This outrage and iniurious dealing did put the whole Countrey people into ſuch diſlike with the French, as neuer ſince they would admit any conuerſation or familiaritie with them, vntill of late yeeres, the olde matter beginning to grow out of minde, and being the rather drawen on by gifts of many trifling things, which were of great value with them, they are as (I ſayde) within theſe two or three yeeres content againe to admit a traffique, which two yeeres ſince was begunne with a ſmall barke of thirtie tunnes, whoſe returne was found ſo profitable, as the next yeere following, being the laſt yeere, by thoſe Marchants, who meant to haue kept the trade ſecret vnto themſelues, from any others of their owne Countrey men, there was hired a ſhippe of foureſcore tunnes out of the Iſle of Ierſey, but not any one Mariner of that place, ſauing a ſhipboy. This ſhippe made her returne in ſuch ſorte, as that this yeere they haue multiplyed three ſhippes, to wit, one of nine ſcore tunnes, another of an hundreth tunnes, and a third of foure ſcore tunnes: which report is giuen by very ſubſtantiall and honeſt men of Plimmouth, who ſawe the ſayd ſhippes in readineſſe to depart on their voyage, and were aboord of ſome of them.

The Frenchmens trade renewed in Canada, in the yeere 1581.

Here is at this inſtant in the towne a man of Gerneſey, Lewis de Vike, who reporteth to haue credibly heard, that by this laſt yeeres voyage the Frenchmen got fourteene or fifteene hundreth for euery one hundreth: But how ſoeuer it be, it carrieth good likelyhood of ſome notable profite, in aſmuch as they doe ſo greatly, and thus ſuddenly encreaſe the burthen and number of their ſhips this preſent yeere.

Nowe, if in ſo little as two yeeres time this voyage of the Northerne partes bee growen to ſuch good paſſe as hath beene declared vnto you: it is worth the thinking on to conſider what may be hoped for from the Southerne part, which in all reaſon may promiſe a great deale more. And ſo, as one who was neuer touched with any indirect meaning, I preſume to wiſh and perſwade you to ſome better taking of this matter to heart, as a thing which I do verely thinke will turne to your greater and more aſſured commodity, then you receiue by any other voyage, as yet frequented of ſo ſhort and ſafe a courſe as this hath: dealing herein no otherwiſe with you for your ſeuerall ſmall ſummes, then I doe with my ſelfe, both for more of mine owne, then is required of any one of you: beſides the hazard and trauaile of my perſon, and the totall imployment of my poore credit, which (I thanke God) hath hitherto paſſed cleare and vnſpotted in matters of greater importance and difficultie, then is like to fall out in this matter betweene you and me.

The South part beſt for inhabiting and traffique.

Articles ſet downe by the Committies appointed in the behalfe of the Companie of Moſcouian Marchants, to conferre with M. Carlile, vpon his intended diſcouerie and attempt into the hithermoſt parts of America.

First the Committies are well perſwaded, that the Countrey whereunto this action is intended, is very fruitfull, inhabited with ſauage people of a milde and tractable diſpoſition. And that of all other places which are vnfrequented at this day, it is the onely moſt fit and moſt commodious for vs to intermeddle withall.

The conuenienteſt maner of attempting this enterpriſe is thought to bee thus: That there ſhould be one hundreth men conueyed thither to remaine there one whole yeere: who with friendly intreatie of the people, may enter into better knowledge of the particular eſtate of the Countrey, and thereby gather what commoditie may be hereafter, or preſently looked for.

The charge to tranſport theſe hundreth men, to victuall them, and to furniſh them of munition and other needefull things, will not be leſſe then foure thouſand poundes: whereof hath bene very readily offered by the Citie of Briſtoll one thouſand poundes, the reſidue being three thouſande poundes, remaineth to bee furniſhed by this Citie of London, or any others who will aduenture their money in this firſt preparation.

The furniſhing foorth of 100. men for one yeere will coſt 4000. li.

The Committies thinke it conuenient that a Priuilege ſhould be procured by Maſter Carlile from her Maieſty, by vertue whereof theſe conditions and Articles following may be effectually prouided for.

Firſt, that they who ſhall diſburſſe their money for the firſt preparation, ſhall be named Aduenturers, and ſhall haue the one halfe of all ſuch landes, territories, townes, mines of gold and ſiluer, and other metals whatſoeuer, as ſhall bee found, gotten, obtained, as conquered by this diſcouery: yeelding to her Maieſtie the fift part of all ſuch gold and ſiluer, as ſhall happen to be had out of any mines that ſo ſhall be found.

That thoſe parties which doe employ themſelues perſonally in the preſent diſcouerie, ſhall be named Enterpriſers, and ſhall haue the other halfe of all the Lands, Territories, Townes, Mines of Gold and Siluer, and other mettals, yeelding to her Maieſtie the fift part of the Gold and Siluer as the Aduenturers do: The ſame to bee diſtributed by the Generall, with the conſent of the greateſt part of twelue diſcreete perſons to bee choſen out of the whole number of the Enterpriſers.

Alſo, that all trade of Marchandiſe which ſhall bee vſed to and from thoſe partes, which by this diſcouerie ſhall bee found out, ſhall appertaine onely to the Aduenturers which firſt ſhall diſburſſe their money for this diſcouery, with prohibition to all other her Maieſties ſubiects, and other Marchants to deale in the ſayd parts, without the conſent of the firſt Aduenturers, vpon loſſe of ſhippe and goods, and puniſhment of their perſons, that ſo ſhall aduenture in trade of marchandiſe: or otherwiſe by impriſonment at the Companies pleaſure.

That no perſon ſhall hereafter aduenture in this diſcouerie as Aduenturers for the profits mentioned in the firſt Articles, but ſuch onely as doe diſburſſe their money in this firſt preparation: and they ſhall not aduenture hereafter any greater ſumme, then ratably according to their proportion of this their firſt aduenture.

Alſo, the profite which by this diſcouerie ſhall be attained vnto, either by lande which may bee conquered, or otherwiſe gotten: as alſo ſuch profite which by this diſcouerie ſhall bee obtained by mines, or otherwiſe gotten, that eche one ſhall haue his part rate and rate like, according to the proportion of their firſt aduenture, and not otherwiſe.

The Aduenturers in this firſt preparation ſhall, at their owne free will and libertie, chooſe whether they will ſupply hereafter any further charge or not: if there doe fall out any ſuch occaſion to require the ſame. And yet withall ſhall for euer holde to them the freedome of the trade which ſhall growe in any of theſe partes: notwithſtanding their ſayd refuſall to beare any further charge.

That in the Patent which is to bee obteined, be graunted, that all her Maieſties ſubiects may tranſport themſelues thither that ſhall be contented to goe. And that the Patentee or his aſſignes may ſhippe thither from time to time, ſo many and ſuch perſons, men, women, and children, as they ſhall thinke meete. And the ſame perſons to inhabite or remaine there at their pleaſure, any lawe to the contrary notwithſtanding, with expreſſe prohibition, as is mentioned in the third article, againſt all others, which ſhall go thither without the licence of the patentee or his aſſignes firſt obteined.

That it ſhall not be lawful for any of her Maieſties ſubiects, or any other to inhabite or traffique within one hundred leagues any way of the place, where the Generall ſhall haue ſetled his chiefeſt being or reſidence.

For the performance of our ſaid voyage, we departed from S. Malo with the fleete that went for Canada, and kept companie with the ſhips called The Soudil and the Charles halfe the way, and then loſt them, a violent wind ariſing at Northweſt, which ſeparated vs.

The fleete of Canada.

After which we had faire wether, and came to to the coaſt of Cape Raſe, & had no further knowledge thereof, becauſe the winde was at the Southweſt but a ſcarce gale: and we came to the ſounding Southweſt of the Iſles of S. Peter about 10. leagues, where we found 20. fathoms water, and we ſayled Northweſt one quarter of the North, and came within 12. leagues of Cape de Rey.

The next day being the 6. of May 1591. we were come to Cape de Rey, & ſaw a ſhip Southweſt off vs, and ſtayed there that night.

Cape de Rey.

The next day being the ſeuenth of the ſayd moneth, we came to the Iſles of Aponas, where we put foorth our boat, becauſe we had not paſt 8. leagues to our hauen, which we kenned very clearly, although the coaſts lay very low: and becauſe the night approched, and the wind grew very high, we ſought not to ſeeke our port, becauſe it is very hard to find it when the wind is lofty, becauſe of the ſhoalds that are about it. And we thought to keepe our courſe vntill the next morning betweene the Iſle of Brion & the Iſle of Aponas. But there aroſe ſo great a tempeſt at the Southweſt, that without the helpe of God we had bene in great danger among theſe Iſles. And we trauerſed vp and downe eleuen dayes, making our prayers vnto God to ende the tempeſt and to ſend vs faire weather, that we might obteine our hauen: which of his goodneſſe he gaue vs. The laſt of May we ranged the Iſle Ramea on the Northnorthweſt ſide, vnto the contrary part of the land, where it trendeth to the Southſoutheaſt: and ſeeing no land on the Weſt ſide, wee ranged the ſayd land to the Eaſt one quarter to the North at the leaſt 15. leagues, and being from the ſhore ſome eight leagues, we found 15. fathoms water, and paſſed betweene the Iſle of Duoron and the Iſle of Ramea, where goeth a chanell of 3. leagues bredth; in the midſt whereof you ſhall haue 7. 8. and 9. fathoms water. And the lowe poynt of the Iſle Ramea, and the Iſle Duoron lie Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt. And take heede you come not neere the low point of the Iſle Ramea by a great league, for I haue ſounded it at 3. fathoms water. The Iſle is marked. And the harbour of the Iſle Ramea lyeth Northeaſt and Southweſt, one quarter to the Eaſt and Weſt. And if you would enter the ſayd harbour, keepe you a league off the ſhoare: for often times there is great danger.

And that you may know the ſayd hauen, to the Eaſtnortheaſt of the ſayde Iſle there are high lands appearing to them that are without on all ſides like a number of Iſlands, but in very deede they are all firme land: and if you come on the South and Southweſt ſide, you ſhall ſee a hill diuided into 3. parts, which I called The three hillockes, which is right within the hauen. And for another better marke of the ſayd harbour, you ſhall ſee an Iſle like vnto a Floure de lice, diſtant from the ſayd hauen 6. leagues at the leaſt: and this Iſle and the ſayd hauen lie Northeaſt and Southweſt, a quarter to the North and South. And on the ſayd Iſle there is good pebble ſtone to drie fiſh vpon: But to the Weſt thereof there is a very faire countrey: and there is a banke of ſand, which runneth the length of a cable, hauing not paſt one fathom water vpon it. ſayde Iſle along the firme land the coaſt lyeth Eaſt and Weſt, and you ſhall ſee as it were a great forreſt running Eaſtward: and the Easterne Cape is called Cape du Chapt, and is great and red toward the Sea. And betweene the ſayd lands you ſhall ſee as it were a ſmall Iſland, but it ioyneth to the firme land on the Southweſt part: and there is good ſhingle to drie fiſh on. And you muſt coaſt the ſhore with boates and not with ſhips, by reaſon of the ſhallowes of the ſayd coaſt. For I haue ſeene without Cape du Chapt in faire weather the ground in two fathoms water, neere a league and an halfe from ſhore, and I iudged by reaſon of the highneſſe of the land, that there had bene aboue thirtie fathoms water, which was nothing ſo: and I haue ſounded comming neere the ſhore, in more or leſſe depth. The coaſt ſtretcheth three leagues to the Weſt from Liſle Blanch or the white Iſle, vnto the entrance of a riuer, where we ſlewe and killed to the number of fifteene hundred Morſes or Sea oxen, accounting ſmall and great, where at full ſea you may come on ſhoare with boates, and within are two or three fathoms water. From thence the coaſt trendeth foure leagues to the Weſt ¼ to the Northweſt vnto the Iſle Hupp, which is twentie leagues in circuit, and is like the edge of a knife: vpon it there is neither wood nor graſſe: there are Morſes vpon it, but they bee hard to be taken. From thence the coaſt trendeth to the Northweſt and Northnorthweſt; which is all that I haue ſeene, to wit, the two ſides and one ende of the Iſle. And if I had had as good lucke as my Maſters, when I was on the Northweſt ſide with my ſhippe, I would haue aduentured to haue ſayled South-ſoutheaſt, to haue diſcouered the Eaſterne ſhoare of the ſayd Iſle.

The beſt anchorage.

In your returne to the Eaſt, as you come from the hauen of Cape du Chapt vnto the ſayde hauen, are ſandes and ſholds. And three good leagues from Cape du Chapt there is a ſmall Iſland conteining about a league of ground: where there is an hauen toward the Southeaſt: and as you enter into the ſayd hauen on the ſtarreboord ſide, a dented Cape all of redde land. And you cannot enter into the ſaid hauen but with the flood, becauſe of a barre which lieth halfe a league without the poynts of the ſayd hauen. The tydes are there at Southeaſt and Northweſt; but when the wind is very great, it bloweth much into the hauen at halfe flood. But ordinarily it floweth fiue foote and an halfe. The markes to enter into the ſayd hauen are to leaue the Iſle Blanche or White Iſland at your comming in on the ſtarreboord; and the poynt of the hauen towarde the Weſt hath a thick Iſland, which you ſhall ſee on the other ſide, and it hath a little round Buttreſſe, which lyeth on the Eaſt ſide of the Iſland. There are alſo two other buttreſſes more eaſie to bee ſeene then hidden: theſe are not to the Eaſt but to the Weſt, and they haue markes on them. Here you ſhall not haue aboue two fathom and an halfe at a full ſea vpon this barre. And the ſounding is ſtone and rough ground. At your entring in, when you ſhall finde white ſand which lyeth next the Southeaſt of the Cape, then you are vpon the barre: and bee not afrayd to paſſe vp the chanell. And for markes towarde the Weſt athwart the barre, when you haue brought an Iſland euen, which lyeth to the weſtward without, with the thicke part of the high land which lyeth moſt to the Weſt, you ſhall bee paſt the barre: and the chanell runneth due North. And for your anchoring in the ſayd hauen, ſee that you carefully ſecke the middeſt of the ſayd Thicke land which lyeth in the bottome of the ſayd hauen: for you muſt anchor betweene two bankes of ſand, where the paſſage is but narrow. And you muſt anker ſurely: for there goeth a great tyde: for the Sea runneth there as ſwiftly and more then in . There is good ground and ankorage here: and you ſhall ride in three fathom water. And within the ſayde hauen there is nothing to hurt you, for you are free from all winds. And if by chance you ſhould be driuen Weſtward of the ſayd hauen, you may ſeeke an entrance, which is right ouer againſt the ſmall Iſland named before, which is called The Iſle of Cormorants; and you may enter in there as at the other hauen at a full ſea: And you muſt paſſe vp on the Weſt ſide, and you ſhall finde on the Barre at a full ſea fourteene foote water, and great depth when you are entred in: for the Sea runneth very ſwiftly in that place: and the entrie thereof lyeth Southeaſt and Northweſt.

Another entrance.

The Iſle of Cormorants.

Right ouer againſt you on the other ſide, you may paſſe with boates at a full ſea. And all theſe entrances make all but one hauen, which is good within. I ſay this becauſe I haue paſſed into the maine Sea by the one and the other paſſage. And the ſaid Iſle is not paſt two leagues ouer in the middeſt. It is but two bankes of ſande, whereof one is like to that of S. Malo, which let the Sea from paſſing through the middeſt of all the Iſle: But the two endes are high mountaines with Iſlands altogether cut and ſeparated with ſtreames and riuers.

To anker in the ſayd harbour, you muſt not ride farther then fiue or ſixe cables length from the ſayd hauen.

A letter

A letter ſent to the right Honorable Sir VVilliam Cecill Lord Burghley, Lord high Treaſurer of England &c. From M. Thomas Iames of Briſtoll, concerning the diſcouerie of the Iſle of Ramea, dated the 14 of September. 1591.

Right Honourable, my humble duetie to your good Lordſhip done, I thought good humbly to aduertiſe your honour of the diſcouery of an Iſland made by two ſmal ſhippes of Saint Malo; the one 8 daies paſt being priſed neare Silley, by a ſhip of which I am part owner, called the Pleaſure, ſent by this citie to my Lord Thomas Howard, for her Maieſties ſeruice. Which priſe is ſent backe to this Port by thoſe of the ſayd ſhippes, with vpwards of fortie tunnes of Traine. The Iſland lyeth in 47 degrees, ſome fiftie leagues from the grand Bay, neere Newfoundland: and is about twentie leagues about, and ſome part of the Iſland is flat Sands and ſhoulde: and the fiſh commeth on banke (to do their kinde) in April May & Iune, by numbers of thouſands, which fiſh is very big; and hath two great teeth: and the ſkinne of them is like Buffes leather: and they will not away from their yong ones. The yong ones are as good meat as Veale. And with the bellies of fiue of the ſaide fiſhes they make a hogſhead of Traine, which Traine is very ſweet, which if it will make ſope, the king of Spaine may burne ſome of his Oliue trees. Humbly praying your Lorſhip to pardon herein my boldnes, betaking your Honour to the keeping of the Almightie. From Briſtoll, this 14 of September. 1591.

Your Honours moſt humbly at commandement.
THOMAS IAMES.

A briefe note of the Morſſe and the vſe thereof.

IN the firſt voyage of Iaques Carthier, wherein he diſcouered the Gulfe of S. Laurence and the ſaid Iſle of Ramea, in the yeere 1534, as you may reade in pag. 205 of this preſent volume, he met with theſe beaſts, as he witneſſeth in theſe words. About the ſaid Iſland are very great beaſts as great as oxen, which haue two great teeth in their mouthes like vnto Elephants teeth, and liue alſo in the ſea. Wee ſaw one of them ſleeping vpon the banke of the water, and thinking to take it, we went to it with our boates, but ſo ſoone as he heard vs, he caſt himſelfe into the ſea. Touching theſe beaſts which Iaques Carthier ſaith to be as big as Oxen and to haue teeth in their mouthes like Elephants teeth: True it is that they are called in latine Boues Marini, or Vaccæ Marinæ, & in the Ruſſiā tongue Morſſes, the hides whereof I haue ſeene as big as any Oxe hide, and being dreſſed I haue yet a piece of one thicker then any two Oxe or Buls hides in England. The Leatherdreſſers take them to be excellent good to make light targets againſt the arrowes of the Sauages; and I hold them farre better then the light leather targets which the Moores vſe in Barbarie againſt arrowes and lances, whereof I haue ſeene diuers in her Maieſties ſtately Armorie in the towre of London. The teeth of the ſayd fiſhes, whereof I haue ſeene a dryfat full at once, are a foote and ſome times more in length: & haue bene ſold in England to the combe & knife-makers, at 8 groats and 3 ſhillings the pound weight, whereas the beſt Iuory is ſold for halfe the money: the graine of the bone is ſomewhat more yellow then the Iuorie. One M. Alexander Woodſon of Briſtoll my old friend, an excellent Mathematician and ſkilful Phiſition, ſhewed me one of theſe beaſts teeth which were brought from the Iſle of Ramea in the firſt prize, which was half a yard long or very litle leſſe: and aſſured mee that he had made tryall of it in miniſtring medicine to his patients, and had found it as soueraigne againſt poyſon as any Vnicornes horne.

The voyage of the ſhip called the Marigold of M. Hill of Redriffe vnto Cape Briton and beyond to the latitude of 44 degrees and an half, 1593

Written by Richard fiſher Maſter Hilles man of Redriffe.

THe ſhip called the Marigold of 70 tunnes in burthen furniſhed with 20 men, whereof 10 were Mariners, the Maſters name being Richard Strong of Apſham, the Maſters mate Peter Langworth of Apſham, with 3 coopers, 2 butchers to flea the Morſſes or ſea Oxen (whereof diuers haue teeth aboue a cubit long & ſkinnes farre thicker then any buls hide) with other neceſſary people, departed out of Falmouth the 1 of Iune 1593 in conſort of another ſhip of M. Drakes of Apſham, which vpon ſome occaſion was not ready ſo ſoone as ſhee ſhould haue bene by two moneths. The place for which theſe two ſhips were bound was an Iſland within the ſtreightes of Saint Peter on the backe ſide of Newfoundland to the Southweſt in the latitude of fortie ſeuen degrees, called by the

The Iſle of Ramea, or Menquit.

Britons of Saint Malo the Iſle of Ramea, but by the Sauages and naturals of the Continent next adoyning, Menquit: On which Iſle are ſo great abundance of the huge and mightie Sea Oxen with great teeth in the moneths of April, May and Iune, that there haue bene fifteene hundreth killed there by one ſmall barke, in the yeere 1591. The two Engliſh ſhipps aforeſayde, leſt companie before they came to Newfounland: and neuer came after together in all their voyage.

The ſhip of M. George Drake fell firſt with New-foundland, and afterward very directly came to the Iſle Ramea, though too late in the yeere to make her voyage: where ſhee found a ſhippe of Saint Malo three parts fraighted with theſe fiſhes; the men whereof enquiring whence our ſhippe was and who was the Maſter thereof, being anſwered that ſhee was belonging to Maſter George Drake of Apſham, fearing to bee taken as good prize being of a Leaguer towne, and at that time out of league with England, fled ſo haſtily that preſent night that they left three and twentie men and three Shallops behinde them, all which our men ſeazed vpon and brought away as good priſes home.

Here our men tooke certaine Sea-oxen, but nothing ſuch numbers as they might haue had, if they had come in due ſeaſon, which they had neglected. The ſhippe called the Marigolde fell with Cape Saint Francis in Newfounland the eleuenth of Iulie, and from thence wee went into the Bay Rogneuſe, and afterward doubled Cape Razo, and ſayling toward the ſtraight of Saint Peter (which is the entrance betweene Newfoundland and Cape Briton,) being vnacquainted with the place, beate vp and downe a very long time, and yet miſſed it, and at length ouer ſhot it, and fell with Cape Briton.

The Engliſh men land vpon Cape Briton

Here diuerſe of our men went on land vpon the very Cape, where, at their arriuall they found the ſpittes of Oke of the Sauages which had roaſted meate a litle before. And as they veiwed the countrey they ſawe diuers beaſtes and foules, as blacke Foxes, Deere, Otters, great Foules with redde legges, Pengwyns, and certaine others. But hauing found no people here at this our firſt landing wee went againe on ſhipboorde, and ſayled farther foure leagues to the Weſt of Cape Briton, where wee ſawe many Seales. And here hauing neede of freſh water we went againe on ſhore. And paſſing ſomewhat more into the land, wee founde certaine round pondes artificially made by the Sauages to keepe fiſh in, with certaine weares in them made to take fiſh. To theſe pondes wee repayred to fill our caſke with water. Wee had not bene long here, but there came one Sauage with blacke long hayre hanging about his ſhoulders, who called vnto vs, weauing his handes downewarde towardes his bellie, vſing theſe wordes, Calitogh Calitogh: as wee drewe towardes him one of our mens muſket vnawares ſhot off: whereupon hee fell downe, and riſing vp ſuddenly againe hee cryed thriſe with a loude voyce Chiogh, Chiogh, Chiogh. Thereupon nine or tenne of his fellowes running right vp ouer the buſhes with great agilite and ſwiftneſſe came towardes vs with white ſtaues in their handes like halfe pikes, and their dogges of colour blacke not ſo bigge as a greyhounde followed them at the heeles; but wee retired vnto our boate without any hurt at all receiued. Howbeit one of them brake an hogſhead which wee had filled with freſh water, with a great branche of a tree which lay on the ground. Vpon which occaſion we beſtowed halfe a douſen muſkets ſhotte vpon them, which they auoyded by falling flatte to the earth, and afterwarde retired themſelues to the woodes. One of the Sauages, which ſeemed to bee their Captaine, ware a long mantle of beaſtes ſkinnes hanging on one of his ſhoulders. The reſt were all naked except their priuities, which were couered with a ſkinne tyed behinde. After they had eſcaped our ſhotte they made a great fire on the ſhore, belike to giue their fellowes warning of vs.

They goe on ſhore in another place.

The people of the countrey came downe to our men.

Blacke dogs.

The kindes of trees that wee noted to bee here, were goodly Okes, Firre trees of a great height, a kinde of tree called of vs Quickbeame, and Cherie trees, and diuerſe other kindes to vs vnknowne, becauſe wee ſtayed not long with diligence to obſerue them: and there is great ſhewe of roſen, pitch, and tarre. Wee found in both the places where wee went on land abundance of Raſpeſes, Strawberies, Hurtes, and herbes of good ſmell, and diuers good for the ſkuruie, and graſſe very ranke and of great length. Wee ſawe fiue or ſixe boates ſayling to the Southweſtwardes of Cape Briton, which wee iudged to bee Chriſtians, which had ſome trade that way. Wee ſawe alſo, while wee were on ſhore, the manner of their hanging vp of their fiſh and fleſh with withes to drye in the ayre: they alſo lay them vpon raftes and hurdles and make a ſmoake vnder them, or a ſofte fire, and ſo drie them as the Sauages vſe to doe in Virginia.

A ſecret trade to the Southweſt of Cape Briton.

Soundings to the South and Southweſtward of Cape Briton.

While wee lay foure leagues South of Cape Briton wee ſounded and had ſixtie fathomes blacke ozie ground. And ſayling thence Weſtwarde nine or ten leagues off the ſhore, we had twenty foure fathomes redde ſande, and ſmall whitiſh ſtones. Wee continued our courſe ſo farre to the Southweſt, that wee brought our ſelues into the latitude of fourtie foure degrees and an half, hauing ſayled fiftie or ſixtie leagues to the Southweſt of Cape Briton. We found the current betwene this Cape Briton and Cape Rey to ſet out toward the Eaſtſoutheaſt. In our courſe to the Weſt of Cape Briton we ſaw exceeding great ſtore of ſeales, and abundance of Porpoſes, whereof we killed eleuen. We ſawe Whales alſo of all ſortes aſwell ſmall as great: and here our men tooke many berded Coddes with one teate vnderneath, which are like to the Northeaſt Cods, and better then thoſe of Newfoundland,

They ſayle 50 or 60 leagues to the South: Weſt of Cape Briton.

Great ſtore of Seales Porpoſes, Whales and Cods.

From our arriuall at the hauen of Saint Francis in Newfoundland, (which was as is aforeſayde the eleuenth of Iuly) we continued beating vp and downe on the coaſt of Arambec to the Weſt and Southweſt of Cape Briton vntill the twentie eight of September, fully by the ſpace of eleuen weekes: and then by the perſwaſion of our Maſter and certaine others wee ſhaped our courſe homeward by the Iſles of the Açores, and came firſt to Coruo and Flores, where beating vp and downe, and miſſing of expected pray, we ſayled by Tercera, and from thence to Saint Michael, where we ſought to boorde a Portugall ſhippe, which we found too well appointed for vs to bring along with vs, and ſo being forced to leaue them behinde and hauing waſted all our victuals, wee were conſtrained againſt our willes to haſten home vnto our narrowe Seas: but it was the two and twentieth of December before wee could get into the Downes: where for lacke of winde wee kept our Chriſtmas with dry breade onely for dropping of our clothes. One thing very ſtrange hapened in this voyage: to witte, that a mightie great Whale followed our ſhippe by the ſpace of many dayes as we paſſed by Cape Razo, which by no meanes wee coulde chaſe from our ſhip, vntill one of our men fell ouerboord and was drowned, after which time ſhee immediatly forſooke vs, and neuer afterward appeared vnto vs.

They continue on the coaſt from Cape Briton Weſtwards full eleuen weekes.

An huge Whale purſued their ſhip by the ſpace of many dayes, till one of their men fell ouer boord.

A briefe note concerning the voyage of M. George Drake of Apſham to the Iſle of Ramea in the aforeſayd yere 1593.

IN the beginning of the former relation written by Richard Fiſher ſeruant to the worſhipfull Maſter Hill of Redriffe is, as you reade, a briefe reporte of their looſing of their conſort the ſhippe of Maſter George Drake of Apſham: which though ſhee came directly to the Iſle of Ramea, yet becauſe ſhee was not ready ſo ſoone by two moneths as ſhe ought to haue bene, ſhe was not onely the hinderance of her conſort the Marigolde, & loſt the ſeaſon of the yere for the making of her voyage of killing the Morſes or Sea Oxen, which are to be taken in Aprill, May, and Iune: but alſo ſuffered the fit places and harboroughs in the Iſle which are but two, as farre as I can learne, to be foreſtalled and taken vp by the Britons of Saint Malo and the Baſkes of Saint Iohn de Luz, by comming a day after the Fayre, as wee ſay. Which lingering improuidence of our men hath bene the ouerthrowe of many a worthy enterprize and of the vndertakers of the ſame.

The relation of this voyage at large I was promiſed by the Authour himſelfe: but the ſame not comming to my handes in tyme I am conſtrained to leaue it out. The want whereof, for the better vnderſtanding of the ſtate of the ſayde Iſland, the frequenting of that gainefull trade by the aforeſayd nations of the of Britons and Baſkes, may in part be ſupplyed by the voyage of Maſter Charles Leigh to the ſayde Iſland of Ramea: which alſo comming much too late thither, as Maſter George Drake had done, was wholly preuented and ſhutte out to his and his friendes no ſmall detriment and miſchiefe, and to the diſcouraging of others hereafter in the ſayd gainefull and profitable trade.

Neuerthertheleſſe albeit hitherto the ſucceſſe hath not anſwered our expectation through our owne default, as is aboueſaid, yet I was very willing to ſet downe in briefe and homely ſtile ſome mention of theſe three voyages of our owne men. The firſt of M. George Drake, the ſecond of M. Silueſter Wyet, the third of M. Charles Leigh, becauſe they are the firſt, for ought that hitherto is come to my knowledge, of our owne Nation, that haue conducted Engliſh ſhips ſo farre within this gulfe of S. Laurence, and haue brought vs true relation of the manifold gaine which the French, Britaynes, Baskes, and Biskaines do yerely returne from the ſayd partes; while wee this long time haue ſtood ſtill and haue bene idle lookers on, making courtiſie who ſhould giue the firſt aduenture, or once being giuen, who ſhould continue or proſecute the ſame.

The voyage of the Grace of Briſtol of M. Rice Iones, a Barke of thirty fiue Tunnes, vp into the Bay of Saint Laurence to the Northweſt of Newefoundland, as farre as the Iſle of Aſſumption or Natiſcotec, for the barbes or fynnes of Whales and traine Oyle, made by Silueſter Wyet, Shipmaſter of Briſtoll.

WEe departed with the aforeſaid Barke manned with twelue men for the place aforeſaid from Briſtoll the 4 of April 1594. and fell with Cape d'Eſpere on the coaſt of Newefoundland the nineteneth of May in the height of 47. We went thence for Cape Raz, being diſtant from thence 18 or 19 leagues, the very ſame day.

The 20. day we were thwart of Cape Raz.

Cape Raz.
Cape S. Marie.

Then we ſet our courſe Northweſt for Cape S. Marie, which is diſtant from Cape Raz 19 leagues, and is on the Eaſtſide of the great bay of Placentia almoſt at the entrie thereof.

The Iſlands of the Martyers.
The Iſles of S. Peter.
Cape de Rey.
Cape de Angullie.
The bay of Saint George.

From thence we ſhaped our courſe for the Iſlands of S. Pedro paſſing by the broken Iſlands of the Martyers: and when we were thwart of the ſaid Iſles of the Martyers our courſe to the Iſles of S. Pedro was Weſt and by North. In theſe Iſles of S. Pedro there is a faire harbour, which we went into with our barke, and found there 2 ſhips of Sibiburo fiſhing for Cod: where we ſtayed 2 dayes, and tooke in baleſt for our ſhip. There are as faire and tall firre trees growing therein, as in any other part of Newfoundland. Then wee departed thence, and as we came out of the harbours mouth we laid the ſhip vpon the lee, and in 2 houres ſpace we tooke with our hookes 3 or 4 hundred great Cods for our prouiſion of our ſhip. Then we departed from the Iſle of S. Pedro to enter into the gulffe of S. Laurence betwene Cape Briton and the ſaid Iſle, and ſet our courſe Weſt North Weſt, and fel with Cape de Rey which wee found to be diſtant from the Iſles of S. Pedro 42 leagues. From Cape de Rey to Cape de Angullie we ſet our courſe Northnorthweſt being diſtant thence 12 or 13 leagues. From-the Cape de Angullie into the Bay of S. George we ran Northeaſt and by Eaſt ſome 18 or 19 leagues.

In this bay of Saint George, we found the wrackes of 2 great Biſkaine ſhips, which had bene caſt away three yeres before: where we had ſome ſeuen or eight hundred Whale finnes, and ſome yron bolts and chaines of their mayne ſhrouds & fore ſhroudes: al their traine was beaten out with the weather but the caſke remained ſtill. Some part of the commodities were ſpoiled by tumbling downe of the cliffs of the hils, which couered part of the caſke, and the greater part of thoſe Whale finnes, which we vnderſtood to be there by foure Spaniards which eſcaped, & were brought to S. Iohn de Luz. Here we found the houſes of the Sauages, made of firre trees bound together in the top and ſet round like a Doue-houſe, and couered with the barkes of firre trees, wee found alſo ſome part of their victuals, which were Deeres fleſh roaſted vpon wooden ſpits at the fire, & a diſh made of a ryne of a tree, ſowed together with the ſinowes of the Deere, wherein was oile of the Deere. There were alſo foules called Cormorants, which they had pulckt and made ready to haue dreſſed, and there we found a wooden ſpoone of their making. And we diſcerned the tracks of the feete of ſome fortie or fiftie men, women and children.

They land on the Iſle of Natiſcotec.

When we had diſpatched our buſineſſe in this bay of S. George and ſtayed there ten dayes, wee departed for the Northren point of the ſaid bay, which is nine or ten leagues broade. Then being enformed, that the Whales which are deadly wounded in the grand Bay, and yet eſcape the fiſher for a time, are woont vſually to ſhoot themſelues on ſhore on the Iſle of Aſſumption, or Natiſcotec, which lieth in the very mouth of the great riuer that runneth vp to Canada, we ſhaped our courſe ouer to that long Iſle of Natiſcotec, and wee found the diſtance of the way to the Eſtermoſt ende thereof to be about forty foure leagues: and it ſtandeth in the latitude of 49. Here we arriued about the middeſt of Iune at the Eaſt end, and rode in eighteene fadome water in faire white ſand and very good ankerage, and for tryall heaued a lyne ouerboorde and found wonderfull faire and great Cod fiſh: we went alſo ſeuen of vs on ſhore and found there exceeding fayre great woods of tall firre trees, and heard and ſawe ſtore of land and ſea foules, and ſawe the footing of diuers beaſtes in the ſand when we were on ſhore. From the Eaſter end we went to the Norther ſide of the Iſland, which we perceiued to be but narrow in reſpect of the length thereof. And after wee had ſearched two dayes and a night for the Whales which were wounded which we hoped to haue found there, and miſſed of our purpoſe, we returned backe to the Southwarde, and were within one league of the Iſland of Penguin, which lyeth South from the Eaſtermoſt part of Natiſcotec ſome twelue leagues. From the Iſle of Penguin wee ſhaped our courſe for Cape de Rey and had ſight of the Iſland of Cape Briton: then returned wee by the Iſles of Saint Pedro, and ſo came into the Bay of Placencia, and arriued in the Eaſterſide thereof ſome ten leagues vp within the Bay among the fiſhermen of Saint Iohn de Luz and of Sibiburo and of Biskay, which were to the number of threeſcore and odde ſayles, whereof eight ſhippes onely were Spaniardes, of whom we were very well vſed and they wiſhed heartily for peace betweene them and vs. There the men of Saint Iohn and Sibiburo men beſtowed two pinneſſes on vs to make vp our voyage with fiſh. Then wee departed ouer to the other ſide of the Bay, where we arriued in an harbour which is called Peſmarck, and there made our ſtage and fiſhed ſo long, that in the ende the Sauages came, and in the night, when our men were at reſt, cut both our pinneſſe and our ſhippes boate away to our great hinderance of our voyage, yet it was our good fortune to finde out our pinneſſes and get them againe. Then for feare of a ſhrewder turne of the Sauages, we departed for Cape Saint Marie, and hauing paſſed Cape Raz, we paſſed Northwarde fourteene leagues and arriued in Farrillon, and finding there two and twentie ſayles of Engliſhmen, wee made vp our fiſhing voyage to the full in that harborough the twentieth foure of Auguſt to our good content: and departing thence we arriued firſt in Combe and ſtaied there a ſeuen night, and afterward in Hungrod in the riuer of Briſtoll by the grace of God the 24 of September. 1594.

The voyage of M. Charles Leigh, and diuers others to Cape Briton and the Iſle of Ramea.

The Hopewell of London of the burthen of 120 tunnes, whereof was M. William Crafton, and the Chancewel of London of the burthen of 70 tunnes, wherof was M. Steuen Benner, bound vnto the riuer of Canada, ſet to ſea at the ſole and proper charge of Charles Leigh and Abraham Van Herwick of London merchants (the ſaide Charles Leigh himſelfe, and Steuen Van Herwick brother to the ſayd Abraham, going themſelues in the ſaid ſhips as chiefe commanders of the voyage) departed from Graues-end on Fryday morning the 8 of April 1597. And after ſome hindrances, arriuing at Falmouth in Cornewal the 28 of the ſaid moneth put to ſea againe. And with proſperous windes the 18 of May we were vpon the banke of Newfoundland. The 19 we loſt the Chancewel. The 20 we had ſight of land and entred within the bay of Aſſumption, where our men contrary to my knowledge fought with a French ſhip: and afterward in the ſame bay wee met with our conſort. Whereupon we preſently put to ſea againe: and the next day we arriued at Caplen bay, where we remained by extremitie of foule weather, and to mend a pinnes of 7 or 8 tunnes (which was giuen vs at Farrillon by M. Wil. Sayer of Dartmouth the Admiral of that place) vntill the laſt of May. On which day departing from thence in the afternoone we put in to Rogneuſe to ſeeke Shallops but could find none. The firſt of Iune we ſet ſaile from Rogneuſe, and the ſecond we put roome to a bay vnder the Northſide of Cape Raz being inforced in by an extreme ſtorme. The 4 we ſet ſaile, and this day we ſaw a great Iſland of yce. The 5 at night we loſt the Chancewell in a fog at the mouth of the bay of Placentia. The 11 at Sunne ſetting we had ſight of Cape Briton. And the 12 by reaſon of contrary windes we caſt anker vnder the Northeaſt ende of the Iſle of Menego to the North of Cape Briton in 16 fathome reaſonable ground. In that place we caught great ſtore of Cods, which were larger and better fiſh then any in Newfounland. The 13 wee weyed anker againe, and being becalmed about a league from the ſhore we fell to fiſhing where the Cods did bite at leaſt 20 fathomes aboue ground, and almoſt as faſt as we could hale them into the ſhip. The 14 we came to the 2 Iſlands of Birds, ſome 23 leagues frō Menego: where there were ſuch abundance of Birds, as is almoſt incredible to report. And vpon the leſſe of theſe Iſlands of Birds, we ſaw great ſtore of Morſſes or ſea Oxen, which were a ſleepe vpon the rockes: but when we approched nere vnto them with our boate they caſt themſelues into the ſea and purſued vs with ſuch furie as that we were glad to flee from them. The 16 we arriued at Brians Iſland, which lyeth 5 leagues Weſt from the Iſland of Birds. About this Iſland ther is as great aboundance of cods as in any place can be found. In litle more then an houre we caught with 4 hookes 250 of them. Here we caught alſo a great Turbut which was an elle long and a yard broad: which was ſo great that the hooke could not hold her into the ſhip: but when ſhe was aboue water ſhe bent the hooke & eſcaped. In this Iſland we found exceeding good ground both for corne and meadow, & great ſtore of wood, but of ſmal groweth. Springes of freſh water we found none in all the Iſland, but ſome ſtanding pooles of raine water. The ſame day at night we weyed anker againe. The 17 we had ſtormy weather. The 18 we came to the Iſle of Ramea, where we appointed to meet with our conſort. And approching neere vnto the harborough of Halabolina we caſt anker in 3 fadomes water and ſent our great boate into the harborough, with the maſters mate and ſome dozen more of the company: who when they came in, found 4 ſhips. Namely 2 of Saint Malo in Britaigne, and two of Sibiburo adioyning to Saint Iohn de luz being the French Kings ſubiects, whom they ſuppoſed to haue bene of Spaine, and ſo affirmed vnto vs. Whereupon wee went preſently into harborough, finding but eleuen foote and an halfe of water vpon the barre and a mightie great current in, when wee had caſt anker we ſent preſently to ſpeake with the maſters of all the ſhips: but thoſe onely of Saint Malo came aboord, whom wee entertained very friendly, and demaunded of whence the other two ſhippes were. They ſayde as they thought of Saint Iohn de Luz or Sibiburo. Then we preſently ſent our boate for the Maſters of both the ſayd ſhippes, to requeſt them to come aboord, and to bring with them their Charters parties and other euidences, to the ende we might knowe of whence they were. At which meſſage one of the ſayde Maſters came aboord, with the Pilote and Maſters mate of the other ſhippe: whom when we had examined, they ſayd that they were of Sibiburo, and the French Kings ſubiectes. We requeſted them for our better ſecuritie in the harborough peaceably to deliuer vp their powder and munition: promiſing them that if we found them to be the French Kings ſubiectes it ſhoulde be kept in ſafetie for them without diminiſhing. But they woulde not conſent thereunto: whereunto we replyed, that vnleſſe they would conſent thereunto we would hold them to be our enemies. They not conſenting, we ſent the boate well manned to fetch their powder and munition from aboorde their ſhip: but ſtraightly commanded our men not to touch any thing elſe in the ſhip vpon their further perill: which they promiſed to performe. When they came aboorde the ſaide ſhips which were moored together, they were reſiſted by force of armes, but quickly they got the victorie: which done, they fell preſently to pillaging of the Baſkes, contrary to their promiſe: whereupon we ſent another to forbidde them: but when he came to them, none was more ready of pillage then he. Whereupon I went my ſelfe, and tooke away from our men whatſoeuer they had pillaged, and gaue it againe to the owners: onely I ſent aboord our owne ſhip their powder and munition to be kept in ſafetie vntil we knew farther what they were. When I had done, I gaue the Baſkes poſſeſſion of their ſhippe againe and tolde them they ſhould not looſe the valewe of one peny if they were the French Kings ſubiects. Then I caryed away all our men, and alſo tooke with me two or three of the chiefeſt of them, and when I came aboord went to examining of them, and by circumſtances found one of the ſhips to belong to France: whereupon I tolde the maſter of the ſaid ſhip, that I was throughly ſatiſfied that he was of France and ſo diſmiſſed him in peace. Of the other ſhip we had great preſumption that ſhe was of Spaine, but had no certaine proofe thereof, wherefore wee diſmiſſed them likewiſe in peace. After I had thus diſmiſſed them, our ſhips company fell into a mutiny, and more then half of them reſolued to cary one of thoſe ſhips away. But they were preuented of their euill purpoſe by ayde, which the ſaide ſhips receiued from their countreymen in the other harborough: For the next morning, which was the twentieth of Iune, very early there were gathered together out of all the ſhips in both harboroughs, at the leaſt 200 Frenchmen and Britons, who had planted vpon the ſhore three pieces of Ordinance againſt vs, and had prepared themſelues in al readineſſe to fight with vs, which ſo ſoone as we had diſcried them gaue the onſet vpon vs with at leaſt an hundred ſmall ſhot out of the woods. There were alſo in a readines to aſſault vs about three hundred Sauages. But after we had ſkirmiſhed a while with them, we procured a parley by one of the men of Saint Malo, whoſe ſhip rowed hard by vs: In which parley they required ſome of our men to come on ſhore vnto them: whereupon wee requeſted M. Ralph Hill and the Boatſwaines mate to go on ſhore to them: whom when they had they detained as priſoners; and then required the powder and munition, which we had of the Baſkes in poſſeſſion: which we ſurrendred vnto them in ſafetie as our intent alwayes was, which done, there came aboord vnto vs one Captaine Charles, who was captaine of the great ſhip of Saint Malo, which rode in the other harborough: who challenged our great boate which we had at Farrillon to be his. And while we were in talke with him about the two Baſkes which at firſt we thought to be Spaniards, wee had almoſt bene betraied. For the ſaid Captaine Charles with halfe a dozen more of his company kept themſelues aboord of our ſhip and held vs in a talke, while thirtie or fortie others ſhould haue entred our ſhip vnawares from one of the ſhips of S. Malo, which profeſſed to be our friend, & vnto whom we ſhewed all courteſie. But we perceiuing their treacherous intent, threatned to ſet fire on the ſaid ſhip, which was then thwart our hawſe, from which they would haue entred. By which reſolution of ours God did diſcourage thẽ from effecting their miſcheiuous purpoſes. Now the ſaid captaine Charles when he ſaw himſelf preuented of his wicked intents, took his boat preſently to go on ſhore, and promiſed that all things ſhould be ended in peace betweene vs, and that he would ſend vs our two men againe. But when he was on ſhore he preſently ſent for our great boat which he claimed to be his & withall commanded vs out of the harborough: but he ſent not our men as he promiſed, we being now the weaker ſide did not only deliuer his boat but alſo determined to be gon and then requeſted them to help vs with our anker which was on ſhore; but they would not. Then we deſired them to cut the bent of the cable vpon the anker on ſhore (for we durſt not ſend our boat leſt they ſhould haue kept from vs both our boat and men) which they promiſed to do for vs, as alſo to ſend our men; but when they were on ſhore, they would do neither. We therefore ſeeing their falſhood in euery thing, durſt no longer tary for feare of farther treachery; wherefore we concluded to cut our cable in the hawſe; which we did, & ſo departed the harborow about 9 of the clock, leauing two of our men with our cable & anker, and 20 fadoms of a new hawſer behind vs. And as we were going away, they made great ſhewes of friendſhip, and dranke vnto vs from the ſhore; but more for feare then loue, and requeſted vs to come on ſhore for our men, whom then they deliuered. The ſame morning in paſſing ouer the barre before the harborowes mouth, and by that time that we had all our men aboord, our ſhip came on ground vpon the ſands; where we lay ſome 8 houres: during which time, at low water we trimmed our ſhip without boord, and by the great prouidence of God found our leake which then we ſtopped. About ſix of the clocke at night we got our ſhip on float againe, and that night ankered within part of the barre, which then becauſe of the wind we could not paſſe. But it pleaſed God to ſend vs faire weather all that night, and the next day by noone we had gotten our ſhip cleane ouer the bar. The 21 day after we got ouer the barre the wind aroſe at eaſt & eaſtſoutheaſt, we blew right into the bay: which if it had come before we were cleere of the bar, we had both ſhip and men periſhed in the ſands. The ſame day, becauſe the wind kept vs within the bay, we went to the Iſle Blanch, where the ſhips of the other harborow had their ſtages: but it was at leaſt two leagues from their ſhips; where we hoped by friendſhip to procure a ſhallope & aſſurance of our cable and anker againe. But when we had approched nere the ſhore with our ſhip, & weaued them with a white flag, they in ſted of cōming vnto vs, ſent their meſſage by a bullet out of a piece of great ordinance, which they had placed on ſhore of purpoſe againſt vs; ſo that they would neither ſpeake with vs, nor permit vs to come nere them. Thus we departed, and would haue put to ſea that night; but there was much wind at Eaſt, which kept vs within the bay, & inforced vs to come to an anker vnder Iſle Blanch. The next morning being the 22, we put to ſea, and about 12 of the clocke the ſame day, the wind being at Northeaſt and foule weather, the maſter ſayd he could not ply vp to Grande Coſte, becauſe of the leeſhore, & the wind againſt vs, and therefore aſked what we ſhould do. I aſked then how farre we had to the riuer of cape Briton: he ſayd a little way. Then ſayd I, If it be not farre, we were beſt to go thither to trade with the Sauages while the wind is contrary, and to take in water & baliſt, which we wanted. To which the maſter ſayd, that if I would he would cary vs thither. I thinking it to be the beſt courſe, ſayd I was content, ſo farre forth as that from thence we tooke the firſt faire wind for Grande Coſte. Hereupon the maſter willed him at the helme to keepe his courſe ſoutheaſt and ſoutheaſt and by ſouth. Preſently after I aſked him how many leagues we had to the ſayd riuer, and from the ſayd riuer to Grande Coſte. He then ſayd that we had 40 leagues to the riuer, and from the riuer to Grande Coſte 120 leagues. Hereupon I ſaid I would not conſent to go ſo far out of our way, but willed him to keep his directeſt courſe for Grande Coſte; which he did. Within one halfe houre afterwards the 23 day the gunner and company of the ſhip preſented me & the maſter with a requeſt in writing to returne for England or to goe for the Iſlands of Açores for a man of war, for they would not proceed on their voyage to Grande Coſte; and therefore do what I could they turned the helme homewards. The 14 of Iune we ſent our boat on ſhore in a great bay vpon the Iſle of Cape Briton for water. The 25 we arriued on the Weſt ſide of the Iſle of Menego, where we left ſome caſke on ſhore in a ſandy bay, but could not tary for foule weather. The 26 we caſt anker in another bay vpon the maine of Cape Briton. The 27 about tenne of the clocke in the morning we met with eight men of the Chancewell out conſort in a ſhallope; who told vs that their ſhip was caſt away vpon the maine of Cape Briton, within a great bay eighteene leagues within the Cape, and vpon a rocke within a mile of the ſhore, vpon the 23 of this moneth about one of the clocke in the afternoone: and that they had cleered their ſhip from the rocke: but being bilged and full of water, they preſently did run her vp into a ſandy bay, where ſhe was no ſooner come on ground, but preſently after there came aboord many ſhallops with ſtore of French men, who robbed and ſpoiled all they could lay hands on, pillaging the poore men euen to their very ſhirts, and vſing them in ſauage maner: whereas they ſhould rather as Chriſtians haue aided them in that diſtreſſe. Which newes when we heard, we bleſſed God, who by his diuine prouidence and vnſpeakeable mercy had not onely preſerued all the men, but brought vs thither ſo miraculouſly to ayd and comfort them. So preſently we put into the road where the Chancewell lay; where was alſo one ſhip of Sibiburo, whoſe men that holpe to pillage the Chancewell were runne away into the woods. But the maſter thereof which had dealt very honeſtly with our men ſtayed in his ſhip, and came aboord of vs: whom we vſed well, not taking any thing from him that was his, but onely ſuch things as we could finde of our owne. And when we had diſpatched our buſineſſe, we gaue him one good cable, one olde cable and an anker, one ſhallop with maſt, ſailes, and other furniture, and other things which belonged to the ſhip. In recompenſe whereof he gaue vs two hogſheads of ſider, one barrell of peaze, and 25 ſcore of fiſh. The 29 betimes in the morning we departed from that road toward a great Biſkaine ſome 7 leagues off of 300 tun, whoſe men dealt moſt doggedly with the Chancewels company. The ſame night we ankered at the mouth of the harborow, where the Biſkain was. The 30 betimes in the morning we put into the harborow; and approching nere their ſtage, we ſaw it vncouered, and ſo ſuſpected the ſhip to be gone: whereupon we ſent our pinneſſe on ſhore with a dozen men, who when they came, found great ſtore of fiſh on ſhore, but all the men were fled: neither could they perceiue whether the ſhip ſhould be gone, but as they thought to ſea. This day about twelue of the clocke we tooke a Sauages boat which our men purſued: but all the Sauages ran away into the woods, and our men brought their boat on boord. The ſame day in the afternoone we brought our ſhip to an anker in the harborow: and the ſame day we tooke three hogſheads and an halfe of traine, and ſome 300 of greene fiſh. Alſo in the euening three of the Sauages, whoſe boat we had, came vnto vs for their boat; to whom we gaue coats and kniues, and reſtored them their boat againe. The next day being the firſt of Iuly, the reſt of the Sauages came vnto vs, among whom was their king, whoſe name was Itarey, and their queene, to whom alſo we gaue coats and kniues, and other trifles. Theſe Sauages called the harborow Cibo. In this place are the greateſt multitude of lobſters that euer we heard of: for we caught at one hawle with a little draw net aboue 140. The fourth of Iuly in the morning we departed from Cibo. And the fift we caſt anker in a reaſonable good harborow called New Port vnder an Iſland ſome eight leagues from Cibo, and within three leagues from the Engliſh port. At this place in purſuing certaine ſhallops of a ſhip of Rochel, one of them came aboord, who told vs, that the Biſkainer whom we ſought, was in the Engliſh port with two Biſkainers more, and two ſhips of Rochel. Thereupon wee ſent one of our men in the Rochellers ſhallop to parle with the admiral & others our friends in the Engliſh port, requeſting them ayd for the recouery of our things, which the other ſhip called the Santa Maria of S. Vincent (whereof was Maſter Iohannes de Harte, and Pilot Adame de Lauandote) had robbed from the Chancewell. To which they anſwered, that if we would come in vnto them in peace, they would aſſiſt vs what they might. This anſwere we had the ſixt day: and the ſeuenth in the fornoone we arriued in the Engliſh port, and caſt anker aloofe from the other ſhips: which done, I went aboord the Admirall, to deſire the performance of his promiſe: who ſent for Iohannes de Harte, who was contented to reſtore moſt of our things againe: whereupon I went aboord his ſhip to haue them reſtored. This day and the eighth I ſpent in procuring ſuch things as they had robbed; but yet in the end we wanted a great part thereof. Then we were briefe with them, and willed them either to reſtore vs the reſt of our things which they had, or els we would both inforce them to doe it, and alſo haue ſatiſfaction for our victuals and merchandiſes which by their meanes were loſt in the Chancewell. The ninth in the morning wee prepared our ſhip to goe neere vnto them. Whereupon their Admirall ſent his boat aboord, and deſired to ſpeake with mee: then I went aboord vnto him, and deſired to haue our things with peace and quietneſſe, proffering to make him and the Maſters of the two ſhips of Rochel our vmpires, and what they ſhould aduiſe I would ſtand vnto. Heereupon he went aboord the other ſhip to make peace; but they would heare no reaſon, neither yet condeſcend to reſtore any thing els which they had of ours. Then I deſired that as I came in peace vnto them, they would ſo ſet me aboord my ſhip againe: which they denied to doe, but moſt vniuſtly detained me and Stephen van Herwicke who was with me. A while after our ſhallop came with foure men to know how I did, and to fetch me aboord: but ſo ſoone as ſhe came to the Admirals ſhips ſide, his men entred, and tooke her away, detaining our men alſo as priſoners with vs. Then preſently all the three Biſkainers made toward our ſhip, which was not careleſſe to get the winde of them all: and hauing by the mercy of God obtained the ſame, ſhee then ſtayed for them: but when they ſaw they had loſt their aduantage, they preſently turned their courſe, making as great haſte in againe as they did out before. Afterwards I attempted twiſe to goe aboord, but was ſtill enforced backe by the two other Biſkainers, who ſought our liues: ſo that in the end the Maſter of the Admirall was inforced to man his great boat to waft vs: and yet notwithſtanding they bent a piece of great ordinance at vs: for we were to paſſe by them vnto our ſhip: but we reſcued our ſhallop vnder our Maſters great boat; and by that meanes paſſed in ſafety. The next morning being the tenth of the moneth, we purpoſed if the winde had ſerued our turne, to haue made them to repent their euill dealing, and to reſtore vs our owne againe, or els to haue ſuncke their ſhips if we could. But the winde ſerued not our turne for that purpoſe; but caried vs to ſea: ſo that the ſame morning wee tooke our courſe toward the bay of S. Laurence in Newfoundland: where wee hoped to finde a Spaniſh ſhip, which as we had intelligence, did fiſh at that place. The thirteenth day we had ſight of S. Peters Iſlands. And the foureteenth day being foggy and miſty weather, while we made towards the land, we ſent our ſhallop before the ſhippe to diſcouer dangers: but in the fogge, through the mens negligence which were in her, ſhe loſt vs: yet we kept on our courſe, thinking that although we could not ſee them, yet they might ſee our ſhip: and comming into ſixteene fathoms water we caſt anker, ſuppoſing our ſelues to be neere the ſhore: and in the euening it pleaſed God to giue vs for the ſpace of one quarter of an houre clere weather, by which we found our ſelues to be imbayed, and alſo had ſight of our ſhallop, which was at the point of a land about one league from vs. The ſame night we went further into the ſame bay, where we had very good riding. The fifteenth we went on ſhore, and in that place found footing of deere, and before we returned we killed one. The eighteenth we departed toward S. Laurence: the ſame euening we had ſight of S. Laurence, and ſent off our boat in the night with our Maſter and ſixteene men to ſurpriſe the Spanyard, which lay in Litle S. Laurence; who preſently vpon the entrance of our men ſurrendred vp their ſhip and goods. The nineteenth in the morning before day, the Maſter of our ſhip with two more, and three Spanyards, tooke a boat and came foorth to meet our ſhippe, but being foggy, he caſt anker by the mouth of the harborow (thinking in faire weather to put out to our ſhip, which through the current and foggy weather was put fiue or ſixe leagues to leeward: & while they were at anker in the boat they were ſurpriſed again by certaine Basks of S. Iohn de Luz who were in Great S. Laurence hard by. Theſe Basks with their forces (hauing receiued intelligence by one of the Spanyards, who ſleeping on ſhore, eſcaped vnto them ouerland) on the ſudden ſurpriſed the ſayd boat with our Maſter and others: and then preſently made vnto the ſhip; but our men aboord defended them off. In the end they threatned that vnleſſe they would yeeld, they would kill M. Crafton and our other men before their eyes. So at laſt vpon M. Craftons intreaty and our mens, to ſaue their liues, they yeelded vp the ſhip againe, vpon condition, that they ſhould not iniury any of our men, but ſhould let them all with their weapons peaceably depart: yet when our men had yeelded, they brake their couenant, profering them great violence, threatning to kill them, diſarming them, ſtripping their clothes from their backs, and vſing them more like dogs then men. After they had thus robbed our men of their prize and weapons, they preſently towed the ſhippe with their boats out of that harborow into Great S. Laurence, where their owne ſhippes did ride, and within leſſe then an houre after they had caried our prize away, our ſhippe arriued in the bay: where after we had bene a while at anker, our ſhallop came aboord vnto vs, with moſt part of our ſixteene men, who tolde vs the whole ſtory before recited, as alſo that captaine Laurence had caried away our Maſter, and Stephen van Herwicke priſoners, and turned the reſt of our men on ſhore in the woods, without either meat, drinke, or almoſt any apparell. The 20 all our men came aboord, except the two priſoners: and the ſame day we tooke with our boats three of the Spanyards ſhallops, with fiue hogſheads of traine oile in ech of them, & in one boat foure Spanyards; but the men of the other two ſhallops fled on ſhore. The ſame day alſo we tooke the Maſter of one of the ſhips which was in the harborow with three other of his men, whom we detained priſoners to ranſome M. Crafton & Stephen van Herwick. The 22 captaine Laurence ſent them aboord, and we alſo releaſed all our priſoners, except one Spanyard, who was boatſwaine of the Spaniſh ſhip, whom we kept with vs: and the ſame day we ſet ſaile frō thence. The 24 we had aduice of our Spanyard of certain Leagers which were in the harborow of cape S. Mary. Whereupon the ſame night, being within fiue or ſix leagues of the harborow, I ſent off our two ſhallops with thirty men to diſcouer the harborow, and to ſurpriſe the enemy. The 25 in the morning we approched the harborow with our ſhip, and in the mouth thereof we eſpied three ſhallops, two whereof were ours, and the third of a ſhip of Rochel, which they had ſurpriſed with foure men in her: who told them that there were but two ſhips in the harborow, whereof one was of Rochel, and the other of Bell iſle. And as we were diſcourſing with the Rochellers, we had ſight of the ſhips: whereupon we ſent our boat aboord the the Rocheller to certifie him that we were his friends, and to requeſt him not to hinder our fight with the enemy. This meſſage being ſent, we made all the haſte we could vnto the ſhip of Bell iſle, which firſt began with vs with three great ſhot, one whereof hit our maintopſaile, but both the other miſſed vs. And we alſo ſent one vnto them: then being approched nere vnto them ten or twelue of vs went in a ſhallop to enter them, and we caried alſo a warpe with vs to make faſt vnto their ſhip, whereby our ſhip might the better come vp to ayd vs. And when we boorded them in our boat, they be-tooke themſelues to their cloſe fights, playing chiefly vpon vs with ſhot & pikes out at two ports, between which we entred very dangerouſly, eſcaping neere dangers both by ſhot & pike. Some of our men were wounded, but no great harme was done. And mine owne piece in entring, was ſhot out of my hand into the ſea; which ſhot alſo burſt one ſide of the ladder, by which I entred. We had not long bene aboord, but through the helpe of God we cauſed them to yeeld vnto our mercy. There were of them in the ſhip aboue forty men, moſt whereof we ſent aboord of our ſhippe, there to be kept in holde, with order to our chyrurgion to dreſſe the wounded men, one of which was wounded vnto death. That done, we had then time to view our prize, which we found of great defence, and a notable ſtrong ſhip, almoſt two hundred tun in burden, very well appointed, and in all things fitted for a man of warre. They had alſo fourteene or fifteene men more, which were then abſent from the ſhip; otherwiſe we ſhould haue had the hoter fight. The ſame day we got our ſailes to the yard, and our top maſts on end, and rigged the ſhippe what we could. The 26 day we got ſome oile aboord, and there we taried vntill the ſecond of Auguſt, fitting our ſelues for the ſea, and getting fiſh aboord as weather ſerued vs. During our abode there we diuided our men, and appointed to ech ſhip their company, my ſelfe and my friends being reſolued to take our paſſage in the prize; wherein when we were ſhipped, and the company, there aroſe great enmity againſt vs by the other ſhippe, which afterward was quieted. The ſecond day of Auguſt, hauing taken in water and wood, we put to ſea from that harborow in company of the Hopewell, with purpoſe to go directly to Parlican, which is an harborow in the North part of Newfoundland, where we expected another prize. But when we came to ſea we found our ſailes ſo olde, our ropes ſo rotten, and our prouiſion of bread and drinke ſo ſhort, as that we were conſtrained to make our reſolution directly for England; whereupon we drew out our reaſons the fourth day of Auguſt, and ſent them aboord the Hopewell, to certifie them the cauſe of our reſolution for England: wherat they were generally offended, thinking and ſaying, that we in the prize went about to couſin and deceiue them. To conclude, they ſent vs word that they would keepe vs company for England. But I had giuen William Crafton commiſſion before to go for the Iſlands of the Açores, and there to ſpend his victuals for a man of warre. The next day being the fift of Auguſt, hauing a faire winde, we put off from the coaſt of Newfoundland, and kept our courſe directly for England, the Hopewell keeping vs company vntill midday, whenas hauing loſt vs in a fogge, ſhe ſhot off two pieces of ordinance, and we anſwered her with three: afterwards we ſpake not with her, ſuppoſing that ſhe went for the Iſlands. The 27 of Auguſt, drawing neere the coaſt of England, we ſounded and found ground at ſeuenty fadoms. Some of the mariners thinking we were in Briſtow channell, and other in Silly channell: ſo that through variety of iudgements, and euill marinerſhip we were faine to dance the hay foure dayes together, ſometimes running to the Northeaſt, ſometimes to the Southeaſt, then againe to the Eaſt, and Eaſtnortheaſt. Thus did we ſpend faire winds, and loſe our time vntill the laſt of Auguſt. And then it pleaſed God that we fell with the Iſland of Lundy within the channell of Briſtoll; from whence we ſhaped our courſe: and after diuers dangers, the third of September we met with the Tramontane of the Queene off of Dartmouth; to the captaine whereof we gaue certaine things that he had need of. The fift of September I landed on the outſide of the Iſle of Wight, and within few dayes after it pleaſed God to bring the ſhip in ſafety to London, where ſhe was made prize as belonging to the enemies of this land.

Certaine obſeruations touching the countreys and places where we trauelled.

The Newfoundland we found very ſubiect to fogs and miſts. The ground of it is very rocky: and vpon it there is great ſtore of firre trees, and in ſome places red: and about the ſhore it hath great abundance of cod-fiſh. We were on land in it in foure ſeuerall places: 1 At Caplin bay and Farrillon: 2 At Cape Raſe: 3 At the harborow of Lano which lieth foure leagues to the Weſt beyond Cape Laurence: 4 At S. Marie port.

The Iſland of Menego for the ſoile is much like Newfoundland, but the fiſh about it, as alſo thorowout the Grande Bay within Cape Briton, is much larger and better then that of the Newfoundland. This Iſland is ſcant two leagues long, and very narrow. In the midſt of it, a great way within the wood is a great poole. Here we were thriſe on ſhore: once at the Eaſt ſide, and twiſe at the Weſt.

The three Iſlands of birds are ſandy red, but with the multitude of birds vpon them they looke white. The birds ſit there as thicke as ſtones lie in a paued ſtreet. The greateſt of the Iſlands is about a mile in compaſſe. The ſecond is little leſſe. The third is a very little one, like a ſmall rocke. At the ſecond of theſe three lay on the ſhore in the Sunſhine about thirty or forty ſea-oxen or morſes; which when our boat came nere them, preſently made into the ſea, and ſwam after the boat.

Brions Iſland wee found to be very good, and ſandy ground. It hath in it ſtore of firre trees. It is ſomewhat more then a league long, and about three leagues in compaſſe. Here we were on land once, and went from the one ſide of it to the other.

The Iſland of Ramea we tooke to be like ground as Brions Iſland, hauing alſo abundance of firre trees. It ſeemeth to be in length about twelue or thirteene leagues at leaſt. We were there in harborow, but not on ſhore, which we much deſired, and hoped to haue bene: but the conflict which we had there with the Baſks and Britons, mentioned before, preuented vs.

The Iſle Blanche likewiſe ſeemeth in quality of the ground and bigneſſe of it to be much like Brions Iſland aforeſayd, but ſomewhat leſſe. We were not on ſhore vpon it, but rode before it at anker.

The land of Cape Briton we found to be ſomewhat like the Newfoundland, but rather better. Here toward the Weſt end of it we ſaw the clouds lie lower then the hils: as we did alſo at Cape Laurence in Newfoundland. The Eaſterly end of the land of Cape Briton is nothing ſo high land, as the Weſt. We went on ſhore vpon it in fiue places: 1 At the bay where the Chancewell was caſt away: 2 At Cibo: 3 At a little Iſland betweene Cibo and the New port: 4 At the New port: And 5 at Port Ingles, or the Engliſh port.

Concerning the nature and fruitfulneſſe of Brions Iſland, Iſle Blanche, and of Ramea, they do by nature yeeld exceeding plenty of wood, great ſtore of wild corne like barley, ſtrawberries, gooſeberries, mulberies, white roſes, and ſtore of wilde peaſon. Alſo about the ſayd Iſlands the ſea yeeldeth great abundance of fiſh of diuers ſorts. And the ſayd Iſlands alſo ſeeme to proffer, through the labour of man, plenty of all kinde of our graine, of roots, of hempe, and other neceſſary commodities.

How M. Iaques Carthier departed from the Port of S. Malo, with two ſhips, and came to Newfoundland, and how he entred into the Pott of Buona Viſta.

After that Sir Charles of Mouy knight lord of Meylleraye, yͤ Viceadmirall of France had cauſed the Captaines, Maſters, and Mariners of the ſhippes to be ſworne to behaue themſelues truely and faithfully in the ſeruice of the moſt Chriſtian King of France, vnder the charge of the ſayd Carthier, vpon the twentieth day of April 1534. we departed from the Port of S. Malo with two ſhips of threeſcore tun apiece burden, and 61 well appointed men in ech one: and with ſuch proſperous weather we ſailed onwards, that vpon the tenth day of May we came to Newfoundland, where we entred into the Cape of Buona Viſta, which is in latitude 48 degrees and a halfe, and in longitude *. But becauſe of the great ſtore of the ice that was alongſt the ſayd land, we were conſtrained to enter into an hauen called S. Katherins hauen, diſtant from the other Port about fiue leagues toward Southſoutheaſt: there did we ſtay tenne dayes looking for faire weather; and in the meane while we mended and dreſſed our boats.

The firſt relation of Iaques Carthier of S. Malo, of the new land called New France, newly diſcouered in the yere of our Lord 1534.

How M. Iaques Carthier departed from the Port of S. Malo, with two ſhips, and came to Newfoundland, and how he entred into the Port of Buona Viſta.

After that Sir Charles of Mouy knight lord of Meylleraye, & Uiceadmirall of France had cauſed the Captaines, Maſters, and Mariners of the ſhippes to be ſworne to behaue themſelues truely and faithfully in the ſeruice of the moſt Chriſtian King of France, vnder the charge of the ſayd Carthier, vpon the twentieth day of April 1534, we departed from the Port of S. Malo with two ſhips of threeſcore tun apiece burden, and 61 well appointed men in ech one: and with ſuch proſperous weather we ſailed onwards, that vpon the tenth day of May we came to Newfoundland, where we entred into the Cape of Buona Viſta, which is in latitude 48 degrees and a halfe, and in longitude *. But becauſe of the great ſtore of the ice that was alongſt the ſayd land, we were conſtrained to enter into an hauen called S. Katherins hauen, diſtant from the other Port about fiue leagues toward Southſoutheaſt: there did we ſtay tenne dayes looking for faire weather; and in the meane while we mended and dreſſed our boats.

How we came to the Iſland of Birds, and of the great quantity of birds that there be.

The Iſle of Birds.

VPon the 21 of May the winde being in the Weſt, we hoiſed ſaile, and ſailed toward North and by Eaſt from the cape of Buona Viſta vntil we came to the Iſland of Birds, which was enuironed about with a banke of ice, but broken and crackt: notwithſtanding the ſayd banke, our two boats went thither to take in ſome birds, whereof there is ſuch plenty, that vnleſſe a man did ſee them, he would thinke it an incredible thing. for albeit the Iſland (which containeth about a league in circuit) be ſo full of them, that they ſeeme to haue bene brought thither, and ſowed for the nonce, yet are there an hundred folde as many houering about it as within; ſome of the which are as big as iayes, blacke and white, with beaks like vnto crowes: they lie alwayes vpon the ſea; they cannot flie very high, becauſe their wings are ſo little, and no bigger then halfe ones hand, yet do they flie as ſwiftly as any birds of the aire leuell to the water; they are alſo exceeding fat; we named them Aporath. In leſſe then halfe an houre we filled two boats full of them, as if they had bene with ſtones: ſo that beſides them which we did eat freſh, euery ſhip did powder and ſalt fiue or ſixe barrels full of them.

Of two ſorts of birds, the one called Godetz, the other Margaulx; and how we came to Carpunt.

BEſides theſe, there is another kinde of birds which houer in the aire, and ouer the ſea, leſſer then the others; and theſe doe all gather themſelues together in the Iſland, and put themſelues vnder the wings of other birds that are greater: theſe we named Godetz. There are alſo of another ſort, but bigger, and white, which bite euen as dogs: thoſe we named Margaulx. And albeit the ſayd Iſland be 14 leagues from the maine land, notwithſtanding beares come ſwimming thither to eat of the ſayd birds: and our men found one there as great as any cow, and as white as any ſwan, who in their preſence leapt into the ſea; and vpon Whitſunmunday (following our voyage toward the land) we met her by the way, ſwimming toward land as ſwiftly as we could ſaile. So ſoone as we ſaw her, we purſued her with our boats, and by maine ſtrength tooke her, whoſe fleſh was as good to be eaten as the fleſh of a calfe of two yeres olde. The Wedneſday following, being the 27 of the moneth, we came to the entrance of the bay of the Caſtles; but becauſe the weather was ill, and the great ſtore of ice we found, we were conſtrained to enter into an harborow about the ſayd entrance called Carpunt, where, becauſe we could not come out of it, we ſtayed til the ninth of Iune, what time we departed, hoping with the helpe of God to ſaile further then the ſayd Carpunt, which is in latitude 51 degrees.

Carpunt.

The deſcription of Newfoundland, from Cape Razo to Cape Degrad.

THe land from Cape Razo to Cape Degrad, which is the point of the entrance of the bay that trendeth from head to head toward Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt. All this part of land is parted into Iſlands one ſo nere the other, that there are but ſmall riuers betweene them; thorow the which you may paſſe with little boats, and therefore there are certaine good harborows, among which are thoſe of Carpunt and Degrad. In one of theſe Iſlands that is the higheſt of them all, being the top of it you may plainly ſee the two low Iſlands that are nere to Cape Razo, from whence to the port of Carpunt they count it fiue and twenty leagues; and there are two entrances thereat, one on the Eaſt, the other on the South ſide of the Iſland. But you muſt take heed of the ſide & point of the Eaſt, becauſe that euery where there is nothing els but ſhelues, and the water is very ſhallow: you muſt go about the Iſland toward the Weſt the length of halfe a cable or thereabout, and then to goe toward the South to the ſayd Carpunt. Alſo you are to take heed of three ſhelues that are in the chanell vnder the water: and toward the Iſland on the Eaſt ſide in the chanell, the water is of three or foure fadome deepe, and cleere ground. The other trendeth toward Eaſtnortheaſt, and on the Weſt you may go on ſhore.

Of the Iſland which now is called S. Katherins iſland.

GOing from the point Degrad, and entring into the ſayd bay toward the Weſt & by North: there is ſome doubt of two Iſlands that are on the right ſide, one of the which is diſtant from the ſayd point three leagues, and the other ſeuen, either more or leſſe then the firſt, being a low and plaine land, and it ſeemeth to be part of the maine land. I named it Saint Katherines Iſland; in which, toward the Northeaſt there is very dry ſoile; but about a quarter of a league from it, very ill ground, ſo that you muſt go a little about. The ſayd Iſland & the Port of Caſtles trend toward North northeaſt, and South ſouthweſt, and they are about 15.leagues aſunder. From the ſaid port of Caſtles to the port of Gutte, which is in the northerne part of the ſaid Bay, that trendeth toward Eaſt northeaſt, and Weſt ſouthweſt, there are 12.leagues and an halfe: and about two leagues from the port of Balances, that is to ſay, the third part athwart the ſaide Bay the depth being ſounded it is about 38.fadomes: and from the ſaid port of Balances to the white Sands toward Weſt ſouthweſt there is 15.leagues, but you muſt take heed of a ſhelfe that lyeth about 3.leagues outward frõ the ſaid white Sands on the Southweſt ſide aboue water like a boat.

Blanc Sablon, or white Sands.

Of the place called Blanc Sablon, or the white Sand: of the Iland of Breſt, and of the Iland of Birds, of the ſorts and quantitie of birds that there are found: and of the Port called the Iſlettes.

White Sand is a Road in the which there is no place guarded from the South, nor ſoutheaſt. But toward South ſouthweſt from the ſaide road there are two Ilands, one of the which is called Breſt Iland, and the other the Iland of Birds, in which there is great ſtore of Godetz, and crowes with red beakes and red feete: they make their neſtes in holes vnder the ground euen as Conies. A point of land being paſſed about a league from white Sand, there is a Port and paſſage found called the Iſlettes, a better place then white Sand: and there is great fiſhing. From the ſaid Port of the Iſlettes vnto another called Breſt, the circuit is about ten leagues. This Port is in latitude 51.degrees and 55.minutes, and in longitude*. From the Iſlettes to that place there are many other Ilands: and the ſaide Port of Breſt is alſo amongſt thoſe Ilands. Moreouer the Ilands do compaſſe more then 3.leagues from the ſaid Breſt, being low, and ouer them are the other lands aboue mentioned ſeene.

Breſt a place to the North in Newfound land.

How we with our ſhips entred into the Port of Breſt, and ſayling onward toward the Weſt we paſſed amidſt the Iſlettes, which were ſo many in number, that it was not poſſible to tell them: and how we named them the Iſlettes.

Vpon the 10. of Iune wee with our ſhips entred into the Port of Breſt, to furniſh our ſelues with water and wood, and to make vs ready to paſſe the ſaide Bay. Vpon S.Barnabas day Seruice being heard, we with our boats went beyond the ſaid Port toward the weſt, to ſee what harboroughes were there: wee paſſed through the midſt of the Iſlettes, which were ſo many in number that it was not poſſible they might be tolde, for they continued about 10.leagues beyond the ſaid Port. We to reſt our ſelues ſtayed in one of them a night, and there we found great ſtore of ducke egges, and other birds that there do make their neſts, we named them all The Iſlettes.

Of the Port called S. Antonies Port, S. Seruans Port, Iames Cartiers Port: of the riuer called S. Iames: of the cuſtomes and apparell of the inhabitants in the Iland of White Sand.

The next day we paſſed the ſaid Ilands, and beyond them all we found a good hauen, which we named S. Antonies Hauen, and one or two leagues beyond wee found a little riuer towarde the Southweſt coaſt, that is betweene two other Ilands, and is a good harborough. There we ſet vp a Croſſe, and named it S. Seruans Port: and on the Southweſt ſide of the ſaid Port and riuer, about one league there is a ſmall Iland as round as an Ouen, enuironed about with many other litle Ilands that giue notice to the ſaid Ports. Further about two leagues there is another greater riuer, in which we tooke good ſtore of ſalmon, that we named S. Iames his Riuer. Being in the ſaid riuer, we ſaw a ſhip of Rochel that the night before had paſſed the Port of Breſt, where they thought to haue gone a fiſhing: but the Mariners knew not where they were. We with our boats approched neere vnto it, and did direct it to another Port one league more toward the Weſt then the ſaid riuer of S. Iames, which I take to be one of the beſt in all the world, and therefore wee named it Iames Carthiers Sound. If the ſoile were as good as the harboroughes are, it were a great commoditie: but it is not to be called The new Land, but rather ſtones and wilde cragges, and a place fit for wilde beaſtes, for in all the North Iland I did not ſee a Cart-load of good earth: yet went I on ſhoare in many places, and in the Iland of White Sand, there is nothing elſe but moſſe and ſmall thornes ſcattered here and there, withered and dry. To be ſhort, I beleeue that this was the land that God allotted to Caine. There are men of an indifferent good ſtature and bigneſſe, but wilde and vnruly: they weare their haire tied on the top like a wreath of hay, and put a wooden pinne within it, or any other ſuch thing in ſtead of a naile, and with them they binde certaine birdes feathers. They are clothed with beaſtes ſkinnes as well the men as women, but that the women go ſomewhat ſtraiter and cloſer in their garments then the men do, with their waſtes girded: they paint themſelues with certaine Roan colours: their boates are made of the barke of birch trees, with the which they fiſh and take great ſtore of Seales, and as farre as we could vnderſtand ſince our comming thither, that is not their habitation, but they come from the maine land out of hotter countreys, to catch the ſaide Seales and other neceſſaries for their liuing.

The riuer of S. Iaques.

Boats made of the barke of Birch trees.

Of certaine Capes, that is to ſay, The double Cape, The pointed Cape, Cape Royal, and The Cape of Milke: of the mountaines of Granges: of the Ilands of Doue houſes: and of the great fiſhing of Cods.

VPon the 13. of that moneth we came to our ſhips againe with our boats on purpoſe to ſaile forwards becauſe the weather was faire, and vpon Sunday we cauſed Seruice to be ſaide: then on munday being the 15. of the moneth we departed from Breſt and ſailed toward the South to take a view of the lands that there wee had ſeene, that ſeemed vnto vs to bee two Ilands: but when we were amidſt the Bay, we knew it to be firme land, where was a great double Cape one aboue the other, and therefore wee named it The double Cape. In the entrance of the Bay wee ſounded, and found it to be an hundred fadome round about vs. From Breſt to The double Cape there is about 20. leagues, and about fiue or ſixe leagues beyond we ſounded againe and found 40 fadome water. The ſaid land lieth Northeaſt and Southweſt. The next day being the 16 of the moneth we ſailed along the ſaid coaſt toward the Southweſt, and by South about 35 leagues from the double Cape, where we found very ſteepe and wilde hilles, among the which were ſeene certaine ſmal cabbans, which we in the countrey call Granges, and therefore we named them The hilles of the Granges. The other lands and mountaines are all craggie, cleft and cut, and betwixt them and the Sea, there are other Ilands, but low. The day before through the darke miſts and fogges of the weather, we could not haue ſight of any land, but in the euening we ſpied an entrance into the land, by a riuer among the ſaid Hilles of Granges, and a Cape lying toward the Southweſt about 3 leagues from from vs. The ſaid Cape is on the top of it blunt-pointed, and alſo toward the Sea it endeth in a point, wherefore wee named it The pointed Cape, on the North ſide of which there is a plaine Iland. And becauſe we would haue notice of the ſaid entrance, to ſee if there were any good hauens, we ſtrooke ſaile for that night. The next day being the 17 of the moneth we had ſtormie weather from Northeaſt, wherefore we tooke our way toward the Southweſt vntill thurſday morning, and we went about 37 leagues, till wee came athwart a Bay full of round Ilands like doue houſes, and therefore wee named them The doue houſes. And from the Bay of S. Iulian, from the which to a Cape that lieth South and by Weſt, which wee called Cape Roial, there are 7. leagues, and toward the Weſt ſouthweſt ſide of the ſaide Cape, there is another that beneath is all craggie, and aboue round. On the North ſide of which about halfe a league there lieth a low Iland: that Cape we named The Cape of milke. Betweene theſe two Capes there are certaine low Ilands, aboue which there are alſo certaine others that ſhew that there be ſome riuers. About two leagues from Cape royall wee ſounded and found 20 fadome water, and there is the greateſt fiſhing of Cods that poſſible may be: for ſtaying for our company, in leſſe then an houre we tooke aboue an hundreth of them.

Of certaine Ilands that lie betweene Cape Royal, and The Cape of milke.

THe next day being the 18 of the moneth, the winde with ſuch rage turned againſt vs, that we were conſtrained to go backe toward Cape Royal, thinking there to finde ſome harborough, and with our boates went to diſcouer betweene the Cape Royal, and the Cape of Milke, and found that aboue the low Ilands there is a great and very deepe gulfe, within which are certaine Ilands. The ſaid gulfe on the Southſide is ſhut vp. The foreſaid low grounds are on one of the ſides of the entrance, and Cape Royal is on the other. The ſaide low grounds doe ſtretch themſelues more then halfe a league within the Sea. It is a plaine countrey, but an ill ſoile: and in the middeſt of the entrance thereof, there is an Iland. The ſaide gulfe in latitude is fourtie eight degrees and an halfe, and in longitude *. That night we found no harborough, and therefore wee lanched out into the Sea, leauing the Cape toward the Weſt,

Of the Iland called S. Iohn.

FRom the ſaid day vntill the 24 of the moneth being S. Iohns day we had both ſtormie weather and winde againſt vs, with ſuch darkeneſſe and miſtes, that vntill S. Iohns day, we could haue no ſight of any land, and then had we ſight of a Cape of land, that from Cape Royal lieth Southweſt about 35 leagues, but that day was ſo foggie and miſtie, that we could not come neere land, and becauſe it was S. Iohns day, we named it Cape S. Iohn.

Of certaine Ilands called the Ilands of Margaulx, and of the kinds of beaſts and birds that there are ſound. Of the Iland of Brion, and Cape Dolphin.

The next day being the 25. of the moneth, the weather was alſo ſtormie, darke, and windy, but yet we ſailed a part of the day toward Weſt Northweſt, and in the euening wee put our ſelues athwart vntill the ſecond quarter; when as we departed, then did we by our compaſſe know that we were Northweſt & by Weſt about ſeuen leagues and an halfe from the Cape of S. Iohn, and as wee were about to hoiſe ſaile, the winde turned into the Northweſt, wherefore wee went Southeaſt, about 15. leagues, and came to three Ilands, two of which are as ſteepe and vpright as any wall, ſo that it was not poſſible to climbe them: and betweene them there is a little rocke. Theſe Ilands were as full of birds, as any field or medow is of graſſe, which there do make their neſtes: and in the greateſt of them, there was a great and infinite number of thoſe that wee call Margaulx, that are white, and bigger then any geeſe, which were ſeuered in one part. In the other were onely Godetz, but toward the ſhoare there were of thoſe Godetz, and great Apponatz, like to thoſe of that Iland that we aboue haue mentioned: we went downe to the loweſt part of the leaſt Iland, where we killed aboue a thouſand of thoſe Godetz, and Apponatz. We put into our boates ſo many of them as we pleaſed, for in leſſe then one houre we might haue filled thirtie ſuch boats of them: we named them The Ilands of Margaulx. About fiue leagues frō the ſaid Ilands on the Weſt, there is another Iland that is about two leagues in length, and ſo much in breadth: there did we ſtay all night to take in water and wood. That Iland is enuironed round about with ſand, and hath a very good road about it three or foure fadome deepe. Thoſe Ilands haue the beſt ſoile that euer we ſaw, for that one of their fields is more worth then all the New land. We found it all full of goodly trees, medowes, fields full of wild corne and peaſon bloomed, as thick, as ranke, and as faire as any can be ſeene in Britaine, ſo that they ſeemed to haue bene plowed and ſowed. There was alſo great ſtore of gooſeberies, ſtrawberies, damaſke roſes, parſeley, with other very ſweete and pleaſant hearbes. About the ſaid Iland are very great beaſtes as great as oxen, which haue two great teeth in their mouths like vnto Elephants teeth, & liue alſo in the Sea. We ſaw one of them ſleeping vpon the banke of the water: wee thinking to take it, went to it with our boates, but ſo ſoone as he heard vs, he caſt himſelfe into the Sea. We alſo ſaw beares & wolues: we named it Brions Iland. About it toward Southeaſt, and Northweſt, there are great lakes. As farre as I could gather and comprehend, I thinke that there be ſome paſſage betweene New found land, and Brions land. If ſo it were, it would be a great ſhortning, aſwel of the time as of the way, if any perfection could be found in it. About foure leagues from that Iland toward Weſt-Southweſt is the firme land, which ſeemeth to be as an Iland compaſſed about with litle Ilands of ſands. There is a goodly Cape which we named Cape Dolphin, for there is the beginning of good grounds. On the 27. of Iune we compaſſed the ſaid lands about that lie Weſt Southweſt: and a farre off they ſeeme to be little hilles of ſand, for they are but low landes: wee could neither goe to them, nor land on them, becauſe the winde was againſt vs. That day we went 15. leagues.

Three Ilands.

The Ilands of Margaulx.

Morſes or Sea-oxen.

Brions Iland.

Of the Iland called Alezai, and of the cape of S. Peter.

The next day we went along the ſaid land about 10. leagues, till we came to a Cape of redde land, that is all craggie, within the which there is a bracke looking toward the North. It is a very low countrey. There is alſo betweene the Sea and a certaine poole, a plaine field: and from that Cape of land and the poole vnto another Cape, there are about 14 leagues. The land is faſhioned as it were halfe a circle, all compaſſed about with ſand like a ditch, ouer which as farre as ones eye can ſtretch, there is nothing but marriſh grounds and ſtanding pooles. And before you come to the firſt Cape, very neere the maine land there are two little Ilands. About fiue leagues from the ſecond Cape toward the Southweſt, there is another Iland very high and pointed, which we named Alezai. The firſt Cape we named S. Peters Cape, becauſe vpon that day we came thither.

Of the Cape called Cape Orleans: of the Riuer of Boates: of Wilde mens Cape: and of the qualitie and temperature of the countrey.

From Brions Iland to this place there is good anckorage of ſand, and hauing ſounded toward Southweſt euen to the ſhoare about fiue leagues, wee found twentie and fiue fadome water, and within one league twelue fadome, and very neere the ſhoare ſixe fadome, rather more then leſſe, and alſo good anckorage. But becauſe wee would bee the better acquainted with this ſtonie and rockie ground, wee ſtrooke our ſailes lowe and athwart. The next day being the laſt of the moneth ſaue one, the winde blewe South and by Eaſt. Wee ſailed Weſtward vntill Tueſday morning at Sunne riſing, being the laſt of the moneth, without any ſight or knowledge of any lande, except in the euening toward Sunne ſet, that wee diſcouered a lande which ſeemed to be two Ilands, that were beyond vs Weſt ſouthweſt, about nine or tenne leagues. All the next day till the next morning at Sunne riſing wee ſailed Weſtward about fourtie leagues, and by the way we perceiued that the land we had ſeene like Ilands, was firme land, lying South ſoutheaſt, and North northweſt, to a very good Cape of land called Cape Orleans. Al the ſaid land is low and plaine, and the faireſt that may poſſibly be ſeene, full of goodly medowes and trees. True it is that we could finde no harborough there, becauſe it is all full of ſhelues and ſands. We with our boats went on ſhore in many places, and among the reſt wee entred into a goodly riuer, but very ſhallow, which we named The riuer of boats, becauſe that there wee ſaw boates full of wild men that were croſſing the riuer. We had no other notice of the ſaid wild men: for the wind came from the ſea, and ſo beat vs againſt the ſhore, that wee were conſtrained to retire our ſelues with our boates toward our ſhips. Till the next day morning at Sunne riſing, being the firſt of July, we ſailed Northeaſt, in which time there roſe great miſtes and ſtormes, and therefore wee ſtrucke our ſailes till two of the clocke in the afternoone, that the weather became cleare, & there we had ſight of Cape Orleance, and of another about ſeuen leagues from vs, lying North and by Eaſt, and that we called Wilde mens Cape. On the Northſide of this Cape about halfe a league, there is a very dangerous ſhelfe, and banke of ſtones. Whileſt wee were at this Cape, we ſawe a man running after our boates that were going along the coaſt, who made ſignes vnto vs that we ſhould returne toward the ſaid Cape againe. We ſeeing ſuch ſignes, began to turne toward him, but he ſeeing vs come, began to flee: ſo ſoone as we were come on ſhoare, we ſet a knife before him and a woollen girdle on a litle ſtaffe, and then came to our ſhips againe. That day we trended the ſaid land about 9. or 10. leagues, hoping to finde ſome good harborough, but it was not poſſible: for as I haue ſaid already, it is a very low land, and enuironed round about with great ſhelues. Neuertheleſſe we went that day on ſhore in foure places to ſee the goodly and ſweete ſmelling trees that were there: we found them to be Cedars, ewtrees, Pines, white elmes, aſhes, willowes, with many other ſorts of trees to vs vnknowen, but without any fruit. The grounds where no wood is, are very faire, and all full of peaſon, white and red gooſeberies, ſtrawberies, blackeberies, and wilde corne, euen like vnto Rie, which ſeemed to haue bene ſowen and plowed. This countrey is of better temperature then any other that can be ſeene, and very hote. There are many thruſhes, ſtockdoues, and other birds: to be ſhort, there wanteth nothing but good harboroughs.

An exceeding goodly land.

Varietie of goodly trees.

Of the Bay called S. Lunario, and other notable Bayes and Capes of land, and of the qualitie, and goodneſſe of thoſe grounds.

The next day being the ſecond of July we diſcouered and had ſight of land on the Northerne ſide toward vs, that did ioyne vnto the land aboueſaid, al compaſſed about, and we knew that it had about * in depth, and as much athwart, we named it S. Lunarios Bay, and with our boats we went to the Cape toward the North, and found the ſhore ſo ſhallow, that for the ſpace of a league from land there was but a fadome water. On the Northeaſt ſide from the ſaid Cape about 7. or 8. leagues there is another Cape of land, in the middeſt whereof there is a Bay faſhioned trianglewiſe, very deepe, & as farre off as we could ken from it the ſame lieth Northeaſt. The ſaid Bay is compaſſed about with ſands and ſhelues about 10. leagues from land, and there is but two fadome water: from the ſaid Cape to the bank of the other, there is about 15. leagues. We being acroſſe the ſaid Capes, diſcouered another land and Cape, and as farre as we could ken, it lay North and by Eaſt. All that night the weather was very ill, and great winds, ſo that wee were conſtrained to beare a ſmal ſaile vntil the next morning, being the thirde of July when the winde came from the Weſt: and we ſailed Northward to haue a ſight of the land that we had left on the Northeaſt ſide, aboue the low lands, among which high and low lands there is a gulfe or breach in ſome places about 55. fadome deepe, and 15. leagues in bredth. By reaſon of the great depth and bredth of the gulfe, and change of the lands, we conceiued hope that wee ſhould finde a paſſage, like vnto the paſſage of The Caſtles. The ſaid gulfe lieth Eaſt Northeaſt, and Weſt ſouthweſt. The ground that lieth on the Southſide of the ſaid gulfe, is as good and eaſie to be manured, and full of as goodly fields and meadowes, as any that euer wee haue ſeene, as plaine and ſmooth as any die: and that which lyeth on the North is a countrey altogether hilly, full of woods, and very high and great trees of ſundry ſorts: among the reſt there are as goodly Ceders, and Firre trees, as poſſibly can be ſeene, able to make maſtes for ſhips of three hundred Tunne: neither did we ſee any place that was not full of the ſaide trees, except two onely that were full of goodly medowes, with two very faire lakes. The middeſt of the ſaid Bay is 47. degrees and halfe in latitude.

The paſſage des Chaſteaux.

Trees able to maſt ſhips of 300. tunnes.

Of the Cape D'Eſperance, or the Cape of Hope, and of S. Martins Creeke, and how 7. boats full of wilde men comming to our boat, would not retire themſelues, but being terrified with our Culuerins which we ſhot at them, and our lances, they fled with great haſt.

The Cape of the ſaid South land was called The Cape of Hope, through the hope that there we had to finde ſome paſſage. The fourth of July we went along the coaſt of the ſaid land on the Northerly ſide to finde ſome harborough, where wee entred into a creeke altogether open toward the South, where there is no ſuccour againſt the wind: we thought good to name it S. Martines Creeke. There we ſtayed from the fourth of July vntil the twelfth: while we were there, on Munday being the ſixth of the moneth, Seruice being done, wee with one of our boates went to diſcouer a Cape and point of land that on the Weſterne ſide was about ſeuen or eight leagues from vs, to ſee which way it did bend, and being within halfe a league of it, wee ſawe two companies of boates of wilde men going from one land to the other: their boates were in number about fourtie or fiftie. One part of the which came to the ſaid point, and a great number of the men went on ſhore making a great noiſe, beckening vnto vs that wee ſhould come on land, ſhewing vs certaine ſkinnes vpon pieces of wood, but becauſe we had but one onely boat, wee would not goe to them, but went to the other ſide lying in the Sea: they ſeeing vs flee, prepared two of their boats to follow vs, with which came alſo fiue more of them that were comming from the Sea ſide, all which approched neere vnto our boate, dancing, and making many ſignes of ioy and mirth, as it were deſiring our friendſhip, ſaying in their tongue Napeu tondamen aſſurtah, with many other words that we vnderſtood not. But becauſe (as we haue ſaid) we had but one boat, wee would not ſtand to their courteſie, but made ſignes vnto them that they ſhould turne back, which they would not do, but with great furie came toward vs: and ſuddenly with their boates compaſſed vs about: and becauſe they would not away from vs by any ſignes that we could make, we ſhot off two pieces among them, which did ſo terrifie them, that they put themſelues to flight toward the ſayde point, making a great noiſe: and hauing ſtaid a while, they began anew, euen as at the firſt to come to vs againe, and being come neere our boat wee ſtrucke at them with two lances, which thing was ſo great a terrour vnto them, that with great haſt they beganne to flee, and would no more follow vs.

Fortie or 50 boates of Saluages.

How the ſaid wilde men comming to our ſhips, and our men going toward them, both parties went on land, and how the ſaid wilde men with great ioy began to trafique with our men.

The next day part of the ſaide wilde men with nine of their boates came to the point and entrance of the Creeke, where we with our ſhips were at road. We being aduertiſed of their comming, went to the point where they were with our boates: but ſo ſoone as they ſaw vs, they began to flee, making ſignes that they came to trafique with vs, ſhewing vs ſuch ſkinnes as they cloth themſelues withall, which are of ſmall value. We likewiſe made ſignes vnto them, that we wiſhed them no euill: and in ſigne thereof two of our men ventured to go on land to them, and cary them kniues with other Iron wares, and a red hat to giue vnto their Captaine. Which when they ſaw, they alſo came on land, and brought ſome of their ſkinnes, and ſo began to deale with vs, ſeeming to be very glad to haue our iron wares and other things, ſtil dancing with many other ceremonies, as with their hands to caſt Sea water on their heads. They gaue vs whatſoeuer they had, not keeping any thing, ſo that they were conſtrained to goe backe againe naked, and made vs ſignes that the next day they would come againe, and bring more ſkinnes with them.

How that we hauing ſent two of our men on land with wares, there came about 300. wilde men with great gladneſſe. Of the qualitie of the countrey, what it bringeth foorth, and of the Bay called Baia du Chaleur, or The Bay of heat.

Vpon thurſday being the eight of the moneth, becauſe the winde was not good to go out with our ſhips, we ſet our boates in a readineſſe to goe to diſcouer the ſaid Bay, and that day wee went 25. leagues within it. The next day the wind and weather being faire, we ſailed vntil noone, in which time we had notice of a great part of the ſaid Bay, and how that ouer the low lands, there were other lands with high mountaines: but ſeeing that there was no paſſage at all, wee began to turne back againe, taking our way along the coaſt: & ſayling, we ſaw certaine wilde men that ſtood vpon the ſhore of a lake, that is among the low grounds, who were making fires and ſmokes: wee went thither, & found that there was a chanel of the ſea that did enter into the lake, and ſetting our boats at one of the banks of the chanell, the wilde men with one of their boates came vnto vs, and brought vp pieces of Seales ready ſodden, putting them vpon pieces of wood: then retiring themſelues, they would make ſignes vnto vs, that they did giue them vs. Wee ſent two men vnto them with hatchets, kniues, beads, & other ſuch like ware, whereat they were very glad, and by and by in cluſters they came to the ſhore where wee were, with their boates, bringing with them ſkinnes and other ſuch things as they had, to haue of our wares. They were more then 300, men, women and children: ſome of the women which came not ouer, wee might ſee ſtand vp to the knees in water, ſinging and dancing: the other that had paſſed the riuer where we were, came very friendly to vs, rubbing our armes with their owne handes, then would they lift them vp toward heauen, ſhewing many ſignes of gladneſſe: and in ſuch wiſe were wee aſſured one of another, that we very familiarly began to trafique for whatſoeuer they had, til they had nothing but their naked bodies; for they gaue vs all whatſoeuer they had, and that was but of ſmall value. We perceiued that this people might very eaſily be conuerted to our Religion. They goe from place to place. They liue onely with fiſhing. They haue an ordinarie time to fiſh for their prouiſion. The countrey is hotter then the countrey of Spaine, and the faireſt that can poſſibly be found, altogether ſmooth, and leuel. There is no place be it neuer ſo little, but it hath ſome trees (yea albeit it be ſandie) or elſe is full of wilde corne, that hath an eare like vnto Rie: the corne is like oates, and ſmal peaſon as thicke as if they had bene ſowen and plowed, white and red gooſeberies, ſtrawberies, blackberies, white and red Roſes, with many other floures of very ſweet and pleaſant ſmell. There be alſo many goodly medowes full of graſſe, and lakes wherein great plentie of ſalmons be. They call a hatchet in their tongue Cochi, and a knife Bacon: we named it The bay of heat.

Baye du Chaleur, or the Bay of heat.

¶ Of another nation of wilde men: of their maners, liuing and clothing.

BEing certified that there was no paſſage through the ſaid Bay, we hoiſed ſaile, and went from S.Martines Creeke vpon Sunday being the 12, of July, to goe and diſcouer further beyond the ſaid Bay, and went along the ſea coaſt Eaſtward about eighteene leagues, till we came to the Cape of Prato, where we found the tide very great, but ſhallow ground, and the Sea ſtormie, ſo that we were conſtrained to draw toward ſhore, betweene the ſaid Cape and an Iland lying Eaſtward, about a league from the ſaid Cape, where we caſt ancker for that night. The next morning we hoiſed ſaile to trend the ſaid coaſt about, which lyeth North Northeaſt. But there roſe ſuch a ſtormie and raging winde againſt vs, that we were conſtrained to come to the place againe, from whence we were come: there did we ſtay all that day til the next that we hoiſed vp ſaile, and came to the middeſt of a riuer fiue or ſixe leagues from the Cape of Prato Northward, and being ouerthwart the ſaid Riuer, there aroſe againe a contrary winde, with great fogges and ſtormes. So that we were conſtrained vpon Tueſday being the fourteenth of the moneth to enter into the riuer, and there did we ſtay till the ſixteenth of the moneth looking for faire weather to come out of it: on which day being Thurſday, the winde became ſo raging that one of our ſhips loſt an ancker, and we were conſtrained to goe vp higher into the riuer ſeuen or eight leagues, into a good harborough and ground that we with our boates found out, and through the euill weather, tempeſt, and darkeneſſe that was, wee ſtayed in the ſaide harborough till the fiue and twentieth of the moneth, not being able to put out: in the meane time wee ſawe a great multitude of wilde men that were fiſhing for mackerels, whereof there is great ſtore. Their boates were about 40, and the perſons what with men, women & children two hundred, which after they had hanted our company a while, they came very familiarly with their boats to the ſides of our ſhips. We gaue them kniues, combes, beads of glaſſe, and other trifles of ſmall value, for which they made many ſignes of gladneſſe, lifting their hands vp to heauen dancing and ſinging in their boates. Theſe men may very well and truely be called Wilde, becauſe there is no poorer people in the world. For I thinke all that they had together, beſides their boates and nets was not worth fiue ſouce. They goe altogether naked ſauing their priuities, which are couered with a little ſkinne, and certaine olde ſkinnes that they caſt vpon them. Neither in nature nor in language, doe they any whit agree with them which we found firſt: their heads be altogether ſhauen, except one buſh of haire which they ſuffer to grow vpon the top of their crowne as long as a horſe taile, & then with certaine leather ſtrings binde it in a knot vpon their heads. They haue no other dwelling but their boates, which they turne vpſide downe, and vnder them they lay themſelues all along vpon the bare ground. They eate their fleſh almoſt raw, ſaue onely that they heate it a little vpon imbers of coales, ſo doe they their fiſh. Vpon Magdalens day we with our boates went to the bancke of the riuer, and freely went on ſhore among them, whereat they made many ſignes, and all their men in two or three companies began to ſing and dance, ſeeming to be very glad of our comming. They had cauſed all the yong women to flee into the wood, two or three excepted, that ſtayed with them, to ech of which we gaue a combe, and a little bell made of Tinne, for which they were very glad, thanking our Captaine, rubbing his armes and breaſts with their hands. When the men ſaw vs giue ſomething vnto thoſe that had ſtayed, it cauſed al the reſt to come out of the wood, to the end they ſhould haue as much as the others: Theſe women were about twenty, who altogether in a knot fell vpon our Captaine, touching and rubbing him with their hands, according to their maner of cheriſhing and making much of one, who gaue to each of them a little Tinne bell: then ſuddenly they began to dance, and ſing many ſongs. There we found great ſtore of Mackrels, that they had taken vpon the ſhore, with certaine nets that they make to fiſh, of a kind of Hempe that groweth in that place where ordinarily they abide, for they neuer come to the ſea, but onely in fiſhing time. As farre as I vnderſtand, there groweth likewiſe a kinde of Millet as big as Peaſon, like vnto that which groweth in Breſil, which they eate in ſtead of bread. They had great ſtore of it. They call it in their tongue Kapaige. They haue alſo Prunes, (that is to ſay Damſins) which they dry for winter as we doe, they call them Honeſta. They haue alſo Figs, Nuts, Apples, and other fruits, and Beans, that they call Sahu, their nuts Cahehya. If we ſhewed them any thing that they haue not, nor know not what it is, ſhaking their heads, they will ſay Nohda, which is as much to ſay, they haue it not, nor they know it not. Of thoſe things they haue, they would with ſignes ſhew vs how to dreſſe them, and how they grow. They eate nothing that hath any taſte of ſalt. They are very great theeues, for they will filch and ſteale whatſoeuer they can lay hold of, and all is fiſh that commeth to net.

¶ How our men ſet vp a great Croſſe vpon the point of the ſayd Porte, and the Captaine of thoſe wild men, after a long Oration, was by our Captain appeaſed, and contented that two of his Children ſhould goe with him.

VPon the 24 of the moneth, wee cauſed a faire high Croſſe to be made of the height of thirty foote, which was made in the preſence of many of them, vpon the point of the entrance of the ſayd hauen, in the middeſt whereof we hanged vp a Shield with three Floure de Luces in it, and in the top was carued in the wood with Anticke letters this poſie, Viue le Roy de France. Then before them all we ſet it vpon the ſayd point. They with great heed beheld both the making and ſetting of it vp. So ſoone as it was vp, we altogether kneeled downe before them, with our hands toward Heauen, yeelding God thankes: and we made ſignes vnto them, ſhewing them the Heauens, and that all our ſaluation dependeth onely on him which in them dwelleth: whereat they ſhewed a great admiration, looking firſt one at another, and then vpon the Croſſe. And after wee were returned to our ſhips, their Captaine clad with an old Beares ſkin, with three of his ſonnes, and a brother of his with him, came vnto vs in one of their boates, but they came not ſo neere vs as they were wont to doe: there he made a long Oration vnto vs, ſhewing vs the croſſe we had ſet vp, and making a croſſe with two fingers, then did he ſhew vs all the Countrey about vs, as if he would ſay that all was his, and that wee ſhould not ſet vp any croſſe without his leaue. His talke being ended, we ſhewed him an Axe, faining that we would giue it him for his ſkin, to which he liſtned, for by little and little hee came neere our ſhips. One of our fellowes that was in our boate, tooke hold on theirs, and ſuddenly leapt into it, with two or three more, who enforced them to enter into our ſhips, wherat they were greatly aſtoniſhed. But our Captain did ſtraight waies aſſure them, that they ſhould haue no harme, nor any iniurie offred them at all, & entertained them very friendly, making them eate and drinke. Then did we ſhew them with ſignes, that the croſſe was but onely ſet vp to be as a light and leader which wayes to enter into the port, and that wee would ſhortly come againe, and bring good ſtore of iron wares & other things, but that we would take two of his children with vs, & afterward bring them to the ſayd port againe: and ſo wee clothed two of them in ſhirts, and coloured coates, with red cappes, and put about euery ones necke a copper chaine, whereat they were greatly contented: then gaue they their old clothes to their fellowes that went backe againe, and we gaue to each one of thoſe three that went backe, a hatchet, and ſome kniues, which made them very glad. After theſe were gone, and had told the newes vnto their fellowes, in the after noone there came to our ſhips ſixe boates of them, with fiue or ſixe men in euery one, to take their farewels of thoſe two we had detained to take with vs, and brought them ſome fiſh, vttering many words which we did not vnderſtand, making ſignes that they would not remoue the croſſe we had ſet vp.

This hauen ſeemeth to be Gaspay.

Two ſauages taken.

¶ How after we were departed from the ſayd porte, following our voyage along the ſayd coaſt, we went to diſcouer the land lying Southeaſt, and Northweſt.

THe next day, being the 25 of the moneth, we had faire weather, and went from the ſaid port: and being out of the riuer, we ſailed Eaſtnortheaſt, for after the entrance into the ſaid riuer, the land is enuironed about, and maketh a bay in maner of halfe a circle, where being in our ſhips, we might ſee all the coaſt ſayling behind, which we came to ſeeke, the land lying Southeaſt and Northweſt, the courſe of which was diſtant from the riuer about twentie leagues.

Of the Cape S. Aluiſe, and Cape Memorancie, and certaine other lands, and how one of our Boates touched a Rocke and ſuddenly went ouer it.

ON munday being the 27 of the moneth, about ſunne-ſet we went along the ſaid land, as we haue ſaid, lying Southeaſt & Northweſt, till Wedneſday that we ſaw another Cape where the land beginneth to bend toward the Eaſt: we went along about 15 leagues, then doeth the land begin to turne Northward. About three leagues from the ſayd Cape we ſounded, and found 24 fadome water. The ſaid lands are plaine, and the faireſt and moſt without woods that we haue ſeene, with goodly greene fields and medowes: we named the ſayd Cape S. Aluiſe Cape, becauſe that was his day: it is 49 degrees and a halfe in latitude, and in longitude *. On Wedneſday morning we were on the Eaſt ſide of the Cape, and being almoſt night we went Northweſtward for to approch neere to the ſayd land, which trendeth North and South. From S. Aluiſe Cape to another called Cape Memorancie, about fifteene leagues, the land beginneth to bend Northweſt. About three leagues from the ſayd Cape we would needes ſound, but wee could finde no ground at 150 fadome, yet went we along the ſaid land, about tenne leagues, to the latitude of 50 degrees. The Saturday following, being the firſt of Auguſt, by Sunne riſing, wee had certaine other landes, lying North and Northeaſt, that were very high and craggie, and ſeemed to be mountaines: betweene which were other low lands with woods and riuers: wee went about the ſayd lands, as well on the one ſide as on the other, ſtill bending Northweſt, to ſee if it were either a gulfe, or a paſſage, vntill the fift of the moneth. The diſtance from one land to the other is about fifteene leagues. The middle betweene them both is 50 degrees and a terce in latitude. We had much adoe to go fiue miles farther, the winds were ſo great, and the tide againſt vs. And at fiue miles end, we might plainely ſee and perceiue land on both ſides, which there beginneth to ſpread it ſelfe, but becauſe we rather fell, then got way againſt the wind, we went toward land, purpoſing to goe to another Cape of land, lying Southward, which was the farthermoſt out into the ſea that we could ſee, about fiue leagues from vs, but ſo ſoone as we came thither, we found it to be naught elſe but Rockes, ſtones, & craggie cliffes, ſuch as we had not found any where ſince we had ſailed Southward from S. Iohns Cape: and there was the tide with vs, which caried vs againſt the wind Weſtward, ſo that as we were ſayling along the ſayd coaſt, one of our boats touched a Rocke, and ſuddenly went ouer, but we were conſtrained to leape out for to direct it on according to the tide.

Fifty degrees of latitude.

How after we had agreed and conſulted what was beſt to be done, we purpoſed to returne: and of S. Peters Streight, and of Cape Tiennot.

AFter we had ſailed along the ſayd coaſt, for the ſpace of two houres, behold, the tide began to turne againſt vs, with ſo ſwift and raging a courſe, that it was not poſſible for vs with 13 oares to row or get one ſtones caſt farther, ſo that we were conſtrained to leaue our boates with ſome of our men to guard them, and 10 or 12 men went aſhore to the ſayd Cape, where we found that the land beginneth to bend Southweſt, which hauing ſeene, we came to our boats againe, and ſo to our ſhips, which were ſtil ready vnder ſaile, hoping to go forward: but for all that, they were fallen more then foure leagues to leeward from the place where we had left them, where ſo ſoone as we came, wee aſſembled together all our Captaines, Maſters, and Mariners, to haue their aduice and opinion what was beſt to be done: and after that euery one had ſaid, conſidering that the Eaſterly winds began to beare ſway, and blow, & that the flood was ſo great, that we did but fall, and that there was nothing to be gotten, and that ſtormes and tempeſts began to reigne in Newfound land, and that we were ſo farre from home, not knowing the perils and dangers that were behind, for either we muſt agree to returne home againe, or els to ſtay there all the yeere. Moreouer, we did conſider, that if the Northerne winds did take vs, it were not poſſible for vs to depart thence. All which opinions being heard and conſidered, we altogether determined to addreſſe our ſelues homeward. Nowe becauſe vpon Saint Peters day wee entred into the ſayd Streite, wee named it Saint Peters Streite. Wee ſounded it in many places, in ſome wee found 150 fadome water, in ſome 100, and neere the ſhoare ſixtie, and cleere ground. From that day till Wedneſday following, we had a good and proſperous gale of winde, ſo that we trended the ſaid North ſhore Eaſt, Southeaſt, Weſt Northweſt: for ſuch is the ſituation of it, except one Cape of low lands that bendeth more toward the Southeaſt, about twenty fiue leagues from the Streight. In this place we ſaw certaine ſmokes, that the people of the countrey made vpon the ſayd cape: but becauſe the wind blewe vs toward the coaſt, we went not to them, which when they ſaw, they came with two boates and twelue men vnto vs, and as freely came vnto our ſhips, as if they had bene French men, and gaue vs to vnderſtand, that they came from the great gulfe, and that Tiennot was their Captaine, who then was vpon that Cape, making ſignes vnto vs, that they were going home to their Countreys whence we were come with our ſhips, and that they were laden with Fiſh. We named the ſayd Cape, Cape Tiennot. From the ſaid Cape all the land trendeth Eaſtſoutheaſt, and Weſtnorthweſt. All theſe lands lie low, very pleaſant, enuironed with ſand, where the ſea is entermingled with mariſhes and ſhallowes, the ſpace of twentie leagues: then doth the land begin to trend from Weſt to Eaſtnortheaſt altogether enuironed with Iſlands two or three leagues from land, in which as farre as we could ſee, are many dangerous ſhelues more then foure or fiue leagues from land.

Cape Tiennot.

How that vpon the ninth of Auguſt wee entred within White Sands, and vpon the fift of September we came to the port of S. Malo.

FRom the ſayd Wedneſday vntill Saturday following, we had a great wind from the Southweſt, which cauſed vs to run Eaſtnortheaſt, on which day we came to the Eaſterly partes of Newfoundland, betweeen the Granges and the Double Cape. There began great ſtormie winds comming frõ the Eaſt with great rage: wherfore we coaſted the Cape Northnorthweſt, to ſearch the Northerne part, which is (as we haue ſayd) all enuironed with Iſlands, and being neere the ſaid Iſlands and land, the wind turned into the South, which brought vs within the ſayd gulfe, ſo that the next day being the 9 of Auguſt, we by the grace of God entred within the White Sands. And this is ſo much as we haue diſcouered. After that, vpon the 15 of Auguſt, being the feaſt of the Aſſumption of our Lady, after that we had heard ſeruice, we altogether departed from the porte of White Sands, and with a happy and proſperous weather we came into the middle of the ſea, that is between Newfound land and Britanie, in which place we were toſt and turmoyled three dayes long with great ſtormes and windy tempeſts comming from the Eaſt, which with the ayde and aſſiſtance of God we ſuffred: then had we faire weather, and vpon the fift of September, in the ſayd yere, we came to the port of S. Malo whence we departed.

Chap. 1.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1535, vpon Whitſunday, being the 16 of May, by the commandement of our Captaine Iames Cartier, and with a common accord, in the Cathedrall Church of S.Malo we deuoutly each one confeſſed our ſelues, and receiued the Sacrament: and all entring into the Quier of the ſayd Church, wee preſented our ſelues before the Reuerend Father in Chriſt, the Lord Biſhop of S. Malo, who bleſſed vs all, being in his Biſhops roabes. The Wedneſday following, being the 19 of May, there aroſe a good gale of wind, and therefore we hoyſed ſayle with three ſhips, that is to ſay, the great Hermina, being in burden about a hundreth, or a hundreth and twenty tunne, wherin the foreſaid Captaine Iames Cartier was Generall, and maſter Thomas Froſmont chiefe Maſter, accompanied with maſter Claudius de Pont Briand, ſonne to the Lorde of Montceuell, and Cup-bearer to the Dolphin of France, Charles of Pomeraies, Iohn Powlet, and other Gentlemen. In the ſecond ſhip called the little Hermina, being of three ſcore tunne burden, were Captaines vnder the ſayd Cartier, Mace Salobert, and maſter William Marie. In the third ſhip called the Hermerillon, being of forty tunne in burden, were Captains M. William Britton, and M. Iames Maingare. So we ſayled with a good and proſperous wind, vntill the 20 of the ſaid moneth, at which time the weather turned into ſtormes and tempeſts, the which with contrary winds, and darkeneſſe, endured ſo long that our ſhips being without any reſt, ſuffered as much as any ſhips that euer went on ſeas: ſo that the 25 of Iune, by reaſon of that foule and foggie weather, all our ſhips loſt ſight one of another againe till wee came to Newfound land where we had appointed to meete. After we had loſt one another, wee in the Generals ſhip were with contrary windes toſt to and fro on the ſea, vntill the ſeuenth of Iuly, vpon which day we arriued in Newe found land, and came to the Iſland called The Iſland of Birds, which lyeth from the maine land 14 leagues. This Iſland is ſo full of birds, that all our ſhips might eaſily haue bene fraighted with them, & yet for the great number that there is, it would not ſeeme that any were taken away. We to victuall our ſelues filled two boats of them. This Iſland hath the Pole eleuated 49 degrees, and 40 minutes. Vpon the eight of the ſayd moneth we ſailed further, & with a proſperous weather came to the Port called The Port of white ſands, that is in the Bay called The Bay of Caſtels, where we had purpoſed to meete & ſtay together the 15 of the ſaid moneth. In this place therefore we looked for our fellowes, that is to ſay, the other two ſhips, till the 26 of the moneth, on which day both came together. So ſoone as our fellowes were come, we ſet our ſhips in a readines, taking in both water, wood, & other neceſſaries. And then on the 29 of the ſayd moneth, early in the morning we hoiſed ſaile to paſſe on further, & ſayling along the Northerne coaſt that runneth Northeaſt and Southweſt, til two houres after Sun-ſet or thereabouts, then we croſſed along two Iſlands, which doe ſtretch further foorth then the others, which we called S. Williams Iſlands, being diſtant about 20 leagues or more from the Port of Breſt. All the coaſt from the Caſtels to that place lieth Eaſt & Weſt, Northeaſt & Southweſt, hauing betweene it ſundry little Iſlands, altogether barren and full of ſtones, without either earth or trees, except certain valleys only. The next day being the 30 of Iuly, we ſailed on Weſtward to find out other Iſlands which as yet we had not found 12 leagues and a halfe, among which there is a great Bay toward the North all full of Iſlands and great creekes where many good harboroughs ſeeme to be: them we named S.Marthas Iſlands, from which about a league and a halfe further into the ſea there is a dangerous ſhallow, wherein are fiue rockes, which lie from Saint Marthas Iſlands about ſeuen leagues as you paſſe into the ſayd Iſlands, on the Eaſt & on the Weſt ſide, to which we came the ſayd day an houre after noone, & from that houre vntill midnight we ſailed about fifteene leagues athwart a cape of the lower Iſlands, which we named S.Germans Iſlands Southeaſtward, from which place about three leagues, there is a very dangerous ſhallow. Likewiſe betweene S.Germans cape and Saint Marthas, about two leagues from the ſayd Iſlands, there lyeth a banke of

of ſand, vpon which banke the water is but foure fadome deepe, and therefore ſeeing the danger of the coaſt, we ſtrucke ſaile and went no further that night: The next day being the laſt of Iuly, we went all along the coaſt that runneth Eaſt and Weſt, and ſomewhat Southeaſterly which is all enuironed about with Iſlands and drie ſands, and in trueth is very dangerous. The length from S.Germans Cape to the ſaid Iſlands is about 17 leagues and a halfe, at the end of which there is a goodly plot of ground full of huge and high trees, albeit the reſt of the coaſt be compaſſed about with ſands without any ſigne or ſhew of harboroughs, till we came to Cape Thiennot, which trendeth Northweſt about ſeuen leagues from the foreſaid Iſlands, which Cape Thiennot we noted in our former voyage, and therefore we ſailed on all that night Weſt and Weſtnorthweſt, till it was day, and then the wind turned againſt vs, wherefore we went to ſeeke a hauen wherein we might harbour our ſhips, and by good hap, found one fit for our purpoſe, about ſeuen leagues and a halfe beyond Cape Thiennot, & that we named S.Nicholas Hauen, it lieth amidſt 4 Iſlands that ſtretch into the ſea: Vpon the neereſt wee for a token ſet vp a woodden croſſe. But note by the way, that this croſſe muſt be brought Northeaſt, & then bending toward it, leaue it on the left hand and you ſhall find ſixe fadome water, and within the hauen foure. Alſo you are to take heede of two ſhelues that leane outward halfe a league. All this coaſt is full of ſhoulds and very dangerous, albeit in ſight many good hauens ſeeme to be there, yet is there nought elſe but ſhelues and ſants. We ſtaied and reſted our ſelues in the ſayd hauen, vntill the ſeuenth of Auguſt being Sonday: on which day we hoyſed ſayle, and came toward land on the South ſide toward Cape Rabaſt, diſtant from the ſayd hauen about twentie leagues Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt: but the next day there roſe a ſtormie and a contrary winde, and becauſe we could find no hauen there toward the South, thence we went coaſting along toward the North, beyond the abouesayd hauen about ten leagues, where we found a goodly great gulfe, full of Iſlands, paſſages, and entrences toward what wind ſoeuer you pleaſe to bend: for the knowledge of this gulfe there is a great Iſland that is like to a Cape of lande, ſtretching ſomewhat further foorth than the others, and about two leagues within the land, there is an hill faſhioned as it were an heape of corne. We named the ſayd gulfe Saint Laurence his bay. The twelfth of the ſayd moneth wee went from the ſayd Saint Laurence his Bay, or gulfe, ſayling Weſtward, and diſcouered a Cape of land toward the South, that runneth Weſt and by South, diſtant from the ſayd Saint Laurence his Bay, about fiue and twenty leagues. And of the two wilde men which wee tooke in our former voyage, it was tolde vs, that this was part of the Southerne coaſte, & that there was an Iſland, on the Southerly parte of which is the way to goe from Honguedo (where the yeere before we had taken them) to Canada, and that two dayes iourney from the ſayd Cape, and Iſland began the Kingdome of Saguenay, on the North ſhore extending toward Canada, and about three leagues athwart the ſayd Cape, there is aboue a hundreth fadome water. Moreouer I beleeue that there were neuer ſo many Whales ſeen as wee ſaw that day about the ſayd Cape. The next day after being our Ladie day of Auguſt the fifteenth of the moneth, hauing paſſed the Straight, we had notice of certaine lands that wee left toward the South, which landes are full of very great and high hilles, and this Cape wee named The Iſland of the Aſſumption, and one Cape of the ſaid high countreys lyeth Eaſtnortheaſt, and Weſtſouthweſt, the diſtance betweene which is about fiue and twenty leagues. The Countreys lying North may plainely be perceiued to be higher then the Southerly, more then thirty leagues in length. We trended the ſayd landes about toward the South: from the ſayd day vntill Teweſday noone following, the winde came Weſt, and therefore wee bended toward the North, purpoſing to goe and ſee the land that we before had ſpied. Being arriued there, we found the ſayd landes, as it were ioyned together, and low toward the Sea. And the Northerly mountaines that are vpon the ſayd low lands ſtretch Eaſt, and Weſt, and a quarter of the South. Our wild men told vs that there was the beginning of Saguenay, and that it was land inhabited, and that thence commeth the red Copper, of them named Caignetdaze. There is betweene the Southerly lands, and the Northerly about thirtie leagues diſtance, and more then two hundreth fadome depth. The ſayd men did moreouer certifie vnto vs, that there was the way and beginning of the great riuer of Hochelaga and ready way to Canada, which riuer the further it went the narrower it came, euen vnto Canada, and that then there was freſh water, which went ſo farre vpwards, that they had neuer heard of any man who had gone to the head of it, and that there is no other paſſage but with ſmall boates. Our Captaine hearing their talke, and how they did affirme no other paſſage to be there, would not at that time proceede any further, till he had ſeene and noted the other lands, & coaſt toward the North, which he had omitted to ſee from S.Laurence his gulfe, becauſe he would know, if betweene the lands toward the North any paſſage might be diſcouered.

VPon the 18 of Auguſt being Wedneſday, our Captaine cauſed his ſhippes to wind backe, and bend toward the other ſhore, ſo that we trended the ſaid Northerly coſt, which runneth Northeaſt and Southweſt, being faſhioned like vnto halfe a bowe, and is a very high land, but yet not ſo high as that on the South parts. The Thurſday following we came to ſeuen very high Iſlands, which we named The round Iſlands. Theſe Iſlands are diſtant from the South ſhore about 40 leagues, and ſtretch out into the ſea about 3 or 4 leagues. Againſt theſe there are goodly low grounds to be ſeene full of goodly trees, which we the Friday following, with our boats cõpaſſed about. Ouerthwart theſe lands there are diuers ſandy ſhelues more then two leagues into the ſea, very dangerous, which at a low water remaine almoſt dry. At the furtheſt bounds of theſe lowe lands, that containe about ten leagues, there is a riuer of freſh water, that with ſuch ſwiftneſſe runneth into the ſea, that for the ſpace of one league within it the water is as freſh as any fountaine water. We with our boates entred into the ſayd riuer, at the entrance of which we found about one fadome & a halfe of water. There are in this riuer many fiſhes ſhaped like horſes, which as our wild men told vs, all the day long lie in the water, and the night on land: of which we ſaw therin a great number. The next day being the 21 of the moneth, by breake of day we hoyſed ſaile, and ſailed ſo long along the ſaid coaſt, that we had ſight of the reſt of the ſayd Northerne coaſt, which as yet we had not ſeene, and of the Iſland of the Aſſumption which wee went to diſcouer, departing from the ſayd land: which thing ſo ſoone as we had done, & that we were certified no other paſſage to be there, we came to our ſhips againe, which we had left at the ſaid Iſlands, where is a good harborough, the water being about nine or ten fadome. In the ſame place by occaſion of contrary winds & foggie miſts, we were conſtrained to ſtay, not being either able to come out of it, or hoiſe ſaile, till the 24 of the moneth: On which day we departed & came to a hauen on the Southerly coaſt about 80 leagues from the ſaid Iſlands. This hauen is ouer againſt three flat Iſlands that lie amidſt the riuer, becauſe on the midway betweene thoſe Iſlands, & the ſayd hauen toward the North, there is a very great riuer that runneth betweene the high and low landes, and more then three leagues into the ſea it hath many ſhelues, & there is not altogether two fadome water, ſo that the place is very dangerous: and neere vnto the ſaid ſhelues, there is either fifteene or 20 fadomes from ſhore to ſhore. All the Northerly coaſte runneth Northeaſt and by North, and Southweſt & by South. The ſaid hauen wherin we ſtayed on the South ſide, is as it were but a ſluce of the waters that riſe by the flood, & but of ſmal accompt: we named them S. Iohns Iſlets, becauſe we found them, & entred into them the day of the beheading of that Saint. And before you come to the ſaid hauen, there is an Iſland lying Eaſtward about 5 leagues diſtant from the ſame: betweene which and the land there is no paſſage ſauing only for ſmal boats. The hauen of S. Iohns Iſlets dryeth vp all the waters that riſe by flowing, although they flow two fadome at the leaſt. The beſt place to harborough ſhips therein is on the South part of a little Iſland that is ouer againſt the ſaid hauen, whereby the bancke or ſhore of the Iſland riſeth. Vpon the firſt of September we departed out of the ſaid hauen, purpoſing to go toward Canada, & about 15 leagues from it toward the Weſt, & Weſtſouthweſt, amidſt the riuer, there are three Iſlands, ouer againſt the which there is a riuer which runneth ſwift, and is of a great depth, & it is that which leadeth, and runneth into the countrey and kingdome of Saguenay, as by the two wild men of Canada it was told vs. This riuer paſſeth and runneth along very high and ſteepe hils of bare ſtone, where very little earth is, & notwithſtanding there is great quantity of ſundry ſorts of trees that grow in the ſaid bare ſtones, euen as vpon good & fertile ground, in ſuch ſort that we haue ſeene ſome ſo great as wel would ſuffiſe to make a maſt for a ſhip of 30 tunne burden, and as greene as poſſibly can be, growing in a ſtony rocke without any earth at all. At the entrance of the ſayd riuer we met with 4 boats ful of wild men, which as far as we could perceiue, very fearfully came toward vs, ſo that ſome of them went backe againe, & the other came as neere vs as eaſily they might heare & vnderſtand one of our wild men, who told them his name, and then tooke acquaintance of them, vpon whoſe word they came to vs. The next day being the 2 of September, we came out of the ſayd riuer to go to Canada, and by reaſon of the ſeas flowing, the tide was very ſwift and dangerous, for that on the South part of it there lie two Iſlands, about which, more then three leagues compaſſe, lie many rocks and great ſtones, & but two fadome water: and the flowing amidſt thoſe Iſlands is very vnconſtant and doubtful, ſo that if it had not bene for our boats, we had been in great danger to loſe our Pinneſſe: & coaſting along the ſaid drie ſands, there is more then 30 fadom water.

A great riuer.

This is the riuer of Tadaſeu, or of Saguenay.

About fiue leagues beyond the riuer of Saguenay Southweſt, there is another Iland on the Northſide, wherein are certaine high lands, and thereabouts we thought to haue caſt anker, on purpoſe to ſtay the next tide, but we could ſound no ground in a 120 fadome, within a flight ſhoot from ſhore, ſo that we were conſtrained to winde backe to the ſaid Iland, where wee ſounded againe and found 35 fadome. The next morning we hoyſed ſaile and went thence, ſayling further on, where we had notice of a certaine kind of fiſh neuer before of any man ſeene or knowen. They are about the bigneſſe of a Porpoſe, yet nothing like them, of body very well proportioned, headed like Grayhounds, altogither as white as ſnow without any ſpot, within which riuer there is great quantitie of them: they doe liue altogither betweene the Sea and the freſh water. Theſe people of the Countrey call them Adhothuys, they tolde vs that they be very ſauory and good to be eaten. Moreouer they affirme none to be found elſewhere but in the mouth of that riuer. The ſixth of the month, the weather being calme and faire, we went about 15 leagues more vpward into the riuer, and there lighted on an Iland that looketh Northward, and it maketh a little hauen or creeke wherein are many and innumerable great Tortoyzes, continually lying about that Iland. There are likewiſe great quantitie of the ſaid Adhothuys taken by the inhabitours of the countrey, and there is as great a current in that place as is at Bordeux in France at euery tide. This Iland is in length about three leagues, and in bredth two, and is a goodly and fertile plot of ground, repleniſhed with many goodly and great trees of many ſorts. Among the reſt there are many Filberd-trees, which we found hanging full of them, ſomewhat bigger and better in ſauour then ours, but ſomewhat harder, and therefore we called it The Iland of Filberds. The ſeuenth of the moneth being our Ladies euen, after ſeruice we went from that Iland to goe vp higher into the riuer, and came to 14 Ilands ſeuen or eight leagues from the Iland of Filberds, where the countrey of Canada beginneth, one of which Ilands is ten leagues in length, and fiue in bredth, greatly inhabited of ſuch men as onely liue by fiſhing of ſuch ſorts of fiſhes as the riuer affordeth, according to the ſeaſon of them. After we had caſt anker betwene the ſaid great Iland, & the Northerly coaſt, we went on land and tooke our two wild men with vs, meeting with many of thoſe countrey people, who would not at all approch vnto vs, but rather fled from vs, vntill our two men began to ſpeake vnto them, telling them that they were Taignoagny and Domagaia, who ſo ſoone as they had taken acquaintance of them, beganne greatly to reioyce, dancing and ſhewing many ſorts of ceremonies: and many of the chiefeſt of them came to our boats & brought many Eeles and other ſorts of fiſhes, with two or three burdens of great Millet wherewith they make their bread, and many great muſke millions. The ſame day came alſo many other boates full of thoſe countreymen and weomen, to ſee and take acquaintance of our two men, all which were as courteouſly receiued and friendly entertained of our Captaine, as poſſibly could be. And to haue them the better acquainted with him, and make them his friends, hee gaue them many ſmall gifts, but of ſmall value: neuertheleſſe they were greatly contented with them. The next day following, the Lord of Canada (whoſe proper name was Donnacona, but by the name of Lord they call him Agouhanna) with twelue boats came to our ſhips, accompanied with many people, who cauſing ten of his boates to goe backe with the other two, approched vnto vs with ſixteene men. Then beganne the ſaid Agouhanna ouer againſt the ſmalleſt of our ſhips, according to their maner and faſhion, to frame a long Oration, moouing all his bodie and members after a ſtrange faſhion, which thing is a ceremonie and ſigne of gladneſſe and ſecuritie among them, and then comming to the Generals ſhip, where Taignoagny and Domagaia were, he ſpake with them & they with him, where they began to tell and ſhew vnto him what they had ſeene in France, and what good entertainement they had had: hearing which things the ſaid Lord ſeemed to be very glad thereof, and prayed our Captaine to reach him his arme, that he might kiſſe it, which thing he did: their Lord taking it, laid it about his necke, for ſo they vſe to doe when they will make much of one. Then our Captaine entred into Agouhannas boat, cauſing bread and wine to be brought to make the ſaid Lord and his companie to eate and drinke, which thing they did, and were greatly thereby contented and ſatiſfied. Our Captaine for that time gaue them nothing, becauſe he looked for a fitter opportunity. Theſe things being done, ech one tooke leaue of others, and the ſaid Lord went with his boats againe to his place of abode. Our Captaine then cauſed our boates to be ſet in order, that with the next tide he might goe vp higher into the riuer, to find ſome ſafe harborough for our ſhips: and we paſſed vp the riuer againſt the ſtreame about tenne leagues, coaſting the ſaid Iland, at the end whereof, we found a goodly and pleaſant ſound, where is a little riuer and hauen, where by reaſon of the flood there is about three fadome water. This place ſeemed to vs very fit and commodious to harbour our ſhips therein, and ſo we did very ſafely, we named it the holy Croſſe, for on that day we came thither. Neere vnto it, there is a village, whereof Donnacona is Lord, and there he keepeth his abode: it is called Stadacona, as goodly a plot of ground as poſſibly may be ſeene, and therewithall very fruitfull, full of goodly trees euen as in France, as Okes, Elmes, Aſhes, Walnut trees, Maple tres, Cydrons, Vines, and white Thornes, that bring foorth fruit as bigge as any damſons, and many other ſortes of trees, vnder which groweth as faire tall hempe, as any in France, without any ſeede or any mans worke or labour at all. Hauing conſidered the place, and finding it fit for our purpoſe, our Captaine withdrew himſelfe on purpoſe to returne to our ſhips: but behold, as we were comming out of the riuer we met comming againſt vs one of the Lords of the ſaid village of Stadacona, accompanied with many others, as men, weomen, and children, who after the faſhion of their countrey, in ſigne of mirth and ioy, began to make a long Oration, the women ſtill ſinging and dancing vp to the knees in water. Our Captaine knowing their good will and kindneſſe toward vs, cauſed the boat wherein they were, to come vnto him, and gaue them certaine trifles, as kniues, and beades of glaſſe, whereat they were maruellous glad, for being gone about three leagues from them, for the pleaſure they conceiued of our comming, we might heare them ſing, and ſee them dance for all they were ſo farre,

How our Captaine went to ſee and note the bigneſſe of the Iland, and the nature of it, and then returned to the ſhips, cauſing them to be brought to the riuer of The holy Croſſe,

Chap. 3.

The Ile of Bacchus, or the Ile of Orleans.

AFter we were come with our boats vnto our ſhips againe, our Captaine cauſed our barks to be made readie to goe on land in the ſaid Iland, to note the trees that in ſhew ſeemed ſo faire, and to conſider the nature and qualitie of it: which thing we did, and found it full of goodly trees likes to ours. Alſo we ſaw many goodly Vines, a thing not before of vs ſeene in thoſe countries, and therefore we named it Bacchus Iland. It is in length about twelue leagues, in ſight very pleaſant, but full of woods, no part of it manured, vnleſſe it be in certaine places, where a few cottages be for Fiſhers dwellings as before we haue ſaid. The next day we departed with our ſhips to bring them to the place of the holy Croſſe, and on the 14 of that moneth we came thither, and the Lord Donnacona, Taignoagny, and Domagaia, with 25 boats full of thoſe people, came to meete vs, comming from the place whence we were come, and going toward Stadacona, where their abiding is, and all came to our ſhips, ſhewing ſundry and diuers geſtures of gladneſſe and mirth, except thoſe two that we had brought, to wit, Taignoagny, and Domagaia, who ſeemed to haue altered and changed their mind and purpoſe, for by no meanes they would come vnto our ſhips, albeit ſundry times they were earneſtly deſired to doe it, whereupon we began to miſtruſt ſomewhat. Our Captaine aſked them if according to promiſe they would go with him to Hochelaga? They anſwered yea, for ſo they had purpoſed, and then echone withdrew himſelfe. The next day being the fifteenth of the moneth, our Captaine went on ſhore, to cauſe certaine poles and piles to be driuen into the water, and ſet vp, that the better and ſafelier we might harbour our ſhips there: and many of thoſe countrey people came to meete vs there, among whom was Donnacona and our two men, with the reſt of their company, who kept themſelues aſide vnder a point or nooke of land that is vpon the ſhore of a certaine riuer, and no one of them came vnto vs as the other did that were not on their ſide. Our Captaine vnderſtanding that they were there, commanded part of our men to follow him, and he went to the ſaide point where he found the ſaid Donnacona, Taignoagny, Domagaia, and diuers other: and after ſalutations giuen on ech ſide, Taignoagny ſetled himſelfe formoſt to ſpeake to our Captaine, ſaying that the Lord Donnacona did greatly grieue and ſorrow that our Captaine and his men did weare warlike weapons, and they not. Our Captaine anſwered, that albeit it did greeue them, yet would not he leaue them off, and that (as he knew) it was the maner of France. But for all theſe words our Captaine and Donnacona left not off to ſpeake one to another, and friendly to entertaine one another. Then did we perceiue, that whatſoeuer Taignoagny ſpake, was onely long of himſelfe and of his fellow, for that before they departed thence our Captaine and Donnacona entred into a maruellous ſtedfaſt league of friendſhip, whereupon all his people at once with a loude voyce, caſt out three great cryes, (a horrible thing to heare) and each one hauing taken leaue of the other for that day, we went aboord againe. The day following we brought our two great ſhippes within the riuer and harborough, where the waters being at the higheſt, are three fadome deepe, and at the loweſt, but halfe a fadome. We left our Pinneſſe without the road to the end we might bring it to Hochelaga. So ſoone as we had ſafely placed our ſhips, behold we ſaw Donnacona, Taignoagny & Domagaia, with more then fiue hundred perſons, men, women and children, and the ſaid Lord with ten or twelue of the chiefeſt of the countrey came aboord of our ſhips, who were all courteouſly receiued, and friendly entertained both of our Captaine and of vs all: and diuers gifts of ſmall value were giuen them. Then did Taignoagny tell our Captaine, that his Lord did greatly ſorrow that he would go to Hochelaga, and that he would not by any meanes permit that any of them ſhould goe with him, becauſe the riuer was of no importance. Our Captaine anſwered him, that for all his ſaying, he would not leaue off his going thither, if by any meanes it were poſſible, for that that he was commanded by his king to goe as farre as poſſibly he could: and that if he (that is to ſay Taignoagny) would goe with him, as he had promiſed, he ſhould be very well entertained, beſide that, he ſhould haue ſuch a gift giuen him, as he ſhould well content himſelfe: for he ſhould doe nothing elſe but goe with him to Hochelaga and come againe. To whom Taignoagny anſwered, that he would not by any meanes goe, and thereupon they ſodainly returned to their houſes. The next day being the 17 of September, Donnacona and his company returned euen as at the firſt, and brought with him many Eeles, with ſundry ſorts of other fiſhes, whereof they take great ſtore in the ſaid riuer, as more largely hereafter ſhall be ſhewed. And as ſoone as they were come to our ſhips, according to their wonted vſe they beganne to ſing and dance. This done, Donnacona cauſed all his people to be ſet on the one ſide: then making a round circle vpon the ſand he cauſed our Captaine with all his people to enter thereinto, then he began to make a long Oration, holding in one of his hands a maiden child of ten or twelue yeeres old, which he preſented vnto our Captaine: then ſodainely beganne all his people to make three great ſhreeks or howles, in ſigne of ioy and league of friendſhip: preſently vpon that he did preſent vnto him two other young male children one after another, but yonger then the other, at the giuing of which, euen as before they gaue out ſhreekes and howles very loud, with other cerimonies: for which preſents, our Captaine gaue the ſaide Lorde great and hearty thankes. Then Taignoagny told our Captaine, that one of the children was his owne brother, and that the maiden child was daughter vnto the ſaid Lords owne ſiſter, and the preſents were only giuen him to the end he ſhould not goe to Hochelaga at all: to whom our Captaine anſwered, that if they were onely giuen him to that intent, if ſo he would, he ſhould take them againe, for that by no meanes he would leaue his going off, for as much as he was ſo commanded of his King. But concerning this, Domagaia told our Captaine that their Lord had giuen him thoſe children as a ſigne and token of good will and ſecurity, and that he was contented to goe with him to Hochelaga, vpon which talke great wordes aroſe betweene Taignoagny and Domagaia, by which we plainely perceiued that Taignoagny was but a craftie knaue, and that he intended but miſchiefe and treaſon, as well by this deede as others that we by him had ſeene. After that our Captaine cauſed the ſaid children to be put in our ſhips, and cauſed two Swords and two copper Baſons, the one wrought, the other plaine, to be brought vnto him, and them he gaue to Donnacona, who was therewith greatly contented, yeelding moſt heartie thankes vnto our Captaine for them, and preſently vpon that he commaunded all his people to ſing and dance, and deſired our Captaine to cauſe a peece of artillerie to be ſhot off, becauſe Taignoagny and Domagaia made great brags of it, and had told them maruellous things, and alſo, becauſe they had neuer heard nor ſeene any before: to whom our Captaine anſwered, that he was content: and by and by he commanded his men to ſhoot off twelue cannons charged with bullets into the wood that was hard by thoſe people and ſhips, at whoſe noyſe they were greatly aſtoniſhed and amazed, for they thought that heauen had fallen vpon them, and put themſelues to flight, howling, crying, and ſhreeking, ſo that it ſeemed hell was broken looſe. But before we went thence, Taignoagny cauſed other men to tell vs, that thoſe men which we had left in our Pinneſſe in the road, had ſlaine two men of their company, with a peece of ordinance that they had ſhot off, whereupon the reſt had put themſelues all to flight, as though they ſhould all haue bene ſlaine: which afterward we found vntrue, becauſe our men had not ſhot off any peece at all that day.

How Donnacona and Taignoagny with others, deuiſed a prettie ſleight or pollicie: for they cauſed three of their men to be attired like Diuels, fayning themſelues to be ſent from their God Cudruaigny, onely to hinder our voyage to Hochelaga.

Chap. 4.

The next day being the eighteenth of September, theſe men ſtill endeuoured themſelues to ſeeke all meanes poſſible to-hinder and let our going to Hochelaga, and deuiſed a prettie guile, as hereafter ſhalbe ſhewed. They went and dreſſed three men like Diuels, being wrapped in dogges ſkinnes white and blacke, their faces beſmeered as blacke as any coales, with hornes on their heads more then a yard long, and cauſed them ſecretly to be put in one of their boates, but came not neere our ſhips as they were wont to doe, for they lay hidden within the wood for the ſpace of two houres, looking for the tide, to the end the boat wherein the Diuels were, might approch and come neere vs, which when time was, came, and all the reſt iſſued out of the wood comming to vs, but yet not ſo neere as they were wont to do. There began Taignoagny to ſalute our Captaine, who aſked him if he would haue the boate to come for him; hee anſwered, not for that time, but after a while he would come vnto our ſhips: then preſently came that boat ruſhing out, wherein the three counterfeit Diuels were with ſuch long hornes on their heads, and the middlemoſt came making a long Oration and paſſed along our ſhips without turning or looking toward vs, but with the boat went toward the land. Then did Donnacona with all his people purſue them, and lay hold on the boat and Diuels, who ſo ſoone as the men were come to them, fell proſtrate in the boate euen as if they had beene dead: then were they taken vp and carried into the wood, being but a ſtones caſt off, then euery one withdrew himſelfe into the wood, not one ſtaying behind with vs, where being, they began to make a long diſcourſe, ſo loud that we might heare them in our ſhips, which laſted aboue halfe an houre, & being ended we began to eſpie Taignoagny and Domagaia comming towards vs, holding their hands vpward ioyned together, carying their hats vnder their vpper garment, ſhewing a great admiration, and Taignoagny looking vp to heauen, cryed three times Ieſus, Ieſus, Ieſus, and Domagaia doing as his fellow had done before, cryed, Ieſus Maria, Iames Cartier. Our Captaine hearing them, and ſeeing their geſtures and ceremonies, aſked of them what they ayled, and what was happened or chanced anew; they anſwered, that there were very ill tydings befallen, ſaying in French, Nenni eſt il bon, that is to ſay, it was not good: our Captaine aſked them againe what it was, then anſwered they, that their God Cudruaigny had ſpoken in Hochelaga: and that he had ſent thoſe three men to ſhewe vnto them that there was ſo much yce and ſnow in that countrey, that whoſoeuer went thither ſhould die, which wordes when we heard, we laughed and mocked them ſaying, that their God Cudruaigny was but a foole and a noddie, for he knew not what he did or ſaid: then bade we them ſhew his meſſengers from vs, that Chriſt would defend them all from colde, if they would beleeue in him. Then did they aſke of our Captaine if he had ſpoken with Ieſus: he anſwered no, but that his Prieſts had, and that he had tolde them they ſhould haue faire weather: which wordes when they had heard, they thanked our Captaine, and departed toward the wood to tell thoſe newes vnto their felowes, who ſodainly came all ruſhing out of the wood, ſeeming to be very glad for thoſe words that our Captaine had ſpoken, and to ſhew that thereby they had had, and felt great ioy, ſo ſoone as they were before our ſhips, they altogither gaue out three great ſhreekes, and thereupon beganne to ſing and dance, as they were wont to doe. But for a reſolution of the matter Taignoagny and Domagaia tolde our Captaine, that their Lord Donnacona would by no meanes permit that any of them ſhould goe with him to Hochelaga, vnleſſe he would leaue him ſome hoſtage to ſtay with him: our Captaine anſwered them, that if they would not goe with him with a good will, they ſhould ſtay, and that for all them he would not leaue off his iourney thither.

How our Captaine with all his Gentlemen and fiftie Mariners departed with our Pinneſſe, and the two boates from Canada to goe to Hochelaga: and alſo there is deſcribed, what was ſeene by the way vpon the ſaid riuer.

Chap. 5.

The next day being the 19 of September we hoyſed ſaile, and with our Pinneſſe and two boates departed to goe vp the riuer with the flood, where on both ſhores of it we beganne to ſee as goodly a countrey as poſſibly can with eye be ſeene, all repleniſhed with very goodly trees, and Vines laden as full of grapes as could be all along the riuer, which rather ſeemed to haue bin planted by mans hand than otherwiſe. True it is, that becauſe they are not dreſſed and wrought as they ſhould be, their bunches of grapes are not ſo great nor ſweete as ours: alſo we ſawe all along the riuer many houſes inhabited of Fiſhers, which take all kindes of fiſhes, and they came with as great familiaritie and kindneſſe vnto vs, as if we had beene their Countreymen, and brought vs great ſtore of fiſh, with other ſuch things as they had, which we exchanged with them for other wares, who lifting vp their hands toward heauen, gaue many ſignes of ioy: we ſtayed at a place called Hochelai, about fiue and twentie leagues from Canada, where the riuer wareth very narrow, and runneth very ſwift, wherefore it is very dangerous, not onely for that, but alſo for certaine great ſtones that are therein: Many boates and barkes came vnto vs, in one of which came one of the chiefe Lords of the countrey, making a long diſcourſe, who being come neere vs, did by euident ſignes and geſtures ſhew vs, that the higher the riuer went, the more dangerous it was, and bade vs take heede of our ſelues. The ſaid Lord preſented and gaue vnto our Captaine two of his owne children, of which our Captaine tooke one being a wench 7 or 8 eight yeres old, the man child he gaue him againe, becauſe it was too young, for it was but two or three yeeres old. Our Captaine as friendly and as courteouſly as he could did entertaine and receiue the ſaid Lord and his company, giuing them certaine ſmall trifles, and ſo they departed toward the ſhore againe. Afterwards the ſayd Lord and his wife came vnto Canada to viſite his daughter, bringing vnto our Captaine certaine ſmall preſents. From the nineteenth vntill the eight and twentieth of September, we ſailed vp along the ſaide riuer, neuer loſing one houre of time, all which time we ſaw as goodly and pleaſant a countrey as poſſible can be wiſhed for, full (as we haue ſaid before) of all ſorts of goodly trees, that is to ſay, Okes, Elmes, Walnut-trees, Cedars, Firres, Aſhes, Boxe, Willowes, and great ſtore of Vines, all as full of grapes as could be, ſo that if any of our fellowes went on ſhore, they came home laden with them: there are likewiſe many Cranes, Swannes, Geeſe, Duckes, Feaſants, Partriges, Thruſhes, Blackbirds, Turtles, Finches, Redbreaſts, Nightingales, Sparrowes of diuerſe kindes, with many other ſorts of Birds, euen as in France, and great plentie and ſtore. Vpon the 28 of September, we came to a great wide lake in the middle of the riuer fiue or ſixe leagues broad, and twelue long, all that day we went againſt the tide, hauing but two fadome water, ſtill keeping the ſayd ſcantling: being come to one of the heads of the lake, we could eſpie no paſſage or going out, nay, rather it ſeemed to haue bene cloſed and ſhut vp round about, and there was but a fadome and an halfe of water, little more or leſſe. And therefore we were conſtrayned to caſt anker, and to ſtay with our Pinneſſe, and went with our two boates to ſeeke ſome going out, and in one place we found foure or fiue branches, which out of the riuer come into the lake, and they came from Hochelaga. But in the ſaid branches, becauſe of the great fierceneſſe and ſwiftneſſe wherewith they breake out, and the courſe of the water, they make certaine barres and ſhoulds, and at that time there was but a fadome water. Thoſe Shouldes being paſſed, we found foure or fiue fadome, and as farre as we could perceiue by the flood, it was that time of the yeere that the waters are loweſt, for at other times they flowe higher by three fadomes. All theſe foure or fiue branches do compaſſe about fiue or ſixe Ilands very pleaſant, which make the head of the lake: about fifteene leagues beyond, they doe all come into one. That day we landed in one of the ſaide Ilands, and met with fiue men that were hunting of wilde beaſtes, who as freely and familiarly came to our boates without any feare, as if we had euer bene brought vp togither. Our boates being ſomewhat neere the ſhore, one of them tooke our Captaine in his armes, and caried him on ſhore, as lightly and as eaſily as if he had bene a child of fiue yeeres old: ſo ſtrong and ſturdie was this fellow. We found that they had a great heape of wilde Rats that liue in the water, as bigge as a Conny, and very good to eate, which they gaue vnto our Captaine, who for a recompence gaue them kniues and glaſſen Beades. We aſked them with ſignes if that was the way to Hochelaga, they anſwered yea, and that we had yet three dayes ſayling thither.

Wild rats as big as Conies.

How our Captaine cauſed our boates to be mended and dreſſed to goe to Hochelaga: and becauſe the way was ſomewhat difficult and hard, we left our Pinneſſe behinde: and how we came thither, and what entertainement we had of the people.

Chap. 6.

THe next day our Captaine ſeeing that for that time it was not poſſible for our Pinneſſe to goe on any further, he cauſed our boates to be made readie, and as much munition and victuals to be put in them, as they could well beare: he departed with them, accompanyed with many Gentlemen, that is to ſay, Claudius of Ponte Briand, Cup-bearer to the Lorde Dolphin of France, Charles of Pommeraye, Iohn Gouion, Iohn Powlet, with twentie & eight Mariners: and Mace Iallobert, and William Briton, who had the charge vnder the Captaine of the other two ſhips, to goe vp as farre as they could into that riuer: we ſayled with good and proſperous weather vntill the ſecond of October, on which day we came to the towne of Hochelaga, diſtant from the place where we had left our Pinneſſe fiue and fortie leagues. In which place of Hochelaga, and all the way we went, we met with many of thoſe countriemen, who brought vs fiſh and ſuch other vicuals as they had, ſtill dancing and greatly reioycing at our comming. Our Captaine to lure them in, and to keepe them our friends, to recompence them, gaue them kniues, beades, and ſuch ſmall trifles, wherewith they were greatly ſatiſfied. So ſoone as we were come neere Hochelaga, there came to meete vs aboue a thouſand perſons, men, women and children, who afterward did as friendly and merily entertaine and receiue vs as any father would doe his child, which he had not of long time ſeene, the men dauncing on one ſide, the women on another, and likewiſe the children on another: after that they brought vs great ſtore of fiſh, & of their bread made of Millet, caſting them into our boates ſo thicke, that you would haue thought it to fall from heauen. Which when our Captaine ſaw, he with many of his company went on ſhore: ſo ſoone as euer we were aland they came cluſtring about vs, making very much of vs, bringing their young children in their armes, onely to haue our Captaine and his company to touch them, making ſignes and ſhewes of great mirth and gladneſſe, that laſted more than halfe an houre. Our Captaine ſeeing their louing kindneſſe and entertainement of vs, cauſed all the weomen orderly to be ſet in aray, and gaue them Beades made of Tinne, and other ſuch ſmall trifles, and to ſome of the men he gaue kniues: then he returned to the boates to ſupper, and ſo paſſed that night, all which while all thoſe people ſtood on the ſhore as neere our boates as they might, making great fires, and dauncing very merily, ſtill crying Aguiaze, which in their tongue ſignifieth Mirth and Safetie.

How our Captaine with fiue Gentlemen and twentie armed men all well in order, went to ſee the towne of Hochelaga, and the ſituation of it.

Plentie of fiſh and the preſeruing thereof.

Our Captaine the next day very earely in the morning, hauing very gorgeouſly attired himſelfe, cauſed all his company to be ſet in order to go to ſee the towne and habitation of thoſe people, and a certaine mountaine that is ſomewhat neere the citie: with whom went alſo fiue Gentlemen and twentie Mariners, leauing the reſt to keepe and looke to our boates: we tooke with vs three men of Hochelaga to bring vs to the place. All along as we went we found the way as well beaten and frequented as can be, the faireſt and beſt countrey that poſſibly can be ſeene, full of as goodly great Okes as are in any wood in France, vnder which the ground was all couered ouer with faire Akornes. After we had gone about foure or fiue miles, we met by the way one of the chiefeſt Lords of the citie, accompanied with many moe, who ſo ſoone as he ſawe vs beckned and made ſignes vpon vs, that we muſt reſt vs in that place where they had made a great fire and ſo we did. After that we had reſted our ſelues there a while, the ſaid Lord began to make a long diſcourſe, euen as we haue ſaide aboue, they are accuſtomed to doe in ſigne of mirth and friendſhip, ſhewing our Captaine and all his company a ioyfull countenance, and good will, who gaue him two hatchets, a paire of kniues and a croſſe which he made him to kiſſe, and then put it about his necke, for which he gaue our Captaine heartie thankes. This done, we went along, and about a mile and a halfe farther, we began to finde goodly and large fieldes, full of ſuch corne as the countrie yeeldeth. It is euen as the Millet of Breſil, as great and ſomewhat bigger then ſmall peaſon, wherewith they liue euen as we doe with ours. In the midſt of thoſe fields is the citie of Hochelaga, placed neere, and as it were ioyned to a great mountaine that is tilled round about, very fertill, on the top of which you may ſee very farre, we named it Mount Roiall. The citie of Hochelaga is round, compaſſed about with timber, with three courſes of Rampires, one within another framed like a ſharpe Spire, but laide acroſſe aboue. The middlemoſt of them is made and built as a direct line, but perpendicular. The Rampires are framed and faſhioned with peeces of timber, layd along on the ground, very well and cunningly ioyned togither after their faſhion. This encloſure is in height about two rods. It hath but one gate or entrie thereat, which is ſhut with piles, ſtakes, and barres. Ouer it, and alſo in many places of the wall, there be places to runne along, and ladders to get vp, all full of ſtones, for the defence of it. There are in the towne about fiftie houſes, about fiftie paces long, and twelue, or fifteene broad, built all of wood, couered ouer with the barke of the wood as broad as any boord, very finely and cunningly ioyned togither. Within the ſaid houſes, there are many roomes, lodgings and chambers. In the middeſt of euery one there is a great Court, in the middle whereof they make their fire. They liue in common togither: then doe the huſbands, wiues and children each one retire themſelues to their chambers. They haue alſo on the top of their houſes certaine garrets, wherein they keepe their corne to make their bread withall: they call it Carraconny, which they make as hereafter ſhall follow. They haue certaine peeces of wood, made hollow like thoſe whereon we beat our hempe, and with certaine beetles of wood they beat their corne to powder: then they make paſte of it, and of the paſte, cakes or wreathes, then they lay them on a broad and hote ſtone, and then couer it with hote ſtones, and ſo they bake their bread in ſtead of Ouens. They make alſo ſundry ſorts of pottage with the ſaid corne and alſo of peaſe and of beanes, whereof they haue great ſtore, as alſo with other fruits, as Muſke-Millions, and very great Cowcumbers. They haue alſo in their houſes certaine veſſels as bigge as any But or Tun, wherein they preſerue and keepe their fiſh, cauſing the ſame in ſommer to be dried in the ſunne, and liue therewith in winter, whereof they make great prouiſion, as we by experience haue ſeene. All their viands and meates are without any taſt or ſauour of ſalt at all. They ſleepe vpon barkes of trees laide all along vpon the ground being ouer-ſpread with the ſkinnes of certaine wilde Beaſtes, wherewith they alſo cloth and couer themſelues. The thing moſt precious that they haue in all the world they call Eſurgny: it is as white as any ſnow: they take it in the ſaid riuer of Cornibotz, in the maner folowing. When any one hath deſerued death, or that they take any of their enemies in Warres, firſt they kill him, then with certaine kniues they giue great ſlaſhes and ſtrokes vpon their buttocks, flankes, thighs, and ſhoulders: then they caſt the ſame bodie ſo mangled downe to the bottome of the riuer, in a place where the ſaid Eſurgny is, and there leaue it ten or 12 houres, then they take it vp againe, and in the cuts find the ſaid Eſurgny or Cornibotz. Of them they make beads, and weare them about their necks, euen as we doe chaines of gold and ſiluer, accounting it the preciouſeſt thing in the world. They haue this vertue and propertie in them, they will ſtop or ſtanch bleeding at the noſe, for we haue prooued it. Theſe people are giuen to no other exerciſe, but onely to huſbandrie and fiſhing for their ſuſtenance: they haue no care of any other wealth or commoditie in this world, for they haue no knowledge of it, and that is, becauſe they neuer trauell and go out of their countrey, as thoſe of Canada and Saguenay doe, albeit the Canadians with eight or nine Villages more alongſt that riuer be ſubiects vnto them.

Eſurgni good to ſtanch blood.

How we came to the Towne of Hochelaga, and the entertainement which there we had, and of certaine gifts which our Captaine gaue them, with diuers other things.

Chap. 8.

SO ſoone as we were come neere the Towne, a great number of the inhabitants thereof came to preſent themſelues before vs after their faſhion, making very much of vs: we were by our guides brought into the middeſt of the towne. They haue in the middlemoſt part of their houſes a large ſquare place, being from ſide to ſide a good ſtones caſt, whither we were brought, and there with ſignes were commanded to ſtay: then ſuddenly all the women and maidens of the Towne gathered themſelues together, part of which had their armes full of young children, and as many as could came to rubbe our faces, our armes, and what part of the bodie ſoeuer they could touch, weeping for very ioy that they ſaw vs, ſhewing vs the beſt countenance that poſſibly they could, deſiring vs with their ſignes, that it would pleaſe vs to touch their children. That done, the men cauſed the women to withdraw themſelues backe, then they euery one ſate downe on the ground round about vs, as if they would haue ſhewen and rehearſed ſome Comedie or other ſhew: then preſently came the women againe, euery one bringing a foureſquare Matte in manner of Carpets, and ſpreading them abroad on the ground in that place, they cauſed vs to ſit vpon them. That done, the Lord & King of the countrey was brought vpon 9 or 10 mens ſhoulders, (whom in their tongue they call Agouhanna) ſitting vpon a great Stagges ſkinne, and they laide him downe vpon the foreſaid mats neere to the Captaine, euery one beckning vnto vs that hee was their Lord and King. This Agouhanna was a man about fiftie yeeres old: he was no whit better apparelled then any of the reſt, onely excepted, that he had a certaine thing made of the ſkinnes of Hedgehogs like a red wreath, and that was in ſtead of his Crowne. He was full of the palſie, and his members ſhronke togither. After he had with certaine ſignes ſaluted our Captaine and all his companie, and by manifeſt tokens bid all welcome, he ſhewed his legges and armes to our Captaine, and with ſignes deſired him to touch them, and ſo he did, rubbing them with his owne hands: then did Agouhanna take the wreath or crowne he had about his head, and gaue it vnto our Captaine: that done they brought before him diuerſe diſeaſed men, ſome blinde, ſome criple, ſome lame and impotent, and ſome ſo old that the haire of their eyelids came downe and couered their cheekes, and layd them all along before our Captaine, to the end they might of him be touched: for it ſeemed vnto them that God was deſcended and come downe from heauen to heale them. Our Captaine ſeeing the miſery and deuotion of this poore people, recited the Goſpel of Saint Iohn, that is to ſay, In the beginning was the word; touching euery one that were diſeaſed, praying to God that it would pleaſe him to open the hearts of this poore people, and to make them know his holy word, and that they might receiue Baptiſme and Chriſtendome: that done, he tooke a Seruice-booke in his hand, and with a loud voyce read all the paſſion of Chriſt, word by word, that all the ſtanders by might heare him: all which while this poore people kept ſilence, & were maruellouſly attentiue, looking vp to heauen, and imitating vs in geſtures. Then he cauſed the men all orderly to be ſet on one ſide, the women on another, & likewiſe the children on an other, & to the chiefeſt of them he gaue hatchets, to the other kniues, & to the women beads & ſuch other ſmall trifles. Then where ẏ children were, he caſt rings, counters, & brooches made of Tin, Mount Roial.

A ridge of mountaines to the North of Hochelaga, and another to the South.

whereat they ſeemed to be very glad. That done, our Captaine commanded Trumpets and other muſicall inſtruments to be ſounded, which when they heard, they were very merie. Then we tooke our leaue and went to our boate: the women ſeeing that, put themſelues before to ſtay vs, and brought vs out of their meates that they had made readie for vs, as fiſh, pottage, beanes, and ſuch other things, thinking to make vs eate, and dine in that place: but becauſe the meates had no ſauour at all of ſalt, we liked them not, but thanked them, and with ſignes gaue them to vnderſtand that we had no neede to eate. When wee were out of the Towne, diuerſe of the men and women followed vs, and brought vs to the toppe of the foreſaid mountaine, which wee named Mount Roial, it is about a league from the Towne. When as we were on the toppe of it, we might diſcerne and plainely ſee thirtie leagues about. On the Northſide of it there are many hilles to be ſeene running Weſt and Eaſt, and as many more on the South, amongſt and betweene the which the Countrey is as faire and as pleaſant as poſſibly can be ſeene, being leuell, ſmooth, and very plaine, fit to be huſbanded and tilled: and in the middeſt of thoſe fieldes we ſaw the riuer further vp a great way then where we had left our boates, where was the greateſt and the ſwifteſt fall of water that any where hath beene ſeene, and as great, wide, and large as our ſight might diſcerne, going Southweſt along three faire and round mountaines that wee ſawe, as we iudged about fifteene leagues from vs. Thoſe which brought vs thither tolde and ſhewed vs, that in the ſayd riuer there were three ſuch falles of water more, as that was where we had left our boates: but becauſe we could not vnderſtand their language, we could not knowe how farre they were one from another. Moreouer they ſhewed vs with ſignes, that the ſaid three fals being paſt, a man might ſayle the ſpace of three monethes more alongſt that Riuer, and that along the hilles that are on the North ſide there is a great riuer, which (euen as the other) commeth from the Weſt, we thought it to be the riuer that runneth through the Countrey of Saguenay: and without any ſigne or queſtion mooued or aſked of them, they tooke the chayne of our Captaines whiſtle, which was of ſiluer, and the dagger-haft of one of our fellow Mariners, hanging on his ſide being of yellow copper guilt, and ſhewed vs that ſuch ſtuffe came from the ſaid Riuer, and that there be Agouionda, that is as much to ſay, as euill people, who goe all armed euen to their fingers ends. Alſo they ſhewed vs the manner and making of their armour: they are made of cordes and wood, finely and cunningly wrought togither. They gaue vs alſo to vnderſtande that thoſe Agouionda doe continually warre one againſt another, but becauſe we did not vnderſtand them well, we could not perceiue how farre it was to that Countrey. Our Captaine ſhewed them redde Copper, which in their language they call Caignetadze, and looking towarde that Countrey, with ſignes aſked them if any came from thence, they ſhaking their heads anſwered no: but they ſhewed vs that it came from Saguenay, and that lyeth cleane contrary to the other. After we had heard and ſeene theſe things of them, we drewe to our boates accompanied with a great multitude of thoſe people: ſome of them when as they ſawe any of our fellowes weary, would take them vp on their ſhoulders, and carry them as on horſebacke. So ſoone as we came to our boates we hoyſed ſaile to goe toward our Pinneſſe, doubting of ſome miſchance. Our departure grieued and diſpleaſed them very much, for they followed vs along the riuer as farre as they could: we went ſo faſt that on munday being the fourth of October wee came where our Pinneſſe was. The Tueſday following being the fift of the moneth, we hoyſed ſaile, and with our Pinneſſe and boates departed from thence toward the Prouince of Canada, to the port of the Holy Croſſe, where we had left our ſhips. The ſeuenth day we came againſt a riuer that commeth from the North, and entred into that riuer, at the entrance whereof are foure little Ilands full of faire and goodly trees: we named that riuer The riuer of Fouetz: But becauſe one of thoſe Ilandes ſtretcheth it ſelfe a great way into the riuer, our Captaine at the point of it cauſed a goodly great Croſſe to be ſet vp, and commanded the boates to be made readie, that with the next tide he might goe vp the ſame riuer, and conſider the qualitie of it, which wee did, and that day went vp as farre as we could: but becauſe we found it to be of no importance, and very ſhallow, we returned and ſayled downe the riuer.

How we came to the Port of the Holy Croſſe, and in what ſtate we found our ſhips: and how the Lord of the Countrey came to viſite our Captaine, and our Captaine him: and of certaine particular cuſtomes of the people.

Chap. 9.

VPon Monday being the 11 of October we came to the Port of the Holy Croſſe, where our ſhips were, and found that the Maſters and Mariners we had left there, had made and reared a trench before the ſhips, altogither cloſed with great peeces of timber ſet vpright and very well faſtened togither: then had they beſet the ſaid trench about with peeces of Artillerie and other neceſſarie things to ſhield and defend themſelues from the power of all the countrey. So ſoone as the Lord of the countrey heard of our comming, the next day being the twelfth of October, he came to viſite vs, accompanied with Taignoagny, Domagaia and many others, fayning to be very glad of our comming, making much of our Captaine, who as friendly as he could, entertained them, albeit they had not deſerued it. Donnacona their Lord deſired our Captaine the next day to come and ſee Canada, which he promiſed to doe: for the next day being the 13 of the moneth, he with all his Gentlemen and fiftie Mariners very well appointed, went to viſite Donnacona and his people, about a league from our ſhips. The place where they make their abode is called Stadacona. When we were about a ſtones caſt from their houſes, many of the inhabitants came to meete vs, being all ſet in a ranke, and (as their cuſtome is) the men all on one ſide, & the women on the other, ſtill dancing and ſinging without any ceaſing: and after we had ſaluted and receiued one another, our Captaine gaue them kniues and ſuch other ſleight things: then he cauſed all the women and children to paſſe along before him, giuing ech one a ring of Tin, for which they gaue him hearty thankes: that done, our Captaine was by Donnacona and Taignoagny, brought to ſee their houſes, which (the qualitie conſidered) were very well prouided, and ſtored with ſuch victuals as the countrey yeeldeth, to paſſe away the winter withall. Then they ſhewed vs the ſkins of fiue mens heads ſpread vpon boords as we doe vſe parchment: Donnacona told vs that they were ſkins of Toudamani, a people dwelling toward the South, who continually doe warre againſt them. Moreouer they told vs, that it was two yeeres paſt that thoſe Toudamans came to aſſault them, yea euen into the ſaid riuer, in an Iland that lyeth ouer againſt Saguenay, where they had bin the night before, as they were going a warfaring in Hognedo, with 200 perſons, men, women, and children, who being all aſleepe in a Fort that they had made, they were aſſaulted by the ſaid Toudamans, who put fire round about the Fort, and as they would haue come out of it to ſaue themſelues, they were all ſlaine, only fiue excepted, who eſcaped. For which loſſe they yet ſorrowed, ſhewing with ſignes, that one day they would be reuenged: that done, we came to our ſhips againe.

Chap. 10.

THis people beleeue no whit in God, but in one whom they call Cudruaigni: they ſay that often he ſpeaketh with them and telleth them what weather ſhal follow, whether good or bad. Moreouer they ſay, that when he is angry with them he caſteth duſt into their eyes: they beleeue that when they die they go into the ſtars, & thence by litle & little deſcend downe into the Horizon, euen as the ſtars doe, & that then they go into certaine greene fields full of goodly faire & precious trees, floures, & fruits. After that they had giuen vs theſe things to vnderſtand, we ſhewed them their error, and told that their Cudruaigni did but deceiue them, for he is but a Diuell & an euill ſpirit: affirming vnto them, that there is but one onely God, who is in heauen, and who giueth vs all neceſſaries, being the Creatour of all himſelfe, and that onely we muſt beleeue in him: moreouer, that it is neceſſarie for vs to be baptiſed, otherwiſe wee are damned into hell. Theſe and many other things concerning our faith and religion we ſhewed them, all which they did eaſily beleeue, calling their Cudruaigni, Agouiada, that is to ſay, nought, ſo that very earneſtly they deſired and prayed our Captaine that he would cauſe them to be baptiſed, and their Lorde, and Taignoagny, Domagaia, and all the people of the towne came vnto vs, hoping to be baptiſed: but becauſe we did not throughly know their minde, and that there was no bodie could teach them our beliefe & religion, we excuſed our ſelues, deſiring Taignoagny & Domagaia to tell the reſt of their countreymen, that he would come againe another time, & bring Prieſts & chriſome with vs, for without them they could not be baptiſed: which they did eaſily beleeue, for Domagaia & Taignoagny had ſeene many childen baptiſed in Britain whiles they were there. Which promiſe when they heard they ſeemed to be very glad. They liue in common togither, and of ſuch commodities as their countrey yeeldeth they are indifferently well ſtored, the inhabitants of the countrey cloth themſelues with the ſkinnes of certaine wilde beaſts, but very miſerably. In winter they weare hoſen and ſhoes made of wilde beaſts ſkins, and in Sommer they goe barefooted. They keepe and obſerue the rites of matrimonie, ſauing that euery one weddeth 2 or 3 wiues, which (their huſbands being dead) do neuer marrie againe, but for the death of their huſbands weare a certaine blacke weede all the daies of their life, beſmearing al their faces with cole-duſt & greaſe mingled togither as thicke as the backe of a knife, and by that they are knowen to be widowes.

They deſire to be baptized.

They haue a filthy and deteſtable vſe in marrying of their maidens, and that is this, they put them all (after they are of lawfull age to marry) in a common place, as harlots free for euery man that will haue to doe with them, vntill ſuch time as they find a match. This I ſay, becauſe I haue ſeene by experience many houſen full of thoſe Damoſels, euen as our ſchooles are full of children in France to learne to reade. Moreouer, the miſrule and riot that they keepe in thoſe houſes is very great, for very wantonly they ſport and dally togither, ſhewing whatſoeuer God hath ſent them. They are no men of great labour. They digge their grounds with certaine peeces of wood, as bigge as halfe a ſword, on which ground groweth their corne, which they call Offici: it is as bigge as our ſmall peaſon: there is great quantitie of it growing in Breſill. They haue alſo great ſtore of Muske-milions, Pompions, Gourds, Cucumbers, Peaſon and Beanes of euery colour, yet differing from ours. There groweth alſo a certaine kind of herbe, whereof in Sommer they make great prouiſion for all the yeere, making great account of it, and onely men vſe of it, and firſt they cauſe it to be dried in the ſunne, then weare it about their neckes wrapped in a little beaſts ſkinne made like a little bagge, with a hollow peece of ſtone or wood like a pipe: then when they pleaſe they make powder of it, and then put it in one of the ends of the ſaid Cornet or pipe, and laying a cole of fire vpon it, at the other ende ſucke ſo long, that they fill their bodies full of ſmoke, till that it commeth out of their mouth and noſtrils, euen as out of the Tonnell of a chimney. They ſay that this doth keepe them warme and in health: they neuer goe without ſome of it about them. We our ſelues haue tryed the ſame ſmoke, and hauing put it in our mouthes, it ſeemed almoſt as hot as Pepper. The women of that countrey doe labour much more then the men, as well in fiſhing (whereto they are greatly giuen) as in tilling and huſbanding their grounds, and other things: as well the men as women and children, are very much more able to reſiſt cold then ſauage beaſtes, for wee with our owne eyes haue ſeene ſome of them, when it was coldeſt (which cold was extreme raw and bitter) come to our ſhips ſtarke naked going vpon ſnow & yce, which thing ſeemeth incredible to them that haue not ſeene it. When as the ſnow and yce lyeth on the ground, they take great ſtore of wilde beaſts, as Faunes, Stags, Beares, Marterns, Hares & Foxes, with diuers other ſorts whoſe fleſh they eate raw, hauing firſt dried it in yͤ ſunne or ſmoke, and ſo they doe their fiſh. As farre foorth as we could perceiue and vnderſtand by theſe people, it were a very eaſie thing to bring them to ſome familiaritie & ciuility, and make them learne what one would. The Lord God for his mercies ſake ſet therunto his helping hand when he ſeeth cauſe. Amen.

Of the greatneſſe and depth of the ſaid riuer, and of the ſorts of beaſts, birdes, fiſhes, and other things that we haue ſeene, with the ſituation of the place.

Chap. 11.

It is now found to be but 200 leagues.

The ſaid riuer beginneth beyond the Iland of The Aſſumption, ouer againſt the high mountaines of Hognedo, and of the ſeuen Ilands. The diſtance ouer from one ſide to the other is about 35 or 40 leagues. In the middeſt it is aboue 200 fadome deepe. The ſureſt way to ſayle vpon it is on the South ſide. And toward the North, that is to ſay, from the ſaid 7 Ilands, from ſide to ſide, there is ſeuen leagues diſtance, where are alſo two great riuers that come downe from the hils of Saguenay, and make diuers very dangerous ſhelues in the ſea. At the entrance of thoſe two riuers we ſaw many & great ſtore of Whales and Sea horſes. Ouerthwart the ſaid Ilands there is another little riuer that runneth along thoſe marriſh grounds about 3 or 4 leagues, wherin there is great ſtore of water foules. From the entrance of that riuer to Hochelaga there is about 300 leagues diſtance: the originall beginning of it is in the riuer that commeth from Saguenay, which riſeth and ſpringeth among high & ſteepe hils: it entreth into that riuer before it commeth to the Prouince of Canada on the North ſide. That riuer is very deepe, high, and ſtreight, wherefore it is very dangerous for any veſſell to goe vpon it. After that riuer followeth the Prouince of Canada, wherein are many people dwelling in open boroughes and villages. There are alſo in the circuit and territorie of Canada, along, and within the ſaid riuer, many other Ilands, ſome great, & ſome ſmall, among which there is one that containeth aboue ten leagues in length, full of goodly and high trees, and alſo many Vines. You may goe into it from both ſides, but yet the ſureſt paſſage is on the South ſide. On the ſhore or banke of that riuer Weſtward, there is a goodly, faire, and delectable bay or creeke, conuenient and fit for to harborough ſhips. Hard by there is in that riuer one place very narrow, deepe, & ſwift running, but it is not paſſing the third part of a league, ouer againſt the which there is a goodly high peece of land, with a towne therein: and the countrey about it is very well tilled & wrought, & as good as poſſibly can be ſeene. That is the place and abode of Donnacona, and of our two men we tooke in our firſt voyage, it is called Stadacona. But before we come to it, there are 4 other peopled townes, that is to ſay, Ayraſte, Starnatan, Tailla, which ſtandeth vpon a hill, Scitadin, and then Stadagona, vnder which towne toward the North the riuer and port of the holy croſſe is, where we ſtaied from the 15 of September, vntill the 16 of May 1536, and there our ſhips remained dry, as we haue ſaid before. That place being paſt, we found the habitation of the people called Teguenondahi, ſtanding vpon an high mountaine, and the valley of Hochelay, which ſtandeth in a Champaigne countrey. All the ſayd countrey on both ſides of the riuer as farre as Hochelay & beyond, is as faire and plaine as euer was ſeene. There are certaine mountaines farre diſtant from the ſaid riuer, which are to be ſeene aboue the foreſaid townes, from which mountaines diuers riuers deſcend, which fall into the ſaid great riuer. All that countrey is full of ſundry ſorts of wood and many Vines, vnleſſe it be about the places that are inhabited, where they haue pulled vp the trees to till and labour the ground, and to build their houſes and lodgings. There is great ſtore of Stags, Deere, Beares, and other ſuch like ſorts of beaſts, as Connies, Hares, Marterns, Foxes, Otters, Beuers, Weaſels, Badgers, and Rats exceeding great, and diuers other ſortes of wilde beaſtes. They cloth themſelues with the ſkinnes of thoſe beaſts, becauſe they haue nothing elſe to make them apparell withall. There are alſo many ſorts of birdes, as Cranes, Swannes, Buſtards, wilde Geeſe white and gray, Duckes, Thruſhes, Black-birdes, Turtles, wilde Pigeons, Lenites, Finches, Red-breaſts, Stares, Nightingales, Sparrowes, and other Birdes, euen as in France. Alſo, as we haue ſaid before, the ſaid riuer is the plentifulleſt of fiſh that euer hath of any man bene ſeene or heard of, becauſe that from the mouth to the end of it, according to their ſeaſons, you ſhall finde all ſorts of freſh water fiſh and ſalt. There are alſo many Whales, Porpoſes, Seahorſes, and Adhothuis, which is a kind of fiſh that we had neuer ſeene nor heard of before. They are as great as Porpoſes, as white as any ſnow, their bodie and head faſhioned as a grayhound, they are wont alwaies to abide betwene the freſh & ſalt water, which beginneth betweene the riuer of Saguenay and Canada.

Of certaine aduertiſements and notes giuen vnto vs by thoſe countreymen, after our returne from Hochelaga.

Chap. 12.

After our returne from Hochelaga, we dealt, trafficke, and with great familiaritie and loue were conuerſant with thoſe that dwelt neereſt vnto our ſhips, except that ſometimes we had ſtrife and contention with certaine naughtie people, full ſore againſt the will of the others. Wee vnderſtood of Donnacona and of others, that the ſaid riuer is called the riuer of Saguenay, and goeth to Saguenay, being ſomewhat more then a league farther Weſtnorthweſt, and that 8 or 9 dayes iourneys beyond, it wil beare but ſmall boats. But the right and readie way to Saguenay is vp that riuer to Hochelaga, and then into another that commeth from Saguenay, and then entreth into the foreſaid riuer, & that there is yet one moneths ſayling thither. Moreouer, they told vs and gaue vs to vnderſtand, that there are people clad with cloth as we are, very honeſt, and many inhabited townes, and that they haue great ſtore of Gold and red Copper: and that about the land beyond the ſaid firſt riuer to Hochelaga and Saguenay, is an Iland enuironed round about with that and other riuers, and that beyond Saguenay the ſaid riuer entreth into two or 3 great lakes, and that there is a Sea of freſh water found, and as they haue heard ſay of thoſe of Saguenay, there was neuer man heard of that found out the end thereof: for, as they told vs, they themſelues were neuer there. Moreouer they told vs, that where we had left our Pinneſſe when wee went to Hochelaga, there is a riuer that goeth Southweſt, from whence there is a whole moneths ſayling to goe to a certaine land, where there is neither yce nor ſnow ſeene, where the inhabitants do continually warre one againſt another, where is great ſtore of Oranges, Almonds, Nuts, and Apples, with many other ſorts of fruits, and that the men and women are clad with beaſts ſkinnes euen as they: we aſked them if there were any gold or red copper, they anſwered no. I take this place to be toward Florida, as farre as I could perceiue and vnderſtand by their ſignes and tokens.

Of a ſtrange and cruell diſeaſe that came to the people of Stadacona, wherewith becauſe we did haunt their company, we were ſo infected, that there died 25 of our company.

Chap. 13.

In the moneth of December, wee vnderſtood that the peſtilence was come among the people of Stadacona, in ſuch ſort, that before we knew of it, according to their confeſſion, there were dead aboue 50: whereupon we charged them neither to come neere our Fort, nor about our ſhips, or vs. And albeit we had driuen them from vs, the ſaid vnknowen ſicknes began to ſpread it ſelfe amongſt vs, after the ſtrangeſt ſort that euer was eyther heard of or ſeene, inſomuch as ſome did loſe all their ſtrength, and could not ſtand on their feete, then did their legges ſwel, their ſinnowes ſhrinke as blacke as any cole. Others alſo had all their ſkins ſpotted with ſpots of blood of a purple coulour: then did it aſcend vp to their ankels, knees, thighes, ſhoulders, armes, and necke: their mouth became ſtincking, their gummes ſo rotten, that all the fleſh did fall off, euen to the rootes of the teeth, which did alſo almoſt all fall out. With ſuch infection did this ſickneſſe ſpread it ſelfe in our three ſhips, that about the middle of February, of a hundreth and tenne perſons that we were, there were not ten whole, ſo that one could not helpe the other, a moſt horrible and pitifull caſe, conſidering the place we were in, forſomuch as the people of the countrey would dayly come before our fort, and ſaw but few of vs. There were alreadie eight dead, and more then fifty ſicke, and as we thought, paſt all hope of recouery. Our Captaine ſeeing this our miſery, & that the ſickneſſe was gone ſo farre, ordained and commanded, that euery one ſhould deuoutly prepare himſelfe to prayer, and in remembrance of Chriſt, cauſed his Image to be ſet vpon a tree, about a ſlight ſhot from the fort amidſt the yce and ſnow, giuing all men to vnderſtand, that on the Sunday following, ſeruice ſhould be ſaid there, and that whoſoeuer could goe, ſicke or whole, ſhould goe thither in Proceſſion, ſinging the ſeuen Pſalmes of Dauid, with other Letanies, praying moſt heartily that it would pleaſe the ſaid our Chriſt to haue compaſſion vpon vs. Seruice being done, and as well celebrated as we could, our Captaine there made a vow, that if it would pleaſe God to giue him leaue to returne into France, he would go on Pilgrimage to our Ladie of Rocquemado. That day Philip Rougemont, borne in Amboiſe, died, being 22 yeeres olde, and becauſe the ſickeneſſe was to vs vnknowen, our Captaine cauſed him to be ripped to ſee if by any meanes poſſible we might know what it was, and ſo ſeeke meanes to ſaue and preſerue the reſt of the company: he was found to haue his heart white, but rotten, and more then a quart of red water about it: his liuer was indifferent faire, but his lungs blacke and mortified, his blood was altogither ſhrunke about the heart, ſo that when he was opened great quantitie of rotten blood iſſued out from about his heart: his milt toward the backe was ſomewhat periſhed, rough as if it had bene rubbed againſt a ſtone. Moreouer, becauſe one of his thighs was very blacke without, it was opened, but within it was whole and ſound: that done, as well as we could he was buried. In ſuch ſort did the ſickneſſe continue and encreaſe, that there were not aboue three ſound men in the ſhips, and none was able to goe vnder hatches to draw drinke for himſelfe, nor for his fellowes. Sometimes we were conſtrained to bury ſome of the dead vnder the ſnow, becauſe we were not able to digge any graues for them the ground was ſo hard frozen, and we ſo weake. Beſides this, we did greatly feare that the people of the countrey would perceiue our weakeneſſe and miſerie, which to hide, our Captaine, whom it pleaſed God alwayes to keepe in health, would go out with two or three of the company, ſome ſicke and ſome whole, whom when he ſaw out of the Fort, he would throw ſtones at them and chide them, faigning that ſo ſoone as he came againe, he would beate them, and then with ſignes ſhewe the people of the countrey that hee cauſed all his men to worke and labour in the ſhips, ſome in calking them, ſome in beating of chalke, ſome in one thing, and ſome in another, and that he would not haue them come foorth till their worke was done. And to make his tale ſeeme true and likely, he would make all his men whole & ſound to make a great noyſe with knocking ſtickes, ſtones, hammers, and other things togither, at which time we were ſo oppreſſed and grieued with that ſickneſſe, that we had loſt all hope euer to ſee France againe, if God of his infinite goodneſſe and mercie had not with his pitifull eye looked vpon vs, and reuealed a ſingular and excellent remedie againſt all diſeaſes vnto vs, the beſt that euer was found vpon earth, as hereafter ſhall follow.

How long we ſtayed in the Port of the holy Croſſe amidſt the ſnow and yce, and how many died of the ſaid diſeaſe, from the beginning of it to the midſt of March.

Chap. 14.

FRom the midſt of Nouember vntill the midſt of March, we were kept in amidſt the yce aboue two fadomes thicke, and ſnow aboue foure foote high and more, higher then the ſides of our ſhips, which laſted till that time, in ſuch ſort, that all our drinkes were frozen in the Veſſels, and the yce through all the ſhips was aboue a hand-breadth thicke, as well aboue hatches as beneath, and ſo much of the riuer as was freſh, euen to Hochelaga, was frozen, in which ſpace there died fiue and twentie of our beſt and chiefeſt men, and all the reſt were ſo ſicke, that wee thought they ſhould neuer recouer againe, only three or foure excepted. Then it pleaſed God to caſt his pitifull eye vpon vs, and ſent vs the knowledge of remedie of our healthes and recouerie, in ſuch maner as in the next Chapter ſhall be ſhewed.

How by the grace of God we had notice of a certaine tree, whereby we all recouered our health: and the maner how to vſe it.

Chap. 15.

OUr Captaine conſidering our eſtate (and how that ſickneſſe was increaſed and hot amongſt vs)one day went foorth of the Forte, and walking vpon the yce, hee ſaw a troupe of thoſe Countreymen comming from Stadacona, among which was Domagaia, who not paſſing ten or twelue dayes afore, had bene very ſicke with that diſeaſe, and had his knees ſwolne as bigge as a child of two yeres old, all his ſinews ſhrunke together, his teeth ſpoyled, his gummes rotten, and ſtinking. Our Captaine ſeeing him whole and ſound, was thereat maruellous glad, hoping to vnderſtand and know of him how he had healed himſelfe, to the end he might eaſe and help his men. So ſoone as they were come neere him, he aſked Domagaia how he had done to heale himſelfe: he anſwered, that he had taken the iuice and ſappe of the leaues of a certaine Tree, and therewith had healed himſelfe: For it was a ſingular remedy againſt that diſeaſe. Then our Captaine aſked of him if any were to be had thereabout, deſiring him to ſhew him, for to heale a ſeruant of his, who whileſt he was in Canada with Donnacona, was ſtriken with that diſeaſe: That he did becauſe he would not ſhew the number of his ſicke men. Domagaia ſtraight ſent two women to fetch ſome of it, which brought ten or twelue branches of it, and therewithall ſhewed the way how to vſe it, and that is thus, to take the barke and leaues of the ſayd tree, and boile them together, then to drinke of the ſayd decoction euery other day, and to put the dregs of it vpon his legs that is ſicke: moreouer, they told vs, that the vertue of that tree was, to heale any other diſeaſe: the tree is in their language called Ameda or Hanneda, this is thought to be the Saſſafras tree. Our Captain preſently cauſed ſome of that drink to be made for his men to drink of it, but there was none durſt taſt of it, except one or two, who ventured the drinking of it, only to taſt & proue it: the other ſeeing that did the like, and preſently recouered their health, and were deliuered of that ſickenes, & what other diſeaſe ſoeuer, in ſuch ſorte, that there were ſome had bene diſeaſed and troubled with the French Pockes foure or fiue yeres, and with this drinke were cleane healed. After this medicine was found and proued to be true, there was ſuch ſtrife about it, who ſhould be firſt to take of it, that they were ready to kill one another, ſo that a tree as big as any Oake in France was ſpoiled and lopped bare, and occupied all in fiue or ſixe daies, and it wrought ſo wel, that if all the phiſicians of Mountpelier and Louaine had bene there with all the drugs of Alexandria, they would not haue done ſo much in one yere, as that tree did in ſixe dayes, for it did ſo preuaile, that as many as vſed of it, by the grace of God recouered their health.

A perfect remedy againſt the French Pocks.

How the lord Donnacona accompanied with Taignoagny and diuers others, faining that they would goe to hunt Stags, and Deere, taried out two moneths, and at their returne brought a great multitude of people with them, that we were not wont to ſee before.

Chap. 16.

WHile that diſeaſe laſted in our ſhips, the lord Donnacona, Taignoagny, with many others went from home, faining that they would goe to catch Stags and Deere, which are in their tongue called Aiouneſta, and Aſquenoudo, becauſe the yce and ſnow was not ſo broken along the riuer that they could ſayle: it was told vs of Domagaia and others, that they would ſtay out but a fortnight, & we beleeued it, but they ſtayed aboue two moneths, which made vs miſtruſt that they had bene gone to raiſe the countrey to come againſt vs, and do vs ſome diſpleaſure, we ſeeing our ſelues ſo weake & faint. Albeit we had vſed ſuch diligence and policie in our Fort, that if all the power of the countrey had bene about it, they could haue done nothing but looke vpon vs: and whileſt they were foorth, many of the people came dayly to our ſhips, and brought vs freſh meat, as Stags, Deere, fiſhes, with diuers other things, but held them at ſuch an exceſſiue price, that rather then they would ſell them any thing cheape, many times they would carie them backe againe, becauſe that yere the Winter was very long, and they had ſome ſcarcity and neede of them.

A long winter

How Donnacona came to Stadacona againe with a great number of people, and becauſe he would not come to viſit our Captaine, fained himſelfe to be ſore ſicke, which he did only to haue the Captaine come ſee him.

Chap. 17.

ON the one and twentieth day of April Domagaia came to the ſhore ſide, accompanied with diuers luſty and ſtrong men, ſuch as we were not wont to ſee, and tolde vs that their lord

Donnacona would the next day come and ſee vs, and bring great ſtore of Deeres fleſh, and other things with him. The next day he came and brought a great number of men to Stadacona, to what end, and for what cauſe wee knew not, but (as the prouerb ſayth) he that takes heede and ſhields himſelfe from all men, may hap to ſcape from ſome: for we had need to looke about vs, conſidering how in number we were diminiſhed, and in ſtrength greatly weakned, both by reaſon of our ſickneſſe and alſo of the number that were dead, ſo that we were conſtrained to leaue one of our ſhips in the Port of the Holy Croſſe. Our Captaine was warned of their comming, and how they had brought a great number of men with them, for Domagaia came to tell it vs, and durſt not paſſe the riuer that was betwixt Stadacona and vs, as he was wont to doe, whereupon we miſtruſted ſome treaſon. Our Captaine ſeeing this, ſent one of his ſeruants to them, accompanied with Iohn Poulet being beſt beloued of thoſe people, to ſee who were there, and what they did. The ſayd Poulet & the other fained themſelues onely to be come to viſit Donnacona, & bring him certaine preſents, becauſe they had beene together a good while in the ſayd Donnaconas Towne. So ſoone as he heard of their comming, he got himſelfe to bed, faining to bee very ſicke. That done, they went to Taignoagny his houſe to ſee him, and whereſoeuer they went, they ſaw ſo many people, that in a maner one could not ſtirre for another, and ſuch men as they were neuer wont to ſee. Taignoagny would not permit our men to enter into any other houſes, but ſtill kept them company, and brought them halfe way to their ſhips, and tolde them that if it would pleaſe our captaine to ſhew him ſo much fauour as to take a Lord of the Countrey, whoſe name was Agonna, of whom hee had receiued ſome diſpleaſure, and carie him with him into France, he ſhould therefore for euer be bound vnto him, and would doe for him whatſoeuer hee would command him, and bade the ſeruant come againe the next day, and bring an anſwere. Our Captain being aduertiſed of ſo many people that were there, not knowing to what end, purpoſed to play a prettie prancke, that is to ſay, to take their Lord Donnacona, Taignoagny, Domagaia, and ſome more of the chiefeſt of them priſoners, in ſo much as before hee had purpoſed, to bring them into France, to ſhew vnto our King what he had ſeene in thoſe Weſterne parts, and maruels of the world, for that Donnacona had told vs, that he had bene in the Countrey of Saguenay, in which are infinite Rubies, Gold, and other riches, and that there are white men, who clothe themſelues with woollen cloth euen as we doe in France. Morequer he reported, that hee had bene in another countrey of a people called Picquemians, and other ſtrange people. The ſayd Lord was an olde man, and euen from his childehood had neuer left off nor ceaſed from trauailing into ſtrange Countreys, as well by water and riuers, as by lande. The ſayd Poulet, and the other hauing tolde our Captaine their Embaſſage, and ſhewed him what Taignoagny his will was, the next day he ſent his ſeruant againe to bid Taignoagny come and ſee him, and ſhewe what hee ſhould, for he ſhould be very well entertained, and alſo part of his will ſhould be accompliſhed. Taignoagny ſent him word, that the next day hee would come and bring the Lord Donnacona with him, and him that had ſo offended him, which hee did not, but ſtayed two dayes, in which time none came from Stadacona to our ſhippes, as they were wont to doe, but rather fled from vs, as if we would haue ſlaine them, ſo that then wee plainely perceiued their knauery.

A people called Picquemians

The towne of Sidatin.

But becauſe they vnderſtood, that thoſe of Sidatin did frequent our company, and that we had forſaken the bottome of a ſhip which we would leaue, to haue the olde nailes out of it, the third day following they came from Stadacona, and moſt of them without difficulty did paſſe from one ſide of the riuer to the other with ſmall Skiffes: but Donnacona would not come ouer: Taignoagny, and Domagaia ſtood talking together aboue an houre before they would come ouer, at laſt they came to ſpeake with our Captaine. There Taignoagny prayed him that hee would cauſe the foreſayd man to be taken and caried into France, Our Captaine refuſed to doe it, ſaying, that his King had forbidden him to bring any man or woman into France, onely that he might bring two or three yong boyes to learne the language, but that he would willingly cary him to Newfoundland, and there leaue him in an Iſland. Our Captaine ſpake this, onely to aſſure them, that they ſhould bring Donnacona with them, whom they had left on the other ſide: which wordes, when Taignoagny heard, hee was very glad, thinking hee ſhould neuer returne into France againe, and therefore promiſed to come the next day, which was the day of the Holy Croſſe, and to bring Donnacona and all the people with him.

How that vpon Holyrood day our Captaine cauſed a Croſſe to be ſet vp in our Forte: and how the Lord Donnacona, Taignoagny, Domagaia, and others of their company came: and of the taking of the ſayd Lord.

Chap. 18.

The third of May being Holyroode day, our Captaine for the ſolemnitie of the day, cauſed a goodly fayre croſſe of 35 foote in height to bee ſet vp, vnder the croſſet of which hee cauſed a ſhield to be hanged, wherein were the Armes of France, and ouer them was written in antique letters, Franciſcus primus Dei gratia Francorum Rex regnat. And vpon that day about noone, there came a great number of the people of Stadacona, men, women, and children, who told vs that their Lord Donnacona, Taignoagny, and Domagaia were comming, whereof we were very glad, hoping to retaine them. About two of the clocke in the afternoone they came, & being come neere our ſhips, our Captaine went to ſalute Donnacona, who alſo ſhewed him a mery countenance, albeit very fearefully his eyes were ſtill bent toward the wood. Shortly after came Taignoagny, who bade Donnacona that he ſhould not enter into our Forte, and therefore fire was brought forth by one of our men, & kindled where their Lord was. Our Captaine prayed him to come into our ſhips to eate & drinke as hee was wont to do, and alſo Taignoagny, who promiſed, that after a while he would come, and ſo they did, & entred into our ſhips: but firſt it was told our Captain by Domagaia, that Taignoagny had ſpoken ill of him, & that he had bid Donnacona hee ſhould not come aboord our ſhips. Our Captaine perceiuing that, came out of the Forte, and ſaw that onely by Taignoagny his warning the women ran away, and none but men ſtayed in great number, wherefore ye ſtraight commanded his men to lay hold on Donnacona, Taignoagny, and Domagaia, & two more of the chiefeſt whom he pointed vnto: then he commanded them to make the other to retire. Preſently after, the ſaid lord entred into the Fort with the Captaine, but by & by Taignoagny came to make him come out againe. Our Captaine ſeeing that there was no other remedy, began to call vnto them to take them, at whoſe crie and voice all his men came forth, and tooke the ſayd Lord with the others, whom they had appointed to take. The Canadians ſeeing their Lord taken, began to run away, euen as ſheepe before the woolfe, ſome croſſing ouer the riuer, ſome through the woods, each one ſeeking for his owne aduantage. That done, we retired our ſelues, and laid vp the priſoners vnder good guard and ſafety.

Donnacona, Taignoagny, & Domagaia take.

How the ſaid Canadians the night following came before our ſhips to ſeeke their men, crying and howling all night like Woolues: of the talke and concluſion they agreed vpon the next day: and of the gifts which they gaue our Captaine.

Chap. 19.

The night following they came before our ſhips, (the riuer being betwixt vs) ſtriking their breaſts, and crying and howling like woolues, ſtill calling Agouhanna, thinking to ſpeake with him, which our Captaine for that time would not permit, neither all the next day till noone, whereupon they made ſignes vnto vs, that we had hanged or killed him. About noone, there came as great a number in a cluſter, as euer we ſaw, who went to hide themſelues in the Foreſt, except ſome, who with a loud voice would call and crie to Donnacona to ſpeake vnto them. Our Captaine then commanded Donnacona to be brought vp on high to ſpeake vnto them, and bade him be merrie, for after he had ſpoken, and ſhewed vnto the King of France what hee had ſeene in Saguenay and other countreys, after ten or twelue moneths, he ſhould returne againe, and that the King of France would giue him great rewards, whereat Donnacona was very glad, and ſpeaking to the others, told it them, who in token of ioy, gaue out three great cryes, and then Donnacona and his people had great talke together, which for want of interpreters, cannot be deſcribed. Our Captaine bade Donnacona that hee ſhould cauſe them to come to the other ſide of the riuer, to the end they might better talke together without any feare, & that he ſhould aſſure them: which Donnacona did, and there came a boate full of the chiefeſt of them to the ſhips, and there anew began to talke together, giuing great praiſe to our captaine, and gaue him a preſent of foure and twenty chaines of Eſurgny, for that is the greateſt and precious eſt riches they haue in this world, for they eſteeme more of that, then of any gold or ſiluer. After they had long talked together, and that their Lord ſawe that there was no remedy to auoide his going into France, hee commanded his people the next day, to bring him ſome victuals to ſerue him by the way. Our Captaine gaue Donnacona, as a great preſent, two Frying pannes of copper, eight Hatchets, and other ſmall trifles, as Kniues, and Beades, whereof hee ſeemed to be very glad, who ſent them to his wiues and children. Likewiſe, he gaue to them that came to ſpeake with Donacona, they thanked him greatly for them, and then went to their lodgings.

How the next day, being the fift of May, the ſayd people came againe to ſpeake vnto their Lord, and how foure women came to the ſhore to bring him victuals.

Chap. 20.

VPon the fifth of May, very early in the morning, a great number of the ſayd people came againe to ſpeake vnto their Lord, and ſent a Boate, which in their tongue they call Caſnoni, wherein were onely foure women, without any man, for feare their men ſhould be retained.

Theſe women brought great ſtore of victuals, as great Millet, which is their corne that they liue withall, fleſh, fiſh, and other things after their faſhion.

Theſe women being come to our ſhippes, our Captaine did very friendly entertaine them. Then Donnacona prayed our Captaine to tell thoſe women that hee ſhould come againe after ten or twelue moneths, and bring Donnacona to Canada with him: this hee ſayd onely to appeaſe them, which our captaine did: wherefore the women, as well by words as ſignes, ſeemed to be very glad, giuing our Captaine thanks, and told him, if he came againe, and brought Donnacona with him, they would giue him many things: in ſigne whereof, each one gaue our Captaine a chaine of Eſurgny, and then paſſed to the other ſide of the riuer againe, where ſtood all the people of Stadacona, who taking all leaue of their Lord, went home againe. On Saturday following, being the ſixt of the moneth, we departed out of the ſayd Port of Santa Croix, and came to harborough a little beneath the Iſland of Orleans, about twelue leagues from the Port of the Holy Croſſe, and vpon Sonday we came to the Iſland of Filberds, where wee ſtayed vntill the ſixteenth of that moneth, till the fierceneſſe of the waters were paſt, which at that time ranne too ſwift a courſe, and were too dangerous to come downe along the riuer, and therefore we ſtayed till faire weather came. In the meane while many of Donnaconas ſubiects came from the riuer of Saguenay to him, but being by Domagaia aduertiſed, that their Lord was taken to bee caryed into France, they were all amazed: yet for all that they would not leaue to come to our ſhips, to ſpeake to Donnacona, who told them that after twelue moneths he ſhould come againe, and that he was very well vſed by the Captaine, Gentlemen, and Mariners. Which when they heard, they greatly thanked our Captaine and gaue their Lord three bundles of Beauers, and ſea Woolues ſkinnes, with a great knife of red copper that commeth from Saguenay, and other things. They gaue alſo to our Captaine a chayne of Eſurgny, for which our Captaine gaue them ten or twelue Hatchets, and they gaue him hearty thankes, and were very well contented. The next day, being the ſixteenth of May, we hoyſed ſayle, and came from the ſaid Iſland of Filberds, to another about fifteene leagues from it, which is about fiue leagues in length, and there, to the end we might take ſome reſt the night following, we ſtayed that day, in hope the next day we might paſſe and auoide the dangers of the riuer of Saguenay, which are great. That euening we went aland and found great ſtore of Hares, of which we tooke a great many, and therefore we called it The Iſland of Hares: in the night there aroſe a contrary winde, with ſuch ſtormes and tempeſt, that wee were conſtrained to returne to The Iſland of Filberds againe, from whence wee were come, becauſe there was none other paſſage among the ſayde Iſlandes, and there we ſtayed till the one and twentieth of that moneth, till faire weather end good winde came againe: and then wee ſayled againe, and that ſo proſperouſly, that wee paſſed to Honguedo, which paſſage vntill that time had not bene diſcouered: wee cauſed our ſhips to courſe athwart Cape Prat which is the beginning of the Port of Chaleur: and becauſe the winde was good and conuenient, we ſayled all day and all night without ſtaying, and the next day we came to the middle of Brions Iſland, which we were not minded to doe, to the end wee might ſhorten our way. Theſe two lands lie Northweſt, and Southeaſt, and are about fiftie leagues one from another. The ſayd Iſland is in latitude 47 degrees and a halfe. Vpon Thurſday being the twenty ſixe of the moneth, and the feaſt of the Aſcenſion of our Lord, we coaſted ouer to a land and ſhallow of lowe ſandes, which are about eight leagues Southweſt from Brions Iſland, aboue which are large Champaines, full of trees and alſo an encloſed ſea, whereas we could neither ſee, nor perceiue any gappe or way to enter thereinto. On Friday following, being the 27 of the moneth, becauſe the wind did change on the coaſt, we came to Brions Iſland againe, where wee ſtayed till the beginning of Iune, and toward the Southeaſt of this Iſland, wee ſawe a lande, ſeeming vnto vs as an Iſland, we coaſted it about two leagues and a halfe, and by the way we had notice notice of three other high Iſlands, lying toward the Sands: after wee had knowen theſe things we returned to the Cape of the ſayd land, which doeth deuide it ſelfe into two or three very high Capes: the waters there are very deepe, and the flood of the ſea runneth ſo ſwift, that it cannot poſſibly be ſwifter. That day we came to Cape Loreine, which is in forty ſeuen degrees and a halfe toward the South: on which cape there is a low land, and it ſeemeth that there is ſome entrance of a riuer, but there is no hauen of any worth. Aboue theſe lands we ſaw another cape toward the South, we named it Saint Paules Cape, it is at 47 degrees and a quarter.

The Sonday following, being the fourth of June, and Whitſonday, wee had notice of the coaſte lying Eaſtſoutheaſt, diſtant from the Newfoundland about two and twenty leagues: and becauſe the wind was againſt vs, wee went to a Hauen, which wee named S. Spiritus Porte, where we ſtayed till Tewesday that we departed thence, ſayling along that coaſt vntill wee came to Saint Peters Iſlands. Wee found along the ſayd coaſt many very dangerous Iſlands and ſhelues, which lye all in the way Eaſtſoutheaſt and Weſtnorthweſt, about three and twenty leagues into the ſea. Whileſt we were in the ſayd Saint Peters Iſlands we met with many ſhips of France and of Britaine, wee ſtayed there from Saint Barnabas day, being the eleuenth of the moneth, vntil the ſixteenth that we departed thence & came to Cape Raſe, and entred into a Port called Rognoſo, where wee tooke in freſh water, and wood to paſſe the ſea: there wee left one of our boates. Then vpon Monday, being the nineteenth of June, we went from that Port, and with ſuch good and proſperous weather we ſailed along the ſea, in ſuch ſorte, that vpon the ſixt of July 1536 we came to the Porte of S. Malo, by the grace of God, to whom we pray, here ending our Nauigation, that of his infinite mercy he will grant vs his grace and fauour, and in the end bring vs to the place of euerlaſting felicitie. Amen.

They of Canada ſay, that it is a moneths ſayling to goe to a lande where Cinnamom and Cloues are gathered.

Here endeth the Relation of Iames Cartiers diſcouery and Nauigation to the Newfoundlands, by him named New France.

The third voyage of diſcouery made by Captaine Iaques Cartier, 1540. vnto the Countreys of Canada, Hochelaga, and Saguenay.

KIng Francis the firſt hauing heard the report of Captaine Cartier his Pilot generall in his two former Voyages of diſcouery, as well by writing as by word of mouth, touching that which hee had found and ſeene in the Weſterne partes diſcouered by him in the parts of Canada and Hochelaga, and hauing alſo ſeene and talked with the people, which the ſayd Cartier had brought out of thoſe Countreys, whereof one was king of Canada, whoſe name was Donnacona, and others: which after that they had bene a long time in France and Britaine, were baptized at their owne deſire and requeſt, and died in the ſayd countrey of Britaine. And albeit his Maieſtie was aduertized by the ſayd Cartier of the death and deceaſe of all the people which were brought ouer by him (which were tenne in number) ſauing one little girle about tenne yeeres old, yet he reſolued to ſend the ſayd Cartier his Pilot thither againe, with Iohn Francis de la Roche, Knight, Lord of Roberual, whome hee appointed his Lieutenant and Gouernour in the Countreys of Canada and Hochelaga, and the ſayd Cartier Captaine generall and leader of the ſhippes, that they might diſcouer more then was done before in the former voyages, and attaine (if it were poſſible) vnto the knowledge of the Countrey of Saguenay, whereof the people brought by Cartier, as is declared, made mention vnto the King, that there were great riches, and very good countreys. And the King cauſed a certaine ſumme of money to be deliuered to furniſh out the ſayd voyage with fiue ſhippes: which thing was perfourmed by the ſayd Monſieur Roberual and Cartier. After that they had agreed together to rigge the ſayd fiue ſhips at Saint Malo in Britaine, where the two former voyages had beene prepared prepared and ſet forth. And the ſaid Monſieur Roberual ſent Cartier thither for the ſame purpoſe. And after that Cartier had cauſed the ſaid fiue ſhips to bee built and furniſhed and ſet in good order, Monſieur Roberual came downe to S.Malo and found the ſhips fallen downe to the roade, with their yards acroſſe full ready to depart and ſet ſaile, ſtaying for nothing elſe but the comming of the Generall, and the payment of the furniture. And becauſe Monſieur Roberual the kings lieutenant had not as yet his artillery, powder and munitions, and other things neceſſary come downe, which he had prouided for the voyage, in the Countreys of Champaigne and Normandie: and becauſe the ſaid things were very neceſſary, and that hee was loth to depart without them, he determined to depart from S.Malo to Roan, and to prepare a ſhip or two at Honfleur, whither he thought his things were come: And that the ſaid Cartier ſhoulde depart with the fiue ſhippes which he had furniſhed, and ſhould goe before. Conſidering alſo that the ſaid Catier had receiued letters from the king, whereby hee did expreſly charge him to depart and ſet ſayle immediatly vpon the ſight and receit thereof, on payne of incurring his diſpleaſure, and to lay all the fault on him. And after the concluſion of theſe things, and the ſaid Monſieur Roberual had taken muſter and view of the gentlemen, ſouldiers, and mariners which were retained and choſen for the performance of the ſayd voyage, hee gaue vnto Captaine Cartier full authoritie to depart and goe before, and to gouerne all things as if he had bene there in perſon: and himſelfe departed to Honfleur to make his farther preparation. After theſe things thus diſpatched, the winde comming faire, the foreſayd fiue ſhips ſet ſayle together well furniſhed and victualled for two yeere, the 23. of May, 1540. And we ſailed ſo long with contrary winds and continuall torments, which fell out by reaſon of our late departure, that wee were on the ſea with our ſayd fiue ſhips full three moneths before wee could arriue at the Port and Hauen of Canada, without euer hauing in all that time 30. houres of good wind to ſerue vs to keepe our right courſe: ſo that our fiue ſhippes through thoſe ſtormes loſt company one of another, all ſaue two that kept together, to wit that wherein the Captaine was, and the other wherein went the Vicount of Beaupre, vntill at length at the ende of one moneth wee met all together at the Hauen of Carpont in Newfoundland. But the length of time which we were in paſſing betweene Britayne and Newfoundland was the cauſe that we ſtood in great neede of water, becauſe of the cattell, aſwell Goates, Hogges, as other beaſtes which we caried for breede in the Countrey, which wee were conſtrained to water with Sider and other drinke. Now therefore becauſe we were the ſpace of three moneths in ſayling on the ſea, and ſtaying in Newfoundland, wayting for Monſieur Roberual, and taking in of freſh water and other things neceſſary, wee arriued not before the Hauen of Saincte Croix in Canada, (where in the former voyage we had remayned eight moneths) vntill the 23. day of Auguſt. In which place the people of the Countrey came to our ſhippes, making ſhew of ioy for our arriuall, and namely he came thither which had the rule and gouernment of the Countrey of Canada, named Agona, which was appointed king there by Donacona, when in the former voyage we carried him into France: And hee came to the Captaines ſhip with 6. or 7. boates, and with many women and children. And after the ſayd Agona had inquired of the Captaine where Donacona and the reſt were, the Captaine anſwered him, That Donacona was dead in France, and that his body reſted in the earth, and that the reſt ſtayed there as great Lords, and were maried, and would not returne backe into their Countrey: the ſaid Agona made no ſhewe of anger at all theſe ſpeeches: and I thinke he tooke it ſo well becauſe he remained Lord and Gouernour of the countrey by the death of the ſaid Donacona. After which conference the ſaid Agona tooke a piece of tanned leather of a yellow ſkin edged about with Eſnoguy (which is their riches and the thing which they eſteeme moſt precious, as wee eſteeme gold) which was vpon his head in ſtead of a crowne, and he put the ſame on the head of our Captaine, and tooke from his wriſts two bracelets of Eſnoguy, and put them vpon the Captaines armes, colling him about the necke and ſhewing vnto him great ſignes of ioy: which was all diſſimulation, as afterward it wel appeared. The captaine tooke his ſaid crowne of leather and put it againe vpon his head, and gaue him and his wiues certaine ſmal preſents, ſignifying vnto him, that he had brought certaine new things, which afterward he would beſtow vpon him: for which the ſayd Agona thanked the Captaine. And after that he had made him and his company eat and drinke, they departed and returned to the ſhore with their boates. After which things the ſayd Captaine went with two of his boates vp the riuer, beyond Canada and the Port of Saincte Croix, to view a Hauen and a ſmall riuer, which is about 4. leagues higher: which he found better and more commodious to ride in and lay his ſhips, then the former. And therefore he returned and cauſed all his ſhips to be brought before the ſayd riuer, and at a lowe water he cauſed his Ordinance to bee planted to place his ſhips in more ſaftie, which he meant to keepe and ſtay in the Countrey, which were three: which hee did the day following, and the reſt remayned in the roade in the middeſt of the riuer (In which place the victuals and other furniture were diſcharged, which they had brought) from the 26. of Auguſt vntill the ſecond of September, what time they departed to returne for S. Malo, in which ſhips he ſent backe Mace Iolloberte his brother in lawe, and Steuen Noel his Nephew, ſkilfull and excellent pilots, with letters vnto the king, and to aduertiſe him what had bene done and found: and how Monſieur de Roberual was not yet come, and that hee feared that by occaſion of contrary winds and tempeſts he was driuen backe againe into France.

The deſcription of the aforeſaid Riuer and Hauen.

The ſayd Riuer is ſmall, not paſt 50. paſes broad, and ſhippes drawing three fathoms water may enter in at a full ſea: and at a low water there is nothing but a chanell of a foote deepe or thereabout. On both ſides of the ſaid Riuer there are very good and faire grounds, full of as faire and mightie trees as any be in the world, and diuers ſorts, which are aboue tenne fathoms higher then the reſt, and there is one kind of tree aboue three fathoms about, which they in the Countrey call Hanneda, which hath the moſt excellent vertue of all the trees of the world, whereof I will make mention hereafter. Moreouer there are great ſtore of Okes the moſt excellent that euer I ſaw in my life, which were ſo laden with Maſt that they cracked againe: beſides this there are fairer Arables, Cedars, Beeches, and other trees, then grow in France: and hard vnto this wood on the South ſide the ground is all couered with Vines, which we found laden with grapes as blacke as Mulberies, but they be not ſo kind as thoſe of France becauſe the Vines bee not tilled, and becauſe they grow of their owne accord. Moreuer there are many white Thornes, which beare leaues as bigge as oken leaues, and fruit like vnto Medlers. To bee ſhort, it is as good a Countrey to plow and mannure as a man ſhould find or deſire. We ſowed ſeedes here of our Countrey, as Cabages, Naueaus, Lettiſes and others, which grew and ſprung vp out of the ground in eight dayes. The mouth of the riuer is toward the South, and it windeth Northward like vnto a ſnake: and at the mouth of it toward the Eaſt there is a high and ſteepe cliffe, where we made a way in maner of a payre of ſtaires, and aloft we made a Fort to keepe the nether Fort and the ſhips, and all things that might paſſe aſwell by the great as by this ſmall riuer. Moreouer a man may behold a great extenſion of ground apt for tillage, ſtraite and handſome and ſomewhat enclining toward the South, as eaſie to be brought to tillage as I would deſire, and very well repleniſhed with faire Okes and other trees of great beauty, no thicker then the Forreſts of France. Here wee ſet twenty men to worke, which in one day had laboured about an acre and an halfe of the ſaid ground, and ſowed it part with Naueaus or ſmall Turneps, which at the ende of eight dayes, as I ſaid before, ſprang out of the earth. And vpon that high cliffe wee found a faire fountaine very neere the ſayd Fort: adioyning whereunto we found good ſtore of ſtones, which we eſteemed to be Diamants. On the other ſide of the ſaid mountaine and at the foote thereof, which is towards the great Riuer is all along a goodly Myne of the beſt yron in the world, and it reacheth euen hard vnto our Fort, and the ſand which we tread on is perfect refined Myne, ready to be put into the fornace. And on the waters ſide we found certaine leaues of fine gold as thicke as a mans nayle. And Weſtward of the ſaid Riuer there are, as hath bene ſayd, many faire trees: and toward the water a goodly Medow full of as faire and goodly graſſe as euer I ſawe in any Medowe in France: and betweene the ſayd Medow and the Wood are great ſtore of Vines: and beyond the ſaid Vines the land groweth full of Hempe which groweth of it ſelfe, which is as good as poſſibly may be ſeene, and as ſtrong. And at the ende of the ſayd Medow within an hundred paſes there is a riſing ground, which is of a kind of ſlate ſtone blacke and thicke, wherein are veines of mynerall matter, which ſhewe like gold and ſiluer: and throughout all that ſtone there are great graines of the ſayd Myne. And in ſome places we haue found ſtones like Diamants, the moſt faire, polliſhed and excellently cut that it is poſſible for a man to ſee, when the Sunne ſhineth vpon them, they gliſter as it were ſparkles of fire.

Trees aboue 3. fathoms about.

How after the departure of the two ſhippes which were ſent backe into Britaine, and that the Fort was begun to be builded, the Captaine prepared two boates to goe vp the great Riuer to diſcouer the paſſage of the three Saults or falles of the Riuer.

The ſayd Captaine hauing diſpatched two ſhips to returne to carry newes, according as hee had in charge from the king, and that the Fort was begun to be builded, for preſeruation of their victuals and other things, determined with the Vicount of Beaupre, and other Gentlemen, Maſters, and Pilots choſen for counſayle, to make a voyage with two boates furniſhed with men and victuals to goe as farre as Hochelaga, of purpoſe to view and vnderſtand the faſhion of the Saults of water, which are to be paſſed to goe to Saguenay, that hee might be the readier in the ſpring to paſſe farther, and in the Winter time to make all things needefull in a readineſſe for their buſineſſe. The foreſaid boates being made ready, the Captaine and Martine de Painpont, with other Gentlemen and the remnant of the Mariners departed from the ſayd place of Charlesburg Royal the ſeuenth day of September in the yeere aforeſayd 1540. And the Vicount of Beaupre ſtayed behind for the garding and gouernement of all things in the Fort. And as they went vp the riuer, the Captaine went to ſee the Lord of Hochelay, which dwelleth betweene Canada and Hochelaga: which in the former voyage had giuen vnto the ſaid Captaine a little girle, and had oftentimes enformed him of the treaſons which Taignoagny and Domagaya (whom the Captaine in his former voyage had caried into France) would haue wrought againſt him. In regard of which his curteſie the ſaid Captaine would not paſſe by without viſiting of him, and to let him vnderſtand that the Captaine thought himſelfe beholding vnto him, hee gaue vnto him two yong boyes, and left them with him to learne their language, and beſtowed vpon him a cloake of Paris red, which cloake was ſet with yealow and white buttons of Tinne, and ſmall belles. And withall hee gaue him two Baſins of Laton, and certaine hatchets and kniues: whereat the ſayde Lord ſeemed highly to reioyce, and thanked the Captaine. This done, the Captaine and his company departed from that place: And wee ſailed with ſo proſperous a wind, that we arriued the eleuenth day of the moneth at the firſt Sault of water, which is two leagues diſtant from the Towne of Tutonaguy. And after wee were arriued there, wee determined to goe and paſſe as farre vp as it was poſſible with one of the boates, and that the other ſhould ſtay there till it returned: and wee double manned her to rowe vp againſt the courſe or ſtreame of the ſayde Sault. And after wee had paſſed ſome part of the way from our other boate, wee found badde ground and great rockes, and ſo great a current, that wee could not poſſibly paſſe any further with our Boate. And the Captaine reſolued to goe by land to ſee the nature and faſhion of the Sault. And after that we were come on ſhore, wee founde hard by the water ſide a way and beaten path going toward the ſayde Saultes, by which wee tooke our way. And on the ſayd way, and ſoone after we found an habitation of people which made vs great cheere, and entertained vs very friendly. And after that he had ſignified vnto them, that wee were going toward the Saults, and that wee deſired to goe to Saguenay, foure yong men went along with vs to ſhewe vs the way, and they brought vs ſo farre that wee came to another village or habitation of good people, which dwell ouer againſt the ſecond Sault, which came and brought vs of their victuals, as Pottage and Fiſh, and offered vs of the ſame. After that the Captaine had enquired of them as well by ſignes as wordes, how many more Saults wee had to paſſe to goe to Saguenay, and what diſtance and way it was thither, this people ſhewed vs and gaue vs to vnderſtand, that wee were at the ſecond Sault, and that there was but one more to paſſe, that the Riuer was not nauigable to goe to Saguenay, and that the ſayd Sault was but a third part farther then we had trauailed, ſhewing vs the ſame with certaine little ſtickes, which they layd vpon the ground in a certaine diſtance, and afterward layde other ſmall branches betweene both, repreſenting the Saults. And by the ſayde marke, if their ſaying be true, it can be but ſixe leagues by land to paſſe the ſayd Saults.

After that we had bene aduertiſed by the ſayde people, of the things abouementioned, both becauſe the day was farre ſpent, and we had neither drunke nor eaten the ſame day, we concluded to returne vnto our boats, and we came thither, where we found great ſtore of people to the number of 400. perſons or thereabout, which ſeemed to giue vs very good entertainment and to reioyce of our comming: And therefore our Captaine gaue eche of them certaine ſmall trifles, as combs, brooches of tynne and copper, and other ſmal toyes, and vnto the chiefe men euery one his litle hatchet & hooke, whereat they made certaine cries and ceremonies of ioy. But a man muſt not truſt them for all their faire ceremonies and ſignes of ioy, for if they had thought they had bene too ſtrong for vs, then would they haue done their beſt to haue killed vs, as we vnderſtood afterward. This being done, we returned with our boats, and paſſed by the dwelling of the Lord of Hochelay, with whom the Captaine had left the two youths as hee came vp the riuer, thinking to haue found him: But hee coulde find no body ſaue one of his ſonnes, who tolde the Captaine that hee

But in truth hee was gone to Canada to conclude with Agona, what they ſhould doe againſt vs. And when we were arriued at our Fort, wee vnderſtoode by our people, that the Sauages of the Countrey came not any more about our Fort as they were accuſtomed, to bring vs fiſh, and that they were in a wonderful doubt and feare of vs. Wherefore our Captaine, hauing bene aduertiſed by ſome of our men which had bene at Stadacona to viſite them, that there were a wonderfull number of the Countrey people aſſembled together, cauſed all things in our fortreſſe to bee ſet in good order: &c.

A letter written to M. Iohn Growte ſtudent in Paris, by Iaques Noel of S. Malo, the nephew of Iaques Cartier, touching the foreſaid diſcouery.

The Saults are in 44. deg. and eaſie to paſſe.

But 5. leagues iourney to paſſe the 3. Saults.

Ten dayes iourney from the Saults to this great Lake.

Maſter Growte, your brother in law Giles Walter ſhewed me this morning a Mappe printed at Paris, dedicated to one M. Hakluyt an Engliſh Gentleman: wherein all the Weſt Indies, the kingdome of New Mexico, and the Countreys of Canada, Hochelaga and Saguenay are contained. I hold that the Riuer of Canada which is deſcribed in that Mappe is not marked as it is in my booke, which is agreeable to the booke of Iaques Cartier: and that the ſayd Chart doth not marke or ſet downe The great Lake, which is aboue the Saults, according as the Sauages haue aduertiſed vs, which dwell at the ſayd Saults. In the foreſayd Chart which you ſent me hither, the Great Lake is placed too much toward the North. The Saults or falles of the Riuer ſtand in 44. degrees of latitude: it is not ſo hard a matter to paſſe them, as it is thought: The water falleth not downe from any high place, it is nothing elſe but that in the middeſt of the Riuer there is bad ground. It were beſt to build boates aboue the Saults: and it is eaſie to march or trauell by land to the end of the three Saults: it is not aboue fiue leagues iourney. I haue bene vpon the toppe of a mountaine, which is at the foot of the Saults, where I haue ſeene the ſayd Riuer beyond the ſayd Saultes, which ſhewed vnto vs to be broader then it was where we paſſed it. The people of the Countrey aduertiſed vs, that there are ten dayes iourney from the Saults vnto this Great Lake. We know not how many leagues they make to a dayes iourney. At this preſent I cannot write vnto you more at large, becauſe the meſſenger can ſtay no longer. Here therefore for the preſent I will ende, ſaluting you with my hearty commendations, praying God to giue you your hearts deſire. From S. Malo in haſte this 19 day of Iune. 1587.

Your louing Friend, IAQVES NOEL.

COſin, I pray you doe me ſo much pleaſure as to ſend mee a booke of the diſcouery of New Mexico, and one of thoſe new Mappes of the Weſt Indies dedicated to M. Hakluyt the Engliſh Gentleman, which you ſent to your brother in law Giles Walter. I will not faile to informe my ſelfe, if there be any meane to find out thoſe deſcriptions which Captaine Cartier made after his two laſt voyages into Canada.

Vnderneath the aforeſaid vnperfite relation that which followeth is written in another letter ſent to M. Iohn Growte ſtudent in Paris from Iaques Noel of S. Malo, the grand nephew of Iaques Cartier.

The Saults are in the latitude of 44. deg.

I Can write nothing elſe vnto you of any thing that I can recouer of the writings of Captaine Iaques Cartier my vncle diſceaſed, although I haue made ſearch in all places that I could poſſibly in this Towne: ſauing of a certaine booke made in maner of a ſea Chart, which was drawne by the hand of my ſaid vncle, which is in the poſſeſſion of maſter Cremeur: which booke is paſſing well marked and drawne for all the Riuer of Canada, whereof I am well aſſured, becauſe I my ſelfe haue knowledge thereof as farre as to the Saults, where I haue bene: The height of which Saults is in 44. degrees. I found in the ſayd Chart beyond the place where the Riuer is diuided in twaine in the midſt of both the branches of the ſaid riuer ſomewhat neereſt that arme which runneth toward the Northweſt, theſe words following written in the hand of Iaques Cartier.

By the people of Canada and Hochelaga it was ſaid, That here is the land of Saguenay, which is rich and wealthy in precious ſtones.

And about an hundred leagues vnder the ſame I found written theſe two lines following in the ſaid Carde enclining toward the Southweſt. Here in this Countrey are Cinamon and Cloues, which they call in their language Canodeta.

Touching the effect of my booke whereof I ſpake vnto you, it is made after the maner of a ſea Chart, which I haue deliuered to my two ſonnes Michael and Iohn, which at this preſent are in Canada. If at their returne, which will be God willing about Magdalene tyde, they haue learned any new thing worthy the writing, I will not faile to aduertiſe you thereof.

Your louing Friend, IAQVES NOEL.

Here followeth the courſe from Belle Iſle, Carpont, and the Grand Bay in Newfoundland vp the Riuer of Canada for the ſpace of 230. leagues, obſerued by Iohn Alphonſe of Xanctoigne chiefe Pilote to Monſieur Roberual. 1542.

BElles Iſles are in 51 degrees and $\frac{2}{3}$. Belles Iſles and Carpont are Northnorthweſt and Southſoutheaſt, and they are ten leagues diſtant. Carpont is in 52 degrees. Carpont and Bell Iſle from the Grand Bay are Northeaſt and Southweſt, and the diſtance from Bell Iſle to the Grand Bay is 7 leagues. The midſt of the Grand Bay is in 52 degrees and a halfe, and on the Northſide thereof there is a rocke: halfe a league from the Iſle, ouer againſt Carpont toward the Eaſt there is a ſmall flat Iſland, and on the ſide toward the Northeaſt there is a flat rocke. And when thou commeſt out of the harborough of Carpont thou muſt leaue this rocke on the ſtarreboord ſide, and alſo on the larboord ſide there are two or three ſmall Iſles: and when thou commeſt out on the Northeaſt ſide, ranging along the ſhore toward the Weſt about two pikes length in the midway there is a ſhold which lieth on thy ſtarboord ſide: and ſaile thou by the North coaſt, and leaue two partes of the Grand Bay toward the South; becauſe there is a rocke which runneth 2 or 3 leagues into the ſea. And when thou art come athwart the hauen of Butes, run along the North ſhore about one league or an halfe off, for the coaſt is without all danger: Bell Iſle in the mouth of the Grand Bay, and the Iſles of Blanc Sablon, which are within the Grand Bay, neere vnto the North ſhore lie Northeaſt, Weſt and Southweſt, & the diſtance is 30 leagues. The Grand Bay at the entrance is but 7 leagues broad from land to land vntill it come ouer againſt the Bay des Chaſteaux: and from thence forward it hath not paſt 5 leagues in breadth. And againſt Blanc Sablon it is 8 leagues broad from land to land. And the land on the South ſhore is all low land along the ſea coaſt. The North ſhore is reaſonable high land. Blanc Sablon is in 51 degrees $\frac{2}{3}$. The Iſles of Blanc Sablon & the Iſles de la Damoiſelle, are Northeaſt, Weſtſouthweſt, and take a little of the Weſtſouthweſt, and they are diſtant 36 leagues: theſe Iles are in 50. deg. $\frac{3}{4}$. And there is a good hauen: & you may enter by an high Cape which lieth along toward the Northeaſt, and within the diſtance of a pike & an half, becauſe of a rocke which lieth on your larreboord ſide, & you may ancre in 10 fathome water ouer againſt a litle nooke: and from the great headland vnto the place where thou doeſt ancre there is not aboue the length of 2 Cables. And if thou wouldeſt go out by the Weſt ſide, thou muſt ſaile neere the Iſle by the ſtarreboord, & giue roome vnto the Iſle on the larboord at the comming forth: and when thou art not paſt a cables length out thou muſt ſaile hard by the Iſles on the larboord ſide, by reaſon of a ſuncken flatte which lieth on the ſtarreboord, and thou ſhalt ſaile ſo on to the Southſouthweſt, vntill thou come in ſight of a rocke which ſhineth, which is about halfe a league in the ſea diſtant from the Iſles, and thou ſhalt leaue it on the larreboord: (and from the Iſles of Damoiſelle vnto New foundland the ſea is not in breadth aboue 36. leagues, becauſe that Newfoundland euen vnto Cape Briton runneth not but Northnortheaſt & Southſouthweſt.) Betweene the Iſles de la Damoiſelle and the Iſles of Blanck Sablon there be many Iſles and good harbours: and on this coaſt there are faulcons & haukes, and certaine foules which ſeeme to be feaſants. The Iſles de la Damoiſelle & Cape Tienot are Northeaſt & Weſtſouthweſt & take a little of the Northeaſt and ſouthweſt, & they are diſtant 18. leagues. Cape Tienot is in 50. deg. and $\frac{1}{4}$. And there the ſea is broadeſt. And it may be to the end of Newfoundland, which is at the entrance of Cape Briton 70 leagues, which is the greateſt breadth of this ſea. And there are 6 or 7 Iſles betweene the Iſles de la Damoiſelle & Cape Tienot. Cape Tienot hath in yͤ ſea 5 or 6 leagues diſtant frō it a ſunkē Iland dangerous for ſhips. The Cape Tienot and the midſt of the Iſle of Aſcenſion are Northeaſt and ſouthſouthweſt, & they are 22. leagues diſtant, the midſt of the Iſle of Aſcenſion is in 49 deg. & $\frac{1}{2}$. The ſaid Iſle lieth Northweſt and Southeaſt. the Northweſt end is in 50. degrees of latitude and the Southeaſt end is in 48. degrees and a halfe. and it is about 25. leagues long and 4. or 5.

leagues broad: and from the Northweſt end of the Iſle vnto the firme land of the North ſide the Sea is not aboue ſeuen leagues broad, but vnto the firme land on the South ſide are about 15. leagues. Cape Tienot and the end of tho Iſle of Aſcention toward the Southeaſt are Northeaſt and Southweſt, and are diſtant 30. leagues. The ſaid Cape of Tienot and the Northweſt end of the Iſle of Aſcenſion are Eaſt and Weſt, and take a little of the Northeaſt and Southweſt, and they are diſtant 34. leagues. The Iſle of Aſcenſion is a goodly Iſle, and a goodly champion land without any hilles, ſtanding all vpon white rocks and Alablaſter, all couered with trees vnto the Sea ſhore, and there are al ſorts of trees as there be in France: and there be wild beaſts, as beares, Luſerns, Porkeſpicks. And from the Southeaſt end of the Iſle of Aſcenſion vnto the entrance of Cape Briton is but 50. leagues. The Northweſt end of the Iſle & the Cape des Monts noſtre Dame, which is on the maine land towards the South, are Northeaſt and Weſtſouthweſt, and the diſtance betweene them is 15. leagues. The Cape is in 49. degrees, which is a very high land. The Cape and end of the Iſle of Aſcenſion toward the Southeaſt are Eaſt and Weſt and there is 15. leagues diſtance betweene them. The Bay of Molues or Gaſpay is in 48. degrees, and the coaſt lyeth North and South, and taketh a quarter of the Northeaſt and Southweſt vnto the Bay of Heate: and there are 3. Iſles, one great one and two ſmal: from the Bay of Heate vntill you paſſe the Monts noſtre Dame al the land is high and good ground al couered with trees. Ognedoc is a good Bay and lyeth Northnorthweſt and Southſoutheaſt, and it is a good Harbour: and you muſt ſaile along the ſhore on the Northſide by reaſon of the low point at the entrance thereof: and when you are paſſed the poynt bring your ſelfe to an ancre in 15. or 20. fathoms of water toward the South ſhore, and here within this Hauen are two riuers, one which goeth toward the Northweſt, and the other to the Southweſt. And on this coaſt there is great fiſhing for Coddes and other fiſh, where there is more ſtore then is in Newfoundland, and better fiſh. And here is great ſtore of riuer foule, as Malards, wild Geeſe, and others: And here are all ſorts of trees, Roſe trees, Raſpeſſes, Filbird trees, Apple trees, Peare trees, and it is hotter here in Sommer then in France. The Iſle of Aſcenſion and the 7. Iſles which lie on the North ſhore lie Southeaſt and Weſtnorthweſt, and are diſtant 24. leagues. The Cape of Ognedoc and the 7. Iſles are Northnorthweſt and Southſoutheaſt, & are diſtant 35. leagues. The Cape of Monts noſtre Dame and the 7. Iſles are North and South, and the cut ouer from the one to the other is 25. leagues: and this is the breadth of this Sea, and from thence vpward it beginneth to waxe narrower and narrower. The 7. Iſles are in 50. degrees and $\frac{1}{2}$. The 7. Iſles and the poynt of Ongear lie Northeaſt and Southweſt and the diſtance betweene them is 15. leagues, and betweene them are certaine ſmall Iſlands: and the point of Ongear and the mountaines Noſtre Dame, which are on the South ſide of the entrance of the riuer, are North and South: and the cut ouer from the one to the other is ten leagues: and this is here the abredth of the Sea. The poynt of Ongear and the riuer of Caen lie Eaſt and Weſt, and they are diſtant 12. leagues. And all the coaſt from the Iſle of Aſcenſion hither is very good ground, wherein growe all ſortes of trees that are in France and ſome fruits. The poynt of Ongear is in 49. degrees and $\frac{1}{4}$. And the riuer of Caen and the Iſle of Raquelle lye Northeaſt and Southweſt, and they are diſtant 12. leagues. The Iſle of Raquelle is in 48. degrees and $\frac{2}{3}$. In this riuer of Caen there is great ſtore of fiſh. And here the Sea is not paſt 8. leagues broad. The Iſle of Raquelle is a very low Iſle, which is neere vnto the South ſhore, hard by a high Cape which is called the Cape of Marble. There is no danger there at all. And betweene Raquelle and the Cape of Marble ſhips may paſſe. And there is not from the Iſle to the South ſhore aboue one league, and from the Iſle vnto the North ſhore about foure leagues. The Iſle of Raquelle and the entrance of Saguenay are Northeaſt Weſtſouthweſt, and are diſtant 14. leagues, and there are betweene them two ſmall Iſlandes neere the North ſhore. The entrance of Saguenay is in 48. degrees and $\frac{1}{3}$, and the entrance hath not paſt a quarter of a league in breadth, and it is dangerous toward the Southweſt: and two or three leagues within the entrance it beginneth to waxe wider and wider: and it ſeemeth to bee as it were an arme of the Sea: And I thinke that the ſame runneth into the Sea of Cathay, for it ſendeth foorth there a great current, and there doth runne in that place a terrible raſe or tyde. And here the riuer from the North ſhore to the South ſhore is not paſt foure leagues in breadth, and it is a dangerous paſſage betweene both the lands, becauſe there lie bankes of rockes in the riuer. The Iſle of Raquelle and the Iſle of Hares lye Northeaſt and Southweſt, and take $\frac{1}{4}$ of the Eaſt and the Weſt, and they are diſtant 18. leagues. The entrance of Saguenay and the Iſle of Liepueres or Hares lie Northnortheaſt & Southſouthweſt, and are diſtant 5. leagues. The entrance of Saguenay and the Iſle of Raquelle are Northnorthweſt, and Southſouthweſt, and are diſtant three leagues. The Iſle of Hares is in 48. and $\frac{1}{16}$ of a degree. And the land on the North ſide is higher, and in ſome places there are high mountaines. And from the Iſle of Hares vnto the Iſle of Orleans the riuer is not paſt 4 or 5 leagues broad. Betweene the Iſle of Hares and the high land on the North ſide the ſea is not paſt a league and an halfe broad, and it is very deepe, for it is aboue 100. fathoms deepe in the middeſt. To the Eaſt of the Iſle of Hares there are 2 or 3 ſmall Iſles and rockes. And from hence to the Iſle Des Coudres or of Filbeards, all is nothing but Iſles and rockes on the South ſhore: and towards the North the ſea is fayre and deepe. The Iſle of Hares and the Iſle of Filbeards lie northeaſt, Weſt and Southweſt, and they are diſtant 12 leagues. And you muſt alwayes run along the high land on the north ſhore; for on the other ſhore there is nothing but rocks. And you muſt paſſe by the ſide of the Iſle of Filbeards, and the riuer there is not paſt a quarter of a league broad, and you muſt ſayle in the middeſt of the chanel: and in the middeſt runneth the beſt paſſage either at an hie or a low water, becauſe the ſea runneth there ſtrongly, and there are great dangers of rocks, and you had neede of good ancre and cable. The iſle of Filbeards is a ſmall iſle, about one league long, and halfe a league broad, but they are all banks of ſand. The iſle of Filberds ſtands in 47. deg. and $\frac{3}{4}$. The iſle of Filberds and the iſle of Orleans lie northeaſt and ſouthweſt, and they are diſtant 10 leagues, and thou muſt paſſe by the high land on the northſide about a quarter of a league, becauſe that in the midſt of the riuer there is nothing but ſholds and rocks. And towards the South ſhore there is a ledge of Iſles all couered with trees, and they end ouer againſt the point of the Iſle of Orleans. And the poynt of the iſle of Orleans toward the Northeaſt is in 47 degrees and one terce of a degree. And the Iſle of Orleans is a fayre Iſle, all couered with trees euen vnto the riuers ſide: and it is about 5 leagues long, and a league and an halfe broade. And on the North ſhore there is another Riuer, which falleth into the mayne Riuer at the ende of the Iſland: and Shippes may very well paſſe there. From the middeſt of the Iſle vnto Canada the Riuer runneth Weſt; and from the place of Canada vnto France-Roy the riuer turneth Weſt Southweſt: and from the Weſt ende of the Iſle to Canada is but one league; and vnto France-Roy 4 leagues. And when thou art come to the end of the Iſle, thou ſhalt ſee a great Riuer which falleth fifteene or twenty fathoms downe from a rocke, and maketh a terrible noyſe. The extenſion of all theſe lands, vpon iuſt occaſion is called New France. For it is as good and as temperate as France, and in the ſame latitude. And the reaſon wherefore it is colder in the Winter is, becauſe the freſh Riuer is naturally more colde then the Sea; and it is alſo broad and deepe: and in ſome places it is halfe a league and aboue in breadth. And alſo becauſe the land is not tylled, nor full of people, and is all full of Woods, which is the cauſe of colde, becauſe there is not ſtore of fire nor cattel. And the ſunne hath his Meridian as high as the Meridian at Rochel: and it is noone here when the Sunne is at South Southweſt at Rochel. And here the north ſtarre by the compaſſe ſtandeth North northeaſt. And when at Rochel it is noone, it is but halfe an houre paſt nine at France-Roy. From the ſayde place vnto the Ocean ſea and the coaſt of New France, is not aboue 50 leagues diſtance. And from the entrance of Norumbega vnto Florida are 300 leagues: and from this place of France-Roy to Hochelaga, are about 80 leagues: and vnto yͤ Iſle of Raſus 30 leagues. And I doubt not but Norumbega entreth into the riuer of Canada, and vnto the Sea of Saguenay. And from the Fort of France-Roy vntill a man come foorth of the Grande Bay is not aboue 230 leagues. And the courſe is Northeaſt and Weſt Southweſt not aboue 5 degrees and $\frac{1}{3}$ difference: and reckon 16 leagues and an halfe to a degree. By the nature of the climate the lands toward Hochelaga are ſtill better and better, and more fruitfull. And this land is fitte for Figges and Peares. And I thinke that golde and ſiluer will be found here, according as the people of the countrey ſay. Theſe landes lye ouer againſt Tartarie, and I doubt not but that they ſtretch toward Aſia, according to the roundneſſe of the world. And therefore it were good to haue a ſmall Shippe of 70 tunnes to diſcouer the coaſt of New France on the backe ſide of Florida: for I haue bene at a Bay as farre as 42 degrees betweene Norumbega and Florida, and I haue not ſearched the ende thereof, and I

And there are goodly Forreſts, wherein men may hunt. And there are great ſtore of ſtagges, deere, porkepicks, and the Sauages ſay there bee Unicornes. Fowle there are in abundance, as buſtards, wilde geeſe, cranes, turtle doues, rauens, crowes, and many other birds. All things which are ſowen there, are not paſt 2. or 3. dayes in comming vp out of the ground. I haue tolde in one eare of corne an hundred and twenty graines, like the corne of France. And ye neede not to ſowe your Wheate vntill March, and it will be ripe in the middeſt of Auguſt. The waters are better and perfecter then in France. And if the Countrey were tilled and repleniſhed with people, it would be as hotte as Rochel. And the reaſon why it ſnoweth there oftener then in France is, becauſe it raineth there but ſeldome: for the raine is conuerted into ſnowes.

All things aboue mentioned, are true.

Iohn Alphonſe made this Voyage with Monſieur Roberual.

There is a pardon to be ſeene for the pardoning of Monſieur de Saine terre, Lieutenant of the ſayd Monſieur de Roberual, giuen in Canada in the preſence of the ſayde Iohn Alphonſe.

The Voyage of Iohn Francis de la Roche, knight, Lord of Roberual, to the Countries of Canada, Saguenai, and Hochelaga, with three tall Ships, and two hundred perſons, both men, women, and children, begun in April, 1542. In which parts he remayned the ſame ſummer, and all the next winter.

SIr Iohn Francis de la Roche knight, lord of Roberual, appoynted by the king as his Lieutenant general in the countreis of Canada, Saguenay, and Hochelaga, furniſhed 3. tall Ships, chiefly at the kings coſt: And hauing in his fleete 200. perſons, aſwel men as women, accompanied with diuers gentlemen of qualitie, as namely with Monſieur Saine-terre his lieutenãt, l'Eſpiney his Enſigne, captain Guinecourt, Monſieur Noire fontaine, Dieu lamont, Frote, la Broſſe, Francis de Mire, la Salle, and Roieze, and Iohn Alfonſe of Xanctoigne an excellent pilot, ſet ſayle from Rochel the 16. of April 1542. The ſame day about noone we came athwart of Cheſe de boys, where we were enforced to ſtay the night following. On Munday the ſeuenteenth of the ſayde Moneth wee departed from Cheſe deboys. The winde ſerued vs notably for a time: but within fewe dayes it came quite contrary, which hindered our iourney for a long ſpace: For wee were ſuddenly enforced to turne backe, and to ſeeke Harborough in Belle Iſle, on the coaſt of Bretaigne, where wee ſtayed ſo long, and had ſuch contrary weather by the way, that wee could not reach Newfound lande, vntill the ſeuenth of Iune. The eight of this Moneth wee entred into the Rode of Saint Iohn, where wee founde ſeuenteene Shippes of fiſhers. While wee made ſomewhat long abode heere, Iaques Cartier and his company returning from Canada, whither hee was ſent with fiue ſayles the yeere before, arriued in the very ſame Harbour. Who, after hee had done his duetie to our Generall, tolde him that hee had brought certaine Diamonts, and a quantitie of Golde ore, which was found in the Countrey. Which ore the Sunday next enſuing was tryed in a Furnace, and found to be good.

Diamonts.

Iaques Cartier ſtole away.

Furthermore, hee enformed the Generall that hee could not with his ſmall company withſtand the Sauages, which went about dayly to annoy him: and that this was the cauſe of his returne into France. Neuertheleſſe, hee and his company commended the Countrey to bee very rich and fruitfull. But when our Generall being furniſhed with ſufficient forces, commaunded him to goe backe againe with him, hee and his company, mooued as it ſeemeth with ambition, becauſe they would haue all the glory of the diſcouerie of thoſe partes themſelues, ſtole priuily away the next night from vs, and without taking their leaues departed home for Bretaigne.

Wee ſpent the greateſt part of Iune in this Harbour of Saint Iohn, partly in furniſhing our ſelues with freſh water, whereof wee ſtoode in very great neede by the way, and partly in compoſing and taking vp of a quarell betweene ſome of our Countreymen, and certaine Portugals. At length, about the laſt of the aforeſayde Moneth, wee departed hence, and entred into the Grand Baye, and paſſed by the Iſle of Aſcenſion: and finally arriued foure leagues Weſtward of the Iſle of Orleans. In this place wee found a conuenient Harbour for our ſhipping, where wee caſt anchor, went a ſhoare with our people, and choſe out a conuenient place to fortifie our ſelues in, fitte to commaund the mayne Riuer, and of ſtrong ſituation againſt all inuaſion of enemies. Thus towarde the ende of Iuly, wee brought our victuals and other munitions and prouiſions on ſhore, and began to trauaile in fortifying of our ſelues.

Iuly.

Of the Fort of France-Roy, and that which was done there.

HAuing deſcribed the beginning, the middeſt, and the ende of the Voyage made by Monſieur Roberual in the Countreyes of Canada, Hochelaga, Saguenay, and other Countreyes in the Weſt partes: He ſayled ſo farre, (as it is declared in other bookes) that hee arriued in the ſayde Countrey, accompanyed with two hundred perſons, ſouldiers, mariners, and common people, with all furniture neceſſary for a Fleete. The ſayde Generall at his firſt arriuall built a fayre Fort, neere and ſomewhat Weſtward aboue Canada, which is very beautifull to beholde, and of great force, ſituated vpon an high mountaine, wherein there were two courtes of buyldings, a great Towre, and another of fortie or fiftie foote long: wherein there were diuers Chambers, an Hall, a Kitchine, houſes of office, Sellers high and lowe, and neere vnto it were an Ouen and Milles, and a ſtoue to warme men in, and a Well before the houſe. And the buylding was ſituated vpon the great Riuer of Canada, called France prime, by Monſieur Roberual. There was alſo at the foote of the mountaine another lodging, part whereof was a great Towre of two ſtories high, two courtes of good buylding, where at the firſt all our victuals, and whatſoeuer was brought with vs was ſent to be kept: and neere vnto that Towre there is another ſmall riuer. In theſe two places aboue and beneath, all the meaner ſort was lodged.

France prime.

And in the Moneth of Auguſt, and in the beginning of September euery man was occupied in ſuch worke as eche one was able to doe. But the fourteenth of September, our aforeſayde Generall ſent backe into France two Shippes which had brought his furniture, and he appoynted for Admirall Monſieur de Saine-terre, and the other captaine was Monſieur Guine-court, to carie newes vnto the King, and to come backe againe vnto him the yeere next enſuing, furniſhed with victuals and other things, as it ſhould pleaſe the King: and alſo to bring newes out of France how the King accepted certaine Diamants which were ſent him, and were found in this countrey.

August 1542.

September 14.

After theſe two Shippes were departed, conſideration was had how they ſhould doe, and how they might paſſe out the Winter in this place. Firſt they tooke a view of the victuals, and it was found that they fell out ſhort: and they were ſcantled ſo, that in eche meſſe they had but two loaues weighing a pound a piece, and halfe a pound of biefe. They ate Bacon at dinner with halfe a pound of butter: and Biefe at ſupper, and about two handfuls of Beanes without butter.

The proportion of their victuals.

On the Wedneſday, Friday, and Saturday they did eate dry Cod, and ſometimes they did eate it greene at dinner with butter, and they ate of Porpoſes and beanes at ſupper.

About that time the Sauages brought vs great ſtore of Aloſes, which is a fiſh ſomewhat redde like a Salmon, to get kniues and other ſmall trifles for them.

In the ende many of our people fell ſicke of a certaine diſeaſe in their legges, reynes, and ſtomacke, ſo that they ſeemed to bee depriued of all their lymmes, and there dyed thereof about fiftie.

Note that the yce began to breake vp in April.

The length of the winter.

Monſieur Roberual vſed very good iuſtice, and puniſhed euery man according to his offence. One whoſe name was Michael Gaillon, was hanged for his theft. Iohn of Nantes was layde in yrons, and kept priſoner for his offence, and others alſo were put in yrons, and diuers were whipped, as well men as women: by which meanes they liued in quiet.

They had women with them.

The maners of the Sauages.

TO declare vnto you the ſtate of the Sauages, they are people of a goodly ſtature, and well made, they are very white, but they are all naked: and if they were apparelled as the French are, they would bee as white and as fayre: but they paynt themſelues for feare of heat and ſunne burning.

Their apparell.

So haue they of Ceuola, and Quiuira, and Meta Incognita.

Their victuals.

They remoue from place to place.

Fiſh.

Beaſtes.

Fowle.

In ſtead of apparell, they weare ſkinnes vpon them like mantles; and they haue a ſmall payre of breeches, wherewith they couer their priuities, aſwell men as women. They haue hoſen and ſhooes of lether excellently made. And they haue no ſhirts: neither couer they their heads, but their hayre is truſſed vp aboue the crowne of their heads, and palyted or broyded. Touching their victuals, they eate good meate, but all vnſalted, but they drye it, and afterward they broyle it, aſwell fiſh as fleſh. They haue no certaine dwelling place, and they goe from place to place, as they thinke they may beſt finde foode, as Aloſes in one place, and other fiſh, Salmons, Sturgions, Mullets, Surmullets, Barz, Carpes, Eeles, Pinperneaux, and other freſh water fiſh, and ſtore of Porpoſes. They feede alſo of Stagges, wilde Bores, Bugles, Porkeſpynes, and ſtore of other wilde beaſtes. And there is as great ſtore of Fowle as they can deſire.

Their bread of great Myl or Maiz.

Drinke of Seale oyle at their great feaſts.

Their gouernment.

Touching their bread, they make very good: and it is of great myll: and they liue very well; for they take care for nothing elſe.

They drinke Seale oyle, but this is at their great feaſts.

They haue a King in euery Countrey, and are wonderfull obedient vnto him: and they doe him honour according vnto their maner and faſhion. And when they trauayle from place to place, they cary all their goods with them in their boates.

The weomen nurſe their children with the breaſt, and they ſit continually, and are wrapped about the bellies with ſkinnes of furre.

The voyage of Monſieur Roberual from his Fort in Canada vnto Saguenay, the fifth of Iune, 1543.

The 5. of Iune

The 6. of Iune.

MOnſieur Roberual the kings Lieutenant generall in the Countries of Canada, Saguenay, and Hochelaga, departed toward the ſaid prouince of Saguenay on the Tueſday the 5. day of Iune 1543. after ſupper: and he with all his furniture was imbarked to make the ſayd voyage. But vpon a certaine occaſion they lay in the Rode ouer againſt the place before mentioned: but on the Wedneſday about ſixe of the clocke in the morning they ſet ſayle, and ſayled againſt the ſtreame: in which voyage their whole furniture was of eight barks, aſwell great as ſmall, and to the number of threeſcore and ten perſons, with the aforeſayd Generall.

The Generall left behinde him in the aforeſayde place and Fort thirtie perſons to remayne there vntill his returne from Saguenay, which hee appoynted to bee the firſt of Iuly, or elſe they ſhould returne into France. And hee left there behinde him but two Barkes to cary the ſayde thirtie perſons, and the furniture which was there, while hee ſtayed ſtill in the Countrey.

Monſieur de Royeze.

And for effectuating hereof, he left as his Lieutenant a gentleman named Monſieur de Royeze, to whom he gaue commiſſion, and charged all men to obey him, and to be at the commandement of the ſayd lieutenant.

The victuals which were left for their mayntenance vntill the ſayd firſt day of Iuly, were receiued by the ſayd Lieutenant Royeze.

The 14. of Iune.

On Thurſday the 14. of Iune Monſieur de l'Eſpiney, la Broſſe, Monſieur Frete, Monſieur Longeual, and others, returned from the Generall, from the voyage of Saguenay.

And note that eight men and one Barke were drowned and loſt, among whom was Monſieur de Noirefontaine, and one named la Vaſſeur of Conſtance.

The 19. of Iune.

Maiz.

The 22. of Iuly 1543.

On Tueſday the 19. of Iune aforeſayd, there came from the Generall, Monſieur de Villeneufue, Talebot, and three others, which brought ſixeſcore pounds weight of their corne, and letters to ſtay yet vntill Magdalentyde, which is the 22. day of Iuly.

The reſt of this Voyage is wanting.

THE VOYAGES AND NAVIGATIONS OF the Engliſh nation to Virginia, and the ſeuerall diſcoueries therof chiefly at the charges of the honourable Sir Walter Ralegh knight, from 33 to 40 degrees of latitude: together with the ſucceſſe of the Engliſh colonies there planted; as likewiſe a deſcription of the Countrey, with the Inhabitants, and the manifold commodities. Whereunto are annexed the Patents, letters, diſcourſes, &c. to this part belonging.

The letters patents, granted by the Queenes Maieſtie to M. VValter Ralegh now Knight, for the diſcouering and planting of new lands and Countries, to continue the ſpace of 6. yeeres and no more.

Elizabeth by the grace of God of England, France and Ireland Queene, defender of the faith, &c. To all people to whom theſe preſents ſhal come, greeting. Know ye that of our eſpecial grace, certaine ſcience, & meere motion, we haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors doe giue and grant to our truſty and welbeloued ſeruant Walter Ralegh Eſquire, and to his heires and aſſignes for euer, free liberty & licence from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, to diſcouer, ſearch, finde out, and view ſuch remote, heathen and barbarous lands, countreis, and territories, not actually poſſeſſed of any Chriſtian prince, nor inhabited by Chriſtian people, as to him, his heires and aſſignes, and to euery or any of them ſhall ſeeme good, and the ſame to haue, holde, occupy & enioy to him, his heires and aſſignes for euer, with all prerogatiues, commodities, iuriſdictiõs, royalties, priuiledges, franchiſes and preeminences, thereto or therabouts both by ſea and land, whatſoeuer we by our letters patents may grant, and as we or any of our noble progenitors haue heretofore granted to any perſon or perſons, bodies politique or corporate: and the ſaide Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and all ſuch as from time to time, by licence of vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, ſhal goe or trauaile thither to inhabite or remaine, there to build and fortifie, at the diſcretion of the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires & aſſignes, the ſtatutes or act of Parliament made againſt fugitiues, or againſt ſuch as ſhall depart, remaine or continue out of our Realme of England without licence, or any other ſtatute, act, law, or any ordinance whatſoeuer to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

And we do likewiſe by theſe preſents, of our eſpecial grace, meere motion, and certaine knowledge, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and graunt full authoritie, libertie and power to the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them, that he and they, and euery or any of them, ſhall and may at all and euery time and times hereafter, haue, take, and leade in the ſayde voyage, and trauaile thitherward, or to inhabite there with him or them, and euery or any of them, ſuch, and ſo many of our ſubiects as ſhall willingly accompany him or them, and euery or any of them: and to whom alſo we doe by theſe preſents, giue full libertie and authoritie in that behalfe, and alſo to haue, take and employ, and vſe ſufficient ſhipping and furniture for the tranſportations, and Nauigations in that behalfe, ſo that none of the ſame perſons or any of them be ſuch as hereafter ſhall be reſtrained by vs, our heires or ſucceſſors.

And further that the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them, ſhall haue, holde, occupie and enioy to him, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them for euer, all the ſoyle of all ſuch landes, territories, and Countreis, ſo to be diſcouered and poſſeſſed as aforeſayd, and of all ſuch Cities, Caſtles, Townes, Villages, and places in the ſame, with the right, royalties, franchiſes, and iuriſdictions, as well marine as other within the ſayd landes, or Countreis, or the ſeas thereunto adioyning, to be had, or vſed, with full power to diſpoſe thereof, and of euery part in fee ſimple or otherwiſe, according to the order of the lawes of England, as neere as the ſame conueniently may be, at his, and their wil and pleaſure, to any perſons then being, or that ſhall remaine within the allegiance of vs, our heires and ſucceſſors: reſeruing alwayes to vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, for all ſeruices, dueties, and demaunds, the fift part of all the oare of golde and ſiluer, that from time to time, and at all times after ſuch diſcouerie, ſubduing and poſſeſſing, ſhall be there gotten and obteined: All which lands, Countries, and territories ſhall for euer be holden of the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, of vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, by homage, and by the ſayd payment of the ſayd fift part, reſerued onely for all ſeruices.

And moreouer, we do by theſe preſents, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and grant licence to the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires, and aſſignes, and euery of them, that he, and they, and euery or any of them, ſhall and may from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, for his and their defence, encounter and expulſe, repell and reſiſt aſwell by ſea as by lande, and by all other wayes whatſoeuer, all and euery ſuch perſon and perſons whatſoeuer, as without the eſpeciall liking and licence of the ſayd Walter Ralegh, and of his heires and aſſignes, ſhall attempt to inhabite within the ſayde Countreyes, or any of them, or within the ſpace of two hundreth leagues neere to the place or places within ſuch Countreyes as aforeſayde (if they ſhall not bee before planted or inhabited within the limits as aforeſayd with the ſubiects of any Chriſtian Prince being in amitie with vs) where the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires, or aſſignes, or any of them, or his, or their, or any of their aſſociats or company, ſhall within ſixe yeeres (next enſuing) make their dwellings or abidings, or that ſhall enterpriſe or attempt at any time hereafter vnlawfully to annoy, eyther by Sea or Lande the ſayde Walter Ralegh, his heires or aſſignes, or any of them, or his or their, or any of his or their companies: giuing, and graunting by theſe preſents further power and authoritie to the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, to take and ſurpriſe by all maner of meanes whatſoeuer, all and euery thoſe perſon or perſons, with their Shippes, Veſſels, and other goods and furniture, which without the licence of the ſayde Walter Ralegh, or his heires, or aſſignes, as aforeſayd, ſhalbe found traffiquing into any Harbour, or Harbours, Creeke, or Creekes, within the limits aforeſayd, (the ſubiects of our Realmes and Dominions, and all other perſons in amitie with vs, trading to the Newfound lands for fiſhing as heretofore they haue commonly vſed, or being driuen by force of a tempeſt, or ſhipwracke onely excepted:) and thoſe perſons, and euery of them, with their ſhippes, veſſels, goods, and furniture to deteine and poſſeſſe as of good and lawfull prize, according to the diſcretion of him the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires, and aſſignes, and euery, or any of them. And for vniting in more perfect league and amitie, of ſuch Countreyes, landes, and territories ſo to be poſſeſſed and inhabited as aforeſayd with our Realmes of England and Ireland, and the better incouragement of men to theſe enterpriſes: we doe by theſe preſents, graunt and declare that all ſuch Countries, ſo hereafter to be poſſeſſed and inhabited as is aforeſayd, from thenceforth ſhall be of the allegiance of vs, our heires and ſucceſſours. And wee doe graunt to the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires, and aſſignes, and to all, and euery of them, and to all, and euery other perſon and perſons, being of our allegiance, whoſe names ſhall be noted or entred in ſome of our Courts of recorde within our Realme of England, that with the aſſent of the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires or aſſignes, ſhall in his iourneis for diſcouerie, or in the iourneis for conqueſt, hereafter trauaile to ſuch lands, countreis and territories, as aforeſayd, and to their, and to euery of their heires, that they, and euery or any of them, being eyther borne within our ſayde Realmes of England or Irelande, or in any other place within our allegiance, and which hereafter ſhall be inhabiting within any the Lands, Countreyes, and Territories, with ſuch licence, (as aforeſayd) ſhall and may haue all the priuiledges of free Denizens, and perſons natiue of England, and within our allegiance in ſuch like ample maner and forme, as if they were borne and perſonally reſident within our ſaid Realme of England, any law, cuſtome, or vſage to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Note.

Free denization granted.

And foraſmuch as vpon the finding out, diſcouering, or inhabiting of ſuch remote lands, countries, and territories as aforeſaid, it ſhalbe neceſſary for the ſafety of all men, that ſhall aduenture themſelues in thoſe iourneyes or voyages, to determine to liue together in Chriſtian peace, and ciuill quietneſſe eche with other, whereby euery one may with more pleaſure and profit enioy that whereunto they ſhall atteine with great paine and perill, wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, are likewiſe pleaſed and contented, and by theſe preſents doe giue & grant to the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes for euer, that he and they, and euery or any of them, ſhall and may from time to time for euer hereafter, within the ſaid mentioned remote lands and countries, in the way by the ſeas thither, and from thence, haue full and meere power and authoritie to correct, puniſh, pardon, gouerne, and rule by their and euery or any of their good diſcretions and policies, aſwell in cauſes capitall, or criminall, as ciuil, both marine and other, all ſuch our ſubiects, as ſhal from time to time aduenture themſelues in the ſaid iourneis or voyages, or that ſhall at any time hereafter inhabite any ſuch lands, countreis, or territories as aforeſayd, or that ſhall abide within 200. leagues of any of the ſayde place or places, where the ſayde Walter Ralegh, his heires or aſſignes, or any of them, or any of his or their aſſociats or companies, ſhall inhabite within 6. yeeres next enſuing the date hereof, according to ſuch ſtatutes, lawes and ordinances as ſhall be by him the ſayd Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and euery or any of them deuiſed, or eſtabliſhed, for the better gouernment of the ſaid people as aforeſaid. So alwayes as the ſaid ſtatutes, lawes, and ordinances may be,as nere as conueniently may bee, agreeable to the forme of the lawes, ſtatutes, gouernement, or pollicie of England, and alſo ſo as they be not againſt the true Chriſtian faith, nowe profeſſed in the Church of England, nor in any wiſe to withdrawe any of the ſubiectes or people of thoſe lands or places from the alleageance of vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, as their immediate Soueraigne vnder God.

And further, we doe by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors,giue and grant ful power and authoritie to our truſtie and welbeloued Counſailour Sir William Cecill knight, Lorde Burghley,our high Treaſourer of England,and to the Lorde Treaſourer of England for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors for the time being,and to the priuie Couſaile of vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, or any foure or more of them for the time being,that he, they,or any foure or more of them,ſhall and may from time to time, and at all times hereafter, vnder his or their handes or Seales by vertue of theſe preſents,authoriſe and licence the ſaide Walter Ralegh,his heires and aſſignes,and euery or any of them by him, & by themſelues,or by their,or any of their ſufficient Atturneis, Deputies, Officers,Miniſters,Factors,and ſeruants, to imbarke & tranſport out of our Realme of England and Ireland,and the Dominions thereof,all or any of his or their goods,and all or any the goods of his and their aſſociats and companies, and euery or any of them, with ſuch other neceſſaries and commodities of any our Realmes, as to the ſayde Lorde Treaſurer, or foure or more of the priuie Counſaile,of vs our heires and ſucceſſors for the time being(as aforeſaid)ſhalbe from time to time by his or their wiſedomes, or diſcretions thought meete and conuenient, for the better reliefe and ſupportation of him the ſayde Walter Ralegh,his heires, and aſſignes, and euery or any of them, and of his or their or any of their aſſociats and companies, any act, ſtatute, law, or any thing to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

Prouided alwayes,and our wil and pleaſure is,and we do hereby declare to all Chriſtian kings, princes,and ſtates, that if the ſayde Walter Ralegh, his heires or aſſignes,or any of them, or any other by their licence or appointment, ſhall at any time or times hereafter robbe or ſpoile by ſea or by land, or doe any acte of vniuſt or vnlawfull hoſtilitie, to any of the ſubiects of vs, our heires or ſucceſſors, or to any of the ſubiects of any the kings,princes,rulers, Gouernours,or eſtates, being then in perfect league and amitie with vs, our heires and ſucceſſours,and that vpon ſuch iniurie,or vpon iuſt complaint of any ſuch Prince, Ruler, Gouernour or eſtate, or their ſubiects, wee, our heires and ſucceſſors,ſhall make open Proclamation within any the portes of our Realme of England, that the ſaide Walter Ralegh,his heires and aſſignes, and adherents, or any to whom theſe our Letters patents may extende, ſhall within the termes to bee limited, by ſuch Proclamation, make full reſtitution,and ſatiſfaction of all ſuch iniuries done : ſo as both we and the ſaid Princes, or other ſo complaining,may hold vs and themſelues fully contented: And that if the ſaid Walcer Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, ſhall not make or cauſe to be made ſatiſfaction accordingly within ſuch time ſo to be limitted,that then it ſhal be lawful to vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, to put the ſayde Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and adherents, and all the inhabitants of the ſaide places to be diſcouered(as is aforeſaid) or any of them out of our allegeance and protection,and that from and after ſuch time of putting out of protection of the ſaide Walter Ralegh, his heires, aſſignes and adherents, and others ſo to be put out, and the ſaid places within their habitation,poſſeſſion and rule, ſhall be out of our allegeance and protection, and free for all Princes and others to purſue with hoſtilitie,as being not our ſubiects,nor by vs any way to be auouched, maintained,or defended,nor to be holden as any of ours, nor to our protection,or dominion,or allegeance any way belonging: for that expreſſe mention of the cleere yeerely value of the certaintie of the premiſſes,or any part thereof,or of any other gift,or grant by vs,or any our progenitors, or predeceſſors to the ſaid Walter Ralegh, before this time made in theſe preſents bee not expreſſed, or any other grant, ordinance, prouiſion, proclamation, or reſtraint to the contary thereof, before this time giuen,ordained,or prouided,or any other thing, cauſe, or matter whatſoeuer,in any wiſe notwithſtanding. In witneſſe whereof, wee haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made Patents. Witneſſe our ſelues, at Weſtminſter the fiue and twentie day of March, in the ſixe and twentith yeere of our Raigne.

The firſt voyage made to the coaſts of America, with two barks, wherein were Captaines M. Philip Amadas, and M. Arthur Barlowe, who diſcouered part of the Countrey now called Virginia, Anno 1584. Written by one of the ſaid Captaines, and ſent to ſir Walter Ralegh knight, at whoſe charge and direction, the ſaid voyage was ſet forth.

The 27 day of April, in the yeere of our redemption, 1584 we departed the Weſt of England, with two barkes well furniſhed with men and victuals, hauing receiued our laſt and perfect directions by your letters, confirming the former inſtructions, and commandements deliuered by your ſelfe at our leauing the riuer of Thames. And I thinke it a matter both vnnéceſſary, for the manifeſt diſcouerie of the Countrey, as alſo for tedIouſneſſe ſake, to remember vnto you the diurnall of our courſe, ſayling thither and returning: onely I haue preſumed to preſent vnto you this briefe diſcourſe, by which you may iudge how profitable this land is likely to ſucceede, as well to your ſelfe, (by whoſe direction and charge, and by whoſe ſeruantes this our diſcouerie hath beene performed) as alſo to her Highneſſe, and the Common wealth, in which we hope your wiſedome wilbe ſatiſfied, conſidering that as much by vs hath bene brought to light, as by thoſe ſmal meanes, and number of men we had, could any way haue bene expected, or hoped for.

A Southerly courſe not greatly needful for Virginia.

The tenth of May we arriued at the Canaries, and the tenth of Iune in this preſent yeere, we were fallen with the Iſlands of the Weſt Indies, keeping a more Southeaſterly courſe then was needefull, becauſe wee doubted that the current of the Bay of Mexcio, diſbogging betweene the Cape of Florida and Hauana, had bene of greater force then afterwardes we found it to bee. At which Iſlands we found the ayre very vnwholſome, and our men grew for the moſt part ill diſpoſed: ſo that hauing refreſhed our ſelues with ſweet water, & freſh victuall, we departed the twelfth day of our arriuall there. Theſe Iſlands, with the reſt adioyning, are ſo well knowen to your ſelfe, and to many others, as I will not trouble you with the remembrance of them.

A ſweet ſmell from the land.

The ſecond of Iuly, we found ſhole water, wher we ſmelt ſo ſweet, and ſo ſtrong a ſmel, as if we had bene in the midſt of ſome delicate garden abounding with all kinde of odoriferous flowers, by which we were aſſured, that the land could not be farre diſtant: and keeping good watch, and bearing but ſlacke ſaile, the fourth of the ſame moneth we arriued vpon the coaſt, which we ſuppoſed to be a continent and firme lande, and we ſayled along the ſame a hundred and twentie Engliſh miles before we could finde any entrance, or riuer iſſuing into the Sea.

The firſt riuer.

The firſt that appeared vnto vs, we entred, though not without ſome difficultie, & caſt anker about three harquebuz-ſhot within the hauens mouth, on the left hand of the ſame: and after thankes giuen to God for our ſafe arriuall thither, we manned our boats, and went to view the land next adioyning, and “ to take poſſeſſion of the ſame, in the right of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, as rightfull Queene, and Princeſſe of the ſame, and after deliuered the ſame ouer to your vſe, according to her Maieſties grant, and letters patents, vnder her Highneſſe great Seale. Which being performed, according to the ceremonies vſed in ſuch enterpriſes, we viewed the land about vs, being, whereas we firſt landed, very ſandie and low towards the waters ſide, but ſo full of grapes, as the very beating and ſurge of the Sea overflowed them, of which we found ſuch plentie, as well there as in all places elſe, both on the ſand and on the greene ſoile on the hils, as in the plaines, as well on euery little ſhrubbe, as alſo climing towardes the tops of high Cedars, that I thinke in all the world the like abundance is not to be found: and my ſelfe hauing ſeene thoſe parts of Europe that moſt abound, find ſuch difference as were incredible to be written.

“ July 13 poſſeſſion taken.

Abundance of grapes.

The Iſle of Wokokon.

We paſſed from the Sea ſide towardes the toppes of thoſe hilles next adioyning, being but of meane higth, and from thence wee behelde the Sea on both ſides to the North, and to the South, finding no ende any of both wayes. This lande lay ſtretching it ſelfe to the Weſt, which after wee found to bee but an Iſland of twentie miles long, and not aboue ſixe miles broade. Vnder the banke or hill whereon we ſtoode, we behelde the vallyes repleniſhed with goodly Cedar trees, and hauing diſcharged our harquebuz-ſhot, ſuch a flocke of Cranes (the moſt part white) aroſe vnder vs, with ſuch a cry redoubled by many ecchoes, as if an armie of men had ſhowted all together.

Goodly Cedars, Pines, Cypres, Saſſaphras.

This Iſland had many goodly woodes full of Deere, Conies, Hares, and Fowle, euen in the middeſt of Summer in incredible abundance. The woodes are not ſuch as you finde in Bohemia, Moſcouia, or Hercynia, barren and fruitles, but the higheſt and reddeſt Cedars of the world, farre bettering the Ceders of the Açores, of the Indies, or Lybanus, Pynes, Cypres, Saſſaphras, the Lentiſk, or the tree that beareth the Maſticke, the tree that beareth the rine of blacke Sinamon, of which Maſter Winter brought from the ſtreights of Magellan, and many other of excellent ſmell and qualitie. We remained by the ſide of this Iſland two whole dayes before we ſaw any people of the Countrey: the third day we eſpied one ſmall boate rowing towardes vs, hauing in it three perſons: this boat came to the Iſland ſide, foure harquebuz-ſhot from our ſhippes, and there two of the people remaining, the third came along the ſhore ſide towards vs, and wee being then all within boord, he walked vp and downe vpon the point of the land next vnto vs: then the Maſter and the Pilot of the Admirall, Simon Ferdinando, and the Captaine Philip Amadas, my ſelfe, and others rowed to the land, whoſe comming this fellow attended, neuer making any ſhewe of feare or doubt. And after he had ſpoken of many things not vnderſtood by vs, we brought him with his owne good liking, aboord the ſhips, and gaue him a ſhirt, a hat & ſome other things, and made him taſte of our wine, and our meat, which he liked very wel: and after hauing viewed both barks, he departed, and went to his owne boate againe, which hee had left in a little Coue or Creeke adioyning: aſſoone as hee was two bow ſhoot into the water, he fell to fiſhing, and in leſſe then halfe an houre, he had laden his boate as deepe, as it could ſwimme, with which hee came againe to the point of the lande, and there he deuided his fiſh into two parts, pointing one part to the ſhip, and the other to the pinneſſe: which, after he had (as much as he might) requited the former benefites receaued, departed out of our ſight.

Conference with a Sauage.

Abundance of fiſh.

The next day there came vnto vs diuers boates, and in one of them the Kings brother, accompanied with fortie or fiftie men, very handſome and goodly people, and in their behauiour as mannerly and ciuill as any of Europe. His name was Granganimeo, and the king is called Wingina, the countrey Wingandacoa, and now by her Maieſtie Virginia. The maner of his comming was in this ſort: hee left his boates altogether as the firſt man did a little from the ſhippes by the ſhore, and came along to the place ouer againſt the ſhips, followed with fortie men. When he came to the place, his ſeruants ſpread a long matte vpon the ground, on which he ſate downe, and at the other ende of the matte foure others of his companie did the like, the reſt of his men ſtood round about him, ſomewhat a farre off: when we came to the ſhore to him with our weapons, hee neuer mooued from his place, nor any of the other foure, nor neuer miſtruſted any harme to be offred from vs, but ſitting ſtill he beckoned vs to come and ſit by him, which we performed: and being ſet hee made all ſignes of ioy and welcome, ſtriking on his head and his breaſt and afterwardes on ours, to ſhewe wee were all one, ſmiling and making ſhewe the beſt he could of all loue, and familiaritie. After hee had made a long ſpeech vnto vs, wee preſented him with diuers things, which hee receiued very ioyfully, and thankefully. None of the company durſt ſpeake one worde all the time: onely the foure which were at the other ende, ſpake one in the others eare very ſoftly.

The arriuall of the kings brother.

The King is greatly obeyed, and his brothers and children reuerenced: the King himſelfe in perſon was at our being there, ſore wounded in a fight which hee had with the King of the next countrey, called Wingina, and was ſhot in two places through the body, and once cleane through the thigh, but yet he recouered: by reaſon whereof and for that hee lay at the chiefe towne of the country, being ſixe dayes iourney off, we ſaw him not at all.

After we had preſented this his brother with ſuch things as we thought he liked, wee likewiſe gaue ſomewhat to the other that ſat with him on the matte: but preſently he aroſe and tooke all from them and put it into his owne baſket, making ſignes and tokens, that all things ought to bee deliuered vnto him, and the reſt were but his ſeruants, and followers. A day or two after this, we fell to trading with them, exchanging ſome things that we had, for Chamoys, Buffe, and Deere ſkinnes: when we ſhewed him all our packet of merchandize, of all things that he ſawe, a bright tinne diſh moſt pleaſed him, which hee preſently tooke vp and clapt it before his breaſt, and after made a hole in the brimme thereof and hung it about his necke, making ſignes that it would defende him againſt his enemies arrowes: for thoſe people maintaine a deadly and terrible warre, with the people and King adioyning. We exchanged our tinne diſh for twentie ſkinnes, woorth twentie Crownes, or twentie Nobles: and a copper kettle for fiftie ſkins woorth fifty Crownes. They offered vs good exchange for our hatchets, and axes, and for kniues, and would haue giuen any thing for ſwordes: but wee would not depart with any. After two or three dayes the Kings brother came aboord the ſhippes, and dranke wine, and eat of our meat and of our bread, and liked exceedingly thereof: and after a few dayes ouerpaſſed, he brought his wife with him to the ſhips, his daughter and two or three children: his wife was very well fauoured, of meane ſtature and very baſhfull: ſhee had on her backe a long cloake of leather, with the furre ſide next to her body, and before her a piece of the ſame: about her forehead ſhee had a bande of wite Corall, and ſo had her huſband many times: in her eares ſhee had bracelets of pearles hanging downe to her middle, whereof wee deliuered your worſhip a little bracelet) and thoſe were of the bignes of good peaſe. The reſt of her women of the better ſort had pendants of copper hanging in either eare, and ſome of the children of the kings brother and other noble men, haue fiue or ſixe in either eare: he himſelfe had vpon his head a broad plate of golde, or copper, for being vnpoliſhed we knew not what metal it ſhould be, neither would he by any meanes ſuffer vs to take it off his head, but feeling it, it would bow very eaſily. His apparell was as his wiues, onely the women weare their haire long on both ſides, and the men but on one. They are of colour yellowiſh, and their haire black for the moſt part, and yet we ſaw children that had very fine aburne, and cheſtnut coloured haire.

After that theſe women had bene there, there came downe from all parts great ſtore of people, bringing with them leather, corall, diuers kindes of dies very excellent, and exchanged with vs: but when Granganimeo the kings brother was preſent, none durſt trade but himſelfe: except ſuch as weare red pieces of copper on their heads like himſelfe: for that is the difference betweene the noble men, and the gouernours of countreys, and the meaner ſort. And we both noted there, and you haue vnderſtood ſince by theſe men, which we brought home, that no people in the worlde cary more reſpect to their King, Nobilitie and Gouernours, then theſe doe. The Kings brothers wife, when ſhe came to vs (as ſhe did many times) was followed with forty or fifty women alwayes: and when ſhe came into the ſhippe, ſhe left them all on land, ſauing her two daughters, her nurſe and one or two more. The Kings brother alwayes kept this order, as many boates as he would come withall to the ſhippes, ſo many fires would hee make on the ſhoare a farre off, to the end we might vnderſtand with what ſtrength and company he approched. Their boates are made of one tree, either of Pine, or of Pitch trees: a wood not commonly knowen to our people, nor found growing in England. They haue no edge-tooles to make them withall: if they haue any they are very fewe, and thoſe it ſeemes they had twentie yeres ſince, which, as thoſe two men declared, was out of a wrake which happened vpon their coaſt of ſome Chriſtian ſhip, being beaten that way by ſome ſtorme and outragious weather, whereof none of the people were ſaued, but only the ſhip, or ſome part of her being caſt vpon the land, out of whoſe ſides they drew the nayles and the ſpikes, and with thoſe they made their beſt inſtruments. The manner of making their boates is thus: they burne downe ſome great tree, or take ſuch as are winde fallen, and putting gumme and roſen vpon one ſide thereof, they ſet fire into it, and when it hath burnt it hollow, they cut out the coale with their ſhels, and euer where they would burne it deeper or wider they lay on gummes, which burne away the timber, and by this meanes they faſhion very fine boates, and ſuch as will tranſport twentie men. Their oares are like ſcoopes, and many times they ſet with long poles, as the depth ſerueth.

The manner of making their boates.

The Kings brother had great liking of our armour, a ſword, and diuers other things which we had: and offered to lay a great boxe of pearle in gage for them: but we refuſed it for this time, becauſe we would not make them knowe, that we eſteemed thereof, vntill we had vnderſtoode in what places of the countrey the pearle grew: which now your Worſhippe doeth very well vnderſtand.

He was very iuſt of his promiſe: for many times we deliuered him merchandize vpon his word, but euer he came within the day and performed his promiſe. He ſent vs euery day a brace or two of fat Bucks, Conies, Hares, Fiſh the beſt of the world. He ſent vs diuers kindes of fruites, Melons, Walnuts, Cucumbers, Gourdes, Peaſe, and diuers rootes, and fruites very excellent good, and of their Countrey corne, which is very white, faire and well taſted, and groweth three times in fiue moneths: in May they ſow, in July they reape: in June they ſow, in Auguſt they reape: in July they ſow, in September they reape: onely they caſt the corne into the ground, breaking a little of the ſoft turfe with a with wodden mattock, or pickaxe: our ſelues prooued the ſoile, and put ſome of our Peaſe in the ground, and in tenne dayes they were of fourteene ynches high: they haue alſo Beanes very faire of diuers colours and wonderfull plentie: ſome growing naturally, and ſome in their gardens, and ſo haue they both wheat and oates.

The ſoile is the moſt plentifull, ſweete, fruitfull and wholſome of all the worlde: there are aboue fourteene ſeuerall ſweete ſmelling timber trees, and the moſt part of their vnderwoods are Bayes, and ſuch like: they haue thoſe Okes that we haue, but farre greater and better. After they had bene diuers times aboord our ſhippes, my ſelfe, with ſeuen more went twentie mile into the Riuer, that runneth towarde the Citie of Skicoak, which Riuer they call Occam: and the euening following, wee came to an Iſland, which they call Raonoak, diſtant from the harbour by which we entred, ſeuen leagues: and at the North end thereof was a village of nine houſes, built of Cedar, and fortified round about with ſharpe trees, to keepe out their enemies, and the entrance into it made like a turne pike very artificially: when wee came towardes it, ſtanding neere vnto the waters ſide, the wife of Granganimo, the kings brother came running out to meete vs very cheerefully and friendly, her huſband was not then in the village; ſome of her people ſhee commanded to drawe our boate on ſhore for the beating of the billoe: others ſhe appointed to cary vs on their backes to the dry ground, and others to bring our oares into the houſe for feare of ſtealing. When we were come into the vtter roome, hauing fiue roomes in her houſe, ſhe cauſed vs to ſit downe by a great fire, and after tooke off our clothes and waſhed them, and dryed them againe: ſome of the women plucked off our ſtockings and waſhed them, ſome waſhed our feete in warme water, and ſhee her ſelfe tooke great paines to ſee all things ordered in the beſt maner ſhee could, making great haſte to dreſſe ſome meate for vs to eate.

The great kindnes of the kings brothers wife.

After we had thus dryed our ſelues, ſhe brought vs into the inner roome, where ſhee ſet on the boord ſtanding along the houſe, ſome wheate like furmentie, ſodden Veniſon, and roaſted, fiſh ſodden, boyled, and roaſted, Melons rawe, and ſodden, rootes of diuers kindes, and diuers fruites: their drinke is commonly water, but while the grape laſteth, they drinke wine, and for want of caſkes to keepe it, all the yere after they drink water, but it is ſodden with Ginger in it, and blacke Sinamon, and ſometimes Saſſaphras, and diuers other wholeſome, and medicinable hearbes and trees. We were entertained with all loue and kindneſſe, and with as much bountie (after their maner) as they could poſſibly deuiſe. We found the people moſt gentle, louing, and faithfull, voide of all guile and treaſon, and ſuch as liue after the maner of the golden age. The people onely care howe to defend themſelues from the cold in their ſhort winter, and to feed themſelues with ſuch meat as the ſoile affoordeth: there meate is very well ſodden and they make broth very ſweet and ſauorie: their veſſels are earthen pots, very large, white and ſweete, their diſhes are wodden platters of ſweet timber: within the place where they feede was their lodging, and within that their Idoll, which they worſhip, of whome they ſpeake incredible things. While we were at meate, there came in at the gates two or three men with their bowes and arrowes from hunting, whom when wee eſpied, we beganne to looke one towardes another, and offered to reach our weapons: but aſſoone as ſhee eſpied our miſtruſt, ſhee was very much mooued, and cauſed ſome of her men to runne out, and take away their bowes and arrowes and breake them, and withall beate the poore fellowes out of the gate againe. When we departed in the euening and would not tary all night, ſhe was very ſory, and gaue vs into our boate our ſupper halfe dreſſed, pottes and all, and brought vs to our boate ſide, in which wee lay all night, remoouing the ſame a prettie diſtance from the ſhoare: ſhee peceiuing our ielouſie, was much greiued, and ſent diuers men and thirtie women, to ſit all night on the banke ſide by vs, and ſent vs into our boates fine mattes to couer vs from the raine, vſing very many wordes to intreate vs to reſt in their houſes: but becauſe wee were fewe men, and if wee had miſcaried, the voyage had bene in very great danger, wee durſt not aduenture any thing, although there was no cauſe of doubt: for a more kinde and louing people there can not be found in the worlde, as farre as we haue hitherto had triall.

A ſolemne banket.

Their Idols.

Beyond this Iſland there is the maine lande, and ouer againſt this Iſland falleth into this ſpacious water, the great riuer called Occam by the inhabitants, on which ſtandeth a towne called Pomeiock, & ſixe dayes iourney from the ſame is ſituate their greateſt citie, called Skicoak, which this people affirme to be very great: but the Sauages were neuer at it, only they ſpeake of it by the report of their fathers and other men, whom they haue heard affirme it to bee aboue one houres iourney about.

Skicoak a great towne.

In to this riuer falleth another great riuer, called Cipo, in which there is found great ſtore of Muſkles in which there are pearles: likewiſe there deſcendeth into this Occam, another riuer, called Nomopana, on the one ſide whereof ſtandeth a great towne called Chawanook, and the Lord of that towne and countrey is called Pooneno: this Pooneno is not ſubiect to the king of Wingandacoa, but is a free Lord: beyond this country is there another king, whom they cal Menatonon, and theſe three kings are in league with each other. Towards the Southweſt, foure dayes iourney is ſituate a towne called Sequotan, which is the Southermoſt towne of Wingandacoa, neere vnto which, ſixe and twentie yeres paſt, there was a ſhip caſt away, whereof ſome of the people were ſaued, and thoſe were white people, whom the countrey people preſerued.

A ſhip caſt away.

And after ten dayes remaining in an out Iſland vnhabited, called Wocokon, they with the help of ſome of the dwellers of Sequotan, faſtened two boates of the countrey together & made maſtes vnto them, and ſailes of their ſhirtes, and hauing taken into them ſuch victuals as the countrey yeelded, they departed after they had remained in this out Iſland 3 weekes: but ſhortly after it ſeemed they were caſt away, for the boates were found vpon the coaſt, caſt a land in another Iſland adioyning: other then theſe, there was neuer any people apparelled, or white of colour, either ſeene, or heare of amongſt theſe people, and theſe aforeſaid were ſeene onely of the inhabitantes of Secotan, which appeared to be very true, for they wondred maruelouſly when we were amongſt them at the whitenes of our ſkins, euer coueting to touch our breaſts, and to view the ſame. Beſides they had our ſhips in maruelous admiration, & all things els were ſo ſtrange vnto them, as it appeared that none of them had euer ſeene the like. When we diſcharged any piece, were it but an hargubuz, they would tremble thereat for very feare, and for the ſtrangeneſſe of the ſame: for the weapons which themſelules vſe are bowes and arrowes: the arrowes are but of ſmall canes, headed with a ſharpe ſhell or tooth of a fiſh ſufficient ynough to kill a naked man. Their ſwordes be of wood hardened: likewiſe they vſe wooden breaſtplates for their defence. They haue beſide a kinde of club, in the end whereof they faſten the ſharpe hornes of a ſtagge, or other beaſt. When they goe to warres they cary about with them their idol, of whom they aſke counſel, as the Romans were woont of the Oracle of Apollo. They ſing ſongs as they march towardes the battell in ſtead of drummes and trumpets: their warres are very cruell and bloody, by reaſon whereof, and of their ciuill diſſentions which haue happened of late yeeres amongſt them, the people are maruelouſly waſted, and in ſome places the countrey left deſolate.

Their weapons.

Or Panauuaioc.

Adioyning to this countrey aforeſaid called Secotan beginneth a countrey called Pomouik, belonging to another king whom they call Piamacum, and this king is in league with the next king adioyning towards the ſetting of the Sunne, and the countrey Newſiok, ſituate vpon a goodly riuer called Neus: theſe kings haue mortall warre with Wingina king of Wingandacoa: but about two yeeres paſt there was a peace made betweene the king Piemacum, and the Lord of Secotan, as theſe men which we haue brought with vs to England, haue giuen vs to vnderſtand: but there remaineth a mortall malice in the Secotanes, for many iniuries & ſlaughters done vpon them by this Piemacum. They inuited diuers men, and thirtie women of the beſt of his countrey to their towne to a feaſt: and when they were altogether merry, & praying before their Idol, (which is nothing els but a meer illuſion of the deuil) the captaine or Lord of the town came ſuddenly vpon thē, and ſlewe them euery one, reſeruing the women and children: and theſe two haue oftentimes ſince perſwaded vs to ſurprize Piemacum his towne, hauing promiſed and aſſured vs, that there will be found in it great ſtore of commodities. But whether their perſwaſion be to the ende they may be reuenged of their enemies, or for the loue they beare to vs, we leaue that to the tryall hereafter.

Beyond this Iſland called Roanoak, are maine Iſlands very plentifull of fruits and other naturall increaſes, together with many townes, and villages, along the ſide of the continent, ſome bounding vpon the Iſlands, and ſome ſtretching vp further into the land.

When we firſt had ſight of this countrey, ſome thought the firſt land we ſaw to bee the continent: but after we entred into the Hauen, we ſaw before vs another mighty long Sea: for there lyeth along the coaſt a tracte of Iſlands, two hundreth miles in length, adioyning to the Ocean ſea, and betweene the Iſlands, two or three entrances: when you are entred betweene them (theſe Iſlands being very narrow for the moſt part, as in moſt places ſixe miles broad, in ſome places leſſe, in fewe more) then there appeareth another great Sea, containing in bredth in ſome places, forty, and in ſome fifty, in ſome twenty miles ouer, before you come vnto the continent: and in this incloſed Sea there are aboue an hundreth Iſlands of diuers bigneſſes, whereof one is ſixteene miles long, at which we were, finding it a moſt pleaſant and fertile ground, repleniſhed with goodly Cedars, and diuers other ſweete woods, full of Corrants, of flaxe, and many other notable commodities, which we at that time had no leaſure to view. Beſides this Iſland there are many, as I haue ſayd, ſome of two, of three, of foure, of fiue miles, ſome more, ſome leſſe, moſt beautifull and pleaſant to behold, repleniſhed with Deere, Conies, Hares and diuers beaſts, and about them the goodlieſt and beſt fiſh in the world, and in greateſt abundance.

Roanoak ſixteen miles long.

This Sir, we haue acquainted you with the particulars of our diſcouery made this preſent voyage, as farre foorth as the ſhortneſſe of the time we there continued would affoord vs to take viewe of: and ſo contenting our ſelues with this ſeruice at this time, which wee hope hereafter to inlarge, as occaſion and aſſiſtance ſhalbe giuen, we reſolued to leaue the countrey, and to apply our ſelues to returne for England, which we did accordingly, and arriued ſafely in the Weſt of England about the middeſt of September.

And whereas wee haue aboue certified you of the countrey taken in poſſeſſion by vs, to her Maieſties vſe, and ſo to yours by her Maieſties graunt, wee thought good for the better aſſurance thereof, to record ſome of the particular Gentlemen, & men of accompt, who then were preſent, as witneſſes of the ſame, that thereby all occaſion of cauill to the title of the countrey, in her Maieſties behalfe may be preuented, which otherwiſe, ſuch as like not the action may vſe and pretend, whoſe names are:

We brought home alſo two of the Sauages being luſtie men, whoſe names were Wancheſe and Manteo.

The voiage made by Sir Richard Greenuile, for Sir VValter Ralegh, to Virginia, in the yeere 1585.

The 9. day of April, in the yeere aboueſayd, we departed from Plymmouth, our Fleete conſiſting of the number of ſeuen ſailes, to wit, the Tyger, of the burden of ſeuen ſcore tunnes, a Flie-boat called the Roe-bucke, of the like burden, the Lyon of a hundred tunnes or thereabouts, the Elizabeth, of fiftie tunnes, and the Dorothie, a ſmall barke: whereunto were alſo adioyned for ſpeedy ſeruices, two ſmall pinneſſes. The principall Gentlemen of our companie, were theſe, M. Ralph Lane, M. Tomas Candiſh, M. Iohn Arundell, M. Raymund, M. Stukeley, M. Bremige, M. Vincent, and M. Iohn Clarke, and diuers others, whereof ſome were Captaines, and other ſome Aſſiſtants for counſell, and good directions in the voyage.

The 14. day of Aprill wee fell with Lancerota and Forteuentura, Iſles of the Canaries, and from thence we continued our courſe for Dominica, one of the Antiles of the Weſt India, wherewith we fell the 7. day of May, and the 10. day following wee came to an anker at Coteſa, a little Iland ſituate neere to the Iland of S. Iohn, where we landed, and refreſhed our ſelues all that day.

The 12. day of May wee came to an anker in the Bay of Moskito, in the Iland of S. Iohn, within a Faulcon ſhot of the ſhoare: where our Generall Sir Richard Greeneuil, and the moſt part of our companie landed, and began to fortifie very neere to the Sea ſide: the riuer ran by the one ſide of our forte, and the other two ſides were inuironed with woods.

They land vpon the Iland of S. Iohn de Porto Rico.

The 13. day we began to build a new pinneſſe within the Fort, with the timber that wee then felled in the countrey, ſome part whereof we fet three miles vp in the land, and brought it to our Fort vpon trucks, the Spaniard not daring to make or offer reſiſtance.

The 16. day there appeared vnto vs out of the woods eight horſemen of the Spaniards, about a quarter of a mile from our Fort, ſtaying about halfe an houre in viewing our forces: but aſſoone as they ſaw ten of our ſhot marching towards them, they preſently retired into the woods.

The 19. day Maſter Candiſh, who had bene ſeparated from our fleete in a ſtorme in the Bay of Portugall, arriued at Coteſa, within the ſight of the Tiger: we thinking him a farre off to haue beene either a Spaniard or Frenchman of warre, thought it good to weigh ankers, and to goe roome with him, which the Tiger did, and diſcerned him at laſt to be one of our conſorts, for ioy of whoſe comming our ſhips diſcharged their ordinance, and ſaluted him according to the maner of the Seas.

The 22. day twentie other Spaniſh horſemen ſhewed themſelues to vs vpon the other ſide of the riuer: who being ſeene, our Generall diſpatched 20. footemen towards them, and two horſmen of ours, mounted vpon Spaniſh horſes, which wee before had taken in the time of our being on the Iland: they ſhewed to our men a flagge of truce, and made ſignes to haue a parle with vs: whereupon two of our men went halfe of the way vpon the ſands, and two of theirs came and met them: the two Spaniards offered very great ſalutations to our men, but began according to their Spaniſh proud humors, to expoſtulate with them about their arriuall and fortifying in their countrey, who notwithſtanding by our mens diſcreet anſwers were ſo cooled, that (whereas they were told, that our principall intention was onely to furniſh our ſelues with water and victuales, and other neceſſaries, whereof we ſtood in neede, which we craued might be yeelded vs with faire and friendly meanes, otherwiſe our reſolution was to practiſe force, and to releeue our ſelues by the ſworde) the Spaniards in concluſion ſeeing our men ſo reſolute, yeelded to our requeſtes with large promiſes of all curteſie, and great fauour, and ſo our men and theirs departed.

The 23. day our pinneſſe was finiſhed, and lanched: which being done, our Generall with his Captaines and Gentlemen, marched vp into the Countrey about the ſpace of 4. miles, where in a plaine marſh they ſtayed expecting the comming of the Spaniards according to their promiſe, to furniſh vs with victuals: who keeping their olde cuſtome for periurie and breach of promiſe, came not, whereupon our Generall fired the woods thereabout, and ſo retired to our Fort, which the ſame day was fired alſo, and each man came aboord to be ready to ſet ſaile the next morning.

The 29. day wee ſet ſaile from Saint Iohns, being many of vs ſtung before vpon ſhoare with the Muſkitos: but the ſame night wee tooke a Spaniſh Frigat, which was forſaken by the Spaniards vpon the ſight of vs, and the next day in the morning very early we tooke another Frigat, with good and rich fraight, and diuers Spaniards of account in her, which afterwards wee ranſomed for good round ſummes, and landed them in S. Iohns.

The 26. day our Lieutenant Maſter Ralph Lane went in one of the Frigats which we had taken, to Roxo bay vpon the Southweſt ſide of Saint Iohns, to fetch ſalt, being thither conducted by a Spaniſh Pilot: as ſoone as hee arriued there, hee landed with his men to the number of 20. and intrenched himſelfe vpon the ſandes immediatly, compaſſing one of their ſalte hils within the trench: who being ſeene of the Spaniards, there came downe towardes him two or three troopes of horſemen and footmen, who gaue him the looking, and gazing on, but durſt not come neere him to offer any reſiſtance, ſo that Maſter Lane maugre their troopes, caryed their ſalte aboord and laded his Fricat, and ſo returned againe to our fleete the 29. day, which road at S. Germans Bay. The ſame day we all departed, and the next day arriued in the Iland of Hiſpaniola.

Iune.

The 1. day of Iune we anchored at Iſabella, on the North ſide of Hiſpaniola.

The 3. day of Iune, the Gouernour of Iſabella, and Captaine of the Port de Plata, being certified by the reports of ſundry Spaniards, who had beene well intertained aboord our ſhippes by our Generall, that in our fleete were many braue and gallant Gentlemen, who greatly deſired to ſee the Gouernour aforeſayd, he thereupon ſent gentle commendations to our Generall, promiſing within few dayes to come to him in perſon, which he perfourmed accordingly.

The 5. day the aforeſayd Gouernour accompanied with a luſty Fryer, and twenty other Spaniards, with their ſeruants, and Negroes, came downe to the Sea ſide, where our ſhips road at anker, who being ſeene, our Generall manned immediatly the moſt part of his boates with the chiefe men of our Fleete, euery man appointed, and furniſhed in the beſt ſort: at the landing of our Generall, the Spaniſh gouernour receiued him very courteouſly, and the Spaniſh Gentlemen ſaluted our Engliſh Gentlemen, and their inferiour ſort did alſo ſalute our Souldiers and Sea men, liking our men, and likewiſe their qualities, although at the firſt they ſeemed to ſtand in feare of vs, and of ſo many of our boates, whereof they deſired that all might not land their men, yet in the end, the courteſies that paſſed on both ſides were ſo great, that all feare and miſtruſt on the Spaniards part was abandoned.

In the meane time while our Engliſh Generall and the Spaniſh Gouernour diſcourſed betwixt them of diuers matters, as of the ſtate of the Countrey, the multitude of the Townes and people, and the commodities of the Iland, our men prouided two banquetting houſes couered with greene boughes, the one for the Gentlemen, the other for the ſeruaunts, and a ſumptuous banquet was brought in ſerued by vs all in plate, with the ſound of trumpets, and conſort of muſicke, wherwith the Spaniards were more then delighted. Which banquet being ended, the Spaniardes in recompence of our courteſie, cauſed a great heard of white buls, and kyne to be brought together from the mountaines, and appoynted for euery Gentleman and Captaine that would ride, a horſe ready ſadled, and then ſingled out three of the beſt of them to bee hunted by horſemen after their maner, ſo that the paſtime grewe very pleaſant for the ſpace of three houres, wherein all three of the beaſts were killed, whereof one tooke the Sea, and there was ſlaine with a muſket. After this ſport, many rare preſents and gifts were giuen and beſtowed on both parts, and the next day wee played the Marchants in bargaining with them by way of trucke and exchange of diuers of their commodities, as horſes, mares, kine, buls, goates, ſwine, ſheepe, bull-hides, ſugar, ginger, pearle, tabacco, and ſuch like commodities of the Iland.

The 7. day we departed with great good will from the Spaniards from the Iland of Hiſpaniola: but the wiſer ſort doe impute this great ſhew of friendſhip, and courteſie vſed towards vs by the Spaniards rather to the force that wee were of, and the vigilancie, and watchfulneſſe that was amongſt vs, then to any heartie good will, or ſure friendly intertainement: for doubtleſſe if they had bene stronger then wee, wee might haue looked for no better curteſie at their handes, then Maſter Iohn Haukins receiued at Saint Iohn de Vllua, or Iohn Oxnam neere the ſtreights of Dariene, and diuers others of our Countrymen in other places.

The 8. day we ankred at a ſmall Iland to take Seales, which in that place wee vnderſtood to haue bene in great quantitie, where the Generall and certaine others with him in the pinneſſe were in very great danger to haue beene all caſt away, but by the helpe of God they eſcaped the hazard, and returned aboord the Admirall in ſafetie.

The 9. day we arriued and landed in the Ile of Caycos, in which Iland we ſearched for ſalte-pondes, vpon the aduertiſment and information of a Portugall: who in deede abuſed our Generall and vs, deſeruing a halter for his hire, if it had ſo pleaſed vs.

They land on the Iles of Caycos.

The 12. we ankered at Guanima, and landed.

The 15. and 16. we ankered and landed at Cyguateo.

Guanima. Cyguateo.

The 20. we fell with the maine of Florida.

The 23. we were in great danger of a wracke on a breach called the Cape of Feare.

The 24. we came to anker in a harbour, where wee caught in one tyde ſo much fiſh as would haue yeelded vs twentie pounds in London: this was our firſt landing in Florida.

They land in Florida.

The 26. we came to anker at Wocokon.

The 29. wee weighed anker to bring the Tyger into the harbour, where through the vnſkilfulneſſe of the Maſter whoſe name was Fernando, the Admirall ſtrooke on ground, and ſunke.

The 3. we ſent word of our arriuing at Wococon, to Wingina at Roanoak.

July.

The 6. M. Iohn Arundel was ſent to the maine, and Manteo with him: and Captaine Aubry and Captaine Boniten the ſame day were ſent to Croatoan, where they found two of our men left there with 30. other by Captaine Reymond, ſome 20. dayes before.

The 8. Captaine Aubry and Captaine Boniten returned, with two of our men found by them, to vs at Wocokon.

The 11. day the Generall accompanied in his Tilt boate with Maſter Iohn Arundell, Maſter Stukeley, and diuers other Gentlemen, Maſter Lane, Maſter Candiſh, Maſter Hariot, and twentie others in the new pinneſſe, Captaine Amadas, Captaine Clarke, with ten others in a ſhipboat, Francis Brooke, and Iohn White in another ſhip-boate, paſſed ouer the water from Wococon to the maine land victualled for eight dayes, in which voyage we firſt diſcouered the townes of Pomeiok, Aquaſcogoc and Secotan, and alſo the great lake called by the Sauages Paquipe, with diuers other places, and ſo returned with that diſcouery to our Fleete.

The 12. we came to the Towne of Pomeiok.

The 13. we paſſed by water to Aquaſcogok.

The 15. we came to Secotan, and were well entertained there of the Sauages.

The 16. wee returned thence, and one of our boates with the Admirall was ſent to Aquaſcogok, to demaund a ſiluer cup which one of the Sauages had ſtollen from vs, and not receiuing it according to his promiſe, wee burnt, and ſpoyled their corne, and Towne, all the people being fled.

The 18. we returned from the diſcouery of Secotan, and the ſame day came aboord our Fleete ryding at Wococon.

The 21. our Fleete ankering at Wococon, we wayed anker for Hatoraske.

The 27. our Fleete ankered at Hatorask, and there we reſted.

The 29. Grangino brother to king Wingina came aboord the Admirall, and Manteo with him.

The 2. the Admirall was ſent to Weapomeiok.

August.

The 5. M. Iohn Arundell was ſent for England.

The 25. our Generall wayed anker, and ſet ſaile for England.

About the 31. he tooke a Spaniſh ſhip of 300. tunne richly loaden, boording her with a boate made with boards of cheſts, which fell aſunder, and ſunke at the ſhips ſide, aſſoone as euer he and his men were out of it.

The 10. of September, by foule weather the Generall then ſhipped in the prize, loſt ſight of the Tyger.

September.

The 6. the Tyger fell with the Landes end, and the ſame day came to anker at Falmouth.

October.

The 18. the Generall came with the prize to Plymmouth, and was courteouſly receiued by diuers of hs his worſhipfull friends.

An extract of Maſter Ralph Lanes letter to M. Richard Hakluyt Eſquire, and another Gentleman of the middle Temple, from Virginia.

IN the meane while you ſhall vnderſtand, that ſince Sir Richard Greenuils departure from vs, as alſo before, we haue diſcouered the maine to be the goodlieſt ſoyle vnder the cope of heauen, ſo abounding with ſweete trees, that bring ſuch ſundry rich and pleaſant gummes, grapes of ſuch greatneſſe, yet wilde, as France, Spaine nor Italie haue no greater, ſo many ſorts of Apothecarie drugs, ſuch ſeuerall kindes of flaxe, & one kind like ſilke, the ſame gathered of a graſſe, as common there, as graſſe is here. And now within theſe few dayes we haue found here Maiz or or Guinie wheate, whoſe eare yeeldeth corne for bread 400. vpon one eare, and the Cane maketh very good and perfect ſugar, alſo Terra Samia, otherwiſe Terra ſigillata. Beſides that, it is the goodlieſt and moſt pleaſing Territorie of the world: for the continent is of an huge and vnknowen greatneſſe, and very well peopled and towned, though ſauagely, and the climate ſo wholſome, that wee had not one ſicke ſince we touched the land here. To conclude, if Virginia had but horſes and kine in ſome reaſonable proportion, I dare aſſure my ſelfe being inhabited with Engliſh, no realme in Chriſtendome were comparable to it. For this already we finde, that what commodities ſoeuer Spaine, France, Italy, or the Eaſt partes doe yeeld vnto vs, in wines of all ſortes, in oyles, in flaxe, in roſens, pitch, frakenſence, corrans, ſugers, and ſuch like, theſe parts doe abound with the growth of them all, but being Sauages that poſſeſſe the land, they know no vſe of the ſame. And ſundry other rich commodities, that no parts of the world, be they Weſt or Eaſt Indies, haue, here wee finde great abundance of. The people naturally are moſt curteous, and very deſirous to haue clothes, but eſpecially of courſe cloth rather then ſilke, courſe canuas they alſo like well of, but copper caryeth the price of all, ſo it be made red. Thus good M. Hakluyt and M. H. I haue ioyned you both in one letter of remembrance, as two that I loue dearely well, and commending me moſt heartily to you both, I commit you to the tuition of the Almightie. From the new Fort in Virginia, this third of September, 1585.

The rich and manifold commodities of Virginia.

Commodities fit to carie to Virginia.

Your moſt aſſured friend RALPH LANE.

An account of the particularities of the imployments of the Engliſh men left in Virginia by Sir Richard Greeneuill vnder the charge of Maſter Ralph Lane Generall of the ſame, from the 17. of Auguſt 1585. vntill the 18. of Iune 1586. at which time they departed the Countrey: ſent and directed to Sir Walter Ralegh.

That I may proceede with order in this diſcourſe, I thinke it requiſite to diuide it into two parts. The firſt ſhall declare the particularities of ſuch parts of the Countrey within the maine, as our weake number, and ſupply of things neceſſarie did inable vs to enter into the diſcouery of.

The ſecond part ſhall ſet downe the reaſons generally mouing vs to reſolue on our departure at the inſtant with the Generall Sir Francis Drake, and our common requeſt for paſſage with him, when the barkes, pinneſſes, and boates with the Maſters and Mariners meant by him to bee left in the Countrey for the ſupply of ſuch, as for a further time meant to haue ſtayed there, were caryed away with tempeſt and foule weather: In the beginning whereof ſhall bee declared the conſpiracie of Pemiſapan, with the Sauages of the maine to haue cut vs off, &c.

2. parts of this diſcourſe.

The firſt part declaring the particularities of the Countrey of Virginia.

First therefore touching the particularities of the Countrey, you ſhall vnderſtand that our diſcouerie of the ſame hath beene extended from the Iland of Roanoak, (the ſame hauing bene the place of our ſettlement or inhabitatiō) into the South, into the North, into the Northweſt, and into the Weſt.

The vttermoſt place to the Southward of any diſcouery was Secotan, being by eſtimation fourreſcore miles diſtant from Roanoak. The paſſage from thence was through a broad ſound within the mayne, the ſame being without kenning of lande, and yet full of flats and ſhoalds: we had but one boate with foure oares to paſſe through the ſame, which boate could not carry aboue fifteene men with their furniture, baggage, and victuall for ſeuen dayes at the moſt: and as for our pinneſſe, beſides that ſhe drew too deep water for that ſhallow ſound, ſhe would not ſtirre for an oare: for theſe and other reaſons (winter alſo being at hand) we thought good wholly to leaue the diſcouery of thoſe parts vntill our ſtronger ſupply.

To the Northward our furtheſt diſcouery was to the Cheſepians, diſtant from Roanoak about 130. miles, the paſſage to it was very ſhallow and moſt dangerous, by reaſon of the bredth of the ſound, and the little ſuccour that vpon any flawe was there to be had.

But the Territorie and ſoyle of the Cheſepians (being diſtant fifteene miles from the ſhoare) was for pleaſantnes of ſeate, for temperature of Climate, for fertilitie of ſoyle, and for the commoditie of the Sea, beſides multitude of Beares (being an excellent good victuall) with great woods of Saſſafras, and Wallnut trees, is not to be excelled by any other whatſoeuer.

The excellencie of the ſeate of Cheſepiook.

There be ſundry Kings, whom they call Weroances, and Countreys of great fertility adioyning to the ſame, as the Mandoages, Tripanicks, and Opoſſians, which all came to viſite the Colonie of the Engliſh, which I had for a time appointed to be reſident there.

To the Northweſt the fartheſt place of our diſcouery was to Chawanook diſtant from Roanoak about 130. miles. Our paſſage thither lyeth through a broad ſound, but all freſh water, and the chanell of a great depth, nauigable for good ſhipping, but out of the chanell full of ſhoalds.

The Townes about the waters ſide ſituated by the way are theſe following: Paſſaquenoke The womans Towne, Chepanoc, Weapomeiok, Muſcamunge, & Metackwem: all theſe being vnder the iuriſdiction of the king of Weapomeiok, called Okiſco: from Muſcamunge we enter into the Riuer, and iuriſdiction of Chawanook: There the Riuer beginneth to ſtraighten vntill it come to Chawanook, and then groweth to be as narrow as the Thames betweene Weſtminſter, and Lambeth.

Betweene Muſcamunge and Chawanook vpon the left hand as wee paſſe thither, is a goodly high land, and there is a Towne which we called The blinde Towne, but the Sauages called it Ohanoak, and hath a very goodly corne field belonging vnto it: it is ſubiect to Chawanook.

The towne of Chawanook able to make 700. men of warre.

Chawanook it ſelfe is the greateſt Prouince & Seigniorie lying vpon that Riuer, and the very Towne it ſelfe is able to put 700. fighting men into the fielde, beſides the forces of the Prouince it ſelfe.

An Iland in a Bay.

The King of the ſayd Prouince is called Menatonon, a man impotent in his lims, but otherwiſe for a Sauage, a very graue and wiſe man, and of a very ſingular good diſcourſe in matters concerning the ſtate, not onely of his owne Countrey, and the diſpoſition of his owne men, but alſo of his neighbours round about him as well farre as neere, and of the commodities that eache Countrey yeeldeth. When I had him priſoner with me, for two dayes that we were together, he gaue mee more vnderſtanding and light of the Countrey then I had receiued by all the ſearches and Sauages that before I or any of my companie had had conference with: it was in March laſt paſt 1586. Amongſt other things he tolde me, that going three dayes iourney in a Canoa vp his Riuer of Chawanook, and then deſcending to the land, you are within foure dayes iourney to paſſe ouer land Northeaſt to a certaine Kings countrey, whoſe Prouince lyeth vpon the Sea, but his place of greateſt ſtrength is an Iſland ſituate, as hee deſcribed vnto mee, in a Bay, the water round about the Iſland very deepe.

Pearles in exceeding quantitie.

Out of this Bay hee ſignified vnto mee, that this King had ſo great quantitie of Pearle, and doeth ſo ordinarily take the ſame, as that not onely his owne ſkinnes that hee weareth, and the better ſort of his gentlemen and followers are full ſet with the ſayd Pearle, but alſo his beds, and houſes are garniſhed with them, and that hee hath ſuch quantitie of them, that it is a wonder to ſee.

He ſhewed me that the ſayd King was with him at Chawanook two yeeres before, & brought him certaine Pearle, but the ſame of the worſt ſort, yet was he faine to buy them of him for copper at a deere rate, as he thought. Hee gaue mee a rope of the ſame pearle, but they were blacke, and naught, yet many of them were very great, and a few amongſt a number very orient and round, all which I loſt with other things of mine, comming aboord Sir Francis Drake his Fleete: yet he tolde me that the ſayd King had great ſtore of Pearle that were white, great, and round, and that his blacke Pearle his men did take out of ſhallow water, but the white Pearle his men fiſhed for in very deepe water.

It ſeemed to me by his ſpeach, that the ſayd King had traffique with white men that had clothes as we haue, for theſe white Pearle, and that was the reaſon that hee would not depart with other then with blacke Pearles, to thoſe of the ſame countrey.

The king of Chawanook promiſed to giue me guids to go ouer land into that kings countrey whenſoeuer I would: but he aduiſed me to take good ſtore of men with me, and good ſtore of victuall, for he ſaid, that king would be loth to ſuffer any ſtrangers to enter into his Countrey, and eſpecially to meddle with the fiſhing for any Pearle there, and that hee was able to make a great many of men into the field, which he ſayd would fight very well.

An enterpriſe of ſpeciall importance.

Hereupon I reſolued with my ſelfe, that if your ſupplie had come before the ende of April, and that you had ſent any ſtore of boates or men, to haue had them made in any reaſonable time, with a ſufficient number of men and victuals to haue found vs vntill the new corne were come in, I would haue ſent a ſmall barke with two pinneſſes about by Sea to the Northward to haue found out the Bay he ſpake of, and to haue ſounded the barre if there were any, which ſhould haue ridden there in the ſayd Bay about that Iland, while I with all the ſmall boates I could make, and with two hundred men would haue gone vp to the head of the riuer of Chawanook with the guids that Menatonon would haue giuen me, which I would haue bene aſſured ſhould haue beene of his beſt men, (for I had his beſt beloued ſonne priſoner with me) who alſo ſhould haue kept me companie in an handlocke with the reſt, foote by foote, all the voyage ouer land.

My meaning was further at the head of the Riuer in the place of my deſcent where I would haue left my boates, to haue raiſed a ſconſe with a ſmall trench, and a palliſado vpon the top of it, in the which, and in the guard of my boates I would haue left fiue and twentie, or thirtie men, with the reſt would I haue marched with as much victuall as euery man could haue caried, with their furniture, mattocks, ſpades and axes, two dayes iourney. In the ende of my march vpon ſome conuenient plot would I haue raiſed another ſconſe according to the former, where I would haue left fifteene or twentie. And if it would haue fallen out conueniently, in the way I would haue raiſed my ſaide ſconſe vpon ſome Corne fielde, that my company might haue liued vpon it.

And ſo I would haue holden this courſe of inſconſing euery two dayes march, vntill I had bene arriued at the Bay or Port hee ſpake of: which finding to bee worth the poſſeſſion, I would there haue raiſed a maine fort, both for the defence of the harborough, and our ſhipping alſo, and would haue reduced our whole habitation from Roanoak and from the harborough and port there (which by proofe is very naught) vnto this other beforementioned, from whence, in the foure dayes march before ſpecified, could I at al times returne with my company back vnto my boates riding vnder my ſconſe, very neere whereunto directly from the Weſt runneth a moſt notable Riuer, and in all thoſe parts moſt famous, called the Riuer of Moratoc. This Riuer openeth into the broad Sound of Weapomeiok. And whereas the Riuer of Chawanook, and all the other Sounds, and Bayes, ſalt and freſh, ſhewe no current in the world in calme weather, but are mooued altogether with the winde: This Riuer of Moratoc hath ſo violent a current from the Weſt and Southweſt, that it made me almoſt of opinion that with oares it would ſcarſe be nauigable: it paſſeth with many creekes and turnings, and for the ſpace of thirtie miles rowing, and more, it is as broad as the Thames betwixt Green-wich and the Iſle of dogges, in ſome place more, and in ſome leſſe: the current runneth as ſtrong, being entred ſo high into the Riuer, as at London bridge vpon a vale water.

Whither M. Ralfe Lane meant to remoue.

And for that not onely Menatonon, but alſo the Sauages of Moratoc themſelues doe report ſtrange things of the head of that Riuer, and that from Moratoc it ſelfe, which is a principall Towne vpon that Riuer, it is thirtie dayes as ſome of them ſay, and ſome ſay fourtie dayes voyage to the head thereof, which head they ſay ſpringeth out of a maine rocke in that abundance, that forthwith it maketh a moſt violent ſtreame: and further, that this huge rock ſtandeth ſo neere vnto a Sea, that many times in ſtormes (the winde comming outwardly from the ſea) the waues thereof are beaten into the ſaid freſh ſtreame, ſo that the freſh water for a certaine ſpace, groweth ſalt and brackiſh: I tooke a reſolution with my ſelfe, hauing diſmiſſed Menatonon vpon a ranſome agreed for, and ſent his ſonne into the Pinneſſe to Roanoak, to enter preſently ſo farre into that Riuer with two double whirries, and fourtie perſons one or other, as I could haue victuall to cary vs, vntil we could meete with more either of the Moratoks, or of the Mangoaks, which is another kinde of Sauages, dwelling more to the Weſtward of the ſaid Riuer: but the hope of recouering more victuall from the Sauages made mee and my company as narrowly to eſcape ſtaruing in that diſcouerie before our returne, as euer men did, that miſſed the ſame.

For Pemiſapan, who had changed his name of Wingina vpon the death of his brother Granganimo, had giuen both the Choaniſts, and Mangoaks worde of my purpoſe touching them, I hauing bene inforced to make him priuie to the ſame, to bee ſerued by him of a guide to the Mangoaks, and yet hee did neuer reſt to ſolicite continually my going vpon them, certifying mee of a generall aſſembly euen at that time made by Menatonon at Chawanook of all his Weroances, and allies to the number of three thouſand bowes, preparing to come vpō vs at Roanoak, and that the Mangoaks alſo were ioyned in the ſame confederacie, who were able of themſelues to bring as many more to the enterpriſe: And true it was that at that time the aſſembly was holden at Chawanook about vs, as I found at my comming thither, which being vnlooked for did ſo diſmay them, as it made vs haue the better hand at them. But this confederacie againſt vs of the Choaniſts and Mangoaks was altogether and wholly procured by Pemiſapan himſelfe, as Menatonon confeſſed vnto me, who ſent them continual word, that our purpoſe was fully bent to deſtroy them: on the other ſide he told me, that they had the like meaning towards vs.

Wingina changeth his name.

Conſpiracie of the Sauages againſt the Engliſh.

Hee in like ſort hauing ſent worde to the Mangoaks of mine intention to paſſe vp into their Riuer, and to kill them (as he ſaide) both they and the Moratoks, with whom before wee were entred into a league, and they had euer dealt kindly with vs, abandoned their Townes along the Riuer, and retired themſelues with their * Crenepos, and their Corne within the maine: inſomuch as hauing paſſed three dayes voyage vp the Riuer, wee could not meete a man, nor finde a graine of Corne in any their Townes: whereupon conſidering with my ſelfe that wee had but two dayes victuall left, and that wee were then 160. miles from home, beſides caſualtie of contrary windes or ſtormes, and ſuſpecting treaſon of our owne Sauages in the diſcouerie of our voyage intended, though wee had no intention to bee hurtfull to any of them, otherwiſe then for our copper to haue had corne of them: I at night vpon the Corps of guard, before the putting foorth of Centinels, aduertiſed the whole company of the caſe wee ſtoode in for victuall, and of mine opinion that we were betrayed by our owne Sauages, and of purpoſe drawen foorth by them vpon vaine hope to be in the ende ſtarued, ſeeing all the Countrey fled before vs, and therefore while wee had thoſe two dayes victuall left, I thought it good for vs to make our returne homeward, and that it were neceſſary for vs to get the other ſide of the Sound of Weopomeiok in time, where wee might be relieued vpon the weares of Chypanum, and the womens Towne, although the people were fled.

Thus much I ſignified vnto them, as the ſafeſt way: neuertheleſſe I did referre it to the greateſt number of voyces, whether wee ſhould aduenture the ſpending of our whole victuall in ſome further viewe of that moſt goodly Riuer in hope to meete with ſome better happe, or otherwiſe to retire our ſelues backe againe. And for that they might be the better aduiſed, I willed them to deliberate all night vpon the matter, and in the morning at our going aborde to ſet our courſe according to the deſires of the greateſt part. Their reſolution fully and wholy was (and not three founde to bee of the contrary opinion) that whiles there was left but one halfe pinte of Corne for a man, wee ſhould not leaue the ſearch of that Riuer, and that there were in the companie two Maſtiues, vpon the pottage of which with Saſſafras leaues (if the worſt fell out) the company would make ſhift to liue two dayes, which time would bring them downe the current to the mouth of the Riuer, and to the entrie of the Sound, and in two dayes more at the fartheſt they hoped to croſſe the Sound and to bee relieued by the weares, which two dayes they would faſt rather then be drawen backe a foote till they had ſeene the Mangoaks, either as friendes or foes. This reſolution of theirs did not a little pleaſe mee, ſince it came of themſelues, although for miſtruſt of that which afterwards did happen, I pretended to haue bene rather of the contrary opinion.

A marueilous Mineral in the countrey of Chaunis Temoatan.

And that which made me moſt deſirous to haue ſome doings with the Mangoaks either in friendſhip or otherwiſe to haue had one or two of them priſoners, was, for that it is a thing moſt notorious to all the countrey, that there is a Prouince to the which the ſaid Mangoaks haue recourſe and trafique vp that Riuer of Moratoc, which hath a marueilous and moſt ſtrange Minerall, This Mine is ſo notorious amongſt them, as not onely to the Sauages dwelling vp the ſaid riuer, and alſo to the Sauages of Chawanook, and all them to the Weſtward, but alſo to all them of the maine: the Countreis name is of fame, and is called Chaunis Temoatan.

The Minerall they ſay is Waſſador, which is copper, but they call by the name of Waſſador euery mettall whatſoeuer: they ſay it is of the colour of our copper, but our copper is better then theirs: and the reaſon is for that it is redder and harder, whereas that of Chaunis Temoatan is very ſoft, and pale: they ſay that they take the ſaide mettall out of a riuer that falleth very ſwift from hie rockes and hils, and they take it in ſhallow water: the maner is this. They take a great bowle by their deſcription as great as one of our targets, and wrappe a ſkinne ouer the hollow part thereof, leauing one part open to receiue in the minerall: that done, they watch the comming downe of the current, and the change of the colour of the water, and then ſuddenly chop downe the ſaid bowle with the ſkinne, and receiue into the ſame as much oare as will come in, which is euer as much as their bowle will holde, which preſently they caſt into a fire, and foorthwith it melteth, and doeth yeelde in fiue parts, at the firſt melting, two parts of mettall for three parts of oare. Of this mettall the Mangoaks haue ſo great ſtore, by report of all the Sauages adioyning, that they beautifie their houſes with great plates of the ſame: and this to be true, I receiued by report of all the countrey, and particularly by yong Skiko, the King of Chawanooks ſonne my priſoner, who alſo himſelfe had bene priſoner with the Mangoaks, and ſet downe all the particularities to me before mentioned: but hee had not bene at Chawnis Temoatan himſelfe: for hee ſaid, it was twentie dayes iourney ouerland from the Mangoaks, to the ſaid Mineral Countrey, and that they paſſed through certaine other territories betweene them and the Mangoaks, before they came to the ſaid Countrey.

Vpon report of the premiſſes, which I was very inquiſitiue in all places where I came to take very particular information of, by all the Sauages that dwelt towards thoſe parts, and eſpecially of Menatonon himſelfe, who in euery thing did very particularly informe mee, and promiſed me guides of his owne men, who ſhould paſſe ouer with me, euen to the ſaid Country of Chaunis Temoatan (for ouerland from Chawanook to the Mangoaks is but one dayes iourney from Sunne riſing to Sunne ſetting, whereas by water it is ſeuen dayes with the ſooneſt:) Theſe things, I ſay, made me very deſirous by all meanes poſſible to recouer the Mangoaks, and to get ſome of that their copper for an aſſay, and therefore I willingly yeelded to their reſolution: But it fell out very contrary to all expectation, and likelyhood: for after two dayes trauell, and our whole victuall ſpent, lying on ſhoare all night, wee could neuer ſee man, onely fires we might perceiue made alongſt the ſhoare where we were to paſſe, and vp into the Countrey, vntill the very laſt day. In the euening whereof, about three of the clocke wee heard certaine Sauages call as we thought, Manteo, who was alſo at that time with me in the boat, whereof we all being very glad, hoping of ſome friendly conference with them, and making him to anſwere them, they preſently began a ſong, as we thought, in token of our welcome to them: but Manteo preſently betooke him to his piece, and tolde mee that they meant to fight with vs: which worde was not ſo ſoone ſpoken by him, and the light horſeman ready to put to ſhoare, but there lighted a vollie of their arrowes amongſt them in the boat, but did no hurt (God be thanked) to any man. Immediatly, the other boate lying ready with their ſhot to ſkoure the place for our hand weapons to lande vpon, which was preſently done, although the land was very high and ſteepe, the Sauages forthwith quitted the ſhoare, and betooke themſelues to flight: wee landed, and hauing faire and eaſily followed for a ſmal time after them, who had wooded themſelues we know not where: the Sunne drawing then towards the ſetting, and being then aſſured that the next day if wee would purſue them, though we might happen to meete with them, yet wee ſhould be aſſured to meete with none of their victuall, which we then had good cauſe to thinke of: therefore chooſing for the company a conuenient ground in ſafetie to lodge in for the night, making a ſtrong Corps of guard, and putting out good Centinels, I determined the next morning before the riſing of the Sunne to be going backe againe, if poſſibly we might recouer the mouth of the riuer, into the broad ſound, which at my firſt motion I found my whole company ready to aſſent vnto: for they were nowe come to their Dogges porredge, that they had beſpoken for themſelues if that befell them which did, and I before did miſtruſt we ſhould hardly eſcape. The ende was, we came the next day by night to the Riuers mouth within foure or fiue miles of the ſame, hauing rowed in one day downe the current, as much as in foure dayes wee had done againſt the ſame: we lodged vpon an Iland, where we had nothing in the world to eate but pottage of Saſſafras leaues, the like whereof for a meate was neuer vſed before as I thinke. The broad ſound wee had to paſſe the next day all freſh and faſting: that day the winde blew ſo ſtrongly, and the billow ſo great, that there was no poſſibilitie of paſſage without ſinking of our boates. This was vpon Eaſter eue, which was faſted very truely. Vpon Eaſter day in the morning the winde comming very calme, we entred the ſound, and by foure of the clocke we were at Chipanum, whence all the Sauages that we had left there were fled, but their weares did yeelde vs ſome fiſh, as God was pleaſed not vtterly to ſuffer vs to be loſt: for ſome of our company of the light horſemen were farre ſpent. The next morning wee arriued at our home Roanoak.

A conflict begun by the Sauages.

The great current of the Riuer of Moratico.

I haue ſet downe this Voyage ſomewhat particularly, to the ende it may appeare vnto you, (as true it is) that there wanted no great good will from the moſt to the leaſt amongſt vs, to haue perfited this diſcouerie of the Mine: for that the diſcouery of a good Mine, by the goodneſſe of God, or a paſſage to the South-ſea, or ſome way to it, and nothing elſe can bring this Countrey in requeſt to be inhabited by our nation. And with the diſcouery of either of the two aboue ſhewed, it will bee the moſt ſweete and healthfulleſt climate, and therewithall the moſt fertile ſoyle (being manured) in the world: and then will Saſſafras, and many other rootes and gummes there found make good marchandiſe and lading for ſhipping, which otherwiſe of themſelues will not be worth the fetching.

Prouided alſo, that there be found out a better harborough then yet there is, which muſt be to the Northward, if any there bee, which was mine intention to haue ſpent this Summer in the ſearch of, and of the Mine of Chawnis Temoatan: the one I would haue done, if the barkes that I ſhould haue had of Sir Francis Drake, by his honourable courteſie, had not bene driuen away by ſtorme: the other if your ſupply of more men, and ſome other neceſſaries had come to vs in any conuenient ſufficiencie. For this riuer of Moratico promiſeth great things, and by the opinion of of M. Hariots the head of it by the deſcription of the Countrey, either riſeth from the bay of Mexico, or els from very neere vnto the ſame, that openeth out into the South ſea.

And touching the Minerall, thus doeth M. Youghan affirme, that though it be but copper, ſeeing the Sauages are able to melt it, it is one of the richeſt Minerals in the world.

Wherefore a good harborough found to the Northward, as before is ſaide, and from thence foure dayes ouerland, to the Riuer of Choanoak ſconſes being raiſed, from whence againe ouerland through the prouince of Choanoak one dayes voyage to the firſt towne of the Mangoaks vp the Riuer of Moratico by the way, as alſo vpon the ſaid Riuer for the defence of our boats like ſconſes being ſet, in this courſe of proceeding you ſhall cleare your ſelfe from al thoſe dangers and broad ſhallow ſounds before mentioned, and gaine within foure dayes trauell into the heart of the maine 200. miles at the leaſt, and ſo paſſe your diſcouery into that moſt notable countrey, and to the likelieſt parts of the maine, with farre greater felicitie then otherwiſe can bee performed.

Thus Sir, I haue though ſimply, yet truely ſet downe vnto you, what my labour with the reſt of the gentlemen, and poore men of our company (not without both paine and perill, which the Lord in his mercy many wayes deliuered vs from) could yeeld vnto you, which might haue bene performed in ſome more perfection, if the Lord had bene pleaſed that onely that which you had prouided for vs had at the firſt bene left with vs, or that hee had not in his eternall prouidence now at the laſt ſet ſome other courſe in theſe things, then the wiſedome of man coulde looke into, which truely the carying away by a moſt ſtrange & vnlooked for ſtorme of all our prouiſion, with Barks, Maſter, Mariners, and ſundry alſo of mine owne company, al hauing bene ſo courteouſly ſupplied by the generall Sir Francis Drake, the ſame hauing bene moſt ſufficient to haue performed the greateſt part of the premiſſes, muſt euer make me to thinke the hand of God onely (for ſome his good purpoſe to my ſelfe yet vnknowen) to haue bene in the matter.

The ſecond part touching the conſpiracie of Pemiſapan, the diſcouery of the ſame, and at the laſt, of our requeſt to depart with Sir Francis Drake for England.

ENſenore a Sauage father to Pemiſapan being the onely friend to our nation that we had amongſt them, and about the King, died the 20. of April 1586. He alone had before oppoſed himſelfe in their conſultations againſt all matters propoſed againſt vs, which both the King and all the reſt of them after Grangemoes death, were very willing to haue preferred. And he was not onely by the meere prouidence of God during his life, a meane to ſaue vs from hurt, as poyſonings and ſuch like, but alſo to doe vs very great good, and ſingularly in this.

This skill of making weares would be learned.

The King was aduiſed and of himſelfe diſpoſed, as a ready meane to haue aſſuredly brought vs to ruine in the moneth of March 1586. himſelfe alſo with all his Sauages to haue runne away from vs, and to haue left his ground in the Iland vnſowed: which if hee had done, there had bene no poſſibilitie in common reaſon, (but by the immediate hande of God) that wee coulde haue bene preſerued from ſtaruing out of hande. For at that time wee had no weares for fiſh, neither coulde our men skill of the making of them, neither had wee one graine of Corne for ſeede to put into the ground.

In mine abſence on my voyage that I had made againſt the Chaoniſts, and Mangoaks, they had raiſed a bruite among themſelues, that I and my company were part ſlaine, and part ſtarued by the Chaoniſts, and Mangoaks. One part of this tale was too true, that I and mine were like to be ſtarued, but the other falſe.

Neuertheleſſe vntill my returne it tooke ſuch effect in Pemiſapans breaſt, and in thoſe againſt vs, that they grew not onely into contempt of vs, but alſo (contrary to their former reuerend opinion in ſhew, of the Almightie God of heauen, and Ieſus Chriſt whom wee ſerue and worſhip, whom before they would acknowledge and confeſſe the only God) now they began to blaſpheme, and flatly to ſay, that our Lorde God was not God, ſince hee ſuffered vs to ſuſtaine much hunger, and alſo to be killed of the Renapoaks, for ſo they call by that generall name all the inhabitants of the whole maine, of what prouince ſoeuer. Inſomuch as olde Enſenore, neither any of his fellowes, could for his ſake haue no more credite for vs: and it came ſo farre that the king was reſolued to haue preſently gone away as is aforeſaid.

But euen in the beginning of this bruite I returned, which when hee ſawe contrary to his expectation, and the aduertiſement that hee had receiued: that not onely my ſelfe, and my company were all ſafe, but alſo by report of his owne 3. Sauages which had bene with mee beſides Manteo in that voyage, that is to ſay, Tetepano, his ſiſters husband Eracano, and Coſſine, that the Chanoiſts and Mangoaks (whoſe name and multitude beſides their valour is terrible to all the reſt of the prouinces) durſt not for the moſt part of them abide vs, and that thoſe that did abide vs were killed, and that we had taken Menatonon priſoner, and brought his ſonne that he beſt loued to Roanoak with mee, it did not a little aſſwage all deuiſes againſt vs: on the other ſide, it made Enſenores opinions to bee receiued againe with greater reſpects. For he had often before tolde them, and then renewed thoſe his former ſpeeches, both to the king and the reſt, that wee were the ſeruants of God, and that wee were not ſubiect to bee deſtroyed by them: but contrarywiſe, that they amongſt them that ſought our deſtruction, ſhould finde their owne, and not bee able to worke ours, and that we being dead men were able to doe them more hurt, then now we could do being aliue: an opinion very confidently at this day holden by the wiſeſt amongſt them, and of their old men, as alſo, that they haue bene in the night, being 100. miles from any of vs, in the aire ſhot at, and ſtroken by ſome men of ours, that by ſickneſſe had died among them: and many of them holde opinion, that we be dead men returned into the world againe, and that wee doe not remaine dead but for a certaine time, and that then we returne againe.

All theſe ſpeeches then againe grewe in ful credite with them, the King, and all, touching vs, when hee ſawe the ſmall troupe returned againe, and in that ſort from thoſe whoſe very names were terrible vnto them: But that which made vp the matter on our ſide for that time was an accident, yea rather (as all the reſt was) the good prouidence of the Almightie for the ſauing of vs, which was this.

Within certaine dayes after my returne from the ſayd iourney, Menatonon ſent a meſſenger to viſite his ſonne the priſoner with me, and ſent me certaine pearle for a preſent, or rather, as Pemiſapan tolde mee, for the ranſome of his ſonne, and therefore I refuſed them: but the greateſt cauſe of his ſending then, was to ſignifie vnto mee, that hee had commaunded Okisko King of Weopomiok, to yeelde himſelfe ſeruant, and homager, to the great Weroanza of England, and after her to Sir Walter Raleigh: to perfourme which commandement receiued from Menatonon, the ſayde Okisko ioyntly with this Menatonons meſſenger ſent foure and twentie of his principalleſt men to Roanoak to Pemiſapan, to ſignifie that they were ready to perfourme the ſame, and ſo had ſent thoſe his men to let mee knowe that from that time forwarde, hee, and his ſucceſſours were to acknowledge her Maieſtie their onely Soueraigne, and next vnto her, as is aforeſayd.

All which being done, and acknowledged by them all, in the preſence of Pemiſapan his father, and all his Sauages in counſell then with him, it did for the time thorowly (as it ſeemed) change him in diſpoſition toward vs: Inſomuch as foorthwith Enſenore wanne this reſolution of him, that out of hand he ſhould goe about, and withall, to cauſe his men to ſet vp weares foorthwith for vs: both which he at that preſent went in hande withall, and did ſo labour the expedition of it, that in the end of April he had ſowed a good quantitie of ground, ſo much as had bene ſufficient, to haue fed our whole company (God bleſſing the grouth) and that by the belly, for a whole yere: beſides that he gaue vs a certaine plot of ground for our ſelues to ſowe. All which put vs in marueilous comfort, if we could paiſe from Aprill vntill the beginning of Iuly, (which was to haue bene the beginning of their harueſt,) that then a newe ſupply out of England or els our owne ſtore would well ynough maintaine vs: All our feare was of the two moneths betwixt, in which meane ſpace if the Sauages ſhould not helpe vs with Caſſaui, and Chyna, and that our weares ſhould faile vs, (as often they did,) we might very well ſtarue, notwithſtanding the growing corne, like the ſtaruing horſe in the ſtable, with the growing graſſe, as the prouerbe is: which wee very hardly had eſcaped but onely by the hand of God, as it pleaſed him to try vs. For within few dayes after, as before is ſaide, Enſenore our friend died, who was no ſooner dead, but certaine of our great enemies about Pemiſapan, as Oſacan a Weroance, Tanaquiny and Wancheſe moſt principally, were in hand againe to put their old practiſes in vre againſt vs, which were readily imbraced, and all their former deuiſes againſt vs renued, and new brought in queſtion. But that of ſtaruing vs, by their forbearing to ſow, was broken by Enſenore in his life, by hauing made the King all at one inſtant to ſow his ground, not onely in the Iland, but alſo at Daſamonquepeio in the maine, within two leagues ouer againſt vs. Neuertheleſſe there wanted no ſtore of miſchieuous practiſes among them, and of all they reſolued principally of this following.

The beginning of their harueſt in Iuly.

Firſt that Okisko king of Weopomeiok with the Mandoages ſhould bee mooued, and with great quantitie of copper intertained to the number of 7. or 8. hundreth bowes, to enterpriſe the matter thus to be ordered. They of Weopomeiok ſhould be inuited to a certaine kind of moneths minde which they doe vſe to ſolemniſe in their Sauage maner for any great perſonage dead, and ſhould haue bene for Enſenore. At this inſtant alſo ſhould the Mandoaks, who were a great people, with the Cheſepians & their friends to the number of 700. of them, be armed at a day appointed to the maine of Daſamonquepeio, and there lying cloſe at the ſigne of fiers, which ſhould interchangeably be made on both ſides, when Pemiſapan with his troupe aboue named ſhould haue executed me, and ſome of our Weroances (as they called all our principall officers,) the maine forces of the reſt ſhould haue come ouer into the Iland, where they ment to haue diſpatched the reſt of the company, whom they did imagine to finde both diſmayed and diſperſed abroad in the Iſland, ſeeking of crabs and fiſh to liue withall. The maner of their enterpriſe was this.

The conſpiracie of Pemiſapan.

Tarraquine and Andacon two principall men about Pemiſapan, and very luſtie fellowes, The forme of the treaſon.

with twentie more appointed to them had the charge of my perſon to ſee an order taken for the ſame, which they ment ſhould in this ſort haue bene executed. In the dead time of the night they would haue beſet my houſe, and put fire in the reedes that the ſame was couered with: meaning (as it was likely) that my ſelfe would haue come running out of a ſudden amazed in my ſhirt without armes, vpon the inſtant whereof they would haue knocked out my braines.

The ſufficiencie of our men to deale againſt the Sauages, 10. to an hundreth.

The Sauages liue by fiſhing, and hunting, till harueſt.

The ſame order was giuen to certaine of his fellowes, for M. Heriots: ſo for all the reſt of our better ſort, all our houſes at one inſtant being ſet on fire as afore is ſaide, and that as well for them of the fort, as for vs at the towne. Now to the ende that we might be the fewer in number together, and ſo bee the more eaſily dealt withall (for in deed tenne of vs with our armes prepared, were a terrour to a hundred of the beſt ſort of them,) they agreed and did immediatly put it in practiſe, that they ſhould not for any copper ſell vs any victuals whatſoeuer: beſides that in the night they ſhould ſende to haue our weares robbed, and alſo to cauſe them to bee broken, and once being broken neuer to be repaired againe by them. By this meanes the King ſtood aſſured, that I muſt bee enforced for lacke of ſuſtenance there, to diſband my company into ſundry places to liue vpon ſhell fiſh, for ſo the Sauages themſelues doe, going to Hatorask, Croatoan, and other places, fiſhing and hunting, while their grounds be in ſowing, and their corne growing: which failed not his expectation. For the famine grew ſo extreeme among vs, our weares failing vs of fiſh, that I was enforced to ſende Captaine Stafford with 20. with him to Croatoan my Lord Admirals Iland to ſerue two turnes in one, that is to ſay, to feede himſelfe and his company, and alſo to keepe watch if any ſhipping came vpon the coaſt to warne vs of the ſame. I ſent M. Pridiox with the pinneſſe to Hatorask, and ten with him, with the Prouoſt Marſhal to liue there, and alſo to wait for ſhipping: alſo I ſent euery weeke 16, or 20. of the reſt of the company to the maine ouer againſt vs, to liue of Caſada and oyſters.

In the meane while Pemiſapan went of purpoſe to Daſamonquepeio for three cauſes: The one to ſee his grounds there broken vp, and ſowed for a ſecond crop: the other to withdrawe himſelfe from my dayly ſending to him for ſupply of victuall for my company, for hee was afraid to deny me any thing, neither durſt hee in my preſence but by colour and with excuſes, which I was content to accept for the time, meaning in the ende as I had reaſon, to giue him the iumpe once for all: but in the meane whiles, as I had euer done before, I and mine bare all wrongs, and accepted of all excuſes.

My purpoſe was to haue relied my ſelfe with Menatonon, and the Chaoniſts, who in trueth as they are more valiant people and in greater number then the reſt, ſo are they more faithfull in their promiſes, and ſince my late being there had giuen many tokens of earneſt deſire they had to ioyne in perfect league with vs, and therefore were greatly offended with Pemiſapan and Weopomeiok for making him beleeue ſuch tales of vs.

The third cauſe of his going to Daſamonquepeio was to diſpatch his meſſengers to Weopomeiok, and to the Mandoages, as aforeſaid: all which he did with great impreſt of copper in hand, making large promiſes to them of greater ſpoile.

The anſwere within few dayes after came from Weopomeiok, which was deuided into two parts. Firſt for the King Okisko, who denied to be of the partie for himſelfe, or any of his eſpeciall followers, and therefore did immediatly retire himſelfe with his force into the maine: the other was concerning the reſt of the ſaid prouince who accepted of it: and in like ſort the Mandoags receiued the impreſt.

The day of their aſſembly aforeſaid at Roanoak was appointed the 10. of Iune: all which the premiſes were diſcouered by Skyco, the King Menatonon his ſonne my priſoner, who hauing once attempted to run away, I laid him in the bylboes, threatning to cut off his head, whom I remitted at Pemiſapans requeſt: whereupon hee being perſwaded that hee was our enemie to the death, he did not onely feed him with himſelfe, but alſo made him acquainted with all his practiſes. On the other ſide, the yong man finding himſelfe as well vſed at my hande, as I had meanes to ſhew, and that all my company made much of him, he flatly diſcouered al vnto me, which alſo afterwards was reuealed vnto me by one of Pemiſapans owne men, that night before he was ſlaine.

Theſe miſchiefes being all inſtantly vpon me and my company to be put in execution, it ſtood mee in hand to ſtudy how to preuent them, and alſo to ſaue all others, which were at that time as aforeſaid ſo farre from me: whereupon I ſent to Pemiſapan to put ſuſpition out of his head, that I meant preſently to go to Croatoan, for that I had heard of the ariuall of our Fleete, (though I in trueth had neither heard nor hoped for ſo good aduenture,) and that I meant to come by him, to borrow of his men to fiſh for my company, & to hunt for me at Croatoan, as alſo to buy ſome foure dayes prouiſion to ſerue for my voyage.

He ſent me word that he would himſelfe come ouer to Roanoak, but from day to day he deferred, onely to bring the Weopomeioks with him & the Mandoags, whoſe time appointed was within eight dayes after. It was the laſt of May 1586 when all his owne Sauages began to make their aſſembly at Roanoak, at his commandement ſent abroad vnto them, and I reſolued not to ſtay longer vpon his comming ouer, ſince he meant to come with ſo good company, but thought good to go and viſit him with ſuch as I had, which I reſolued to do the next day: but that night I meant by the way to giue them in the Iſland a canuiſado, and at the inſtant to ſeize vpon all the canoas about the Iſland, to keepe him from aduertiſements.

But the towne tooke the alarme before I meant it to them; the occaſion was this. I had ſent the Maſter of the light horſeman, with a few with him, to gather vp all the canoas in the ſetting of the Sun, & to take as many as were going from vs to Daſamonquepeio, but to ſuffer any that came from thence, to land. He met with a Canoa going from the ſhore, and ouerthrew the Canoa, and cut off two Sauages heads: this was not done ſo ſecretly but he was diſcouered from the ſhore; wherupon the cry aroſe: for in trueth they, priuy to their owne villanous purpoſes againſt vs, held as good eſpiall vpon vs, both day and night, as we did vpon them.

The ſlaughter and ſurpriſe of the Sauages.

The allarme giuen, they tooke themſelues to their bowes, and we to our armes: ſome three or foure of them at the firſt were ſlaine with our ſhot; the reſt fled into the woods. The next morning with the light horſman & one Canoa taking 25 with the Colonel of the Cheſepians, and the Sergeant maior, I went to Daſamonquepeio: and being landed, ſent Pemiſapan word by one of his owne Sauages that met me at the ſhore, that I was going to Croatoan, and meant to take him in the way to complaine vnto him of Oſocon, who the night paſt was conueying away my priſoner, whom I had there preſent tied in an handlocke. Heereupon the king did abide my comming to him, and finding my ſelfe amidſt ſeuen or eight of his principall Weroances and followers, (not regarding any of the common ſort) I gaue the watch-word agreed vpon, (which was, Chriſt our victory) and immediatly thoſe his chiefe men and himſelfe had by the mercy of God for our deliuerance, that which they had purpoſed for vs. The king himſelfe being ſhot thorow by the Colonell with a piſtoll, lying on the ground for dead, & I looking as watchfully for the ſauing of Manteos friends, as others were buſie that none of the reſt ſhould eſcape, ſuddenly he ſtarted vp, and ran away as though he had not bene touched, inſomuch as he ouerran all the company, being by the way ſhot thwart the buttocks by mine Iriſh boy with my petronell. In the end an Iriſh man ſeruing me, one Nugent, and the deputy prouoſt, vndertooke him; and following him in the woods, ouertooke him: and I in ſome doubt leaſt we had loſt both the king & my man by our owne negligence to haue beene intercepted by the Sauages, wee met him returning out of the woods with Pemiſapans head in his hand.

Pemiſapan ſlaine.

This fell out the firſt of Iune 1586, and the eight of the ſame came aduertiſement to me from captaine Stafford, lying at my lord Admirals Iſland, that he had diſcouered a great fleet of three and twenty ſailes: but whether they were friends or foes, he could not yet diſcerne. He aduiſed me to ſtand vpon as good guard as I could.

The ninth of the ſayd moneth he himſelfe came vnto me, hauing that night before, & that ſame day trauelled by land twenty miles: and I muſt truely report of him from the firſt to the laſt; hee was the gentleman that neuer ſpared labour or perill either by land or water, faire weather or foule, to performe any ſeruice committed vnto him.

He brought me a letter from the Generall Sir Francis Drake, with a moſt bountifull and honourable offer for the ſupply of our neceſſities to the performance of the action wee were entred into; and that not only of victuals, munition, and clothing, but alſo of barks, pinneſſes, and boats; they alſo by him to be victualled, manned, and furniſhed to my contentation.

A letter from Sir Francis Drake.

The tenth day he arriued in the road of our bad harborow: and comming there to an anker, the eleuenth day I came to him, whom I found in deeds moſt honourably to performe that which in writing and meſſage he had moſt curteouſly offered, he hauing aforehand propounded the matter to all the captaines of his fleet, and got their liking and conſent thereto.

With ſuch thanks vnto him and his captaines for his care both of vs and of our action, not as the matter deſerued, but as I could both for my company and my ſelfe, I (being aforehand prepared what I would deſire) craued at his hands that it would pleaſe him to take with him into England a number of weake and vnfit men for my good action, which I would deliuer to him; and in place of them to ſupply me of his company with oare-men, artificers, and others.

That he would leaue vs ſo much ſhipping and victuall, as about Auguſt then next following would cary me and all my company into England, when we had diſcouered ſomewhat, that for lacke of needfull prouiſion in time left with vs as yet remained vndone.

That it woulde pleaſe him withall to leaue ſome ſufficient Maſters not onely to cary vs into England, when time ſhould be, but alſo to ſearch the coaſt for ſome better harborow, if there were any, and eſpecially to helpe vs to ſome ſmall boats and oare-men.

Alſo for a ſupply of calieuers, handweapons, match and lead, tooles, apparell, and ſuch like.

He hauing receiued theſe my requeſts, according to his vſuall commendable maner of gouernment (as it was told me) calling his captaines to counſell; the reſolution was that I ſhould ſend ſuch of my officers of my company as I vſed in ſuch matters, with their notes, to goe aboord with him; which were the Maſter of the victuals, the Keeper of the ſtore, and the Vicetreaſurer: to whom he appointed forthwith for me The Francis, being a very proper barke of 70 tun, and tooke preſent order for bringing of victual aboord her for 100 men for foure moneths, with all my other demands whatſoeuer, to the vttermoſt.

And further, he appointed for me two pinneſſes, and foure ſmall boats: and that which was to performe all his former liberality towards vs, was that he had gotten the full aſſents of two of as ſufficient experimented Maſters as were any in his fleet, by iudgement of them that knew them, with very ſufficient gings to tary with me, and to imploy themſelues moſt earneſtly in the action, as I ſhould appoint them, vntill the terme which I promiſed of our returne into England againe. The names of one of thoſe Maſters was Abraham Kendall, the other Griffith Herne.

While theſe things were in hand, the prouiſion aforeſayd being brought, and in bringing aboord, my ſayd Maſters being alſo gone aboord, my ſayd barks hauing accepted of their charge, and mine owne officers, with others in like ſort of my company with them (all which was diſpatched by the ſayd Generall the 12 of the ſayde moneth) the 13 of the ſame there aroſe ſuch an vnwoonted ſtorme, and continued foure dayes, that had like to haue driuen all on ſhore, if the Lord had not held his holy hand ouer them, and the Generall very prouidently foreſeene the woorſt himſelfe, then about my diſpatch putting himſelfe aboord: but in the end hauing driuen ſundry of the fleet to put to Sea the Francis alſo with all my prouiſions, my two Maſters, and my company aboord, ſhe was ſeene to be free from the ſame, and to put cleere to Sea.

This ſtorme hauing continued from the 13 to the 16 of the moneth, and thus my barke put away as aforeſayd, the Generall comming aſhore made a new proffer vnto me; which was a ſhip of 170 tunne, called The Barke Bonner, with a ſufficient Maſter and guide to tary with me the time appointed, and victualled ſufficiently to cary me and my company into England, with all prouiſions as before: but he tolde me that he would not for any thing vndertake to haue her brought into our harbour, and therefore he was to leaue her in the road, and to leaue the care of the reſt vnto my ſelfe, and aduiſed me to conſider with my company of our caſe, and to deliuer preſently vnto him in writing what I would require him to doe for vs; which being within his power, he did aſſure me aſwell for his Captaines as for himſelfe, ſhould be moſt willingly performed.

Heereupon calling ſuch Captaines and gentlemen of my company as then were at hand, who were all as priuy as my ſelfe to the Generals offer; their whole requeſt was to me, that conſidering the caſe that we ſtood in, the weakneſſe of our company, the ſmall number of the ſame, the carying away of our firſt appointed barke, with thoſe two eſpeciall Maſters, with our principall prouiſions in the ſame, by the very hand of God as it ſeemed, ſtretched out to take vs from thence; conſidering alſo, that his ſecond offer, though moſt honourable of his part, yet of ours not to be taken, inſomuch as there was no poſſibility for her with any ſafety to be brought into the harbour: ſeeing furthermore, our hope for ſupply with Sir Richard Greenuill, ſo vndoubtedly promiſed vs before Eaſter, not yet come, neither then likely to come this yeere, conſidering the doings in England for Flanders, and alſo for America, that therefore I would reſolue my ſelfe with my company to goe into England in that fleet, and accordingly to make requeſt to the Generall in all our names, that he would be pleaſed to giue vs preſent paſſage with him. Which requeſt of ours by my ſelfe deliuered vnto him, hee moſt readily aſſented vnto: and ſo he ſending immediatly his pinneſſes vnto our Iſland for the fetching away of a few that there were left with our baggage, the weather was ſo boiſterous, & the pinneſſes ſo often on ground, that the moſt of all we had, with all our Cards, Books and writings were by the Sailers caſt ouerboord, the greater number of the fleet being much agrieued with their long and dangerous abode in that miſerable road.

From whence the Generall in the name of the Almighty, weying his ankers (hauing beſtowed vs among his fleet) for the reliefe of whom hee had in that ſtorme ſuſteined more perill of wracke then in all his former moſt honourable actions againſt the Spanyards, with praiſes vnto God for all, ſet ſaile the nineteenth of Iune 1586, and arriued in Portſmouth the ſeuen and twentieth of Iuly the ſame yeere.

The

The third voyage made by a ſhip ſent in the yeere 1586, to the reliefe of the Colony planted in Virginia, at the ſole charges of Sir Walter Ralegh.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1586 Sir Walter Ralegh at his owne charge prepared a ſhip of an hundred tunne, fraighted with all maner of things in moſt plentifull maner, for the ſupply and reliefe of his Colony then remaining in Virginia: but before they ſet ſaile from England it was after Eaſter, ſo that our Colony halfe deſpaired of the comming of any ſupply: wherefore euery man prepared for himſelfe, determining reſolutely to ſpend the reſidue of their life time in that countrey. And for the better performance of this their determination, they ſowed, planted, and ſet ſuch things as were neceſſary for their reliefe in ſo plentifull a maner as might haue ſufficed them two yeeres without any further labour. Thus truſting to their owne harueſt, they paſſed the Summer till the tenth of Iune: at which time their corne which they had ſowed was within one fortnight of reaping: but then it happened that Sir Francis Drake in his proſperous returne from the ſacking of Sant Domingo, Cartagena, and Saint Auguſtine, determined in his way homeward to viſit his countreymen the Engliſh Colony then remaining in Virginia. So paſſing along the coaſts of Florida, he fell with the parts where our Engliſh Colony inhabited: and hauing eſpied ſome of that company, there he ankered and went aland, where hee conferred with them of their ſtate and welfare, and how things had paſt with them. They anſwered him that they liued all; but hitherto in ſome ſcarſity: and as yet could heare of no ſupply out of England: therefore they requeſted him that hee would leaue with them ſome two or three ſhips, that if in ſome reaſonable time they heard not out of England, they might then returne themſelues. Which hee agreed to. Whileſt ſome were then writing their letters to ſend into England, and ſome others making reports of the accidents of their trauels ech to other, ſome on land, ſome on boord, a great ſtorme aroſe, and droue the moſt of their fleet from their ankers to Sea, in which ſhips at that inſtant were the chiefeſt of the Engliſh Colony: the reſt on land perceiuing this, haſted to thoſe three ſailes which were appointed to be left there; and for feare they ſhould be left behinde they left all things confuſedly, as if they had bene chaſed from thence by a mighty army: and no doubt ſo they were; for the hand of God came vpon them for the cruelty and outrages committed by ſome of them againſt the natiue inhabitants of that countrey.

Immediatly after the departing of our Engliſh Colony out of this paradiſe of the world, the ſhip abouementioned ſent and ſet forth at the charges of Sir Walter Ralegh and his direction, arriued at Hatorask; who after ſome time ſpent in ſeeking our Colony vp in the countrey, and not finding them, returned with all the aforeſayd prouiſion into England.

This ſhip arriued in Virginia.

About foureteene or fifteene dayes after the departure of the aforeſayd ſhippe, Sir Richard Grinuile Generall of Virginia, accompanied with three ſhippes well appointed for the ſame voyage, arriued there; who not finding the aforeſayd ſhippe according to his expectation, nor hearing any newes of our Engliſh Colony there ſeated, and left by him anno 1585, himſelfe trauelling vp into diuers places of the countrey, aſwell to ſee if he could heare any newes of the Colony left there by him the yeere before, vnder the charge of Maſter Lane his deputy, as alſo to diſcouer ſome places of the countrey: but after ſome time ſpent therein, not hearing any newes of them, and finding the places which they inhabited deſolate, yet vnwilling to looſe the poſſeſſion of the countrey which Engliſhmen had ſo long held: after good deliberation, hee determined to leaue ſome men behinde to reteine poſſeſſion of the countrey: whereupon he landed fifteene men in the Iſle of Roanoak, furniſhed plentifully with all maner of prouiſion for two yeeres, and ſo departed for England.

Not long after he fell with the Iſles of Açores, on ſome of which Iſlands he landed, and ſpoiled the townes of all ſuch things as were worth cariage, where alſo he tooke diuers Spanyards. With theſe and many other exploits done by him in this voyage, aſwell outward as homeward, he returned into England.

A brieſe and true report of the new found land of Virginia : of the commodities there found, and to be raiſed, aſwell merchantable as others : Written by Thomas Herios, ſeruant to Sir Walter Ralegh, a member of the Colony, and there imployed in diſcouering a full tweluemoneth.

Rafe Lane one of her Maieſties Eſquiers, and Gouernour of the Colony in Virginia, aboue mentioned, for the time there reſident, to the gentle Reader wiſheth all happineſſe in the Lord.

ALbeit (gentle Reader) the credit of the reports in this Treatiſe contained can little be furthered by the teſtimony of one as my ſelfe, through affection iudged partiall, though without deſert: neuertheleſſe, forſomuch as I haue bene requeſted by ſome my particular friends, who conceiue more rightly of me, to deliuer freely my knowledge of the ſame, not onely for the ſatisfying of them, but alſo for the true information of any other whoſoeuer, that comes not with a preiudicate minde to the reading thereof: thus much vpon my credit I am to affirme, that things vniuerſally are ſo truely ſet downe is this Treatiſe by the authour thereof, an actor in the Colony, and a man no leſſe for his honeſty then learning commendable, as that I dare boldly auouch, it may very well paſſe with the credit of trueth euen amongſt the moſt true relations of this age. Which as for mine owne part I am ready any way with my word to acknowledge, ſo alſo (of the certaintie thereof aſſured by mine owne experience) with this my publique aſſertion I doe affirme the ſame. Farewell in the Lord.

To the Aduenturers, Fauourers, and Welwilliers of the enterpriſe for the inhabiting and planting in Virginia.

SInce the firſt vndertaking by Sir Walter Ralegh to deale in the action of diſcouering of that countrey which is now called and knowen by the name of Virginia, many voyages hauing beene thither made at ſundry times to his great charge; as firſt in the yere 1584, and afterwards in the yeres 1585, 1586, and now of late this laſt yeere 1587: there haue bene diuers and variable reports, with ſome ſlanderous and ſhamefull ſpeeches bruted abroad by many that returned from thence: eſpecially of that diſcouery which was made by the Colony tranſported by Sir Richard Grinuile in the yere 1585, being of all others the moſt principall, and as yet of moſt effect, the time of their abode in the countrey being a whole yere, when as in the other voyage before they ſtayed but ſixe weeks, and the others after were onely for ſupply and tranſportation, nothing more being diſcouered then had bene before. Which reports haue not done a little wrong to many that otherwiſe would haue alſo fauoured and aduentured in the action, to the honour and benefit of our nation, beſides the particular profit and credit which would redound to themſelues the dealers therein, as I hope by the ſequel of euents, to the ſhame of thoſe that haue auouched the contrary, ſhall be manifeſt, if you the aduenturers, fauourers and welwillers doe but either increaſe in number, or in opinion continue, or hauing beene doubtfull, renew your good liking and furtherance to deale therein according to the worthineſſe thereof already found, and as you ſhall vnderſtand hereafter to be requiſit. Touching which worthineſſe through cauſe of the diuerſity of relations and reports, many of your opinions could not be firme, nor the minds of ſome that are well diſpoſed be ſetled in any certainty.

I haue therefore thought it good, being one that haue beene in the diſcouerie, and in dealing with the naturall inhabitants ſpecially imployed: and hauing therefore ſeene and knowen more then the ordinary, to impart ſo much vnto you of the fruits of our labours, as that you may know how iniuriouſly the enterpriſe is ſlandered, and that in publique maner at this preſent, chiefly for two reſpects.

Firſt, that ſome of you which are yet ignorant or doubtfull of the ſtate thereof, may ſee that there is ſufficient cauſe why the chiefe enterpriſer with the fauour of her Maieſty, notwithſtanding ſuch reports, hath not onely ſince continued the action by ſending into the countrey againe, and replanting this laſt yeere a new Colony, but is alſo ready, according as the times and meanes will affoord, to follow and proſecute the ſame.

Secondly, that you ſeeing and knowing the continuance of the action, by the view hereof you may generally know and learne what the countrey is, and thereupon conſider how your dealing therein, if it proceed, may returne you profit and gaine, be it either by inhabiting and planting, or otherwiſe in furthering thereof.

And leaſt that the ſubſtance of my relation ſhould be doubtfull vnto you, as of others by reaſon of their diuerſitie, I will firſt open the cauſe in a few words, wherefore they are ſo different, referring my ſelfe to your fauourable conſtructions, and to be adiudged of, as by good conſideration you ſhall finde cauſe.

Of our company that returned, ſome for their miſdemeanour and ill dealing in the countrey haue bene there worthily puniſhed, who by reaſon of their bad natures, haue maliciouſly not onely ſpoken ill of their Gouernours, but for their ſakes ſlandered the countrey it ſelfe. The like alſo haue thoſe done which were of their conſort.

Some being ignorant of the ſtate thereof, notwithſtanding ſince their returne amongſt their friends & acquaintance, and alſo others, eſpecially if they were in company where they might not be gainſayd, would ſeeme to know ſo much as no men more, and make no men ſo great trauellers as themſelues. They ſtood ſo much, as it may ſeeme, vpon their credit and reputation, that hauing bene a tweluemoneth in the countrey, it would haue bene a great diſgrace vnto them, as they thought, if they could not haue ſayd much, whether it were true or falſe. Of which ſome haue ſpoken of more then euer they ſaw, or otherwiſe knew to be there. Other ſome haue not bene aſhamed to make abſolute deniall of that, which although not by them, yet by others is moſt certainly and there plentifully knowen, & other ſome make difficulties of thoſe things they haue no ſkill of.

The cauſe of their ignorance was, in that they were of that many that were neuer out of the Iſland where we were ſeated, or not farre, or at the leaſt wiſe in few places els, during the time of our abode in the countrey: or of that many, that after gold & ſiluer was not ſo ſoone found, as it was by them looked for, had litle or no care of any other thing but to pamper their bellies: or of that many which had litle vnderſtanding, leſſe diſcretion, and more tongue then was needfull or requiſite.

Some alſo were of a nice bringing vp, only in cities or townes, or ſuch as neuer (as I may ſay) had ſeene the world before. Becauſe there were not to be found any Engliſh cities, nor ſuch faire houſes, nor at their owne wiſh any of their old accuſtomed dainty food, nor any ſoft beds of downe or feathers, the countrey was to them miſerable, and their reports thereof according.

Becauſe my purpoſe was but in briefe to open the cauſe of the variety of ſuch ſpeeches, the particularities of them, and of many enuious, malicious, and ſlanderous reports and deuices els, by our owne countreymen beſides, as trifles that are not worthy of wiſe men to be thought vpon, I meane not to trouble you withall, but will paſſe to the commodities, the ſubſtance of that which I haue to make relation of vnto you.

The Treatiſe whereof, for your more ready view and eaſier vnderſtanding, I will diuide into three ſpeciall parts. In the firſt I will make declaration of ſuch commodities there already found or to be raiſed, which will not onely ſerue the ordinary turnes of you which are and ſhall be the planters and inhabitants, but ſuch an ouerplus ſufficiently to be yeelded, or by men of ſkill to be prouided, as by way of traffique and exchange with our owne nation of England, will inrich your ſelues the prouiders: thoſe that ſhall deale with you, the enterpriſers in generall, and greatly profit our owne countreymen, to ſupply them with moſt things which heretofore they haue bene faine to prouide either of ſtrangers or of our enemies, which commodities, for diſtinction ſake, I call Merchantable.

In the ſecond I will ſet downe all the commodities which we know the countrey by our experience doth yeeld of it ſelfe for victuall and ſuſtenance of mans life, ſuch as are vſually fed vpon by the inhabitants of the countrey, as alſo by vs during the time we were there.

In the laſt part I will make mention generally of ſuch other commodities beſides, as I am able to remember, and as I ſhall thinke behoouefull for thoſe that ſhall inhabit, and plant there, to know of, which ſpecially concerne building, as alſo ſome other neceſſary vſes: with a briefe deſcription of the nature and maners of the people of the countrey.

The firſt part of Merchantable commodities.

Silke of graſſe, or Graſſe ſilke. There is a kind of graſſe in the countrey, vpon the blades whereof there groweth very good ſilke in forme of a thin glittering ſkin to be ſtript off. It groweth two foot & an halfe high or better: the blades are about two foot in length, and halfe an inch broad. The like groweth in Perſia, which is in the ſelfe ſame climate as Virginia, of which very many of the Silke works that come from thence into Europe are made, made. Hereof if it be planted and ordered as in Perſia, it cannot in reaſon be otherwiſe, but that there will riſe in ſhort time great profit to the dealers therein, ſeeing there is ſo great vſe and vent thereof aſwel in our countrey as elſwhere. And by the meanes of ſowing and planting it in good ground, it will be farre greater, better, and more plentifull then it is. Although notwithſtanding there is great ſtore thereof in many places of the countrey growing naturally and wild, which alſo by proofe here in England, in making a piece of Silke grogran, we found to be excellent good.

Worme ſilke. In many of our iourneys we found Silke-wormes faire and great, as bigge as our ordinary Walnuts. Although it hath not bene our hap to haue found ſuch plenty, as elſwhere to be in the countrey we haue heard of, yet ſeeing that the countrey doth naturally breed and nouriſh them, there is no doubt but if arte be added in planting of Mulberie trees, and others, fit for them in commodious places, for their feeding & nouriſhing, and ſome of them carefully gathered & huſbanded in that ſort, as by men of ſkil is knowen to be neceſſary: there wil riſe as great profit in time to the Virginians, as thereof doth now to the Perſians, Turks, Italians and Spanyards.

Flaxe and Hempe. The trueth is, that of Hempe and Flaxe there is no great ſtore in any one place together, by reaſon it is not planted but as the ſoile doth yeeld of it ſelfe: and howſoeuer the leafe and ſtemme or ſtalke do differ from ours, the ſtuffe by iudgement of men of ſkill is altogether as good as ours: and if not, as further proofe ſhould finde otherwiſe, we haue that experience of the ſoile, as that there cannot be ſhewed any reaſon to the contrary, but that it will grow there excellent well, and by planting will be yeelded plentifully, ſeeing there is ſo much ground whereof ſome may well be applied to ſuch purpoſes. What benefit heereof may grow in cordage and linnens who cannot eaſily vnderſtand?

Allum. There is a veine of earth along the ſea coaſt for the ſpace of forty or fifty miles, whereof by the iudgement of ſome that haue made triall here in England, is made good Allum, of that kind which is called Roch allum. The richneſſe of ſuch a commodity is ſo well knowen, that I need not to ſay any thing thereof. The ſame earth doth alſo yeeld White copraſſe, Nitrum, and Alumen plumeum, but nothing ſo plentifully as the common Allum, which be alſo of price, and profitable.

Wapeih. A kind of earth ſo called by the naturall inhabitants, very like to Terra ſigillata, and hauing bene refined, it hath bene found by ſome of our Phyſicians and Chyrurgians, to be of the ſame kind of vertue, and more effectuall. The inhabitants vſe it very much for the cure of ſores and wounds: there is in diuers places great plenty, and in ſome places of a blew ſort.

Pitch, Tarre, Rozen and Turpentine. There are thoſe kindes of trees which yeeld them abundantly and great ſtore. In the very ſame Iſland where we were ſeated, being fifteene miles of length, and fiue or ſixe miles in breadth, there are few trees els but of the ſame kinde, the whole Iſland being full.

Saſſafras, called by the inhabitants Winauk, a kind of wood of moſt pleaſant and ſweet ſmell, and of moſt rare vertues in phyſicke for the cure of many diſeaſes. It is found by experience to be far better and of more vſes then the wood which is called Guaiacum, or Lignum vitæ. For the deſcription, the maner of vſing, and the manifold vertues therof, I refer you to the booke of Monardes, tranſlated and entituled in Engliſh, The ioyfull newes from the Weſt Indies.

Cedar. A very ſweet wood, and fine timber, whereof if neſts of cheſts be there made, or timber thereof fitted for ſweet and fine bedſteds, tables, deſks, lutes, virginals, and many things els, (of which there hath bene proofe made already) to make vp fraight with other principall commodities, will yeeld profit.

Wine. There are two kindes of grapes that the ſoile doth yeeld naturally, the one is ſmall and ſowre, of the ordinary bigneſſe as ours in England, the other farre greater and of himſelfe luſhious ſweet. When they are planted and huſbanded as they ought, a principall commodity of wines by them may be raiſed.

Oile. There are two ſorts of Walnuts, both holding oile; but the one farre more plentifull then the other. When there are mils and other deuices for the purpoſe, a commodity of them may be raiſed, becauſe there are infinite ſtore. There are alſo three ſeuerall kindes of berries in the forme of Oke-akornes, which alſo by the experience and vſe of the inhabitants, we find to yeeld very good and ſweet oile. Furthermore, the beares of the countrey are commonly very fat, and in ſome places there are many. Their fatneſſe, becauſe it is ſo liquid, may well be termed oile, and hath many ſpeciall vſes.

Furres. All along the Sea coaſt there are great ſtore of Otters, which being taken by weares and other engines made for the purpoſe, wil yeeld good profit. We hope alſo of Marterne furres, and make no doubt by the relation of the people, but that in ſome places of the countrey there are ſtore, although there were but two ſkinnes that came to our hands. Luzernes alſo we haue vnderſtanding of, although for the time we ſaw none.

Deers skinnes dreſſed after the maner of Chamoes, or vndreſſed, are to be had of the naturall inhabitants thouſands yerely by way of traffike for trifles, and no more waſte or ſpoile of Deere then is and hath bene ordinarily in time before.

Ciuet-cats. In our trauels there was found one to haue bin killed by a Sauage or inhabitant, & in another place the ſmel where one or more had lately bene before, whereby we gather, beſides then by the relation of the people, that there are ſome in the country: good profit will riſe by them.

Iron. In two places of the countrey ſpecially, one about foureſcore, & the other ſix ſcore miles from the fort or place where we dwelt, we found nere the water ſide the ground to be rocky, which by the triall of a Minerall man was found to holde iron richly. It is found in many places of the country els: I know nothing to the contrary, but that it may be allowed for a good merchantable commodity, conſidering there the ſmall charge for the labour & feeding of men, the infinite ſtore of wood, the want of wood & deereneſſe thereof in England, and the neceſſity of ballaſting of ſhips.

Copper An hundred and fifty miles into the maine in two townes we found with the inhabitants diuers ſmall plates of Copper, that had bene made as we vnderſtood by the inhabitants that dwell further into the country, where as they ſay are mountaines and riuers that yeeld alſo white graines of mettall, which is to be deemed Siluer. For confirmation whereof, at the time of our firſt arriuall in the countrey, I ſaw, with ſome others with me, two ſmall pieces of Siluer groſly beaten, about the weight of a teſtron, hanging in the eares of a Wiroans or chiefe lord that dwelt about foure ſcore miles from vs: of whom through inquiry, by the number of dayes and the way, I learned that it had come to his hands from the ſame place or neere, where I after vnderſtood the Copper was made, and the white graines of metall found. The aforeſayd Copper we alſo found by triall to holde Siluer.

Pearle. Sometimes in feeding on Muſcles we found ſome Pearle: but it was our happe to meet with ragges, or of a pide colour: not hauing yet diſcouered thoſe places where we heard of better and more plenty. One of our company, a man of ſkill in ſuch matters, had gathered together from among the Sauage people about fiue thouſand: of which number he choſe ſo many as made a faire chaine, which for their likeneſſe and vniformity in roundneſſe, orientneſſe, and pideneſſe of many excellent colours, with equality in greatneſſe, were very faire and rare: and had therefore beene preſented to her Maieſty, had we not by caſualty, and through extremity of a ſtorme loſt them, with many things els in comming away from the countrey.

Sweet gummes of diuers kinds, and many other Apothecary drugges, of which we will make ſpeciall mention, when we ſhall receiue it from ſuch men of ſkill in that kinde, that in taking reaſonable paines ſhal diſcouer them more particularly then we haue done, and then now I can make relation of, for want of the examples I had prouided and gathered, and are now loſt, with other things by caſualty before mentioned.

Dies of diuers kinds: There is Shoemake well knowen, and vſed in England for blacke: the ſeed of an herbe called Waſebur, little ſmall roots called Chappacor, and the barke of the tree called by the inhabitants Tangomockonomindge: which dies are for diuers ſorts of red: their goodneſſe for our Engliſh clothes remaine yet to be prooued. The inhabitants vſe them only for the dying of haire, and colouring of their faces, and mantles made of Deere ſkinnes: and alſo for the dying of ruſhes to make artificiall works withall in their mats and baskets: hauing no other thing beſides that they account of, apt to vſe them for. If they will not prooue merchantable, there is no doubt but the planters there ſhall finde apt vſes for them, as alſo for other colours which we know to be there.

Woad: a thing of ſo great vent and vſes amongſt Engliſh Diers, which can not be yeelded ſufficiently in our owne countrey for ſpare of ground, may be planted in Virginia, there being ground enough. The growth thereof need not to be doubted, when as in the Iſlands of the Açores it groweth plentifully, which are in the ſame climate. So likewiſe of Madder.

We caried thither Suger-canes to plant, which being not ſo well preſerued as was requiſite, and beſides the time of the yeere being paſt for their ſetting when we arriued, we could not make that proofe of them as we deſired. Notwithſtanding, ſeeing that they grow in the ſame climate, in the South part of Spaine, and in Barbary, our hope in reaſon may yet continue. So likewiſe for Orenges and Limmons. There may be planted alſo Quinſes. Whereby may grow in reaſonable time, if the action be diligently proſecuted, no ſmall commodities in Sugars, Suckets, and Marmelades.

Many other commodities by planting may there alſo be raiſed, which I leaue to your diſcreet and gentle conſiderations: and many alſo may be there, which yet we haue not diſcouered. Two more commodities of great value, one of certeinty, and the other in hope, not to be planted, but there to be raiſed, and in ſhort time to be prouided, and prepared, I might haue ſpecified. So likewiſe of thoſe commodities already ſet downe I might haue ſayd more: as of the particular places where they are found, and beſt to be planted and prepared: by what meanes, and in what reaſonable ſpace of time they might be raiſed to profit, and in what proportion: but becauſe others then welwillers might be therewithall acquainted, not to the good of the action, I haue wittingly omitted them: knowing that to thoſe that are well diſpoſed, I haue vttered, according to my promiſe and purpoſe, for this part ſufficient.

The ſecond part of ſuch commodities as Virginia is knowen to yeeld for victuall and ſuſtenance of mans life, vſually fed vpon by the naturall inhabitants; as alſo by vs, during the time of our abode: and firſt of ſuch as are ſowed and husbanded.

PAgatowr, a kinde of graine ſo called by the inhabitants: the ſame in the Weſt Indies is called Mayz: Engliſh men call it Guiny-wheat or Turky-wheat, according to the names of the countreys from whence the like hath beene brought. The graine is about the bigneſſe of our ordinary Engliſh peaze, and not much different in forme and ſhape: but of diuers colours: ſome white, ſome red, ſome yellow, and ſome blew. All of them yeeld a very white and ſweet flowre: being vſed according to his kinde, it maketh a very good bread. We made of the ſame in the countrey ſome Mault, whereof was brewed as good Ale as was to be deſired. So likewiſe by the helpe of Hops, therof may be made as good Beere. It is a graine of maruellous great increaſe: of a thouſand, fifteene hundred, and ſome two thouſand folde. There are three ſorts, of which two are ripe in eleuen & twelue weeks at the moſt, ſometimes in tenne, after the time they are ſet, and are then of height in ſtalke about ſixe or ſeuen foot. The other ſort is ripe in fourteene, and is about tenne foot high, of the ſtalks ſome beare foure heads, ſome three, ſome one, and ſome two; euery head conteining fiue, ſixe, or ſeuen hundred graines, within a few more or leſſe. Of theſe graines, beſides bread, the inhabitants make victuall, either by parching them, or ſeething them whole vntill they be broken: or boiling the flowre with water into a pap.

Okindgier, called by vs Beanes, becauſe in greatneſſe and partly in ſhape they are like to the beanes in England, ſauing that they are flatter, of more diuers colours, and ſome pide. The leafe alſo of the ſtemme is much different. In taſte they are altogether as good as our Engliſh peaze.

Wickonzowr, called by vs Peaze, in reſpect of the Beanes, for diſtinction ſake, becauſe they are much leſſe, although in forme they litle differ: but in goodneſſe of taſte much like, and are far better then our Engliſh peaze. Both the beanes and peaze are ripe in ten weeks after they are ſet. They make them victuall either by boiling them all to pieces into a broth, or boiling them whole vntill they be ſoft, and beginne to breake, as is vſed in England, either by themſelues, or mixtly together: ſometime they mingle of the Wheat with them: ſometime alſo, being whole ſodden, they bruiſe or punne them in a morter, and thereof make loaues or lumps of doughiſh bread, which they vſe to eat for variety.

Macocquer, according to their ſeueral formes, called by vs Pompions, Melons, and Gourds, becauſe they are of the like formes as thoſe kinds in England. In Virginia ſuch of ſeuerall formes are of one taſte, and very good, and do alſo ſpring from one ſeed. There are of two ſorts: one is ripe in the ſpace of a moneth, and the other in two moneths.

There is an herbe which in Dutch is called Melden. Some of thoſe that I deſcribe it vnto, take it to be a kinde of Orage: it groweth about foure or fiue foot high: of the ſeed thereof they make a thicke broth, and pottage of a very good taſte: of the ſtalke by burning into aſhes they make a kinde of ſalt earth, wherewithall many vſe ſometimes to ſeaſon their broths: other ſalt they know not. We our ſelues vſed the leaues alſo for pot-herbs.

There is alſo another great herbe, in forme of a Marigolde, about ſixe foot in height, the head with the floure is a ſpanne in breadth. Some take it to be Planta Solis: of the ſeeds hereof they make both a kinde of bread and broth.

All the aforeſayd commodities for victuall are ſet or ſowed, ſometimes in grounds apart and ſeuerally by themſelues, but for the moſt part together in one ground mixtly: the maner thereof, with the dreſſing and preparing of the ground, becauſe I will note vnto you the fertility of the ſoile, I thinke good briefly to deſcribe.

The ground they neuer fatten with mucke, dung, or any other thing, neither plow nor digge it as we in England, but onely prepare it in ſort as followeth. A few dayes before they ſowe or ſet, the men with woodden inſtruments made almoſt in forme of mattocks or hoes with long handles: the women with ſhort peckers or parers, becauſe they vſe them ſitting, of a foot long, and about fiue inches in breadth, doe onely breake the vpper part of the ground to raiſe vp the weeds, graſſe, and olde ſtubbes of corne ſtalks with their roots. The which after a day or two dayes drying in the Sunne, being ſcrapt vp into many ſmall heaps, to ſaue them labour for carying them away, they burne into aſhes. And whereas ſome may thinke that they vſe the aſhes for to better the ground, I ſay that then they would either diſperſe the aſhes abroad, which wee obſerued they do not, except the heaps be too great, or els would take ſpeciall care to ſet their corne where the aſhes lie, which alſo wee finde they are careleſſe of. And this is all the huſbanding of their ground that they vſe.

Then their ſetting or ſowing is after this maner. Firſt for their corne, beginning in one corner of the plot, with a pecker they make a hole, wherein they put foure graines, with care that they touch not one another (about an inch aſunder) & couer them with the molde againe: and ſo thorowout the whole plot making ſuch holes, and vſing them after ſuch maner, but with this regard, that they be made in ranks, euery ranke differing from other halfe a fadome or a yard, and the holes alſo in euery ranke as much. By this meanes there is a yard ſpare ground betweene euery hole: where according to diſcretion here and there, they ſet as many Beanes and Peaze; in diuers places alſo among the ſeeds of Macocquer, Melden, and Planta ſolis.

The ground being thus ſet according to the rate by vs experimented, an Engliſh acre conteining forty pearches in length, and foure in breadth, doth there yeeld in croppe or ofcome of corne, Beanes and Peaze, at the leaſt two hundred London buſhels, beſides the Macocquer, Melden, and Planta ſolis; when as in England forty buſhels of our Wheat yeelded out of ſuch an acre is thought to be much.

I thought alſo good to note this vnto you, that you which ſhall inhabit, and plant there, may know how ſpecially that countrey corne is there to be preferred before ours: beſides, the manifold wayes in applying it to victual, the increaſe is ſo much, that ſmall labor & paines is needful in reſpect of that which muſt be vſed for ours. For this I can aſſure you that according to the rate we haue made proofe of, one man may prepare and huſband ſo much ground (hauing once borne corne before) with leſſe then foure and twenty houres labour, as ſhall yeeld him victual in a large proportion for a tweluemoneth, if he haue nothing els but that which the ſame ground will yeeld, and of that kinde onely which I haue before ſpoken of: the ſayd ground being alſo but of fiue and twenty yards ſquare. And if need require, but that there is ground enough, there might be raiſed out of one and the ſelfeſame ground two harueſts or ofcomes: for they ſow or ſet, and may at any time when they thinke good, from the midſt of March vntill the end of Iune: ſo that they alſo ſet when they haue eaten of their firſt croppe. In ſome places of the countrey notwithſtanding they haue two harueſts, as we haue heard, out of one and the ſame ground.

For Engliſh corne neuertheleſſe, whether to vſe or not to vſe it, you that inhabit may doe as you ſhall haue further cauſe to thinke beſt. Of the growth you need not to doubt: for Barley, Oats, and Peaze, we haue ſeene proofe of, not being purpoſely ſowen, but fallen caſually in the worſt ſort of ground, and yet to be as faire as any we haue euer ſeene heere in England. But of Wheat, becauſe it was muſty, and had taken ſalt water, we could make no triall: and of Rie we had none. Thus much haue I digreſſed, and I hope not vnneceſſarily: now will I returne againe to my courſe, and intreat of that which yet remaineth, apperteining to this chapter.

There is an herbe which is ſowed apart by it ſelfe, and is called by the inhabitants Vppowoc: in the Weſt Indies it hath diuers names, according to the ſeuerall places and countreys where it groweth and is vſed: the Spanyards generally call it Tabacco. The leaues thereof being dried and brought into pouder, they vſe to take the fume or ſmoake thereof, by ſucking it thorow pipes made of clay, into their ſtomacke and head; from whence it purgeth ſuperfluous fleame and other groſſe humours, and openeth all the pores and paſſages of the body: by which meanes the vſe thereof not onely preſerueth the body from obſtructions, but alſo (if any be, ſo that they haue not bene of too long continuance) in ſhort time breaketh them: whereby their bodies are notably preſerued in health, and know not many grieuous diſeaſes, wherewithall we in England are often times afflicted.

Tabacco.

This Vppowoc is of ſo precious eſtimation amongſt them, that they thinke their gods are maruellouſly delighted therewith: whereupon ſometime they make hallowed fires, and caſt ſome of the pouder therin for a ſacrifice: being in a ſtorme vpon the waters, to pacifie their gods, they caſt ſome vp into the aire and into the water: ſo a weare for fiſh being newly ſet vp, they caſt ſome therein and into the aire: alſo after an eſcape of danger, they caſt ſome into the aire likewiſe: but all done with ſtrange geſtures, ſtamping, ſometime dancing, clapping of hands, holding vp of hands, and ſtaring vp into the heauens, vttering therewithall, and chattering ſtrange words and noiſes.

We our ſelues, during the time we were there, vſed to ſucke it after their maner, as alſo ſince our returne, and haue found many rare and woonderfull experiments of the vertues thereof: of which the relation would require a volume by it ſelfe: the vſe of it by ſo many of late men and women of great calling, as els, and ſome learned Phyſicians alſo, is ſufficient witneſſe.

And theſe are all the commodities for ſuſtenance of life, that I know and can remember, they vſe to huſband: all els that follow, are found growing naturally or wilde.

Of Roots.

OPenauk are a kinde of roots of round forme, ſome of the bigneſſe of Walnuts, ſome farre greater, which are found in moiſt and mariſh grounds growing many together one by another in ropes, as though they were faſtened with a ſtring. Being boiled or ſodden, they are very good meat. Monardes calleth theſe roots, Beads or Pater noſtri of Santa Helena.

Monardes parte 2. lib. 1. cap. 4.

Okeepenauk are alſo of round ſhape, found in dry grounds: ſome are of the bigneſſe of a mans head. They are to be eaten as they are taken out of the ground: for by reaſon of their drineſſe they will neither roſt nor ſeethe. Their taſte is not ſo good as of the former roots: notwithſtanding for want of bread, and ſometimes for variety the inhabitants vſe to eat them with fiſh or fleſh, and in my iudgement they do as well as the houſholde bread made of Rie here in England.

Kaiſhucpenauk, a white kinde of roots about the bigneſſe of hennes egges, and neere of that forme: their taſte was not ſo good to our ſeeming as of the other, and therefore their place and maner of growing not ſo much cared for by vs: the inhabitants notwithſtanding vſed to boile and eat many.

Tſinaw, a kind of root much like vnto that which in England is called the China root brought from the Eaſt Indies. And we know not any thing to the contrary but that it may be of the ſame kinde. Theſe roots grow many together in great cluſters, and do bring foorth a brier ſtalke, but the leafe in ſhape farre vnlike: which being ſupported by the trees it groweth neereſt vnto, will reach or climbe to the top of the higheſt. From theſe roots while they be new or freſh, being chopt into ſmall pieces, and ſtampt, is ſtrained with water a iuice that maketh bread, and alſo being boiled, a very good ſpoonmeat in maner of a gelly, and is much better in taſte, if it be tempered with oile. This Tſinaw is not of that ſort, which by ſome was cauſed to be brought into England for the China root; for it was diſcouered ſince, and is in vſe as is aforeſayd: but that which was brought hither is not yet knowen, neither by vs nor by the inhabitants to ſerue for any vſe or purpoſe, although the roots in ſhape are very like.

Coſcuſhaw ſome of our company tooke to be that kinde of root which the Spanyards in the Weſt Indies call Caſſauy, whereupon alſo many called it by that name: it groweth in very muddy pooles, and moiſt grounds. Being dreſſed according to the countrey maner, it maketh a good bread, and alſo a good ſpoonmeat, and is vſed very much by the inhabitants. The iuice of this root is poiſon, & therefore heed muſt be taken before any thing be made therewithall: either the roots muſt be firſt ſliced and dried in the Sunne, or by the fire, and then being punned into floure, will make good bread: or els while they are greene they are to be pared, cut in pieces, and ſtampt: loaues of the ſame to be layd nere or ouer the fire vntill it be ſowre; and then being well punned againe, bread or ſpoonmeat very good in taſte and holeſome may be made thereof.

The iuice of Coſcuſhaw is poiſon.

Habaſcon is a root of hote taſte, almoſt of the forme and bigneſſe of a Parſnip: of it ſelfe it is no victuall, but onely a helpe, being boiled together with other meats.

There are alſo Leeks, differing little from ours in England, that grow in many places of the countrey; of which, when we came in places where they were, we gathered and eat many, but the naturall inhabitants neuer.

Of Fruits.

CHeſtnuts there are in diuers places great ſtore: ſome they vſe to eat raw, ſome they ſtampe and boile to make ſpoonmeat, and with ſome being ſodden, they make ſuch a maner of dough bread as they vſe of their beanes before mentioned.

Walnuts. There are two kinds of Walnuts, and of them infinite ſtore: in many places, where are very great woods for many miles together, the third part of trees are Walnut trees. The one kinde is of the ſame taſte and forme, or little differing from ours of England, but that they are harder and thicker ſhelled: the other is greater, and hath a very ragged and hard ſhell; but the kernel great, very oily and ſweet. Beſides their eating of them after our ordinary maner, they breake them with ſtones, and punne them in morters with water, to make a milke which they vſe to put into ſome ſorts of their ſpoonemeat; alſo among their ſodde wheat, peaze, beanes and pompions, which maketh them haue a farre more pleaſant taſte.

Medlars, a kinde of very good fruit; ſo called by vs chiefly for theſe reſpects: firſt in that they are not good vntill they be rotten, then in that they open at the head as our Medlars, and are about the ſame bigneſſe: otherwiſe in taſte and colour they are farre different; for they are as red as cheries, and very ſweet: but whereas the chery is ſharpe ſweet, they are luſhious ſweet.

Mutaqueſunnauk, a kinde of pleaſant fruit almoſt of the ſhape and bigneſſe of Engliſh peares, but that they are of a perfect red colour aſwell within as without. They grow on a plant whoſe leaues are very thicke, and full of prickles as ſharpe as needles. Some that haue beene in the Indies, where they haue ſeene that kind of red die of great price, which is called Cochinile, to grow, doe deſcribe his plant right like vnto this of Metaqueſunnauk; but whether it be the true Cochinile, or a baſtard or wilde kinde, it cannot yet be certified, ſeeing that alſo, as I heard, Cochinile is not of the fruit, but found on the leaues of the plant: which leaues for ſuch matter we haue not ſo ſpecially obſerued.

There are iii. kinds of Tunas whereof that which beareth no fruith bringeth foorth the Cochinillo.

Grapes there are of two ſorts, which I mentioned in the merchantable commodities.

Strawberies there are as good and as great as thoſe which we haue in our Engliſh gardens.

Mulberies, Applecrabs, Hurts or Hurtleberies, ſuch as we haue in England.

Sacquenummener, a kinde of berries almoſt like vnto Capers, but ſomewhat greater, which grow together in cluſters vpon a plant or hearbe that is found in ſhallow waters: being boiled eight or nine houres according to their kinde, are very good meat and holeſome: otherwiſe if they be eaten they will make a man for the time frantike or extremely ſicke.

There is a kinde of Reed which beareth a ſeed almoſt like vnto our Rie or Wheat; and being boiled is good meat.

In our trauels in ſome places we found Wilde peaze like vnto ours in England, but that they were leſſe, which are alſo good meat.

Of a kinde of fruit or berry in forme of Acornes.

There is a kinde of berry or acorne, of which there are fiue ſorts that grow on ſeuerall kindes of trees: the one is called Sagatemener, the ſecond Oſamener, the third Pummuckoner. Theſe kinde of acornes they vſe to drie vpon hurdles made of reeds, with fire vnderneath, almoſt after the maner as we dry Malt in England. When they are to be vſed, they firſt water them vntill they be ſoft, and then being ſod, they make a good victuall, either to eat ſo ſimply, or els being alſo punned to make loaues or lumps of bread. Theſe be alſo the three kinds, of which I ſayd before the inhabitants vſed to make ſweet oile.

Another ſort is called Sapummener, which being boiled or parched, doth eat and taſte like vnto Cheſnuts. They ſometime alſo make bread of this ſort.

The fift ſort is called Mangummenauk, and is the acorne of their kinde of Oake, the which being dried after the maner of the firſt ſorts, and afterward watered, they boile them, and their ſeruants, or ſometime the chiefe themſelues, either for variety or for want of bread, do eat them with their fiſh or fleſh

Of Beaſts.

Deere, in ſome places there are great ſtore: neere vnto the Sea coaſt they are of the ordinary bigneſſe of ours in England, and ſome leſſe: but further vp into the countrey, where there is better food, they are greater: they differ from ours onely in this, their tailes are longer, and the ſnags of their hornes looke backward.

Conies. Thoſe that we haue ſeene, and all that we can heare of are of a gray colour like vnto Hares: in ſome places there are ſuch plenty that all the people of ſome townes make them mantles of the furre or flue of the ſkinnes of thoſe which they vſually take.

Saquenuckot and Maquowoc, two kinds of ſmall beaſts greater then Conies, which are very good meat. We neuer tooke any of them our ſelues, but ſometime eat of ſuch as the inhabitants had taken and brought vnto vs.

Squirels, which are of a grey colour, we haue taken and eaten.

Beares, which are of blacke colour. The beares of this countrey are good meat. The inhabitants in time of Winter do vſe to take & eat many; ſo alſo sometime did we. They are taken commonly in this ſort: In ſome Iſlands or places where they are, being hunted for, alſoone as they haue ſpiall of a man, they preſently run away, and then being chaſed, they clime and get vp the next tree they can; from whence with arrowes they are ſhot downe ſtarke dead, or with thoſe wounds that they may after eaſily be killed. We ſometime ſhot them downe with our calieuers.

I haue the names of eight and twenty ſeuerall ſorts of beaſts, which I haue heard of to be here and there diſperſed in the countrey, eſpecially in the maine: of which there are only twelue kinds that we haue yet diſcouered; and of thoſe that be good meat we know only them before mentioned. The inhabitants ſometime kill the Lion, and eat him: and we ſometime as they came to our hands of their Woolues or Wooluiſh dogs, which I haue not ſet downe for good meat, leaſt that ſome would vnderſtand my iudgement therein to be more ſimple then needeth, although I could alleage the difference in taſte of thoſe kinds from ours, which by ſome of our company haue bene experimented in both.

Of Fowle.

TVrkie cocks and Turkie hennes, Stockdoues, Partridges, Cranes, Hernes, and in Winter great ſtore of Swannes and Geeſe. Of all ſorts of fowle I haue the names in the countrey language of fourescore and ſixe, of which number, beſides thoſe that be named, we haue taken, eaten, & haue the pictures as they were there drawen, with the names of the inhabitants, of ſeuerall ſtrange ſorts of water fowle eight, and ſeuenteene kinds more of land fowle, although we haue ſeene and eaten of many more, which for want of leaſure there for the purpoſe, could not be pictured: and after we are better furniſhed and ſtored vpon further diſcouery with their ſtrange beaſts, fiſh, trees, plants, and herbs, they ſhalbe alſo publiſhed.

There are alſo Parrots, Faulcons, and Marlin hauks, which although with vs they be not vſed for meat, yet for other cauſes I thought good to mention.

Of Fiſh.

FOr foure moneths of the yeere, February, March, Aprill and May, there are plenty of Sturgeons. And alſo in the ſame moneths of Herrings, ſome of the ordinary bigneſſe of ours in England, but the moſt part farre greater, of eighteene, twenty inches, and ſome two foot in length and better: both theſe kinds of fiſh in thoſe moneths are moſt plentifull, and in beſt ſeaſon, which we found to be moſt delicate and pleaſant meat.

There are alſo Trouts, Porpoiſes, Rayes, Oldwiues, Mullets, Plaice, and very many other ſorts of excellent good fiſh, which we haue taken and eaten, whoſe names I know not but in the countrey language: we haue the pictures of twelue ſorts more, as they were drawen in the countrey, with their names.

In the gulfe of California they vſe the like fiſhing.

The inhabitants vſe to take them two maner of wayes; the one is by a kinde of weare made of reeds, which in that country are very ſtrong: the other way, which is more ſtrange, is with poles made ſharpe at one end, by ſhooting them into the fiſh after the maner as Iriſh men caſt darts, either as they are rowing in their boats, or els as they are wading in the ſhallowes for the purpoſe.

There are alſo in many places plenty of theſe kinds which follow:

Sea-crabs, ſuch as we haue in England.

Oiſters, ſome very great, and ſome ſmall, ſome round, and ſome of a long ſhape: they are found both in ſalt water and brackiſh, and thoſe that we had out of ſalt water are farre better then the other, as in our countrey.

Alſo Muſcles, Scalops, Periwinkles, and Creuiſes.

Seekanauk, a kinde of cruſty ſhel-fiſh, which is good meat, about a foot in bredth, hauing a cruſty taile, many legges like a crab, and her eyes in her backe. They are found in ſhallowes of waters, and ſometime on the ſhore.

There are many Tortoiſes both of land and ſea kinde, their backs and bellies are ſhelled very thicke; their head, feet, and taile, which are in appearance, ſeeme ougly, as though they were members of a ſerpent or venimous beaſts: but notwithſtanding they are very good meat, as alſo their egges. Some haue bene found of a yard in bredth and better.

And thus haue I made relation of all ſorts of victuall that we fed vpon for the time we were in Virginia, as alſo the inhabitants themſelues, as farre forth as I know and can remember, or that are ſpecially worthy to be remembred.

The

The third and laſt part of ſuch other things as are behouefull for thoſe which ſhall plant and inhabite to know of, with a deſcription of the nature and maners of the people of the Countrey

Of commodities for building and other neceſſary vſes

Those other things which I am more to make rehearsal of, are ſuch as concerne building, & other mechanicall neceſſary vſes, as diuers ſorts of trees for houſe and ſhip-timber, and other vſes elſe: Alſo lime, ſtone, and bricke, leaſt that being not mentioned ſome might haue bene doubted of, or by ſome that are malitious the contrary reported.

Okes there are as faire, ſtraight, tall, and as good timber as any can be, and alſo great ſtore, and in ſome places very great.

Walnut trees, as I haue ſaid before very many, ſome haue bene ſeene excellent faire timber of foure and fiue fadome, and aboue foureſcore foote ſtreight without bough.

Firre trees fit for maſts of ſhips, ſome very tall and great.

Rakiock, a kinde of trees ſo called that are ſweete wood, of which the inhabitants that were neere vnto vs doe commonly make their boates or Canoas of the forme of trowes, onely with the helpe of fire, hatchets of ſtones, and ſhels: we haue knowen ſome ſo great being made in that ſort of one tree, that they haue caried well 20. men at once, beſides much baggage: the timber being great, tall, ſtreight, ſoft, light, and yet tough ynough I thinke (beſides other vſes) to be fit alſo for maſts of ſhips.

Cedar, a ſweete wood good for ſeelings, cheſts, boxes, bedſteads, lutes, virginals, and many things els, as I haue alſo ſaid before. Some of our company which haue wandered in ſome places where I haue not bene, haue made certaine affirmation of Cyprus, which for ſuch and other excellent vſes is alſo a wood of price and no ſmall eſtimation.

Maple, and alſo Wich-hazle, whereof the inhabitants vſe to make their bowes.

Holly, a neceſſary thing for the making of birdlime.

Willowes good for the making of weares and weeles to take fiſh after the Engliſh maner, although the inhabitants vſe onely reedes, which becauſe they are ſo ſtrong as alſo flexible, doe ſerue for that turne very well and ſufficiently.

Beech and Aſhe, good for caſke-hoopes, and if neede require, plowe worke, as alſo for many things els.

Elme. Saſſafras trees.

Aſcopo a kinde of tree very like vnto Lawrell, the barke is hot in taſte and ſpicie, it is very like to that tree which Monardes deſcribeth to be Caſſia Lignea of the Weſt Indies.

There are many other ſtrange trees whoſe names I know not but in the Virginian language, of which I am not now able, neither is it ſo conuenient for the preſent to trouble you with particular relation: ſeeing that for timber and other neceſſary vſes I haue named ſufficient. And of many of the reſt, but that they may be applied to good vſe, I know no cauſe to doubt.

Now for ſtone, bricke and lime, thus it is. Neere vnto the Sea coaſt where wee dwelt, there are no kinde of ſtones to be found (except a few ſmall pebbles about foure miles off) but ſuch as haue bene brought from further out of the maine. In ſome of our voyages we haue ſeene diuers hard raggie ſtones, great pebbles, and a kinde of grey ſtone like vnto marble, of which the inhabitants make their hatchets to cleaue wood. Vpon inquirie wee heard that a little further vp into the Countrey were of all ſorts very many, although of quarries they are ignorant, neither haue they vſe of any ſtore whereupon they ſhould haue occaſion to ſeeke any. For if euery houſholde haue one or two to cracke nuts, grinde ſhels, whet copper, and ſometimes other ſtones for hatchets, they haue ynough: neither vſe they any digging, but onely for graues about three foote deepe: and therefore no marueile that they know neither quarries, nor lime-ſtones, which both may be in places neerer then they wot of.

In the meane time vntil there be diſcouery of ſufficient ſtore in ſome place or other conuenient, the want of you which are & ſhalbe the planters therein may be as well ſupplied by bricke: for the making whereof in diuers places of the Countrey there is clay both excellent good, and plentie, and alſo by lime made of oyſter ſhels, and of others burnt, after the maner as they vſe in the Iſles of Tenet and Shepy, and alſo in diuers other places of England: Which kinde of lime is well knowen to be as good as any other. And of oyſter ſhels there is plentie ynough: for beſides diuers other particular places where are abundance, there is one ſhallow Sound along the coaſt, where for the ſpace of many miles together in length, and two or three miles in breadth, the ground is nothing els, being but halfe a foote or a foote vnder water for the moſt part.

Thus much can I ſay furthermore of ſtones, that about 120. miles from our fort neere the water in the ſide of a hill, was found by a Gentleman of our company, a great veine of hard ragge ſtones, which I thought good to remember vnto you.

Of the nature and maners of the people.

It reſteth I ſpeake a word or two of the naturall inhabitants, their natures and maners, leauing large diſcourſe thereof vntil time more conuenient hereafter: nowe onely ſo farre foorth, as that you may know, how that they in reſpect of troubling our inhabiting and planting, are not to be feared, but that they ſhall haue cauſe both to feare and loue vs, that ſhall inhabite with them.

They are a people clothed with looſe mantles made of deere ſkinnes, and aprons of the ſame round about their middles, all els naked, of ſuch a difference of ſtatures onely as wee in England, hauing no edge tooles or weapons of yron or ſteele to offend vs withall, neither knowe they how to make any: thoſe weapons that they haue, are onely bowes made of Witch-hazle, and arrowes of reedes, flat edged truncheons alſo of wood about a yard long, neither haue they any thing to defend themſelues but targets made of barkes, and ſome armours made of ſticks wickered together with thread.

Iaques Cartier, voyage 2. chap. 8.

Their townes are but ſmall, and neere the Sea coaſt but fewe, ſome contayning but tenne or twelue houſes: ſome 20. the greateſt that we haue ſeene hath bene but of 30. houſes: if they bee walled, it is onely done with barkes of trees made faſt to ſtakes, or els with poles onely fixed vpright, and cloſe one by another.

Their houſes are made of ſmall poles, made faſt at the tops in round forme after the maner as is vſed in many arbories in our gardens of England, in moſt townes couered with barkes, and in ſome with artificiall mats made of long ruſhes, from the tops of the houſes downe to the ground. The length of them is commonly double to the breadth, in ſome places they are but 12, and 16, yards long, and in other ſome we haue ſeene of foure and twentie.

In ſome places of the Countrey, one onely towne belongeth to the gouernment of a Wiroans or chiefe Lord, in other ſome two or three, in ſome ſixe, eight, and more: the greateſt Wiroans that yet wee had dealing with, had but eighteene townes in his gouernment, and able to make not aboue ſeuen or eight hundreth fighting men at the moſt. The language of euery gouernment is different from any other, and the further they are diſtant, the greater is the difference.

Their maner of warres amongſt themſelues is either by ſudden ſurpriſing one an other moſt commonly about the dawning of the day, or moone-light, or els by ambuſhes, or ſome ſubtile deuiſes. Set battels are very rare, except it fall out where there are many trees, where either part may haue ſome hope of defence, after the deliuery of euery arrow, in leaping behind ſome or other.

If there fall out any warres betweene vs and them, what their fight is likely to bee, wee hauing aduantages againſt them ſo many maner of wayes, as by our diſcipline, our ſtrange weapōs and deuiſes elſe, eſpecially Ordinance great and ſmall, it may eaſily bee imagined: by the experience wee haue had in ſome places, the turning vp of their heeles againſt vs in running away was their beſt defence.

In reſpect of vs they are a people poore, and for want of ſkill and iudgement in the knowledge and vſe of our things, doe eſteeme our trifles before things of greater value: Notwithſtanding, in their proper maner (conſidering the want of ſuch meanes as we haue,) they ſeeme very ingenious. For although they haue no ſuch tooles, nor any ſuch crafts, Sciences and Artes as wee, yet in thoſe things they doe, they ſhew excellencie of wit. And by how much they vpon due conſideration ſhall finde our maner of knowledges and crafts to exceede theirs in perfection, and ſpeede for doing or execution, by ſo much the more is it probable that they ſhould deſire our friendſhip and loue, and haue the greater reſpect for pleaſing and obeying vs. Whereby may bee hoped, if meanes of good gouernment be vſed, that they may in ſhort time bee brought to ciuilitie, and the imbracing of true Religion.

Some religion they haue already, which although it be farre from the trueth, yet being as it is, there is hope it may be the eaſier and ſooner reformed.

They beleeue that there are many gods, which they call Mantoac, but of different ſorts & degrees, one onely chiefe and great God, which hath bene from all eternitie. Who, as they affirme, when hee purpoſed to make the world, made firſt other gods of a principall order, to be as meanes and inſtruments to be vſed in the creation and gouernment to folow, and after the Sunne, moone, and ſtarres as pettie gods, and the inſtruments of the other order more principal. Firſt (they ſay) were made waters, out of which by the gods was made all diuerſitie of creatures that are viſible or inuiſible.

For mankinde they ſay a woman was made firſt, which by the working of one of the gods, conceiued and brought foorth children: And in ſuch ſort they ſay they had their beginning. But how many yeeres or ages haue paſſed ſince, they ſay they can make no relation, hauing no letters nor other ſuch meanes as we to keepe Records of the particularities of times paſt, but onely tradition from father to ſonne.

They thinke that all the gods are of humane ſhape, and therefore they repreſent them by images in the formes of men, which they call Kewaſowok, one alone is called Kewas: them they place in houſes appropriate or temples, which they call Machicomuck, where they worſhip, pray, ſing, and make many times offring vnto them. In ſome Machicomuck we haue ſeene but one Kewas, in ſome two, and in other ſome three. The common ſort thinke them to be alſo gods.

They beleeue alſo the immortalitie of the ſoule, that after this life as ſoone as the ſoule is departed from the body, according to the workes it hath done, it is either caried to heauen the habitacle of gods, there to enioy perpetuall bliſſe and happineſſe, or els to a great pitte or hole, which they thinke to be in the furtheſt parts of their part of the world toward the Sunne ſet, there to burne continually: the place they call Popoguſſo.

For the confirmation of this opinion, they tolde me two ſtories of two men that had bene lately dead and reuiued againe, the one happened but few yeeres before our comming into the Countrey of a wicked man, which hauing bene dead and buried, the next day the earth of the graue being ſeene to moue, was taken vp againe, who made declaration where his ſoule had bene, that is to ſay, very neere entring into Popoguſſo, had not one of the gods ſaued him, and gaue him leaue to returne againe, and teach his friends what they ſhould do to auoyd that terrible place of torment. The other happened in the ſame yeere we were there, but in a towne that was 60. miles from vs, and it was told me for ſtrange newes, that one being dead, buried, and taken vp againe as the firſt, ſhewed that although his body had lien dead in the graue, yet his ſoule was aliue, & had trauailed farre in a long broad way, on both ſides whereof grew moſt delicate and pleaſant trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruits, then euer hee had ſeene before, or was able to expreſſe, and at length came to moſt braue and faire houſes, neere which he met his father that had bene dead before, who gaue him great charge to goe backe againe, and ſhew his friendes what good they were to doe to enioy the pleaſures of that place, which when he had done he ſhould after come againe.

What ſubtiltie ſoeuer be in the Wiroances and prieſtes, this opinion worketh ſo much in many of the common and ſimple ſort of people, that it maketh them haue great reſpect to their Gouernours, and alſo great care what they doe, to auoyd torment after death, and to enioy bliſſe, although notwithſtanding there is puniſhment ordeined for malefactours, as ſtealers, whoremongers, and other ſorts of wicked doers, ſome puniſhed with death, ſome with forfeitures, ſome with beating, according to the greatneſſe of the facts.

And this is the ſumme of their Religion, which I learned by hauing ſpeciall familiaritie with ſome of their prieſts. Wherein they were not ſo ſure grounded, nor gaue ſuch credite to their traditions and ſtories, but through conuerſing with vs they were brought into great doubts of their owne, and no ſmall admiration of ours, with earneſt deſire in many, to learne more then wee had meanes for want of perfect vtterance in their language to expreſſe.

Moſt things they ſawe with vs, as Mathematicall inſtruments, ſea Compaſſes, the vertue of the load-ſtone in drawing yron, a perſpectiue glaſſe whereby was ſhewed many ſtrange ſights, burning glaſſes, wilde fireworkes, gunnes, hookes, writing and reading, ſpring-clockes that ſeeme to goe of themſelues, and many other things that wee had were ſo ſtrange vnto them, and ſo farre exceeded their capacities to comprehend the reaſon and meanes how they ſhould be made and done, that they thought they were rather the workes of gods then of men, or at the leaſtwiſe they had bene giuen and taught vs of the gods. Which made many of them to haue ſuch opinion of vs, as that if they knew not the trueth of God and Religion already, it was rather to bee had from vs whom God ſo ſpecially loued, then from a people that were ſo ſimple, as they found themſelues to be in compariſon of vs. Whereupon greater credite was giuen vnto that wee ſpake of, concerning ſuch matters.

Many times and in euery towne where I came, according as I was able, I made declaration of the contents of the Bible, that therein was ſet foorth the true and onely God, and his mightie workes, that therein was conteined the true doctrine of ſaluation through Chriſt, with many particularities of Miracles and chiefe points of Religion, as I was able then to vtter, and thought fit for the time. And although I told them the booke materially and of it ſelfe was not of any ſuch vertue, as I thought they did conceiue, but onely the doctrine therein conteined: yet would many be glad to touch it, to embrace it, to kiſſe it, to holde it to their breaſtes and heads, and ſtroke ouer all their body with it, to ſhew their hungry deſire of that knowledge which was ſpoken of.

The Wiroans with whom we dwelt called Wingina, and many of his people would bee glad many times to be with vs at our Prayers, and many times call vpon vs both in his owne towne, as alſo in others whither hee ſometimes accompanied vs, to pray and ſing Pſalmes, hoping thereby to be partaker of the ſame effects which we by that meanes alſo expected.

Twiſe this Wiroans was ſo grieuouſly ſicke that he was like to die, and as he lay languiſhing, doubting of any helpe by his owne prieſtes, and thinking hee was in ſuch danger for offending vs and thereby our God, ſent for ſome of vs to pray and bee a meanes to our God that it would pleaſe him either that he might liue, or after death dwell with him in bliſſe, ſo likewiſe were the requeſts of many others in the like caſe.

On a time alſo when their corne began to wither by reaſon of a drought which happened extraordinarily, fearing that it had come to paſſe by reaſon that in ſome thing they had diſpleaſed vs, many would come to vs and deſire vs to pray to our God of England, that he would preſerue their Corne, promiſing that when it was ripe we alſo ſhould be partakers of the fruit.

There could at no time happen any ſtrange ſickneſſe, loſſes, hurts, or any other croſſe vnto them, but that they would impute to vs the cauſe or meanes thereof, for offending or not pleaſing vs. One other rare and ſtrange accident, leauing others, wil I mention before I end, which moued the whole Countrey that either knew or heard of vs, to haue vs in wonderfull admiration.

There was no towne where wee had any ſubtile deuiſe practiſed againſt vs, wee leauing it vnpuniſhed or not reuenged (becauſe we ſought by all meanes poſſible to win them by gentleneſſe) but that within a few dayes after our departure from euery ſuch Towne, the people began to die very faſt, and many in ſhort ſpace, in ſome Townes about twentie, in ſome fourtie, and in one ſixe ſcore, which in trueth was very many in reſpect of their numbers. This happened in no place that we could learne, but where we had bin, where they vſed ſome practiſe againſt vs, & after ſuch time. The diſeaſe alſo was ſo ſtrange, that they neither knewe what it was, nor how to cure it, the like by report of the oldeſt men in the Countrey neuer happened before, time out of minde. A thing ſpecially obſerued by vs, as alſo by the naturall inhabitants themſelues. Inſomuch that when ſome of the inhabitants which were our friends, and eſpecially the Wiroans Wingina, had obſerued ſuch effects in foure or fiue Townes to followe their wicked practiſes, they were perſwaded that it was the worke of our God through our meanes, and that we by him might kill and ſlay whom we would without weapons, and not come neere them. And thereupon when it had happened that they had vnderſtanding that any of their enemies had abuſed vs in our iourneys, hearing that we had wrought no reuenge with our weapons, and fearing vpon ſome cauſe the matter ſhould ſo reſt: did come and intreate vs that we would be a meanes to our God that they as others that had dealt ill with vs might in like ſort die, alleadging how much it would bee for our credite and profite, as alſo theirs, and hoping furthermore that we would doe ſo much at their requeſts in reſpect of the friendſhip we profeſſed them.

Whoſe entreaties although wee ſhewed that they were vngodly, affirming that our God would not ſubiect himſelfe to any ſuch prayers and requeſts of men: that indeede all things haue bene and were to be done according to his good pleaſure as he had ordeined: and that we to ſhewe our ſelues his true ſeruants ought rather to make petition for the contrary, that they with them might liue together with vs, be made partakers of his trueth, and ſerue him in righteouſneſſe, but notwithſtanding in ſuch ſort, that wee referre that, as all other things, to bee done according to his diuine will and pleaſure, and as by his wiſedome he had ordeined to be beſt.

Yet becauſe the effect fell out ſo ſuddenly and ſhortly after according to their deſires, they thought neuertheleſſe it came to paſſe by our meanes, & that we in vſing ſuch ſpeeches vnto them, did but diſſemble the matter, and therefore came vnto vs to giue vs thankes in their maner, that although we ſatiſfied them not in promiſe, yet in deedes and effect we had fulfilled their deſires.

This marueilous accident in all the Countrey wrought ſo ſtrange opinions of vs, that ſome people could not tell whether to thinke vs gods or men, and the rather becauſe that all the ſpace of their ſicknes, there was no man of ours knowen to die, or that was ſpecially ſicke: they noted alſo that we had no women amongſt vs, neither that we did care for any of theirs.

Some therefore were of opinion that we were not borne of women, and therefore not mortal, but that we were men of an old generation many yeeres paſt, then riſen againe to immortalitie.

Some would likewiſe ſeeme to prophecie, that there were more of our generation yet to come to kill theirs and take their places, as ſome thought the purpoſe was, by that which was already done. Thoſe that were immediatly to come after vs they imagined to be in the aire, yet inuiſible and without bodies, and that they by our intreatie and for the loue of vs, did make the people to die in that ſort as they did, by ſhooting inuiſible bullets into them.

To confirme this opinion, their Phiſitions (to excuſe their ignorance in curing the diſeaſe) would not be aſhamed to ſay, but earneſtly make the ſimple people beleeue, that the ſtrings of blood that they ſucked out of the ſicke bodies, were the ſtrings wherewithall the inuiſible bullets were tied and caſt. Some alſo thought that wee ſhot them our ſelues out of our pieces, from the place where wee dwelt, and killed the people in any Towne that had offended vs, as wee liſted, howe farre diſtant from vs ſoeuer it were. And other ſome ſaid, that it was the ſpeciall worke of God for our ſakes, as we our ſelues haue cauſe in ſome ſort to thinke no leſſe, whatſoeuer ſome doe, or may imagine to the contrary, ſpecially ſome Aſtrologers, knowing of the Eclipſe of the Sunne which we ſaw the ſame yeere before in our voyage thitherward, which vnto them appeared very terrible. And alſo of a Comet which began to appeare but a fewe dayes before the beginning of the ſaide ſickneſſe. But to exclude them from being the ſpeciall cauſes of ſo ſpeciall an accident, there are further reaſons then I thinke fit at this preſent to be alleadged. Theſe their opinions I haue ſet downe the more at large, that it may appeare vnto you that there is good hope they may be brought through diſcreete dealing and gouernment to the imbracing of the trueth, and conſequently to honour, obey, feare and loue vs.

And although ſome of our company towards the end of the yeere, ſhewed themſelues too fierce in ſlaying ſome of the people in ſome Townes, vpon cauſes that on our part might eaſily ynough haue bene borne withall: yet notwithſtanding, becauſe it was on their part iuſtly deſerued, the alteration of their opinions generally and for the moſt part concerning vs is the leſſe to be doubted. And whatſoeuer els they may be, by carefulneſſe of our ſelues neede nothing at all to be feared.

The beſt neuertheleſſe in this, as in all actions beſides, is to be endeuoured and hoped, and of the worſt that may happen notice to be taken with conſideration, and as much as may be eſchewed.

The concluſion.

Now I haue (as I hope) made relation not of ſo few and ſmall things, but that the Countrey (of men that are indifferent and well diſpoſed) may bee ſufficiently liked: If there were no more knowen then I haue mentioned, which doubtleſſe and in great reaſon is nothing to that which remaineth to be diſcouered, neither the ſoyle, nor commodities. As we haue reaſon ſo to gather by the difference we found in our trauailes, for although al which I haue before ſpoken of, haue bene diſcouered and experimented not farre from the Sea coaſt, where was our abode and moſt of our trauailing: yet ſometimes as we made our iourneys further into the maine and Countrey; we found the ſoile to be fatter, the trees greater and to grow thinner, the ground more firme and deeper mould, more and larger champions, finer graſſe, and as good as euer we ſaw any in England; in ſome places rockie and farre more high and hilly ground, more plentie of their fruites, more abundance of beaſtes, the more inhabited with people, and of greater pollicie and larger dominions, with greater townes and houſes.

Why may wee not then looke for in good hope from the inner parts of more and greater plentie, as well of other things, as of thoſe which wee haue already diſcouered? Vnto the Spaniards happened the like in diſcouering the maine of the Weſt Indies. The maine alſo of this Countrey of Virginia, extending ſome wayes ſo many hundreds of leagues, as otherwiſe then by the relation of the inhabitants wee haue moſt certaine knowledge of, where yet no Chriſtian prince hath any poſſeſſion or dealing, cannot but yeelde many kinds of excellent commodities, which we in our diſcouery haue not yet ſeene.

What hope there is els to bee gathered of the nature of the Climate, being anſwerable to the Iland of Iapan, the land of China, Perſia, Iury, the Ilands of Cyprus and Candy, the South parts of Greece, Italy and Spaine, and of many other notable and famous Countreys, becauſe I meane not to be tedious, I leaue to your owne conſideration.

Whereby alſo the excellent temperature of the aire there at all ſeaſons, much warmer then in England, and neuer ſo vehemently hot, as ſometimes is vnder and betweene the Tropikes, or neere them, cannot be knowen vnto you without further relation.

For the holſomneſſe thereof I neede to ſay but thus much: that for all the want of prouiſion, This want is hereafter to be ſupplied.

as firſt of Engliſh victuall, excepting for twentie dayes, we liued onely by drinking water, and by the victuall of the Countrey, of which ſome ſorts were very ſtrange vnto vs, and might haue bene thought to haue altered our temperatures in ſuch ſort, as to haue brought vs into ſome grieuous and dangerous diſeaſes: Secondly the want of Engliſh meanes, for the taking of beaſtes, fiſh and foule, which by the helpe onely of the inhabitants and their meanes could not bee ſo ſuddenly and eaſily prouided for vs, nor in ſo great number and quantities, nor of that choiſe as otherwiſe might haue bene to our better ſatiſfaction and contentment. Some want alſo we had of clothes. Furthermore in al our trauailes, which were moſt ſpecially and often in the time of Winter, our lodging was in the open aire vpon the ground. And yet I ſay for all this, there were but foure of our whole company (being one hundreth and eight) that died all the yeere, and that but at the latter ende thereof, and vpon none of the aforeſaide cauſes. For all foure, eſpecially three, were feeble, weake, and ſickly perſons before euer they came thither, and thoſe that knew them, much marueled that they liued ſo long being in that caſe, or had aduentured to trauaile.

Seeing therefore the aire there is ſo temperate and holſome, the ſoyle ſo fertile, and yeelding ſuch commodities, as I haue before mentioned, the voyage alſo thither to and fro being ſufficiently experimented to be perfourmed twiſe a yeere with eaſe, and at any ſeaſon thereof: And the dealing of Sir Walter Ralegh ſo liberall in large giuing and granting lande there, as is already knowen, with many helpes and furtherances elſe: (The leaſt that he hath granted hath bene fiue hundreth acres to a man onely for the aduenture of his perſon) I hope there remaines no cauſe whereby the action ſhould be miſliked.

If that thoſe which ſhall thither trauaile to inhabite and plant bee but reaſonably prouided for the firſt yeere, as thoſe are which were tranſported the laſt, and being there, doe vſe but that diligence and care, that is requiſit, and as they may with eaſe: There is no doubt, but for the time following, they may haue victuals that are excellent good and plentie ynough, ſome more Engliſh ſorts of cattell alſo hereafter, as ſome haue bene before, and are there yet remayning, may, and ſhall be (God willing) thither tranſported. So likewiſe, our kinde of fruites, rootes, and hearbes, may be there planted and ſowed, as ſome haue bene already, and proue well: And in ſhort time alſo they may raiſe ſo much of thoſe ſorts of commodities which I haue ſpoken of, as ſhall both enrich themſelues, as alſo others that ſhall deale with them.

And this is all the fruit of our labours, that I haue thought neceſſary to aduertiſe you of at this preſent: What elſe concerneth the nature and maners of the inhabitants of Virginia, the number with the particularities of the voyages thither made, and of the actions of ſuch as haue bene by Sir Walter Ralegh therein, and there imployed, many worthy to be remembred, as of the firſt diſcouerers of the Countrey, of our Generall for the time Sir Richard Grinuil, and after his departure of our Gouernour there Maſter Ralph Lane, with diuers other directed and imployed vnder their gouernment: Of the Captaines and Maſters of the voyages made ſince for tranſportation, of the Gouernour and aſſiſtants of thoſe already tranſported, as of many perſons, accidents, and things els, I haue ready in a diſcourſe by it ſelfe in maner of a Chronicle, according to the courſe of times: which when time ſhall be thought conuenient, ſhall be alſo publiſhed.

Thus referring my relation to your fauourable constructions, expecting good ſucceſſe of the action, from him which is to be acknowledged the authour and gouernour, not onely of this, but of all things els, I take my leaue of you, this moneth of February 1587.

The fourth voyage made to Virginia with three ſhips, in the yere 1587. Wherein was tranſported the ſecond Colonie.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1587. Sir Walter Ralegh intending to perſeuere in the planting of his Countrey of Virginia, prepared a newe Colonie of one hundred and fiftie men to be ſent thither, vnder the charge of Iohn White, whom hee appointed Gouernour, and alſo appointed vnto him twelue Aſſiſtants, vnto whom hee gaue a Charter, and incorporated them by the name of Gouernour and Aſſiſtants of the Citie of Ralegh in Virginia.

April.

OUr Fleete being in number three ſaile, viz. the Admirall a ſhippe of one hundred and twentie Tunnes, a Flie-boate, and a Pinneſſe, departed the ſixe and twentieth of April from Porteſmouth, and the ſame day came to an ancker at the Cowes in the Iſle of Wight, where wee ſtayed eight dayes.

May.

The fift of May, at nine of the clocke at night we came to Plimmouth, where we remained the ſpace of two dayes.

The 8 we weyed anker at Plimmouth, and departed thence for Virginia.

The 16 Simon Ferdinando, Maſter of our Admiral, lewdly forſooke our Fly-boate, leauing her diſtreſſed in the Bay of Portugal.

Iune.

The 19 we fell with “Dominica, and the ſame euening we ſayled betweene it, and Guadalupe: the 21 the Fly-boat alſo fell with Dominica.

“One of the Iſles of the Indies inhabited with Sauages.

Circumſpection to be vſed in ſtrange places.

The 22 we came to an anker at an Iſland called Santa Cruz, where all the planters were ſet on land, ſtaying there till the 25 of the ſame moneth. At our firſt landing on this Iſland, ſome of our women, and men, by eating a ſmall fruit like greene Apples, were fearefully troubled with a ſudden burning in their mouthes, and ſwelling of their tongues ſo bigge, that ſome of them could not ſpeake. Alſo a child by ſucking one of thoſe womens breaſts, had at that inſtant his mouth ſet on ſuch a burning, that it was ſtrange to ſee how the infant was tormented for the time: but after 24 houres, it ware away of it ſelfe.

Alſo the firſt night of our being on this Iſland, we tooke fiue great Torteſes, ſome of them of ſuch bignes, that ſixteene of our ſtrongeſt men were tired with carying of one of them but from the ſea ſide to our cabbins. In this Iſland we found no watring place, but a ſtanding ponde, the water whereof was ſo euill, that many of our company fell ſicke with drinking thereof: and as many as did but waſh their faces with that water, in the morning before the Sunne had drawen away the corruption, their faces did ſo burne and ſwell, that their eyes were ſhut vp, and could not ſee in fiue or ſixe dayes, or longer.

The ſecond day of our abode there, we ſent forth ſome of our men to ſearch the Iſland for freſh water, three one way, and two another way. The Gouernour alſo, with ſixe others, went vp to the top of an high hill, to viewe the Iſland, but could perceiue no ſigne of any men, or beaſtes, nor any goodnes, but Parots, and trees of Guiacum. Returning backe to our cabbins another way, he found in the diſcent of a hill, certaine potſheards of ſauage making, made of the earth of that Iſland: whereupon it was iudged, that this Iſland was inhabited with Sauages, though Fernando had told vs for certaine the contrary. The ſame day at night, the reſt of our company very late returned to the Gouernour. The one company affirmed, that they had ſeene in a valley eleuen Sauages, and diuers houſes halfe a mile diſtant from the ſteepe, or toppe of the hill where they ſtayed. The other company had found running out of a high rocke a very faire ſpring of water, whereof they brought three bottels to the company: for before that time, wee drank the ſtinking water of the pond.

The ſame ſecond day at night Captaine Stafford, with the Pinneſſe, departed from our fleete, riding at Santa Cruz, to an Iſland, called Beake, lying neere S. Iohn, being ſo directed by Ferdinando, who aſſured him he ſhould there find great plenty of ſheepe. The next day at night, our planters left Santa Cruz, and came all aboord, and the next morning after, being the 25 of Iune, we weyed anker, and departed from Santa Cruz.

The ſeuen and twentieth we came to anker at Cottea, where we found the Pinneſſe riding at our comming.

The 28 we weyed anker at Cottea, and preſently came to anker at S. Iohns in Musketos Bay, where we ſpent three dayes vnprofitably in taking in freſh water, ſpending in the meane time more beere then the quantitie of the water came vnto.

Iulie.

The firſt day we weyed anker at “Musketoes Bay, where were left behind two Iriſh men of our company, Darbie Glauen, and Denice Carrell, bearing along the coaſt of S. Iohns till euening, at which time wee fell with Roſſe Bay. At this place Ferdinando had promiſed wee ſhould take in ſalte, and had cauſed vs before, to make and prouide as many ſackes for that purpoſe, as we could. The Gouernour alſo, for that hee vnderſtood there was a Towne in the bottome of the Bay, not farre from the ſalt hils, appointed thirty ſhot, tenne pikes, and ten targets, to man the Pinneſſe, and to goe aland for ſalt. Ferdinando perceiuing them in a readines, ſent to the Gouernour, vſing great perſwaſions with him, not to take in ſalt there, ſaying that hee knew not well whether the ſame were the place or not: alſo, that if the Pinneſſe went into the Bay, “Musketos Bay, is a harbour vpon the ſouth ſide of S. Iohns Iſland, where we take in freſh water.

ſhe could not without great danger come backe, till the next day at night, and that if in the meane time any ſtorme ſhould riſe, the Admirall were in danger to bee caſt away. Whileſt he was thus perſwading, he cauſed the lead to be caſt, and hauing craftily brought the ſhippe in three fadome and a halfe water, he ſuddenly began to ſweare, and teare God in pieces, diſſembling great danger, crying to him at the helme, beare vp hard, beare vp hard: ſo we went off, and were diſappointed of our ſalt, by his meanes.

The next day ſayling along the Weſt end of S. Iohn, the Gouernour determined to go aland in S. Germans “Bay, to gather yong plants of Orenges, Pines, Mameas, and Plantanos, to ſet at Virginia, which we knew might eaſily be had, for that they grow neere the ſhore, and the places where they grew, well knowen to the Gouernour, and ſome of the planters: but our Simon denied it, ſaying: he would come to an anker at Hiſpaniola, & there land the Gouernour, and ſome other of the Aſſiſtants, with the pinneſſe, to ſee if he could ſpeake with his friend Alanſon, of whom he hoped to be furniſhed both of cattel, and all ſuch things as we would haue taken in at S. Iohn: but he meant nothing leſſe, as it plainely did appeare to vs afterwards.

“ A pleaſant and fruitfull countrey, lying on the weſt end of S. Iohns Iſland where groweth plenty of Orenges, Limons, Plātans, & Pines.

The next day after, being the third of Iuly, we ſaw Hiſpaniola, and bare with the coaſt all that day, looking ſtill when the pinneſſe ſhould be prepared to goe for the place where Ferdinando his friend Alanſon was: but that day paſſed, and we ſaw no preparation for landing in Hiſpaniola.

The 4 of Iuly, ſayling along the coaſt of Hiſpaniola, vntill the next day at noone, and no preparation yet ſeene for the ſtaying there, we hauing knowledge that we were paſt the place where Alanſon dwelt, and were come with Iſabella: hereupon Ferdinando was aſked by the Gouernor, whether he meant to ſpeake with Alanſon, for the taking in of cattell, and other things, according to his promiſe, or not: but he anſwered that he was now paſt the place, and that Sir Walter Ralegh told him, the French Ambaſſador certified him, that the king of Spaine had ſent for Alanſon into Spaine: wherefore he thought him dead, and that it was to no purpoſe to touch there in any place, at this voyage.

The next day we left ſight of Hiſpaniola, and haled off for Virginia, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone.

The ſixt of Iuly we came to the Iſland Caycos, wherein Ferdinando ſayd were two ſalt pondes, aſſuring vs if they were drie, we might find ſalt to ſhift with, vntill the next ſupply: but it prooued as true as finding of ſheepe at Baque. In this Iſland, whileſt Ferdinando ſolaced himſelfe aſhore, with one of the company, in part of the Iſland, others ſpent the latter part of that day in other parts of the Iſland, ſome to ſeeke the ſalt ponds, ſome fowling, ſome hunting Swans, whereof we caught many. The next day early in the morning we weyed anker, leauing Caycos, with good hope, that the firſt land that we ſaw next ſhould be Virginia.

About the 16 of Iuly we fel with the maine of Virginia, which Simon Ferdinando tooke to be the Iſland of Croatoan, where we came to anker, and rode there two or three dayes: but finding himſelfe deceiued, he weyed, and bare along the coaſt, where in the night, had not Captaine Stafford bene more carefull in looking out, then our Simon Ferdinando, we had bene all caſt away vpon the breach, called the Cape of Feare, for we were come within two cables length vpon it: ſuch was the careleſnes, and ignorance of our Maſter.

The two and twentieth of Iuly wee arriued ſafe at Hatoraſk, where our ſhip and pinneſſe ankered: the Gouernour went aboord the pinneſſe, accompanied with fortie of his beſt men, intending to paſſe vp to Roanoak foorthwith, hoping there to finde thoſe fifteene Engliſhmen, which Sir Richard Grinuile had left there the yeere before, with whom hee meant to haue conference, concerning the ſtate of the Countrey, and Sauages, meaning after he had ſo done, to returne againe to the fleete, and paſſe along the coaſt, to the Bay of Cheſepiok, where we intended to make our ſeate and forte, according to the charge giuen vs among other directions in writing, vnder the hande of Sir Walter Ralegh: but aſſoone as we were put with our pinneſſe from the ſhip, a Gentleman by the meanes of Ferdinando, who was appointed to returne for England, called to the ſailers in the pinneſſe, charging them not to bring any of the planters backe againe, but to leaue them in the Iſland, except the Gouernour, & two or three ſuch as he approued, ſaying that the Summer was farre ſpent, wherefore hee would land all the planters in no other place. Vnto this were all the ſaylers, both in the pinneſſe, and ſhippe, perſwaded by the Maſter, wherefore it booted not the Gouernour to contend with them, but paſſed to Roanoak, and the ſame night at ſunne-ſet went aland on the Iſland, in the place where our fifteene men were left, but we found none of them, nor any ſigne that they had bene there, ſauing onely wee found the bones of one of thoſe fifteene, which the Sauages had ſlaine long before.

An intent to plant in the Bay of Cheſepiok.

The three and twentieth of Iuly the Gouernour with diuers of his company, walked to the North ende of the Iſland, where Maſter Ralfe Lane had his forte, with ſundry neceſſary and decent dwelling houſes, made by his men about it the yeere before, where wee hoped to find ſome ſignes, or certaine knowledge of our fifteene men. When we came thither, we found the fort raſed downe, but all the houſes ſtanding vnhurt, ſauing that the neather roomes of them, and alſo of the forte, were ouergrowen with Melons of diuers ſortes, and Deere within them, feeding on thoſe Melons: ſo wee returned to our company, without hope of euer ſeeing any of the fifteene men liuing.

The ſame day order was giuen, that euery man ſhould be employed for the repayring of thoſe houſes, which wee found ſtanding, and alſo to make other newe Cottages, for ſuch as ſhould neede.

The 25 our Flyboate and the reſt of our planters arriued all ſafe at Hatoraske, to the great ioy and comfort of the whole company: but the Maſter of our Admirall Ferdinando grieued greatly at their ſafe comming: for hee purpoſely left them in the Bay of Portugal, and ſtole away from them in the night, hoping that the Maſter thereof, whoſe name was Edward Spicer, for that he neuer had bene in Virginia, would hardly finde the place, or els being left in ſo dangerous a place as that was, by meanes of ſo many men of warre, as at that time were abroad, they ſhould ſurely be taken, or ſlaine: but God diſappointed his wicked pretenſes.

Edward Spicer.

The eight and twentieth, George Howe, one of our twelue Aſſiſtants was ſlaine by diuers Sauages, which were come ouer to Roanoak, either of purpoſe to eſpie our company, and what number we were, or elſe to hunt Deere, whereof were many in the Iſland. Theſe Sauages being ſecretly hidden among high reedes, where oftentimes they find the Deere aſleep, and ſo kill them, eſpied our man wading in the water alone, almoſt naked, without any weapon, ſaue only a ſmal forked ſticke, catching Crabs therewithall, and alſo being ſtrayed two miles from his company, and ſhot at him in the water, where they gaue him ſixteen wounds with their arrowes: and after they had ſlaine him with their wooden ſwords, they beat his head in pieces, and fled ouer the water to the maine.

On the thirtieth of Iuly Maſter Stafford and twenty of our men paſſed by water to the Iſland of Croatoan, with Manteo, who had his mother, and many of his kinred dwelling in that Iſland, of whom wee hoped to vnderſtand ſome newes of our fifteene men, but eſpecially to learne the diſpoſition of the people of the countrey towards vs, and to renew our old friendſhip with them. At our firſt landing they ſeemed as though they would fight with vs: but perceiuing vs begin to march with our ſhot towardes them, they turned their backes, and fled. Then Manteo their countrey man called to them in their owne language, whom, aſſoone as they heard, they returned, and threwe away their bowes and arrowes, and ſome of them came vnto vs, embracing and entertaining vs friendly, deſiring vs not to gather or ſpill any of their corne, for that they had but little. We anſwered them, that neither their corne, nor any other thing of theirs, ſhould be diminiſhed by any of vs, and that our comming was onely to renew the old loue, that was betweene vs and them at the firſt, and to liue with them as brethren and friends: which anſwere ſeemed to pleaſe them well, wherefore they requeſted vs to walke vp to their Towne, who there feaſted vs after their maner, and deſired vs earneſtly, that there might bee ſome token or badge giuen them of vs, whereby we might know them to be our friends, when we met them any where out of the Towne or Iſland. They told vs further, that for want of ſome ſuch badge, diuers of them were hurt the yeere before, being found out of the Iſland by Maſter Lane his company, whereof they ſhewed vs one, which at that very inſtant lay lame, and had lien of that hurt euer ſince: but they ſayd, they knew our men miſtooke them, and hurt them in ſtead of Winginos men, wherefore they held vs excuſed.

Auguſt

The next day we had conference further with them, concerning the people of Secotan, Aquaſcogoc, & Pomeiok, willing them of Croatoan to certifie the people of thoſe townes, that if they would accept our friendſhip, we would willingly receiue them againe, and that all vnfriendly dealings paſt on both partes, ſhould be vtterly forgiuen and forgotten. To this the chiefe men of Croatoan anſwered, that they would gladly doe the beſt they could, and within ſeuen dayes, bring the Wiroances and chiefe Gouernours of thoſe townes with them, to our Gouernour at Roanoak, or their anſwere. We alſo vnderſtood of the men of Croatoan, that our man Maſter Howe was ſlaine by the remnant of Winginos men dwelling then at Daſamonguepeuk, with whom Wancheſe kept companie: and alſo we vnderſtood by them of Croatoan, how that the 15 Engliſhmen left at Roanoak the yeere before, by Sir Richard Grinuile, were ſuddenly ſet vpon, by 30 of the men of Secota, Aquaſcogoc, and Daſamonguepeuk, in manner following. They conueyed themſelues ſecretly behind the trees, neere the houſes where our men careleſly liued: and hauing perceiued that of thoſe fifteene they could ſee but eleuen only, two of thoſe Sauages appeared to the 11 Engliſhmen, calling to them by friendly ſignes, that but two of their chiefeſt men ſhould come vnarmed to ſpeake with thoſe two Sauages, who ſeemed alſo to bee vnarmed. Wherefore two of the chiefeſt of our Engliſhmen went gladly to them: but whileſt one of thoſe Sauages traiterouſly imbraced one of our men, the other with his ſworde of wood, which he had ſecretly hidden vnder his mantell, ſtrooke him on the head and ſlew him, and preſently the other eight and twenty Sauages ſhewed them ſelues: the other Engliſhman perceiuing this, fled to his company, whom the Sauages purſued with their bowes, and arrowes, ſo faſt, that the Engliſhmen were forced to take the houſe, wherein all their victuall, and weapons were: but the Sauages forthwith ſet the ſame on fire: by meanes whereof our men were forced to take vp ſuch weapons as came firſt to hand, and without order to runne forth among the Sauages, with whom they ſkirmiſhed aboue an howre. In this ſkirmiſh another of our men was ſhotte into the mouth with an arrow, where hee died: and alſo one of the Sauages was ſhot into the ſide by one of our men, with a wild fire arrow, whereof he died preſently. The place where they fought was of great aduantage to the Sauages, by meanes of the thicke trees, behinde which the Sauages through their nimblenes, defended themſelues, and ſo offended our men with their arrowes, that our men being ſome of them hurt, retyred fighting to the water ſide, where their boat lay, with which they fled towards Hatorask. By that time they had rowed but a quarter of a mile, they eſpied their foure fellowes comming from a creeke thereby, where they had bene to fetch Oyſters: theſe foure they receiued into their boate, leauing Roanoak, and landed on a little Iſland on the right hand of our entrance into the harbour of Hatorask, where they remayned a while, but afterward departed, whither as yet we know not.

Hauing nowe ſufficiently diſpatched our buſineſſe at Croatoan, the ſame day we departed friendly, taking our leaue, and came aboord the fleete at Hatorask.

The eight of Auguſt, the Gouernour hauing long expected the comming of the Wiroanſes of Pomeiok, Aquaſcogoc, Secota, and Daſamonguepeuk, ſeeing that the ſeuen dayes were paſt, within which they promiſed to come in, or to ſend their anſweres by the men of Croatoan, and no tidings of them heard, being certainly alſo informed by thoſe men of Croatoan, that the remnant of Wingina his men, which were left aliue, who dwelt at Daſamonquepeuk, were they which had ſlaine George Howe, and were alſo at the driuing of our eleuen Engliſhmen from Roanoak, hee thought to deferre the reuenge thereof no longer. Wherefore the ſame night about midnight, he paſſed ouer the water, accompanied with Captaine Stafford, and 24 men, whereof Manteo was one, whom we tooke with vs to be our guide to the place where thoſe Sauages dwelt, where he behaued himſelfe toward vs as a moſt faithfull Engliſhman.

The next day, being the 9 of Auguſt, in the morning ſo early that it was yet darke, we landed neere the dwelling place of our enemies, & very ſecretly conueyed our ſelues through the woods, to that ſide, where we had their houſes betweene vs and the water: and hauing eſpied their fire, and ſome ſitting about it, we preſently ſet on them: the miſerable ſoules herewith amazed, fled into a place of thicke reedes, growing faſt by, where our men perceiuing them, ſhot one of them through the bodie with a bullet, and therewith we entred the reedes, among which we hoped to acquite their euill doing towards vs, but we were deceiued, for thoſe Sauages were our friends, and were come from Croatoan to gather the corne & fruit of that place, becauſe they vnderſtood our enemies were fled immediatly after they had ſlaine George Howe, and for haſte had left all their corne, Tabacco, and Pompions ſtanding in ſuch ſort, that al had bene deuoured of the birds, and Deere, if it had not bene gathered in time: but they had like to haue payd deerely for it: for it was ſo darke, that they being naked, and their men and women apparelled all ſo like others, wee knew not but that they were al men: and if that one of them which was a Wiroances wife had not had a child at her backe, ſhee had bene ſlaine in ſtead of a man, and as hap was, another Sauage knew Maſter Stafford, and ran to him, calling him by his name, whereby hee was ſaued. Finding our ſelues thus diſappointed of our purpoſe, we gathered al the corne, Peaſe, Pompions, and Tabacco that we found ripe, leauing the reſt vnſpoyled, and tooke Menatoan his wife, with the yong child, and the other Sauages with vs ouer the water to Roanoak. Although the miſtaking of theſe Sauages ſomewhat grieued Manteo, yet he imputed their harme to their owne folly, ſaying to them, that if their Wiroances had kept their promiſe in comming to the Gouernour at the day appointed, they had not knowen that miſchance.

The 13 of Auguſt our Sauage Manteo, by the commandement of Sir Walter Ralegh, was chriſtened

Towaye.

To the Worſhipful and my very friend Maſter Richard Hakluyt, much happineſſe in the Lord.

SIr, as well for the ſatiſfying of your earneſt requeſt, as the performance of my promiſe made vnto you at my laſt being with you in England, I haue ſent you (although in a homely ſtile, eſpecially for the contentation of a delicate eare) the true diſcourſe of my laſt voyage into the Weſt Indies, and partes of America called Virginia, taken in hand about the end of Februarie, in the yeare of our redemption 1590. And what euents happened vnto vs in this our iourney, you ſhall plainely perceiue by the ſequele of my diſcourſe. There were at the time aforeſaid three ſhips abſolutely determined to goe for the Weſt Indies, at the ſpeciall charges of M. Iohn Wattes of London Marchant. But when they were fully furniſhed, and in readineſſe to make their departure, a generall ſtay was commanded of all ſhips thorowout England. Which ſo ſoone as I heard, I preſently (as I thought it moſt requiſite) acquainted Sir Walter Ralegh therewith, deſiring him that as I had ſundry times afore bene chargeable and troubleſome vnto him, for the ſupplies and reliefes of the planters in Virginia: ſo likewiſe, that by his endeuour it would pleaſe him at that inſtant to procure licenſe for thoſe three ſhips to proceede on with their determined voyage, that thereby the people in Virginia (if it were Gods pleaſure) might ſpeedily be comforted and relieued without further charges vnto him. Whereupon he by his good meanes obtained licenſe of the Queenes Maieſtie, and order to be taken, that the owner of the 3 ſhips ſhould be bound vnto Sir Walter Ralegh or his aſſignes, in 3000 pounds, that thoſe 3 ſhips in conſideration of their releaſement ſhould take in, & tranſport a conuenient number of paſſengers, with their furnitures and neceſſaries to be landed in Virginia. Neuertheleſſe that order was not obſerued, neither was the bond taken according to the intention aforeſaid. But rather in contempt of the aforeſaid order, I was by the owner and Commanders of the ſhips denied to haue any paſſengers, or any thing els tranſported in any of the ſaid ſhips, ſauing only my ſelfe & my cheſt; no not ſo much as a boy to attend vpõ me, although I made great ſute, & earneſt intreatie aſwell to the chiefe Commanders, as to the owner of the ſaid ſhips. Which croſſe and vnkind dealing, although it very much diſcontented me, notwithſtanding the ſcarſity of time was ſuch, that I could haue no opportunity to go vnto Sir Walter Ralegh with complaint: for the ſhips being then all in readineſſe to goe to the Sea, would haue bene departed before I could haue made my returne. Thus both Gouernors, Maſters, and ſailers, regarding very ſmally the good of their countreymen in Virginia; determined nothing leſſe then to touch at thoſe places, but wholly diſpoſed themſelues to ſeeke after purchaſe & ſpoiles, ſpending ſo much time therein, that ſommer was ſpent before we arriued at Virginia. And when we were come thither, the ſeaſon was ſo vnfit, & weather ſo foule, that we were conſtrained of force to forſake that coaſt, hauing not ſeene any of our planters, with loſſe of one of our ſhip-boates, and 7 of our chiefeſt men: and alſo with loſſe of 3 of our ankers and cables, and moſt of our caskes with freſh water left on ſhore, not poſſible to be had aboord. Which euils & vnfortunate euents (as wel to their owne loſſe as to the hinderance of the planters in Virginia) had not chanced, if the order ſet downe by Sir Walter Ralegh had bene obſerued, or if my dayly & continuall petitions for the performance of the ſame might haue taken any place. Thus may you plainely perceiue the ſucceſſe of my fift & laſt voiage to Virginia, which was no leſſe vnfortunately ended then frowardly begun, and as luckleſſe to many, as ſiniſter to my ſelfe. But I would to God it had bene as proſperous to all, as noyſome to the planters; & as ioyfull to me, as diſcomfortable to them. Yet ſeeing it is not my firſt croſſed voyage, I remaine contented. And wanting my wiſhes, I leaue off from proſecuting that whereunto I would to God my wealth were anſwerable to my will. Thus committing the reliefe of my diſcomfortable company the planters in Virginia, to the merciful help of the Almighty, whom I moſt humbly beſeech to helpe & comfort them, according to his moſt holy will & their good deſire, I take my leaue: from my houſe at Newtowne in Kylmore the 4 of February, 1593.

Your moſt welwiſhing friend,

Iohn White.

The fift voyage of M. Iohn VVhite into the VVeſt Indies and parts of America called Virginia, in the yeere 1590.

The 20 of March the three ſhippes the Hopewell, the Iohn Euangeliſt, and the Little Iohn, put to Sea from Plymmouth with two ſmall Shallops.

The 25 at midnight both our Shallops were ſunke being towed at the ſhips ſtearnes by the Boatſwaines negligence.

On the 30 we ſaw a head vs that part of the coaſt of Barbary, lying Eaſt of Cape Cantyn, and the Bay of Aſaphi.

The next day we came to the Ile of Mogador, where rode, at our paſſing by, a Pinneſſe of London called the Mooneſhine.

April

chriſtened in Roanoak, and called Lord thereof, and of Daſamonguepeuk, in reward of his faithfull ſeruice.

The 18 Elenor, daughter to the Gouernour, and wife to Ananias Dare one of the Aſſiſtants, was deliuered of a daughter in Roanoak, and the ſame was chriſtened there the Sonday following, and becauſe this child was the firſt Chriſtian borne in Virginia, ſhee was named Virginia. By this time our ſhips had vnladen the goods and victuals of the planters, and began to take in wood, and freſh water, and to new calke and trimme them for England: the planters alſo prepared their letters and tokens to ſend backe into England.

Our two ſhips, the Lion and the Flyboat almoſt ready to depart, the 21 of Auguſt, there aroſe ſuch a tempeſt at Northeaſt, that our Admirall then riding out of the harbour, was forced to cut his cables, and put to ſea, where he lay beating off and on ſixe dayes before he could come to vs againe, ſo that we feared he had bene caſt away, and the rather for that at the time that the ſtorme tooke them, the moſt and beſt of their ſailers were left aland.

At this time ſome controuerſies aroſe betweene the Gouernour and Aſſiſtants, about chooſing two out of the twelue Aſſiſtants, which ſhould goe backe as factors for the company into England: for euery one of them refuſed, ſaue onely one, which all other thought not ſufficient: but at length by much perſwading of the Gouernour, Chriſtopher Cooper only agreed to goe for England: but the next day, through the perſwaſion of diuers of his familiar friends, hee changed his minde, ſo that now the matter ſtood as at the firſt.

The next day, the 22 of Auguſt, the whole company both of the Aſſiſtants and planters came to the Gouernour, and with one voice requeſted him to returne himſelfe into England, for the better and ſooner obtaining of ſupplies, and other neceſſaries for them: but he refuſed it, and alleaged many ſufficient cauſes, why he would not: the one was, that he could not ſo ſuddenly returne backe againe without his great diſcredite, leauing the action, and ſo many whome hee partly had procured through his perſwaſions, to leaue their natiue countrey, and vndertake that voyage, and that ſome enemies to him and the action at his returne into England would not ſpare to ſlander falſly both him and the action, by ſaying, hee went to Virginia, but politikely, and to no other end but to leade ſo many into a countrey, in which hee neuer meant to ſtay himſelfe, and there to leaue them behind him. Alſo he alleaged, that ſeeing they intended to remoue 50 miles further vp into the maine preſently, he being then abſent, his ſtuffe and goods might be both ſpoiled, & moſt of them pilfered away in the cariage, ſo that at his returne he ſhould be either forced to prouide himſelfe of all ſuch things againe, or elſe at his comming againe to Virginia find himſelfe vtterly vnfurniſhed, whereof already he had found ſome proofe, being but once from them but three dayes. Wherefore he concluded that he would not goe himſelfe.

Their meaning to remoue 50 miles into the countrey.

The next day, not onely the Aſſiſtants but diuers others, as well women as men, began to renew their requeſts to the Gouernour againe, to take vpon him to returne into England for the ſupply, and diſpatch of all ſuch things as there were to be done, promiſing to make him their bond vnder all their handes and ſeales for the ſafe preſeruing of all his goods for him at his returne to Virginia, ſo that if any part thereof were ſpoyled or loſt, they would ſee it reſtored to him, or his Aſſignes, whenſoeuer the ſame ſhould be miſſed and demanded: which bond, with a teſtimony vnder their hands and ſeales, they forthwith made, and deliuered into his hands. The copie of the teſtimony I thought good to ſet downe.

May it pleaſe you, her Maieſties ſubiects of England, we your friends and countrey-men, the planters in Virginia, doe by theſe preſents let you and euery of you to vnderſtand, that for the preſent and ſpeedy ſupply of certaine our knowen and apparant lackes and needes, moſt requiſite and neceſſary for the good and happy planting of vs, or any other in this land of Virginia, wee all of one minde & conſent, haue moſt earneſtly intreated, and vnceſſantly requeſted Iohn White, Gouernour of the planters in Virginia, to paſſe into England, for the better and more aſſured help, and ſetting forward of the foreſayd ſupplies: and knowing aſſuredly that he both can beſt, and will labour and take paines in that behalfe for vs all, and he not once, but often refuſing it, for our ſakes, and for the honour & maintenance of the action, hath at laſt, though much againſt his will, through our importunacie, yeelded to leaue his gouernement, and all his goods among vs, and himſelfe in all our behalfes to paſſe into England, of whoſe knowledge and fidelitie in handling this matter, as all others, we doe aſſure our ſelues by theſe preſents, and will you to giue all credite thereunto, the 25 of Auguſt 1587.

The Gouernour being at the laſt through their extreame intreating conſtrayned to returne into England, hauing then but halfe a dayes reſpite to prepare himſelfe for the ſame, departed from Roanoak the ſeuen and twentieth of Auguſt in the morning, and the ſame day about midnight, came aboord the Flieboat, who already had weyed anker, and rode without the barre, the Admirall riding by them, who but the ſame morning was newly come thither againe. The ſame day both the ſhips weyed anker, and ſet ſaile for England: at this weying their ankers, twelue of the men which were in the Flyboate were throwen from the Capſtone, which by meanes of a barre that brake, came ſo faſt about vpon them, that the other two barres thereof ſtrooke and hurt moſt of them ſo ſore, that ſome of them neuer recouered it: neuertheleſſe they aſſayed preſently againe to wey their anker, but being ſo weakened with the firſt ſling, they were not able to weye it, but were throwen downe and hurt the ſecond time. Wherefore hauing in all but fifteene men aboord, and moſt of them by this vnfortunate beginning ſo bruiſed, and hurt, they were forced to cut their Cable, and leeſe their anker. Neuertheleſſe, they kept company with the Admirall, vntill the ſeuenteenth of September, at which time wee fell with Coruo, and ſawe Flores.

September.

The eighteenth, perceiuing of all our fifteene men in the Flyboate there remained but fiue, which by meanes of the former miſchance, were able to ſtand to their labour: and that the the Admirall meant not to make any haſte for England, but to linger about the Iſland of Tercera for purchaſe: the Flyboate departed for England with letters, where we hoped by the help of God to arriue ſhortly: but by that time we had continued our courſe homeward about twenty dayes, hauing had ſometimes ſcarſe and variable windes, our freſh water alſo by leaking almoſt conſumed, there aroſe a ſtorme at Northeaſt, which for ſixe dayes ceaſed not to blowe ſo exceeding, that we were driuen further in thoſe ſixe then we could recouer in thirteene daies: in which time others of our ſaylers began to fall very ſicke and two of them dyed, the weather alſo continued ſo cloſe, that our Maſter ſometimes in foure dayes together could ſee neither ſunne nor ſtarre, and all the beuerage we could make, with ſtinking water, dregs of beere, and lees of wine which remayned, was but three gallons, and therefore now we expected nothing but famine to periſh at Sea.

October.

The 16 of October we made land, but we knewe not what land it was, bearing in with the ſame land at that day: about ſunne ſet we put into a harbour, where we found a Hulke of Dublin, and a pinneſſe of Hampton riding, but we knew not as yet what place this was, neither had we any boate to goe aſhore, vntill the pinneſſe ſent off their boate to vs with 6 or 8 men, of whom we vnderſtood wee were in Smerwick in the Weſt parts of Ireland: they alſo releeued vs preſently with freſh water, wine, and other freſh meate.

Smerwick in the Weſt of Ireland

The 18 the Gouernour and the Maſter ryd to Dingen a Cuſhe, 5 miles diſtant, to take order for the new victualing of our Flieboate for England, and for reliefe of our ſicke and hurt men, but within foure daies after the Boatſwain, the Steward, and the Boatſwains mate died aboord the Flieboat, and the 28 the Maſters mate and two of our chiefe ſailers were brought ſicke to Dingen.

Nouember.

The firſt the Gouernour ſhipped himſelfe in a ſhip called the Monkie, which at that time was ready to put to ſea from Dingen for England, leauing the Flyboat and all his companie in Ireland. The ſame day we ſet ſayle, and on the third day we fell with the North ſide of the lands end, and were ſhut vp the Seuerne, but the next day we doubled the ſame for Mounts Bay.

The 5 the Gouernour landed in England at Martaſew, neere Saint Michaels mount in Cornewall.

The 8 we arriued at Hampton, where we vnderſtood that our conſort the Admiral was come to Portſmouth, and had bene there three weekes before: and alſo that Ferdinando the Maſter with all his company were not onely come home without any purchaſe, but alſo in ſuch weakneſſe by ſickneſſe, and death of their chiefeſt men, that they were ſcarſe able to bring their ſhip into harbour, but were forced to let fall anker without, which they could not wey againe, but might all haue periſhed there, if a ſmall barke by great hap had not come to them to helpe them. The names of the chiefe men that died are theſe, Roger Large, Iohn Mathew, Thomas Smith, and ſome other ſaylers, whoſe names I knew not at the writing hereof. An. Dom. 1587.

The Aprill.

ON the firſt of Aprill we ankored in Santa Cruz rode, where we found two great ſhippes of London lading in Sugar, of whom we had 2 ſhipboats to ſupply the loſſe of our Shallops.

On the 2 we ſet ſayle from the rode of Santa Cruz, for the Canaries.

On Saturday the 4 we ſaw Alegranza, the Eaſt Ile of the Canaries.

On Sunday the 5 of Aprill we gaue chaſe to a double flyboat, the which, we alſo the ſame day fought with, and tooke her, with loſſe of three of their men ſlaine, and one hurt.

On Munday the 6 we ſaw Grand Canarie, and the next day we landed and tooke in freſh water on the Southſide thereof.

On the 9 we departed from Grand Canary, and framed our courſe for Dominica.

The laſt of Aprill we ſaw Dominica, and the ſame night we came to an anker on the Southſide thereof.

May.

THe firſt of May in the morning many of the Saluages came aboord our ſhips in their Canowes, and did traffique with vs; we alſo the ſame day landed and entered their Towne from whence we returned the ſame day aboord without any reſiſtance of the Saluages; or any offence done to them.

The 2 of May our Admirall and our Pinneſſe departed from Dominica leauing the Iohn our Viceadmirall playing off and on about Dominica, hoping to take ſome Spaniard outwardes bound to the Indies; the ſame night we had ſight of three ſmal Ilands called Los Santos, leauing Guadalupe and them on our ſtarboord.

The 3 we had ſight of S. Chriſtophers Iland, bearing Northeaſt and by Eaſt off vs.

On the 4 we ſayled by the Virgines, which are many broken Ilands, lying at the Eaſt ende of S. Iohns Iland; and the ſame day towards euening we landed vpon one of them called Blanca, where we killed an incredible number of foules: here we ſtayed but three houres, & from thence ſtood into the ſhore Northweſt, and hauing brought this Iland Southeaſt off vs, we put towards night thorow an opening or ſwatch, called The paſſage, lying betwene the Virgines, and the Eaſt end of S. Iohn: here the Pinneſſe left vs and ſayled on the South ſide of S. Iohn.

The 5 and 6 the Admirall ſayled along the Northſide of S. Iohn, ſo neere the ſhore that the Spaniards diſcerned vs to be men of warre; and therefore made fires along the coaſt as we ſailed by, for ſo their cuſtome is, when they ſee any men of warre on their coaſts.

The 7 we landed on the Northweſt end of S. Iohn, where we watered in a good riuer called Yaguana, and the ſame night following we tooke a Frigate of tenne Tunne comming from Gwathanelo laden with hides and ginger. In this place Pedro a Mollato, who knewe all our ſtate, ranne from vs to the Spaniards.

On the 9 we departed from Yaguana.

The 13 we landed on an Iland called Mona, whereon were 10 or 12 houſes inhabited of the Spaniards; theſe we burned & tooke from them a Pinneſſe, which they had drawen a ground and ſunke, and carried all her ſayles, maſtes, and rudders into the woods, becauſe we ſhould not take him away; we alſo chaſed the Spaniards ouer all the Iland; but they hid them in caues, hollow rockes, and buſhes, ſo that we could not find them.

On the 14 we departed from Mona, and the next day after wee came to an Iland called Saona, about 5 leagues diſtant from Mona, lying on the Southſide of Hiſpaniola neere the Eaſt end: betweene theſe two Ilands we lay off and on 4 or 5 dayes, hoping to take ſome of the Domingo fleete doubling this Iland, as a neerer way to Spaine then by Cape Tyburon, or by Cape S. Anthony.

On Thurſday being the 19 our Viceadmirall, from whom we departed at Dominica, came to vs at Saona, with whom we left a Spaniſh Frigate, and appointed him to lie off and on other fiue daies betweene Saona and Mona to the ende aforeſaid; then we departed from them at Saona for Cape Tyburon. Here I was enformed that our men of the Viceadmirall, at their departure from Dominica brought away two young Saluages, which were the chiefe Caſiques ſonnes of that Countrey and part of Dominica, but they ſhortly after ran away from them at Santa Cruz Iland, where the Viceadmirall landed to take in ballaſt.

On the 21 the Admirall came to the Cape Tyburon, where we found the Iohn Euangeliſt our Pinneſſe ſtaying for vs: here we tooke in two Spaniards almoſt ſtarued on the ſhore, who made a fire to our ſhips as we paſſed by. Thoſe places for an 100 miles in length are nothing els but a deſolate and meere wilderneſſe, without any habitation of people, and full of wilde Bulles and Bores, and great Serpents.

M. William Lane.

The 22 our Pinneſſe came alſo to an anker in Aligato Bay at cape Tyburon. Here we vnderſtood of M. Lane, Captaine of the Pinneſſe, how he was ſet vpon with one of the kings Gallies belonging to Santo Domingo, which was manned with 400 men, who after he had fought with him 3 or 4 houres, gaue ouer the fight & forſooke him, without any great hurt done on eyther part.

The 26 The Iohn our Vizadmirall came to vs to cape Tyburon, and the Frigat which we left with him at Saona. This was the appointed place where we ſhould attend for the meeting with the Santo Domingo Fleete.

On Whitſunday Euen at Cape Tyburon one of our boyes ranne away from vs, and at ten dayes end returned to our ſhips almoſt ſtarued for want of food. In ſundry places about this part of Cape Tyburon we found the bones and carkaſes of diuers men, who had periſhed (as wee thought) by famine in thoſe woods, being either ſtragled from their company, or landed there by ſome men of warre.

Iune.

ON the 14 of Iune we tooke a ſmal Spaniſh frigat which fell amongſt vs ſo ſuddenly, as he doubled the point at the Bay of Cape Tyburon, where we road, ſo that he could not eſcape vs. This Frigat came from Santo Domingo, and had but 3 men in her, the one was an expert Pilot, the other a Mountainer, and the third a Vintener, who eſcaped all out of priſon at Santo Domingo, purpoſing to fly to Yaguana which is a towne in the Weſt parts of Hiſpaniola where many fugitiue Spaniards are gathered together.

Spaniſh fugitiues.

The 17 being Wedneſday Captaine Lane was ſent to Yaguana with his Pinneſſe and a Frigat to take a ſhippe, which was there taking in fraight, as we vnderſtood by the old Pylot, whom we had taken three dayes before.

The 24 the Frigat returned from Captaine Lane at Yaguana, and brought vs word to cape Tyburon, that Captaine Lane had taken the ſhippe, with many paſſengers and Negroes in the ſame; which proued not ſo rich a prize as we hoped for, for that a Frenchman of warre had taken and ſpoyled her before we came. Neuertheleſſe her loading was thought worth 1000 or 1300 pounds, being hides, ginger, Cannafiſtula, Copper-pannes, and Caſaui.

Iuly.

Edward Spicer.

THe ſecond of Iuly Edward Spicer whom we left in England came to vs at Cape Tyburon, accompanied with a ſmall Pinneſſe, whereof one M. Harps was Captaine. And the ſame day we had ſight of a fleete of 14 ſaile all of Santo Domingo, to whom we preſently gaue chaſe, but they vpon the firſt ſight of vs fled, and ſeparating themſelues ſcattered here and there: Wherefore we were forced to diuide our ſelues and ſo made after them vntill 12 of the clocke at night. But then by reaſon of the darkeneſſe we loſt ſight of ech other, yet in the end the Admirall and the Moonelight happened to be together the ſame night at the fetching vp of the Vizadmirall of the Spaniſh fleete, againſt whom the next morning we fought and tooke him, with loſſe of one of our men and two hurt, and of theirs 4 ſlaine and 6 hurt. But what was become of our Viceadmirall, our Pinneſſe, and Prize, and two Frigates, in all this time, we were ignorant.

This fight was in ſight of the Iland of Nauaza.

The 3 of Iuly we ſpent about rifling, romaging and fitting the Prize to be ſailed with vs.

The 6 of Iuly we ſaw Iamayca the which we left on our larboord, keeping Cuba in ſight on our ſtarboord.

Vpon the 8 of Iuly we ſaw the Iland of Pinos, which lieth on the Southſide of Cuba nigh vnto the Weſt end or Cape called Cape S. Anthony. And the ſame day we gaue chaſe to a Frigat, but at night we loſt ſight of her, partly by the ſlow ſayling of our Admirall, & lacke of the Moonelight our Pinneſſe, whom Captaine Cooke had ſent to the Cape the day before.

On the 11 we came to Cape S. Anthony, where we found our conſort the Moonelight and her Pinneſſe abiding for our comming, of whom we vnderſtood that the day before there paſſed by them 22 ſaile, ſome of them of the burden of 300 and ſome 400 tunnes loaden with the Kings treaſure from the maine, bound for Hauana; from this 11 of Iuly vntill 22 we were much becalmed: and the winde being very ſcarſe, and the weather exceeding hoat, we were much peſtered with the Spaniards we had taken: wherefore we were driuen to land all the Spaniards ſauing three, but the place where we landed them was of their owne choiſe on the Southſide of Cuba neere vnto the Organes and Rio de Puercos.

The 23 we had ſight of the Cape of Florida, and the broken Ilands thereof called the Martires.

The 25 being S. Iames day in the morning, we fell with the Matanças, a head-land 8 leagues towards the Eaſt of Hauana, where we purpoſed to take freſh water in, and make our abode two or three dayes.

On Sunday the 26 of Iuly plying too and fro betweene the Matanças and Hauana, we were eſpied of three ſmall Pinnaſſes of S. Iohn de Vllua bound for Hauana, which were exceeding richly loaden, Theſe 3 Pinnaſſes came very boldly vp vnto vs, and ſo continued vntill they came within muſket ſhot of vs. And we ſuppoſed them to be Captaine Harps pinneſſe, and two ſmall Frigats taken by Captaine Harpe: wherefore we ſhewed our flag. But they preſently vpon the ſight of it turned about & made all the ſaile they could from vs toward the ſhore, & kept thẽſelues in ſo ſhallow water, that we were not able to follow them, and therefore gaue them ouer with expence of ſhot & pouder to no purpoſe. But if we had not ſo raſhly ſet out our flagge, wee might haue taken them all three, for they would not haue knowen vs before they had bene in our hands. This chaſe brought vs ſo far to leeward as Hauana: wherfore not finding any of our conſorts at ẏ Matanças, we put ouer again to the cape of Florida, & from thence thorow the chanel of Bahama.

On the 28 the Cape of Florida bare Weſt off vs.

The 30 we loſt ſight of the coaſt of Florida, and ſtood to Sea for to gaine the helpe of the current which runneth much ſwifter a farre off then in ſight of the coaſt. For from the Cape to Virginia all along the ſhore are none but eddie currents, ſetting to the South and Southweſt.

The ſtate of the currents from the cape of Florida to Virginia.

The 31 our three ſhips were clearely diſbocked, the great prize, the Admirall, and the Mooneſhine, but our prize being thus diſbocked departed from vs without taking leaue of our Admirall or conſort, and ſayled directly for England.

Auguſt.

ON the firſt of Auguſt the winde ſcanted, and from thence forward we had very fowle weather with much raine, thundering, and great ſpouts, which fell round about vs nigh vnto our ſhips.

The 3 we ſtoode againe in for the ſhore, and at midday we tooke the height of the ſame. The height of that place we found to be 34 degrees of latitude. Towards night we were within three leagues of the Low ſandie Ilands Weſt of Wokokon. But the weather continued ſo exceeding foule, that we could not come to an anker nye the coaſt: wherefore we ſtood off againe to Sea vntill Monday the 9 of Auguſt.

Sandie Ilands Weſt of Wokokon.

On munday the ſtorme ceaſed, and we had very great likelihood of faire weather: therefore we ſtood in againe for the ſhore: & came to an anker at 11 fadome in 35 degrees of latitude, within a mile of the ſhore, where we went on land on the narrow ſandy Iland, being one of the Ilandes Weſt of Wokokon: in this Iland we tooke in ſome freſh water and caught great ſtore of fiſh in the ſhallow water. Betweene the maine (as we ſuppoſed) and that Iland it was but a mile ouer and three or foure foote deepe in moſt places.

They land in 35 degrees.

On the 12 in the morning we departed from thence and toward night we came to an anker at the Northeaſt end of the Iland of Croatoan, by reaſon of a breach which we perceiued to lie out two or three leagues into the Sea: here we road all that night.

A breach 2 or 3 leagues into Sea.

The 13 in the morning before we waped our ankers, our boates were ſent to ſound ouer this breach; our ſhips riding on the ſide thereof at 5 fadome; and a ſhips length from vs we found but 4 and a quarter, and then deeping and ſhallowing for the ſpace of two miles, ſo that ſometimes we found 5 fadome, and by & by 7, and within two caſts with the lead 9, & then 8, next caſt 5, & then 6, & then 4, & then 9 againe, and deeper; but 3 fadome was the leaſt, 2 leagues off frō the ſhore. This breach is in 35 degr. & a halfe, & lyeth at the very Northeaſt point of Croatoan, wheras goeth a fret out of the maine Sea into the inner waters, which part the Ilandes and the maine land.

Great diuerſity of ſoūdings.

The 15 of Auguſt towards Euening we came to an anker at Hatorask, in 36 degr. and one third, in fiue fadom water, three leagues from the ſhore. At our firſt cōming to anker on this ſhore we ſaw a great ſmoke riſe in the Ile Raonoak neere the place where I left our Colony in the yeere 1587, which ſmoake put vs in good hope that ſome of the Colony were there expecting my returne out of England.

Hatorask in 36 degr. & a terce.

The 16 and next morning our 2 boates went a ſhore, & Captain Cooke, & Cap. Spicer, & their cōpany with me, with intent to paſſe to the place at Raonoak where our countreymen were left. At our putting from the ſhip we commanded our Maſter gunner to make readie 2 Minions and a Falkon well loden, and to ſhoot them off with reaſonable ſpace betweene euery ſhot, to the ende that their reportes might bee heard to the place where wee hoped to finde ſome of our people. This was accordingly performed, & our twoe boats put off vnto the ſhore, in the Admirals boat we ſounded all the way and found from our ſhippe vntill we came within a mile of the ſhore nine, eight, and ſeuen fadome: but before we were halfe way betweene our ſhips and the ſhore we ſaw another great ſmoke to the Southweſt of Kindrikers mountes: we therefore thought good to goe to that ſecond ſmoke firſt: but it was much further from the harbour where we landed, then we ſuppoſed it to be, ſo that we were very ſore tired before wee came to the ſmoke. But that which grieued vs more was that when we came to the ſmoke, we found no man nor ſigne that any had bene there lately, nor yet any freſh water in all this way to drinke. Being thus wearied with this iourney we returned to the harbour where we left our boates, who in our abſence had brought their caſke a ſhore for freſh water, ſo we deferred our going to Roanoak vntill the next morning, and cauſed ſome of thoſe ſaylers to digge in thoſe ſandie hilles for freſh water whereof we found very ſufficient. That night wee returned aboord with our boates and our whole company in ſafety.

Freſh water found in ſandy hilles

Captaine Spicer drowned.

The next morning being the 17 of Auguſt, our boates and company were prepared againe to goe vp to Roanoak, but Captaine Spicer had then ſent his boat aſhore for freſh water, by meanes whereof it was ten of the clocke aforenoone before we put from our ſhips which were then come to an anker within two miles of the ſhore. The Admirals boat was halfe way toward the ſhore, when Captaine Spicer put off from his ſhip. The Admirals boat firſt paſſed the breach, but not without ſome danger of ſinking, for we had a ſea brake into our boat which filled vs halfe full of water, but by the will of God and carefull ſtyrage of Captaine Cooke we came ſafe aſhore, ſauing onely that our furniture, victuals, match and powder were much wet and ſpoyled. For at this time the winde blue at Northeaſt and direct into the harbour ſo great a gale, that the Sea brake extremely on the barre, and the tide went very forcibly at the entrance. By that time our Admirals boate was halled aſhore, and moſt of our things taken out to dry, Captaine Spicer came to the entrance of the breach with his maſt ſtanding vp, and was halfe paſſed ouer, but by the raſh and vndiſcreet ſtyrage of Ralph Skinner his Maſters mate, a very dangerous Sea brake into their boate and ouerſet them quite, the men kept the boat ſome in it, and ſome hanging on it, but the next ſea ſet the boat on ground, where it beat ſo, that ſome of them were forced to let goe their hold, hoping to wade aſhore, but the Sea ſtill beat them downe, ſo that they could neither ſtand nor ſwimme, and the boat twiſe or thriſe was turned the keele vpward; whereon Captaine Spicer and Skinner hung vntill they ſunke, & were ſeene no more. But foure that could ſwimme a litle kept themſelues in deeper water and were ſaued by Captain Cookes meanes, who ſo ſoone as he ſaw their ouerſetting, ſtripped himſelfe, and foure other that could ſwimme very well, & with all haſte poſſible rowed vnto them, & ſaued foure. They were a 11 in all, & 7 of the chiefeſt were drowned, whoſe names were Edward Spicer, Ralph Skinner, Edward Kelley, Thomas Beuis, Hance the Surgion, Edward Kelborne, Robert Coleman. This miſchance did ſo much diſcomfort the ſaylers, that they were all of one mind not to goe any further to ſeeke the planters. But in the end by the commandement & perſwaſion of me and Captaine Cooke, they prepared the boates: and ſeeing the Captaine and me ſo reſolute, they ſeemed much more willing. Our boates and all things fitted againe, we put off from Hatorask, being the number of 19 perſons in both boates: but before we could get to the place, where our planters were left, it was ſo exceeding darke, that we ouerſhot the place a quarter of a mile: there we eſpied towards the North end of the Iland yͤ light of a great fire thorow the woods, to the which we preſently rowed: when wee came right ouer againſt it, we let fall our Grapnel neere the ſhore, & ſounded with a trumpet a Call, & afterwardes many familiar Engliſh tunes of Songs, and called to them friendly; but we had no anſwere, we therefore landed at day-breake, and cõming to the fire, we found the graſſe & ſundry rotten trees burning about the place. From hence we went thorow the woods to that part of the Iland directly ouer againſt Daſamongwepeuk, & from thence we returned by the water ſide, round about the Northpoint of the Iland, vntill we came to the place where I left our Colony in the yeere 1586. In all this way we ſaw in the ſand the print of the Saluages feet of 2 or 3 ſorts troaden yͤ night, and as we entred vp the ſandy banke vpon a tree, in the very browe thereof were curiouſly carued theſe faire Romane letters C R O: which letters preſently we knew to ſignifie the place, where I ſhould find the planters ſeated, according to a ſecret token agreed vpon betweene them & me at my laſt departure frõ them, which was, that in any wayes they ſhould not faile to write or carue on the trees or poſts of the dores the name of the place where they ſhould be ſeated; for at my cõming away they were prepared to remoue from Roanoak 50 miles into the maine. Therefore at my departure from them in An. 1587 I willed them, that if they ſhould happen to be diſtreſſed in any of thoſe places, that then they ſhould carue ouer the letters or name, a Croſſe ✠ in this forme, but we found no ſuch ſigne of diſtreſſe. And hauing well conſidered of this, we paſſed toward the place where they were left in ſundry houſes, but we found the houſes taken downe, and the place very ſtrongly encloſed with a high paliſado of great trees, with cortynes and flankers very Fort-like, and one of the chiefe trees or poſtes at the right ſide of the entrance had the barke taken off, and 5. foote from the ground in fayre Capitall letters was grauen CROATOAN without any croſſe or ſigne of diſtreſſe; this done, we entred into the paliſado, where we found many barres of Iron, two pigges of Lead, foure yron fowlers, Iron ſacker-ſhotte, and ſuch like heauie things, throwen here and there, almoſt ouergrowen with graſſe and weedes. From thence wee went along by the water ſide, towards the poynt of the Creeke to ſee if we could find any of their botes or Pinniſſe, but we could perceiue no ſigne of them, nor any of the laſt Falkons and ſmall Ordinance which were left with them, at my departure from them. At our returne from the Creeke, ſome of our Saylers meeting vs, tolde vs that they had found where diuers cheſts had bene hidden, and long ſithence digged vp againe and broken vp, and much of the goods in them ſpoyled and ſcattered about, but nothing left, of ſuch things as the Sauages knew any vſe of, vndefaced. Preſently Captaine Cooke and I went to the place, which was in the ende of an olde trench, made two yeeres paſt by Captaine Amadas: wheere wee found fiue Cheſts, that had bene carefully hidden of the Planters, and of the ſame cheſts three were my owne, and about the place many of my things ſpoyled and broken, and my bookes torne from the couers, the frames of ſome of my pictures and Mappes rotten and ſpoyled with rayne, and my armour almoſt eaten through with ruſt; this could bee no other but the deede of the Sauages our enemies at Daſamongwepeuk, who had watched the departure of our men to Croatoan; and aſſoone as they were departed, digged vp euery place where they ſuſpected any thing to be buried: but although it much grieued me to ſee ſuch ſpoyle of my goods, yet on the other ſide I greatly ioyed that I had ſafely found a certaine token of their ſafe being at Croatoan, which is the place where Manteo was borne, and the Sauages of the Iland our friends.

When we had ſeene in this place ſo much as we could, we returned to our Boates, and departed from the ſhoare towards our Shippes, with as much ſpeede as wee could: For the weather beganne to ouercaſt, and very likely that a foule and ſtormie night would enſue. Therefore the ſame Euening with much danger and labour, we got our ſelues aboard, by which time the winde and ſeas were ſo greatly riſen, that wee doubted our Cables and Anchors would ſcarcely holde vntill Morning; wherefore the Captaine cauſed the Boate to be manned with fiue luſty men, who could ſwimme all well, and ſent them to the little Iland on the right hand of the Harbour, to bring aboard ſixe of our men, who had filled our caſke with freſh water: the Boate the ſame night returned aboard with our men, but all our Caſke ready filled they left behinde, vnpoſſible to bee had aboard without danger of caſting away both men and Boates; for this night prooued very ſtormie and foule.

The next Morning it was agreed by the Captaine and my ſelfe, with the Maſter and others, to wey anchor, and goe for the place at Croatoan, where our planters were: for that then the winde was good for that place, and alſo to leaue that Caſke with freſh water on ſhoare in the Iland vntill our returne. So then they brought the cable to the Capſton, but when the anchor was almoſt apecke, the Cable broke, by meanes whereof we loſt another Anchor, wherewith we droue ſo faſt into the ſhoare, that wee were forced to let fall a third Anchor; which came ſo faſt home that the Shippe was almoſt aground by Kenricks mounts: ſo that wee were forced to let ſlippe the Cable ende for ende. And if it had not chanced that wee had fallen into a chanell of deeper water, cloſer by the ſhoare then wee accompted of, wee could neuer haue gone cleare of the poynt that lyeth to the Southwardes of Kenricks mounts. Being thus cleare of ſome dangers, and gotten into deeper waters, but not without ſome loſſe; for wee had but one Cable and Anchor left vs of foure, and the weather grew to be fouler and fouler; our victuals ſcarſe, and our caſke and freſh water loſt: it was therefore determined that we ſhould goe for Saint Iohn or ſome other Iland to the Southward for freſh water. And it was further purpoſed, that if wee could any wayes ſupply our wants of victuals and other neceſſaries, either at Hiſpaniola, Sant Iohn, or Trynidad, that then wee ſhould continue in the Indies all the Winter following, with hope to make 2. rich voyages of one, and at our returne to viſit our countrymen at Virginia. The captaine and the whole company in the Admirall (with my earneſt petitions) thereunto agreed, ſo that it reſted onely to knowe what the Maſter of the Moone-light our conſort would doe herein. But when we demanded them if they would accompany vs in that new determination, they alledged that their weake and leake Shippe was not able to continue it; wherefore the ſame night we parted, leauing the Moone-light to goe directly for England, and the Admirall ſet his courſe for Trynidad, which courſe we kept two dayes.

They leaue the coaſt of Virginia.

On the 28. the winde changed, and it was ſette on foule weather euery way: but this ſtorme brought the winde Weſt and Northweſt, and blewe ſo forcibly, that wee were able to beare no ſayle, but our fore-courſe halfe maſt high, wherewith wee ranne vpon the winde perforce, the due courſe for England, for that wee were dryuen to change our firſt determination for Tryniدad, and ſtoode for the Ilands of Açores, where wee purpoſed to take in freſh water, and alſo there hoped to meete with ſome Engliſh men of warre about thoſe Ilands, at whoſe hands wee might obtaine ſome ſupply of our wants. And thus continuing our courſe for the Açores, ſometimes with calmes, and ſometimes with very ſcarce windes, on the fifteenth of September the winde came South Southeaſt, and blew ſo exceedingly, that wee were forced to lye atry all that day. At this time by account we iudged our ſelues to be about twentie leagues to the Weſt of Cueruo and Flores, but about night the ſtorme ceaſed, and fayre weather enſued.

On Thurſday the ſeuenteenth wee ſaw Cueruo and Flores, but we could not come to anker that night, by reaſon the winde ſhifted. The next Morning being the eighteenth, ſtanding in againe with Cueruo, we eſcryed a ſayle ahead vs, to whom we gaue chaſe: but when wee came neere him, we knew him to be a Spanyard, and hoped to make ſure purchaſe of him; but we vnderſtood at our ſpeaking with him, that he was a prize, and of the Domingo fleete already taken by the Iohn our conſort, in the Indies. We learned alſo of this prize, that our Viceadmirall and Pinniſſe had fought with the reſt of the Domingo fleete, and had forced them with their Admirall to flee vnto Iamaica vnder the Fort for ſuccour, and ſome of them ran themſelues aground, whereof one of them they brought away, and tooke out of ſome others ſo much as the time would permit. And further wee vnderſtood of them, that in their returne from Iamaica about the Organes neere Cape Saint Anthony, our Viceadmirall mette with two Shippes of the mayne land, come from Mexico, bound for Hauana, with whom he fought; in which fight our Viceadmirals Lieutenant was ſlaine, and the Captaines right arme ſtrooken off, with foure other of his men ſlaine, and ſixteene hurt. But in the ende he entred, and tooke one of the Spaniſh ſhippes, which was ſo ſore ſhot by vs vnder water, that before they could take out her treaſure, ſhe ſunke; ſo that we loſt thirteene Pipes of ſiluer which ſunke with her, beſides much other rich marchandize. And in the meane time the other Spaniſh ſhippe being pearced with nine ſhotte vnder water, got away; whom our Viceadmirall intended to purſue: but ſome of their men in the toppe made certaine rockes, which they ſaw aboue water neere the ſhoare, to be Gallies of Hauana and Cartagena, comming from Hauana to reſcue the two Ships; Wherefore they gaue ouer their chaſe, and went for England. After this intelligence was giuen vs by this our prize, he departed from vs, and went for England.

13. Pipes of ſiluer.

On Saturday the 19. of September we came to an Ancre neere a ſmall village on the North ſide of Flores, where we found ryding 5. Engliſh men of warre, of whom wee vnderſtood that our Viceadmirall and Prize were gone thence for England. One of theſe fiue was the Moonelight our conſort, who vpon the firſt ſight of our comming into Flores, ſet ſayle and went for England, not taking any leaue of vs.

On Sunday the 20. the Mary Roſe, Admirall of the Queenes fleete, wherein was Generall Sir Iohn Hawkins, ſtood in with Flores, and diuers other of the Queenes ſhips, namely the Hope, the Nonpareilia, the Rainebow, the Swift-ſure, the Foreſight, with many other good merchants ſhips of warre, as the Edward Bonauenture, the Marchant Royal, the Amitie, the Eagle, the Dainty of ſir Iohn Hawkins, and many other good ſhips and pinniſſes, all attending to meete with the king of Spaines fleete, comming from Terra firma of the Weſt Indies.

The 22. of September we went aboard the Raynebow, and towards night we ſpake with the Swift-ſure, and gaue him 3. pieces. The captaines deſired our company; wherefore we willingly attended on them: who at this time with 10. other ſhips ſtood for Faial. But the Generall with the reſt of the Fleete were ſeparated from vs, making two fleetes, for the ſurer meeting with the Spaniſh fleete.

On Wedneſday the 23. we ſaw Gratioſa, where the Admiral and the reſt of the Queens fleete were come together. The Admirall put forth a flag of counſel, in which was determined that the whole fleete ſhould go for the mayne, and ſpred themſelues on the coaſts of Spaine and Portugal, ſo farre as conueniently they might, for the ſurer meeting of the Spaniſh fleete in thoſe parts.

The 26. we came to Faial, where the Admiral with ſome other of the fleete ankred, other ſome plyed vp and downe betweene that and the Pico vntill midnight, at which time the Antony ſhot off a piece and weyed, ſhewing his light: after whom the whole fleete ſtood to the Eaſt, the winde at Northeaſt by Eaſt.

On Sunday the 27. towards Euening wee tooke our leaue of the Admirall and the whole fleete, who ſtood to the Eaſt. But our ſhippe accompanied with a Flyboate ſtoode in againe with S. George, where we purpoſed to take in more freſh water, and ſome other freſh victuals.

On Wedneſday the 30. of September, ſeeing the winde hang ſo Northerly, that wee could not atteine the Iland of S. George, we gaue ouer our purpoſe to water there, and the next day framed our due courſe for England.

October.

The 2. of October in the Morning we ſaw S. Michaels Iland on our Starre board quarter.

The 23. at 10. of the clocke afore noone, we ſaw Vſhant in Britaigne.

On Saturday the 24. we came in ſafetie, God be thanked, to an anker at Plymmouth.

CERTAINE VOYAGES TO FLORIDA, AND the later and more perfect diſcoueries thereof, to wit, of all the Seacoaſts, Riuers, Bayes, Hauens, Iſles, and maine landes farre vp into the Countrey, and a report of ſome colonies and fortes there planted and diſplanted, with a deſcription of the gouernment, diſpoſition and qualitie of the naturall inhabitants, and a declaration of the temperature of the climate, and of the manifolde good commodities found in thoſe regions.

TO THE MOST CHRISTIAN King of France, Francis the firſt.

The relation of Iohn de Verrazzano a Florentine, of the land by him diſcouered in the name of his Maieſtie. Written in Diepe the eight of Iuly, 1524.

I Wrote not to your Maieſty, moſt Chriſtian king, ſince the time we ſuffered the tempeſt in the North partes, of the ſucceſſe of the foure Shippes, which your Maieſtie ſent forth to diſcouer new lands by the Ocean, thinking your Maieſtie had bene already duely enformed thereof. Now by theſe preſents I will giue your Maieſtie to vnderſtand, how by the violence of the windes we were forced with the two ſhips, the Norman and the Dolphin (in ſuch euill caſe as they were) to land in Britaine. Where after wee had repayred them in all poynts as was needefull, and armed them very well, we tooke our courſe along by the coaſt of Spaine, which your Maieſtie ſhall vnderſtand by the profite that we receiued thereby. Afterwards with the Dolphin alone we determined to make diſcouerie of new Countries, to proſecute the nauigation we had already begun, which I purpoſe at this preſent to recount vnto your Maieſtie, to make manifeſt the whole proceeding of the matter.

The 17. of January the yeere 1524. by the grace of God we departed from the diſhabited rocke by the iſle of Madêra, apperteining to the king of Portugal, with 50. men, with victuals, weapons, and other ſhip-munition very well prouided & furniſhed for 8. moneths: And ſayling Weſtwards with a faire Eaſterly winde, in 25. dayes we ran 500. leagues, and the 20. of Februarie we were ouertaken with as ſharpe and terrible a tempeſt as euer any saylers ſuffered: whereof with the diuine helpe and mercifull aſſiſtance of Almighty God, and the goodneſſe of our ſhippe, accompanied with the good happe of her fortunate name, we were deliuered, and with a proſperous winde followed our courſe Weſt and by North. And in other 25. dayes we made aboue 400. leagues more, where we diſcouered a new land, neuer before ſeene of any man either ancient or moderne, and at the firſt ſight it ſeemed ſomewhat low, but being within a quarter of a league of it, we perceiued by the great fires that we ſaw by the Sea coaſt, that it was inhabited: and ſaw that the lande ſtretched to the Southwards. In ſeeking ſome conuenient Harborough wherein to anchor and to haue knowledge of the place, we ſayled fiftie leagues in vaine, and ſeeing the land to runne ſtill to the Southwards, we reſolued to returne backe againe towards the North, where wee found our ſelues troubled with the like difficultie. At length being in deſpaire to finde any Port, wee caſt anchor vpon the coaſt, and ſent our Boate to ſhore, where we ſaw great ſtore of people which came to the Sea ſide; and ſeeing vs approch, they fled away, and ſometimes would ſtand ſtill and looke backe, beholding vs with great admiration: but afterwards being animated and aſſured with ſignes that we made them, ſome of them came hard to the Sea ſide, ſeeming to reioyce very much at the ſight of vs, and marueiling greatly at our apparel, ſhape and whiteneſſe, ſhewed vs by ſundry ſignes where we might moſt commodiouſly come aland with our Boat, offering vs alſo of their victuals to eate. Now I wil briefly declare to your Maieſtie their life and maners, as farre as we could haue notice thereof: Theſe people goe altogether naked, except only that they couer their priuie parts with certaine ſkins of beaſts like vnto Marterns, which they faſten vnto a narrow girdle made of graſſe very artificially wrought, hanged about with tayles of diuers other beaſtes, which round about their bodies hang dangling downe to their knees. Some of them weare garlands of byrdes feathers. The people are of colour ruſſet, and not much vnlike the Saracens: their hayre blacke, thicke and not very long, which they tye together in a knot behind and weare it like a litle taile. They are well featured in their limbes, of meane ſtature, and commonly ſomewhat bigger then we: broad breaſted, ſtrong armed, their legs and other parts of their bodies well faſhioned, and they are diſfigured in nothing, ſauing that they haue ſomewhat broade viſages, and yet not all of them: for we ſaw many of them wel fauoured, hauing blacke and great eyes, with a chearefull and ſteady looke, not ſtrong of body, yet ſharpe witted, nymble and exceeding great runners, as farre as we could learne by experience, and in thoſe two laſt qualities they are like to the people of the Eaſt partes of the world, and eſpecially to them of the vttermoſt parts of China. We could not learne of this people their maner of liuing, nor their particular cuſtoms, by reaſon of the ſhort abode we made on the ſhore, our company being but ſmall, and our ſhip ryding farre off in the Sea. And not farre from theſe wee found another people, whoſe liuing wee thinke to be like vnto theirs; (as hereafter I wil declare vnto your Maieſtie) ſhewing at this preſent the ſituation and nature of the foreſayd land. The ſhoare is all couered with ſmall ſand, and ſo aſcendeth vpwards for the ſpace of 15. foote, riſing in forme of litle hils about 50. paces broad. And ſayling forwards, we found certaine ſmall Riuers and armes of the Sea, that fall downe by certaine creekes, waſhing the ſhoare on both ſides as the coaſt lyeth. And beyond this we ſaw the open Countrey riſing in height aboue the ſandie ſhoare with many faire fields and plaines, full of mightie great woods, ſome very thicke, and ſome thinne, repleniſhed with diuers ſorts of trees, as pleaſant and delectable to behold, as is poſſible to imagine. And your Maieſty may not thinke that theſe are like the woods of Hercynia or the wilde deſerts of Tartary, and the Northerne coaſts full of fruitleſſe trees: But they are full of Palme trees, Bay trees, and high Cypreſſe trees, and many other ſortes of trees vnknowen in Europe, which yeeld moſt ſweete ſauours farre from the ſhoare, the propertie whereof we could not learne for the cauſe aforeſaid, and not for any difficulty to paſſe through the woods, ſeeing they are not ſo thicke but that a man may paſſe through them. Neither doe we thinke that they partaking of the Eaſt world round about them, are altogether voyd of drugs or ſpicery, and other riches of golde, ſeeing the colour of the land doth ſo much argue it. And the land is full of many beaſtes, as Stags, Deere and Hares, and likewiſe of Lakes and Pooles of freſh water, with great plentie of Fowles, conuenient for all kinde of pleaſant game. This land is in latitude 34. degrees, with good and wholeſome ayre, temperate, betweene hot and colde, no vehement windes doe blowe in thoſe Regions, and thoſe that doe commonly reigne in thoſe coaſts, are the Northweſt and Weſt windes in the ſummer ſeaſon, (in the beginning whereof we were there) the ſkie cleere and faire with very litle raine: and if at any time the ayre be cloudie and miſtie with the Southerne winde, immediatly it is diſſolued and waxeth cleere and fayre againe. The Sea is calme, not boyſterous, the waues gentle: and although all the ſhore be ſomewhat ſholde and without harborough, yet is it not dangerous to the ſaylers, being free from rocks and deepe, ſo that within 4. or 5. foote of the ſhore, there is 20. foote deepe of water without ebbe or flood, the depth ſtill increaſing in ſuch vniforme proportion. There is very good ryding at Sea: for any ſhip being ſhaken in a tempeſt, can neuer periſh there by breaking of her cables, which we haue proued by experience. For in the beginning of March (as it is vſuall in all regions) being in the Sea oppreſſed with Northerne windes, and ryding there, wee found our anchor broken before the earth fayled or mooued at all. We departed from this place, ſtil running along the coaſt, which we found to trend toward the Eaſt, & we ſaw euery where very great fires, by reaſon of the multitude of the inhabitants. While we rode on that coaſt, partly becauſe it had no harborough, and for that we wanted water, we ſent our boat aſhoare with 25. men: where by reaſon of great and continuall waues that beat againſt the ſhoare, being an open Coaſt, without ſuccour, none of our men could poſſibly goe aſhoare without looſing our boate. Wee ſaw there many people which came vnto the ſhoare, making diuers ſignes of friendſhip, and ſhewing that they were content we ſhould come aland, and by trial we found them to be very courteous and gentle, as your Maieſtie ſhal vn-derſtand by the ſucceſſe. To the intent we might ſend them of our things, which the Indians commonly deſire and eſteeme, as ſheetes of paper, glaſſes, bels, and ſuch like trifles; we ſent a young man one of our Mariners aſhoare, who ſwimming towards them, & being within 3. or 4. yards of the ſhore, not truſting them, caſt the things vpon the ſhoare: but ſeeking afterwards to returne, he was with ſuch violence of the waues beaten vpon the ſhore, that he was ſo bruiſed that he lay there almoſt dead: which the Indians perceiuing, ranne to catch him, and drawing him out, they caried him a litle way off from the ſea. The yong man perceiuing they caried him, being at the firſt diſmaied, began then greatly to feare, and cried out piteouſly: likewiſe did the Indians which did accompany him, going about to cheere him and to giue him courage, and then ſetting him on the ground at the foote of a litle hil againſt the ſunne, they began to behold him with great admiration, marueiling at the whiteneſſe of his fleſh: And putting off his clothes, they made him warme at a great fire, not without our great feare which remayned in the boate, that they would haue roſted him at that fire, and haue eaten him. The young man hauing recouered his ſtrength, and hauing ſtayed a while with them, ſhewed them by ſignes that he was deſirous to returne to the ſhip: and they with great loue clapping him faſt about with many imbracings, accompanying him vnto the ſea, and to put him in more aſſurance, leauing him alone, went vnto a high ground and ſtood there, beholding him vntill he was entred into the boate. This yong man obſerued, as we did alſo, that theſe are of colour inclining to Blacke as the other were, with their fleſh very ſhining, of meane ſtature, handſome viſage, and delicate limmes, and of very litle ſtrength, but of prompt wit: farther we obſerued not.

They run 50. leagues farther.

Departing from hence, following the ſhore which trended ſomewhat toward the North, in 50. leagues ſpace we came to another land which ſhewed much more faire and ful of woods, being very great, where we rode at anker: and that we might haue ſome knowledge thereof, wee ſent 20. men aland, which entred into the countrey about 2. leagues, and they found that the people were fled to the woods for feare. They ſaw onely one olde woman with a young maide of 18. or 20. yeeres olde, which ſeeing our company, hid themſelues in the graſſe for feare: the olde woman caried two Infants on her ſhoulders, and behind her necke a child of 8. yeeres olde. The young woman was laden likewiſe with as many: but when our men came vnto them, the women cried out: the olde woman made ſignes that the men were fledde vnto the woods. Aſſoone as they ſaw vs to quiet them and to winne their fauour, our men gaue them ſuch victuals as they had with them, to eate, which the old woman receiued thankfully: but the yong woman diſdained them all, & threw them diſdainfully on the ground. They tooke a child from the olde woman to bring into France, and going about to take the yong woman which was very beautiful and of tall ſtature, they could not poſſibly, for the great outcries that ſhe made, bring her to the ſea: and eſpecially hauing great woods to paſſe thorow, and being farre from the ſhip, we purpoſed to leaue her behind, bearing away the child onely. We found thoſe folkes to be more white then thoſe that we found before, being clad with certaine leaues that hang on boughs of trees, which they ſewe together with threds of wilde hempe: their heads were truſſed vp after the ſame maner as the former were: their ordinary foode is of pulſe, whereof they haue great ſtore, differing in colour and taſte from ours; of good and pleaſant taſte. Moreouer they liue by fiſhing and fowling, which they take with ginnes, and bowes made of hard wood, the arrowes of Canes, being headed with the bones of fiſh, & other beaſts. The beaſts in theſe parts are much wilder then in our Europe, by reaſon they are continually chaſed and hunted. We ſaw many of their boats made of one tree 20. foote long, and 4. foote broad, which are not made with yron or ſtone, or any other kind of metall (becauſe that in all this countrey for the ſpace of 200. leagues which we ranne, we neuer ſaw one ſtone of any ſort:) they helpe themſelues with fire, burning ſo much of the tree as is ſufficient for the hollowneſſe of the boat; the like they doe in making the ſterne & the forepart, vntill it be fit to ſaile vpon the ſea. The land is in ſituation, goodnes and faireneſſe like the other: it hath woods like the other, thinne and full of diuers ſorts of trees: but not ſo ſweete, becauſe the country is more Northerly and colde.

Wilde hempe.

They ran along the coaſt 200. leagues.
They make hollow their Canoas with fire.

We ſaw in this Countrey many Vines growing naturally, which growing vp, tooke holde of the trees as they doe in Lombardie, which if by huſbandmen they were dreſſed in good order, without all doubt they would yeeld excellent wines: for hauing oftentimes ſeene the fruit thereof dryed, which was ſweete and pleaſant, and not differing from ours, wee thinke that they doe eſteeme the ſame, becauſe that in euery place where they growe, they take away the vnder branches growing round about, that the fruit thereof may ripen the better.

Vines like thoſe of Lombardie.

We found alſo roſes, violets, lilies, and many ſorts of herbes, and ſweete and odoriferous flowers different from ours. We knewe not their dwellings, becauſe they were farre vp in the land, and we iudge by many ſignes that we ſaw, that they are of wood & of trees framed together.

100. Leagues ſayling.

A mighty riuer.

We doe beleeue alſo by many coniectures and ſignes, that many of them ſleeping in the fields, haue no other couert then the open ſky. Further knowledge haue we not of them: we thinke that all the reſt whoſe countreys we paſſed, liue all after one maner. Hauing made our aboade three dayes in this country, and ryding on the coaſt for want of harboroughs, we concluded to depart from thence, trending along the ſhore betweene the North and the Eaſt, ſayling onely in the day-time, and riding at anker by night. In the ſpace of 100. leagues ſayling we found a very pleaſant place ſituated amongſt certaine litle ſteepe hils: from amidſt the which hils there ran downe into the ſea an exceeding great ſtreme of water, which wͭin the mouth was very deepe, & from the ſea to the mouth of the ſame with yͤ tide which we found to riſe 8. foote, any great ſhip laden may paſſe vp.

People clad with feathers of diuers colours.

But becauſe we rode at anker in a place well fenced from the wind, we would not venture our ſelues without knowledge of the place: and we paſſed vp with our boat onely into the ſayd Riuer, and ſaw the countrey very well peopled. The people are almoſt like vnto the others, and are clad with the feathers of fowles of diuers colours: they came towards vs very cheerefully, making great ſhowts of admiration; ſhewing vs where we might come to land moſt ſafely with our boat. We entred vp the ſaid riuer into the land about halfe a league, where it made a moſt pleaſant lake about 3. leagues in compaſſe: on the which they rowed from the one ſide to the other to the number of 30. of their ſmall boats, wherein were many people which paſſed from one ſhore to the other to come and ſee vs. And behold vpon the ſudden (as it is woont to fall out in ſayling) a contrary flaw of wind comming from the ſea, we were inforced to returne to our ſhip, leauing this lande to our great diſcontentment, for the great commodity and pleaſantneſſe thereof, which we ſuppoſe is not without ſome riches, all the hils ſhewing minerall matters in them. We weyed anker, and ſayled toward the Eaſt, for ſo the coaſt trended, and ſo alwayes for 50. leagues being in the ſight thereof, we diſcouered an Iland in forme of a triangle, diſtant from the maine land 10. leagues, about the bigneſſe of the Iland of the Rhodes: it was full of hils couered with trees, well peopled, for we ſaw fires all along the coaſt: wee gaue it the name of your Maieſties mother, not ſtaying there by reaſon of the weather being contrary.

The pleaſantnes and riches of the land.

The coaſt trendeth to the Eaſt.

The deſcription of Claudia Iland, tenne leagues from the mayne: Claudia was mother of king Francis.

A paſſing good hauen.

And we came to another land being 15. leagues diſtant from the Iland, where we found a paſſing good hauen, wherein being entred, we found about 20. ſmall boats of the people, which with diuers cries and wondrings came about our ſhip, comming no neerer then 50. paces towards vs: they ſtayed and beheld the artificialneſſe of our ſhip, our ſhape & apparel: then they all made a loud ſhowt together, declaring that they reioyced. When we had ſomething animated them, vſing their geſtures, they came ſo neere vs, that we caſt them certaine bels and glaſſes, and many toyes, which when they had receiued, they looked on them with laughing, and came without feare aboard our ſhip. There were amongſt theſe people 2. kings of ſo goodly ſtature and ſhape as is poſſible to declare: the eldeſt was about 40. yeeres of age, the ſecond was a yong man of 20. yeeres olde. Their apparell was on this maner: the elder had vpon his naked body a Harts ſkin wrought artificially with diuers branches like damaſke: his head was bare with the hayre tyed vp behind with diuers knots: about his necke he had a large chaine, garniſhed with diuers ſtones of ſundry colours: the yong man was almoſt apparelled after yͤ ſame maner. This is the goodlieſt people, & of the faireſt conditions that we haue found in this our voyage. They exceed vs in bignes: they are of the colour of braſſe, ſome of them incline more to whiteneſſe: others are of yellow colour, of comely viſage, with long and blacke haire, which they are very careful to trim and decke vp: they are blacke and quicke eyed, and of ſweete and pleaſant countenance, imitating much the old faſhion. I write not to your Maieſtie of the other parts of their body, hauing al ſuch proportion as apperteineth to any handſome man. The women are of the like conformitie and beautie: very handſome and well fauoured, of pleaſant countenance, and comely to behold: they are as wel manered and continent as any women, and of good education: they are all naked ſaue their priuy partes, which they couer with a Deeres ſkin branched or embrodered as the men vſe: there are alſo of them which weare on their armes very rich ſkinnes of Luzernes: they adorne their heads with diuers ornaments made of their owne haire, which hang downe before on both ſides their breſtes: others vſe other kinde of dreſſing themſelues like vnto the women of Egypt and Syria, theſe are of the elder ſort: and when they are maried, they weare diuers toyes, according to the vſage of the people of the Eaſt, aſwell men as women.

Copper more eſteemed then golde.

Among whom we ſaw many plates of wrought copper, which they eſteeme more then golde, which for the colour they make no account of, for that among all other it is counted the baſeſt: they make moſt account of Azure and Red. The things that they eſteeme moſt of all thoſe which we gaue them, were bels, chriſtal of Azure colour, and other toyes to hang at their eares or about their necke. They did not deſire cloth of ſilke or of golde, much leſſe of any other ſort, neither cared they for things made of ſteele and yron, which wee often ſhewed them in our armour which they made no wonder at, and in beholding them they onely aſked the arte of making them: the like they did at our glaſſes, which when they beheld, they ſuddenly laught and gaue them vs againe. They are very liberall, for they giue that which they haue: wee became great friends with theſe, and one day we entred into the Hauen with our ſhip, whereas before we rode a league off at Sea by reaſon of the contrary weather. They came in great companies of their ſmall boats vnto the ſhip with their faces all bepainted with diuers colours, ſhewing vs that it was a ſigne of ioy, bringing vs of their victuals, they made ſignes vnto vs where we might ſafeſt ride in the Hauen for the ſafegard of our ſhip keeping ſtill our company: and after we were come to an anker, wee beſtowed 15 dayes in prouiding our ſelues many neceſſary things, whither euery day the people repaired to ſee our ſhip bringing their wiues with them, whereof they were very ielous: and they themſelues entring abord the ſhip & ſtaying there a good ſpace, cauſed their wiues to ſtay in their boats, and for all the intreatie we could make, offring to giue them diuers things, we could neuer obtaine that they would ſuffer them to come abord our ſhip. And oftentimes one of the two kings comming with his queene, and many gentlemen for their pleaſure to ſee vs, they all ſtayed on the ſhore 200 paces from vs, ſending a ſmall boat to giue vs intelligence of their comming, ſaying they would come to ſee our ſhip: this they did in token of ſafety, and aſſoone as they had anſwere from vs, they came immediatly, and hauing ſtaied a while to behold it, they wondred at hearing the cries and noyſes of the mariners. The queene and her maids ſtayed in a very light boat, at an Iland a quarter of a league off, while the king abode a long ſpace in our ſhip vttering diuers conceits with geſtures, viewing with great admiration all the furniture of the ſhip, demanding the property of euery thing particularly. He tooke likewiſe great pleaſure in beholding our apparell, and in taſting our meats, & ſo courteouſly taking his leaue departed. And ſometimes our men ſtaying 2 or 3 daies on a litle Iland neere the ſhip for diuers neceſſaries (as it is the vſe of ſeamen) he returned with 7 or 8 of his gentlemen to ſee what we did, & aſked of vs oftentimes if we meant to make any long abode there, offring vs of their prouiſion: then the king drawing his bow and running vp and down with his gentlemen, made much ſport to gratifie our men: we were oftentimes within the land 5 or 6 leagues, which we found as pleaſant as is poſſible to declare, very apt for any kind of huſbandry of corne, wine and oyle: for that there are plaines 25 or 30 leagues broad, open and without any impediment, of trees of ſuch fruitfulneſſe, that any ſeed being ſowen therein, wil bring forth moſt excellent fruit. We entred afterwards into the woods, which we found ſo great and thicke, that any army were it neuer ſo great might haue hid it ſelfe therein, the trees whereof are okes, cipreſſe trees, and other ſortes vnknowen in Europe. We found Pomi appii, damſon trees, and nut trees, and many other ſorts of fruit differing from ours: there are beaſts in great abundance, as harts, deere, luzerns, & other kinds which they take with their nets & bowes which are their chiefe weapons: the arrowes which they vſe are made with great cunning, and inſtead of yron, they head them with flint, with iaſper ſtone & hard marble & other ſharp ſtones which they vſe in ſtead of yron to cut trees, & to make their boates of one whole piece of wood, making it hollow with great and wonderful art, wherein 10. or 12. men may ſit commodiouſly: their oares are ſhort and broad at the end, and they vſe them in the ſea without any danger, and by maine force of armes, with as great ſpeedines as they liſt themſelues. We ſaw their houſes made in circular or round forme 10 or 12 paces in compaſſe, made with halfe circles of timber, ſeparate one from another without any order of building, couered with mattes of ſtraw wrought cunningly together, which ſaue them from the wind and raine; and if they had the order of building and perfect ſkil of workmanſhip as we haue, there were no doubt but that they would alſo make eftſoones great & ſtately buildings. For all the ſea coaſts are ful of cleare and gliſtering ſtones, & alablaſter, and therefore it is full of good hauens and harboroughs for ſhips. They mooue the foreſaid houſes from one place to another according to the commodity of the place & ſeaſon wherin they wil make their abode, and only taking off the mattes, they haue other houſes builded incontinent. The father and the whole family dwell together in one houſe in great number: in ſome of them we ſaw 25 or 30 perſons. They feed as the other doe aforeſaid of pulſe which grow in that Countrey with better order of huſbandry then in the others. They obſerue in their ſowing the courſe of the Moone and the riſing of certaine ſtarres, and diuers other cuſtomes ſpoken of by antiquity. Moreouer they liue by hunting and fiſhing. They liue long, & are ſeldome ſicke, and if they chance to fall ſicke at any time they heale themſelues with fire without any phiſician, and they ſay that they die for very age. They are very pitifull and charitable towards their neighbours, they make great lamentations in their aduerſitie: and in their miſerie, the kinred reckon vp all their felicitie. At their departure out of life, they vſe mourning mixt with ſinging, which continueth for a long ſpace.

This is aſmuch as we could learne of them. This land is ſituated in the Paralele of Rome, in 41. degrees and 2. terces: but ſomewhat more colde by accidentall cauſes and not of nature, (as I will declare vnto your highneſſe elſewhere) deſcribing at this preſent the ſituation of the foreſaid Countrey, which lieth Eaſt and Weſt, I ſay that the mouth of the Hauen lieth open to the South halfe a league broad, and being entred within it betweene the Eaſt and the North, it ſtretcheth twelue leagues: where it waxeth broader and broader, and maketh a gulfe about 20. leagues in compaſſe, wherein are fiue ſmall Iſlands very fruitfull and pleaſant, full of hie and broade trees, among the which Iſlandes any great Nauie may ride ſafe without any feare of tempeſt or other danger. Afterwards turning towardes the South in the entring into the Hauen on both ſides there are moſt pleaſant hils, with many riuers of moſt cleare water falling into the Sea.

The deſcription of a notable hauen in 41. deg and 2. terces.

In the middeſt of this entrance there is a rocke of free ſtone growing by nature apt to build any Caſtle or Fortreſſe there, for the keeping of the hauen. The fift of May being furniſhed with all things neceſſarie, we departed from the ſaid coaſt keeping along in the ſight thereof, and wee ſailed 150. leagues finding it alwayes after one maner: but the land ſomewhat higher with certaine mountaines, all which beare a ſhew of minerall matter, wee ſought not to land there in any place, becauſe the weather ſerued our turne for ſailing: but wee ſuppoſe that it was like the former, the coaſt ranne Eaſtward for the ſpace of fiftie leagues. And trending afterwards to the North, we found another land high full of thicke woods, the trees whereof were firres, cipreſſes and ſuch like as are wont to grow in cold Countreys. The people differ much from the other, and looke how much the former ſeemed to be courteous and gentle: ſo much were theſe full of rudeneſſe and ill maners, and ſo barbarous that by no ſignes that euer we could make, we could haue any kind of traffike with them. They cloth themſelues with Beares ſkinnes and Luzernes and Seales and other beaſts ſkinnes. Their food, as farre as we could perceiue, repairing often vnto their dwellings, we ſuppoſe to be by hunting & fiſhing, and of certaine fruits, which are a kind of roots which the earth yeeldeth of her own accord. They haue no graine, neither ſaw we any kind or ſigne of tillage, neither is the land, for the barrenneſſe thereof, apt to beare fruit or ſeed. If at any time we deſired by exchange to haue any of their cõmodities, they vſed to come to the ſea ſhore vpon certaine craggy rocks, and we ſtanding in our boats, they let downe with a rope what it pleaſed them to giue vs, crying continually that we ſhould not approch to the land, demanding immediatly the exchange, taking nothing but kniues, fiſhookes, and tooles to cut withall, neyther did they make any account of our courteſie. And when we had nothing left to exchange with them, when we departed from them, the people ſhewed all ſignes of diſcourteſie and diſdaine, as were poſſible for any creature to inuent. We were in diſpight of them 2 or 3 leagues within the land, being in number 25 armed men of vs: And when we went on ſhore they ſhot at vs with their bowes making great outcries, and afterwards fled into the woods. We found not in this land any thing notable, or of importance, ſauing very great woods and certaine hilles, they may haue ſome minerall matter in them, becauſe wee ſaw many of them haue beadſtones of Copper hanging at their eares. We departed from thence keeping our courſe Northeaſt along the coaſt, which we found more pleaſant champion and without woods, with high mountaines within the land continuing directly along the coaſt for the ſpace of fiftie leagues, we diſcouered 32 Iſlands lying al neere the land, being ſmall and pleaſant to the view, high and hauing many turnings and windings betweene them, making many faire harboroughs and chanels as they doe in the gulfe of Venice in Sclauonia, and Dalmatia, we had no knowledge or acquaintance with the people: we ſuppoſe they are of the ſame maners and nature as the others are. Sayling Northeaſt for the ſpace of 150. leagues we approched to the land that in times paſt was diſcouered by the Britons, which is in fiftie degrees. Hauing now ſpent all our prouiſion and victuals, and hauing diſcouered about 700 leagues and more of new Countreys, and being furniſhed with water and wood, we concluded to returne into France.

150 leagues. A ſhew of minerall.

The coaſt running Eaſtward 50. leagues. Here the people begin to be more ſauage.

Beades of copper.

32 pleaſant Iſlands.

They ran almoſt to 50. degrees.

Touching the religion of this people, which wee haue found, for want of their language wee could not vnderſtand neither by ſignes nor geſture that they had any religion or lawe at all, or that they did acknowledge any firſt cauſe or moouer, neither that they worſhip the heauen or ſtars the Sunne or Moone or other planets, and much leſſe whither they be idolaters, neither could wee learne whither that they vſed any kind of ſacrifices or other adorations, neither in their villages haue they any Temples or houſes of prayer. We ſuppoſe that they haue no religion at all, and that they liue at their owne libertie. And that all this proceedeth of ignorance, for that they are very eaſie to be perſwaded: and all that they ſee vs Chriſtians doe in our diuine ſeruice, they did the ſame with the like imitation as they ſaw vs to doe it.

A notable

A notable hiſtorie containing foure voyages made by certaine French Captaines into Florida: Wherein the great riches and fruitefulneſſe of the Countrey with the maners of the people hitherto concealed are brought to light, written all, ſauing the laſt, by Monſieur Laudonniere, who remained there himſelfe as the French Kings Lieutenant a yeere and a quarter:

Tranſlated out of French into Engliſh by M.
RICHARD HAKLVYT.

To the right honourable Sir VValter Ralegh Knight, Captaine of her Maieſties Gard, Lord Warden of the Stanneries, and her Highneſſe Lieutenant generall of the County of Cornewall, R. H. wiſheth true felicitie.

SIR, after that this hiſtorie, which had bene concealed many yeeres, was lately committed to print and publiſhed in France vnder your Name by my learned friend M. Martine Baſanier of Paris, I was eaſily enduced to turne it into Engliſh, vnderſtanding that the ſame was no leſſe gratefull to you here, then I know it to be acceptable to many great and worthie perſons there. And no maruaile though it were very welcome vnto you, and that you liked of the tranſlation thereof, ſince no hiſtory hitherto ſet forth hath more affinitie, reſemblance or conformitie with yours of Virginia, then this of Florida. But calling to minde that you had ſpent more yeeres in France then I, and vnderſtand the French better then my ſelfe, I forthwith perceiued that you approoued mine endeuour, not for any priuate eaſe or commoditie that thereby might redound vnto you, but that it argued a ſingular and eſpeciall care you had of thoſe which are to be employed in your owne like enterpriſe, whom, by the reading of this my tranſlation, you would haue forewarned and admoniſhed aswell to beware of the groſſe negligence in prouiding of ſufficiency of victuals, the ſecuritie, diſorders, and mutinies that fell out among the French, with the great inconueniences that thereupon enſued, that by others miſhaps they might learne to preuent and auoyde the like, as alſo might be put in minde, by the reading of the manifolde commodities and great fertilitie of the places herein at large deſcribed and ſo neere neighbours vnto our Colonies, that they might generally bee awaked and ſtirred vp vnto the diligent obſeruation of euery thing that might turne to the aduancement of the action, wherinto they are ſo cheerefully entred. Many ſpeciall poynts concerning the commodities of theſe partes, the accidents of the French mens gouernment therein, the cauſes of their good or bad ſucceſſe, with the occaſions of the abandoning one of their forts, and the ſurpriſe of the other by the enemie are herein truely and faithfully recorded: Which becauſe they be quoted by me in the margents, and reduced into a large alphabeticall table, which I haue annexed to the ende of the worke, it ſhall be needleſſe to recken vp againe. And that the rather, becauſe the ſame with diuers other things of chiefeſt importance are liuely drawne in colours at your no ſmal charges by the ſkilfull painter Iames Morgues, ſometime liuing in the Black-fryers in London (whom Monſieur Chaſtillion then Admirall of France ſent thither with Laudonniere for that purpoſe) which was an eye-witneſſe of the goodneſſe and fertility of thoſe regions, and hath put downe in writing many ſingularities which are not mentioned in this treatiſe: which ſince he hath publiſhed together with the purtraitures. Theſe foure voyages I knew not to whom I might better offer then to your ſelfe, and that for diuers iuſt conſiderations. Firſt, for that as I haue ſayd before, they were dedicated vnto you in French: ſecondly becauſe now foure times alſo you haue attempted the like vpon the ſelfe ſame coaſt neere adioyning: thirdly in that you haue perſed as farre vp into the maine and diſcouered no leſſe ſecrets in the partes of your aboad, then the French did in the places of their inhabiting: laſtly conſidering you are now alſo ready (vpon the late returne of Captaine Stafford and good newes which he brought you of the ſafe arriual of your laſt Colony in their wiſhed hauen) to proſecute this action more throughly then euer. And here to ſpeake ſomewhat of this your enterpriſe, I affirme, that if the ſame may ſpeedily and effectually be purſued, it will prooue farre more beneficiall in diuers reſpects vnto this our realme, then the world, yea many of the wiſer ſort, haue hitherto imagined. The particular cōmodities whereof are wel knowen vnto your ſelfe and ſome few others, and are faithfully and with great iudgement cōmitted to writing, as you are not ignorant, by one of your followers,

Other mens misfortune ought to be our warning.

The chiefe things worthie obſeruation in Florida are drawen in colours by Iames Morgues painter ſometime liuing in the Black fryers in London.

which remained there about a tweluemonth with your worſhipful Lieutenant M. Ralph Lane, in the diligent ſearch of the ſecrets of thoſe Countreys, Touching the ſpeedy and effectuall purſuing of your action, though I wote well it would demaund a princes purſe to haue it throughly followed without lingring, yet am I of opinion, that you ſhall drawe the ſame before it be long to be profitable and gainful aſwel to thoſe of our nation there remaining, as to the merchants of England that ſhall trade hereafter thither, partly by certaine ſecret commodities already diſcouered by your ſeruants, & partly by breeding of diuers ſorts of beaſts in thoſe large and ample regions, and planting of ſuch things in that warme climat as wil beſt proſper there, and our realme ſtandeth moſt in need of. And this I find to haue bin the courſe that both the Spaniards and Portugals tooke in the beginnings of their diſcoueries & conqueſts. For the Spaniards at their firſt entrance into Hiſpaniola foūd neither ſuger-canes nor ginger growing there, nor any kind of our cattel: But finding the place fit for paſture they ſent kine & buls and ſundry ſorts of other profitable beaſts thither, & tranſported the plants of ſuger-canes, and ſet the rootes of ginger: the hides of which oxen, with ſuger and ginger, are now the chiefe merchandiſe of that Iſland. The Portugals alſo at their firſt footing in Madera, as Iohn Barros writes in his firſt Decade, found nothing there but mighty woods for timber, whereupon they called the Iſland by that name. Howbeit the climate being fauourable, they inriched it by their own induſtry with the beſt wines and ſugers in the world. The like maner of proceeding they vſed in the Iſles of the Açores by ſowing therin great quantity of Woad. So dealt they in S. Thomas vnder the Equinoctial, and in Braſil, and ſundry other places. And if our men will follow their ſteps, by your wiſe direction I doubt not but in due time they ſhall reape no leſſe commoditie and benefit. Moreouer there is none other likelihood but that her Maieſty, which hath Chriſtned and giuen the name to your Virginia, if need require, will deale after the maner of honorable godmothers, which, ſeeing their goſſips not fully able to bring vp their children themſelues, are wont to contribute to their honeſt education, the rather if they find any towardlines or reaſonable hope of goodneſſe in them. And if Elizabeth Queene of Caſtile and Aragon, after her husband Ferdinando and ſhe had emptied their cofers and exhauſted their treaſures in ſubduing the kingdome of Granada and rooting the Mores, a wicked weed, out of Spayne, was neuertheleſſe ſo zealous of Gods honour, that (as Fernandus Columbus the ſonne of Chriſtopher Columbus recordeth in the hiſtory of the deedes of his father) ſhe layd part of her owne iewels, which ſhe had in great account, to gage, to furniſh his father foorth vpon his firſt voyage, before any foot of land of all the Weſt Indies was diſcouered; what may we expect of our moſt magnificent and gracious prince ELIZABETH of England, into whoſe lappe the Lord hath moſt plentifully throwne his treaſures, what may wee, I ſay, hope of her forwardneſſe and bounty in aduancing of this your moſt honourable enterpriſe, being farre more certaine then that of Columbus, at that time eſpecially, and tending no leſſe to the glorie of God then that action of the Spanyardes? For as you may read in the very laſt wordes of the relation of Newe Mexico extant nowe in Engliſh, the maine land, where your laſt Colonie meane to ſeate themſelues, is repleniſhed with many thouſands of Indians, Which are of better wittes then thoſe of Mexico and Peru, as hath bene found by thoſe that haue had ſome triall of them: whereby it may bee gathered that they will eaſily embrace the Goſpell, forſaking their idolatrie, wherein at this preſent for the moſt part they are wrapped and intangled. A wiſe Philoſopher noting the ſundry deſires of diuers men, writeth, that if an oxe bee put into a medowe hee will ſeeke to fill his bellie with graſſe, if a Storke bee caſt in ſhee will ſeeke for Snakes, if you turne in a Hound he will ſeeke to ſtart an Hare: So ſundry men entring into theſe diſcoueries propoſe vnto themſelues ſeuerall endes. Some ſeeke authoritie and places of commandement, others experience by ſeeing of the worlde, the moſt part worldly and tranſitorie gaine, and that often times by diſhoneſt and vnlawfull meanes, the feweſt number the glorie of God and the ſauing of the ſoules of the poore and blinded infidels. Yet becauſe diuers honeſt and well diſpoſed perſons are entred already into this your buſineſſe, and that I know you meane hereafter to ſende ſome ſuch good Churchmen thither, as may truely ſay with the Apoſtle to the Sauages, Wee ſeeke not yours but you: I conceiue great comfort of the ſucceſſe of this your action, hoping that the Lorde, whoſe power is wont to bee perfected in weakeneſſe, will bleſſe the feeble foundations of your building. Onely bee you of a valiant courage and faint not, as the Lorde ſayd vnto Ioſue, exhorting him to proceede on forward in the conqueſt of the land of promiſe, and remember that priuate men haue happily wielded and waded through as great enterpriſes as this, with leſſer meanes then thoſe which God in his mercie hath bountifully beſtowed vpon you, to the ſinguler good, as I aſſure my ſelfe, of this our Common wealth wherein you liue. Hereof we haue examples domeſticall and forreine. Remember I pray you, what you find in the beginning of the Chronicle of the conqueſt of Ireland newly dedicated vnto your ſelfe. Read you not that Richard Strangbow the decayed earle of Chepſtow in Monmuthſhire, being in no great fauour of his soueraigne, paſſed ouer into that Iſland in the yere 1171. and accompanied only with certain of his priuate friends had in ſhort ſpace ſuch proſperous ſucceſſe, that he opened the way for king Henry the ſecond to the ſpeedy ſubiection of all that warlike nation to this crowne of England? The like conqueſt of Braſilia, and annexing the ſame to the kingdome of Portugall was firſt begun by meane and priuate men, as Don Antonio de Caſtillio, Ambaſſadour here for that realme, and by office keeper of all the records and monuments of their diſcoueries, aſſured me in this city in the yere 1581. Now if the greatnes of the maine of Virginia, and the large extenſion therof, eſpecially to the Weſt, ſhould make you thinke that the ſubduing of it, were a matter of more difficulty then the conqueſt of Ireland, firſt I anſwere, that as the late experience of that skilfull pilote and Captaine M. Iohn Dauis to the Northweſt (toward which his diſcouery your ſelfe haue thriſe contributed with the forwardeſt) hath ſhewed a great part to be maine ſea, where before was thought to be maine land, ſo for my part I am fully perſwaded by Ortelius late reformation of Culuacan and the gulfe of California, that the land on the backe part of Virginia extendeth nothing ſo far weſtward as is put downe in the Maps of thoſe parts. Moreouer it is not to be denied, but that one hundred men will do more now among the naked and vnarmed people in Virginia, then one thouſand were able then to do in Ireland againſt that armed and warlike nation in thoſe daies. I ſay further, that theſe two yeres laſt experience hath plainly ſhewed, that we may ſpare 10000. able men without any miſſe. And theſe are as many as the kingdome of Portugal had euer in all their garriſons of the Açores, Madera, Arguin, Cape verde, Guinea, Braſill, Mozambique, Melinde, Zocotora, Ormus, Diu, Goa, Malaca, the Malucos, and Macao vpon the coaſt of China. Yea this I ſay by the cõfeſſion of ſinguler expert men of their own nation (whoſe names I ſuppreſſe for certain cauſes) which haue bene perſonally in the Eaſt Indies, & haue aſſured me that their kings had neuer aboue ten thouſand natural borne Portugals (their ſlaues excepted) out of their kingdome remaining in all the aforeſaid territories. Which alſo this preſent yeere I ſaw confirmed in a ſecrete extract of the particular eſtate of that kingdome and of euery gouernement and office ſubiect to the ſame, with the ſeueral penſions thereunto belonging. Seeing therefore we are ſo farre from want of people, that retyring daily home out of the Lowe Countreys they go idle vp and down in ſwarms for lack of honeſt intertainment, I ſee no fitter place to employ ſome part of the better ſort of them trained vp thus long in ſeruice, then in the inward partes of the firme of Virginia againſt ſuch ſtubborne Sauages as ſhal refuſe obedience to her Maieſtie. And doubtleſſe many of our men will bee glad and faine to accept this condition, when as by the reading of this preſent treatie they ſhal vnderſtand the fertilitie and riches of the regions confining ſo neere vpon yours, the great commodities and goodneſſe wherof you haue bin contented to ſuffer to come to light. In the meane ſeaſon I humbly commend my ſelfe and this my tranſlation vnto you, and your ſelfe, and all thoſe which vnder you haue taken this enterpriſe in hand to the grace and good bleſſing of the Almighty, which is able to build farther, and to finiſh the good worke which in theſe our dayes he hath begun by your moſt Chriſtian and charitable endeuour. The Preface of M. Rene Laudonniere.

THere are two things, which according to mine opinion haue bene the principall cauſes, in conſideration whereof aſwell they of ancient times, as thoſe of our age haue bene induced to trauell into farre and remote regions. The firſt hath beene the naturall deſire which wee haue to ſearch out the commodities to liue happily, plentifully, and at eaſe: be it whither one abandon his naturall Countrey altogether to dwell in a better, or bee it that men make voyages thither, there to ſearch out and bring from thence ſuch things as are there to be found, and are in greateſt eſtimation and in moſt requeſt in our Countreys. The ſecond cauſe hath bene the multitude of people too fruitefull in generation, which being no longer able to dwell in their natiue ſoyles, haue entred vpon their neighbours limites, and oftentimes paſſing further haue pearced euen vnto the vttermoſt regions. After this ſort the North climate, a fruitfull father of ſo many nations hath oftentimes ſent foorth this way and that way his valiant people, and by this meane hath peopled infinite Countreys : ſo that moſt of the nations of Europe drawe their originall from theſe parts. Contrariwiſe the more Southerne regions, becauſe they bee too barren by reaſon of their inſupportable heate which raigneth in them, neede not any ſuch ſending forth of their inhabitants, and haue bene oftentimes conſtrained to receiue other people more often by force of armes then willingly. All Africke, Spaine, and Italie can alſo teſtifie the ſame, which neuer ſo abounded with people that they had neede to ſend them abroad to inhabite elſewhere : as on the contrary Scythia, Norway, Gotland, and France haue done. The poſterity of which nations remaineth yet not only in Italy, Spaine & Africke, but alſo in fruitful and faire Aſia, Neuertheleſſe I find that the Romans proceeding further, or rather adding vnto theſe two chiefe cauſes aforeſaid, (as being moſt curious to plant not onely their enſignes and victories, but alſo their lawes, cuſtomes, & religion in thoſe prouinces which they had conquered by force of armes) haue oftentimes by the decree of their ſoueraigne Senate ſent forth inhabitants, which they called Colonies (thinking by this way to make their name immortall) euen to the vnfurniſhing of their own Countrey of the forces which ſhould haue preſerued the ſame in her perfection : a thing which hindred them much more, then aduanced them to the poſſeſſion of the vniuerſal monarchy, whereunto their intention did aſpire. For it came to paſſe that their Colonies here and there being miſerably ſacked by ſtrange people did vtterly ruine and ouerthrow their Empire. The brinks of the riuer of Rhene are yet red, thoſe of Danubius are no leſſe bloody, and our France became fat with their blood which they loſt. Theſe are the effects and rewards of al ſuch as being pricked forward with this Romane and tyrannical ambition will goe about thus to ſubdue ſtrange people: effects, I ſay, contrary to the profit which thoſe ſhall receiue, which onely are affectioned to the common benefite, that is to ſay, to the generall policie of all men, and endeuour to vnite them one with another aſwell by trafficke and ciuill conuerſations, as alſo by military vertues, and force of armes, when as the Sauages will not yeeld vnto their endeuours ſo much tending vnto their profit.

Two conditions required in conqueſts of Countreys newly diſcouered.

Nota.

For this cauſe princes haue ſent forth out of their Dominions certaine men of good actiuity, to plant themſelues in ſtrange Countreys, there to make their profite to bring the Countrey to ciuilitie, and if it might be, to reduce the inhabitants to the true knowledge of our God : an end ſo much more commendable, as it is farre from all tyrannicall and cruell gouernement: and ſo they haue alwayes thriued in their enterpriſes, and by little and little gained the heartes of them which they haue conquered or wonne vnto them by any meanes. Hereof wee may gather that ſometimes it is good, yea very expedient to ſend forth men to diſcouer the pleaſure and commoditie of ſtrange Countreys: But ſo, that the Countrey out of which theſe companies are to paſſe remaine not weakned, nor depriued of her forces: And againe in ſuch ſort that the company ſent forth be of ſo iuſt & ſufficient number, that it may not be defeited by ſtrangers, which euery foote endeuour nothing elſe but to ſurpriſe the ſame vpon the ſudden. As within theſe few daies paſt the French haue proued to my great griefe, being able by no means poſſible to withſtand the ſame, conſidering that the elements, men, and all the fauours which might be hoped for of a faithfull and Chriſtian alliance fought againſt vs : which thing I purpoſe to diſcouer in this preſent hiſtorie with ſo euident trueth, that the kings Maieſty my ſoueraigne prince ſhall in part be ſatisfied of the diligence which I haue vſed in his ſeruice, and mine aduerſaries ſhall find themſelues ſo diſcouered in their falſe reports, that they ſhall haue no place of refuge. But before I begin, I will briefely ſet downe the ſituation and deſcription of the land whereunto we haue ſailed and where we haue inhabited from the yeere 1561. vnto ſixty fiue, to the ende that thoſe things may the more eaſily be borne away, which I meane to deſcribe in this diſcourſe.

The deſcription of the VVeſt Indies in generall, but chiefly and particularly of Florida.

America vnknowen to all antiquity.

That part of the earth which at this day we call the fourth part of the woꝛld, oꝛ America, oꝛ rather the West India, was vnknowen vnto our anceſtours by reaſon of the great diſtance thereof. In like maner all the Weſterne Iſlands and foꝛtunate Iſles were not diſcouered but by thoſe of our age. Howbeit there haue bin ſome which haue ſaid that they were diſcouerd in the time of Auguſtus Cæſar, and that Virgil hath made mention thereof in the ſixt booke of his Æneidos, when he ſaith, There is a land beyond the ſtarres, and the courſe of the yeere and of the Sunne, where Atlas the Porter of heauen ſuſtaineth the pole vpon his ſhoulders : neuertheleſſe it is eaſie to iudge that hee meaneth not to ſpeake of this land, whereof no man is found to haue written before his time, neither yet aboue a thouſand yeeres after. Chriſtopher Colon did firſt light vpon this land in the yeere 1592. And fiue yeeres after Americus went thither by the commandement of the king of Caſtile, and gaue vnto it his owne name, whereupon afterward it was called America. This man was very well ſeene in the Arte of Nauigation and in Aſtronomie: whereby hee diſcouered in his time many lands vnknowen vnto the ancient Geographers. This Countrey is named by ſome, the land of Breſill, and the lande of Parots. It ſtretcheth it ſelfe, according vnto Poſtell, from the one Pole to the other, ſauing at the ſtreight of Magelan, whereunto it reacheth 53. degrees beyond the Equator. I will diuide it for the better vnderſtanding into three principall parts. That which is toward the Pole Arcticke or the North is called new France, becauſe that in the yeere 1524. Iohn Verrazzano a Florentine was ſent by King Francis the firſt, and by Madam the Regent his mother vnto theſe newe Regions, where he went on land, and diſcouered all the coaſt which is from the Tropicke of Cancer, to wit, from the eight and twentieth vnto the fiftieth degree, and farther vnto the North. Hee planted in this Countrey the Enſignes and Armes of the king of France : ſo that the Spaniardes themſelues which were there afterwarde, haue named this Countrey Terra Franceſca. The ſame then extendeth it ſelfe in Latitude from the 25. degree vnto the 54. toward the North : and in Longitude from 210. vnto 330. The Eaſterne part thereof is called by the late writers The land of Norumbega, which beginneth at the Bay of Gama, which ſeparateth it from the Iſle of Canada, whither Iaques Carthier ſayled the yeere 1535. About the which there are many Ilands, among which is that which is named Terra de Labrador ſtretching towarde Groenland. In the Weſterne part there are many knowen Countreys, as the Regions of Quiuira, Ciuola, Aſtatlan, and Terlichichimici. The Southerne part is called Florida, becauſe it was diſcouered on Palme-ſunday, which the Spaniardes call Paſcha Florida. The Northerne part is altogether vnknowen.

Chriſtopher Colon or Columbe.

Americus Veſpucius of whō America tooke the name.

The firſt generall part of America.

Cabota in the yeere 1597 had diſcouered all this tract for the crowne of England.

The ſecond part of all America is called newe Spaine. It extendeth from the Tropicke of Cancer in twentie three degrees and a halfe, vnto the ninth degree. In the ſame is ſituated the Citie of Themiſtitan, and it hath many Regions, and many Ilandes adioyned vnto it, which are called the Antilles, whereof the moſt famous and renoumed are Hiſpaniola and Iſabella, with an infinite number of others. All this land, together with the Bay of Mexico, and all the Ilands aforeſayd, haue not in Longitude paſt ſeuentie degrees, to wit, from the two hundreth and fortie, vnto three hundreth and ten : it is alſo long and narrowe as Italie. The third part of America is called Peru, it is very great, and extendeth it ſelfe in Latitude from the tenth degree vnto the three and fiftieth beyond the Equator, to wit, as I haue ſayde before, vnto the ſtreight of Magelan. It is made in faſhion like to an egge, and is very well knowen vpon all ſides. The part where it is largeſt hath threeſcore degrees, and from thence it waxeth narrower and narrower toward both the endes. In one part of this lande Villegagnon planted right vnder the Tropicke of Capricorne, and he called it France Antarctick, becauſe it draweth toward the pole Antarctick, as our France doeth toward the Arctick.

New France is almoſt as great as all our Europe. Howbeit the moſt knowen and inhabited part thereof is Florida, whither many Frenchmen haue made diuers voyages at ſundry times, inſomuch that nowe it is the beſt knowen Countrey which is in all this part of newe France. The Cape thereof is as it were a long head of lande ſtretching out into the Sea an hundred leagues, and runneth directly towarde the South : it hath right ouer againſt it fiue and twentie leagues diſtant the Iſle of Cuba otherwiſe called Iſabella, toward the Eaſt the Iſles of Bahama and Lucaya, and toward the Weſt the Bay of Mexico. The Countrey is flat, and diuided with diuers riuers, and therefore moyſt, and is ſandie towards the Sea ſhore. There groweth in thoſe partes great quantitie of Pinetrees, which haue no kernels in the apples which they beare. Their woods are full of Oakes, Walnuttrees, blacke Cherrietrees, Mulberry trees, Lentiſkes, and Cheſnut trees, which are more wilde then thoſe in France. There is great ſtore of Cedars, Cypreſſes, Bayes, Palme trees, Hollies, and wilde Vines, which climbe vp along the trees and beare good Grapes. There is there a kinde of Medlers, the fruite whereof is better then that of France, and bigger. There are alſo Plumtrees, which beare very faire fruite, but ſuch as is not very good. There are Raſpaſſes, and a little berrie which we call among vs Blues, which are very good to eate. There growe in that Countrey a kinde of Rootes which they call in their language Haſez, whereof in neceſſitie they make bread. There is alſo there the tree called Eſqume, which is very good againſt the Pockes and other contagious diſeaſes. The Beaſtes beſt knowen in this Countrey are Stagges, Hindes, Goates, Deere, Leopards, Theſe are perhaps thoſe which the Sauages call Tunas.

The beaſts of Florida.

Ounces, Luſerns, diuers ſortes of Wolues, wilde Dogs, Hares, Cunnies, and a certaine kinde of beaſt that differeth little from the Lyon of Africa. The foules are Turkeycocks, Partridges, Parrots, Pigions, Ringdoues, Turtles, Blackbirdes, Crowes, Tarcels, Faulcons, Laynerds, Herons, Cranes, Storkes, wilde Geeſe, Malards, Cormorants, Hernſhawes, white, red, blacke and gray, and an infinite ſort of all wilde foule. There is ſuch abundance of Crocodiles, that oftentimes in ſwimming men are aſſayled by them: of Serpents there are many ſorts. There is found among the Sauages good quantitie of Gold and Siluer, which is gotten out of the ſhippes that are loſt vpon the coaſt, as I haue vnderſtood by the Sauages themſelues. They vſe traffique thereof one with another. And that which maketh me the rather beleeue it, is, that on the coaſt towarde the Cape, where commonly the ſhippes are caſt away, there is more ſtore of Siluer then toward the North. Neuertheleſſe they ſay, that in the Mountaines of Appalatcy there are Mines of Copper, which I thinke to be Golde. There is alſo in this Countrey great ſtore of graynes and herbes, whereof might be made excellent good dyes and paintings of all kind of colours. And in trueth the Indians which take pleaſure in painting of their ſkins, know very well how to vſe the ſame. The men are of an Oliue colour, of great ſtature, faire, without any deformitie, and well proportioned. They couer their priuities with the ſkinne of a Stagge well dreſſed. The moſt part of them haue their bodies, armes, and thighes painted with very faire deuiſes: the painting whereof can neuer bee taken away, becauſe the ſame is pricked into their fleſh. Their haire is very blacke, and reacheth euen downe to their hips, howbeit they truſſe it vp after a faſhion that becommeth them very well. They are great diſſemblers and traitours, valiant of their perſons & fight very well. They haue none other weapons but their bowes and arrowes. They make the ſtring of their bow of a gut of a Stag, or of a Stags ſkin, which they know how to dreſſe as well as any man in France, and with as different ſorts of colours. They head their arrowes with the teeth of fiſhes and ſtone, which they worke very finely and handſomly. They exerciſe their youg men to runne well, and they make a game among themſelues, which he winneth that hath the longeſt breath. They alſo exerciſe themſelues much in ſhooting. They play at the ball in this maner: they ſet vp a tree in the middeſt of a place which is eight or nine fathom high, in the top whereof there is ſet a ſquare mat made of reedes or Bulruſhes, which whoſoeuer hitteth in playing thereat, winneth the game. They take great pleaſure in hunting and fiſhing. The kings of the Countrey make great warre one againſt the other, which is not executed but by ſurpriſe, and they kill all the men they can take: afterward they cut of their heads to haue their haire, which returning home they carry away, to make thereof their triumph when they come to their houſes. They ſaue the women and children and nouriſh them and keepe them alwayes with them. Being returned home from the warre, they aſſemble all their ſubiects, and for ioy three dayes and three nights they make good cheare, they daunce & ſing, likewiſe they make the moſt ancient women of the Countrey to dance, holding the haires of their enemies in their hands: and in dauncing they ſing praiſes to the Sunne, aſcribing vnto him the honour of the victory. They haue no knowledge of God, nor of any religion, ſauing of that which they ſee, as the Sunne and the Moone. They haue their Prieſts to whom they giue great credit, becauſe they are great magicians great ſoothſayers, and callers vpon diuels. Theſe Prieſts ſerue them in ſtead of Phyſitions and Chirurgions. They carry alwayes about them a bag full of herbes and drugs to cure the ſicke diſeaſed which for the moſt part are ſick of the pocks, for they loue women & maidens exceedingly, which they call the daughters of the Sunne: and ſome of them are Sodomites. They marry, and euery one hath his wife, and it is lawfull for the King to haue two or three: yet none but the firſt is honoured and acknowledged for Queene: and none but the children of the firſt wife inherite the goods and authoritie of the father. The women doe all the buſineſſe at home. They keepe not houſe with them after they know they be with child. And they eate not of that which they touch as long as they haue their flowers. There are in all this Countrey many Hermaphrodites, which take all the greateſt paine, and beare the victuals when they goe to warre. They paint their faces much, and ſticke their haire full of feathers or downe, that they may ſeeme more terrible. The victuals which they carry with them, are of bread, of hony, and of meale made of Maiz parched in the fire, which they keepe without being marred a long while. They carry alſo ſometimes fiſh. which they cauſe to be dreſſed in the ſmoke. In neceſſitie they eat a thouſand rifraffes, euen to the ſwallowing downe of coales, and putting ſand into the pottage that they make with this meale. When they goe to warre, their King marcheth firſt. with a clubbe in the one hand, and his bowe in the other, with his quiuer full of arrowes. All his men follow him, which haue likewiſe their bowes and arrowes. While they fight, they make great cries and exclamations. They take no enterpriſe in hand, but firſt they aſſemble oftentimes their Councell together, and they

they take very good aduiſement before they growe to a reſolution. They meete together euery morning in a great common houſe, whither their King repaireth, and ſetteth him downe vpon a ſeate which is higher then the ſeates of the other: where all of them one after another come and ſalute him: and the moſt ancient begin their ſalutations, lifting vp both their handes twiſe as high as their face, ſaying, Ha, he, ya, and the reſt anſwer ha, ha. Aſſoone as they haue done their ſalutation, euery man ſitteth him downe vpon the ſeates which are round about in the houſe. If there be any thing to intreate of, the King calleth the Iawas, that is to ſay, their Prieſtes, and the moſt ancient men, and asketh them their aduiſe. Afterward he commaundeth Caſſine to be brewed, which is a drinke made of the leaues of a certaine tree: They drinke this Caſſine very hotte: he drinketh firſt, then he cauſeth to be giuen thereof to all of them one after another in the ſame boule, which holdeth well a quart meaſure of Paris. They make ſo great account of this drinke, that no man may taſte thereof in this aſſembly, vnleſſe hee hath made proofe of his valure in the warre. Moreouer this drinke hath ſuch a vertue, that aſſoone as they haue drunke it, they become all in a ſweate, which ſweate being paſt, it taketh away hunger and thirſt for foure and twenty houres after. When a King dyeth, they burie him very ſolemnly, and vpon his graue they ſet the cuppe wherein he was woont to drinke: and round about the ſayde graue they ſticke many arrowes, and weepe and faſt three dayes together without ceaſſing. All the kings which were his friends make the like mourning: and in token of the loue which they bare him, they cut of more then the one halfe of their haire, as well men as women. During the ſpace of ſixe Moones (ſo they reckon their moneths) there are certaine women appoynted which bewaile the death of this King, crying with a loude voyce thriſe a day, to wit, in the Morning, at Noone, and at Euening. All the goods of this King are put into his houſe, and afterward they ſet it on fire, ſo that nothing is euer more after to be ſeene. The like is done with the goods of the Prieſtes, and beſides they burie the bodies of the Prieſts in their houſes, and then they ſet them on fire. They ſowe their Maiz twiſe a yere, to wit, in March and in Iune, and all in one and the ſame ſoyle. The ſayd Maiz from the time that it is ſowed vntill the time that it be ready to be gathered, is but three moneths on the ground. The other 6. moneths they let the earth reſt. They haue alſo faire Pumpions, & very good Beanes. They neuer dung their land, onely when they would ſowe, they ſet the weedes on fire, which grewe vp the 6. moneths, and burne them all. They dig their ground with an inſtrument of wood which is faſhioned like a broad mattocke, wherewith they digge their Vines in France, they put two graines of Maiz together. When the land is to be ſowed, the King commaundeth one of his men to aſſemble his ſubiects euery day to labour, during which labour the King cauſeth ſtore of that drinke to be made for them, whereof we haue ſpoken. At the time when the Maiz is gathered, it is all carried into a common houſe, where it is diſtributed to euery man according to his qualitie. They ſowe no more but that which they thinke will ſerue their turnes for ſixe moneths, & that very ſcarcely. For during the Winter they retire themſelues for three or foure moneths in the yeere into the woods, where they make little cotages of Palme boughes for their retraite, and liue there of Maſte, of Fiſh which they take, of Oiſters, of Stagges, of Turkeycockes, and other beaſtes which they take. They eate all their meate broyled on the coales, and dreſſed in the ſmoake, which in their language they call Boucaned. They eate willingly the fleſh of the Crocodile: and in deede it is faire and white: and were it not that it ſauoureth too much like Muſke we would oftentimes haue eaten thereof. They haue a cuſtome among them, that when they finde themſelues ſicke, where they feele the paine, whereas we cauſe our ſelues to be let blood, their Phyſitions ſucke them vntill they make the blood follow.

The women are likewiſe of good proportion and tall, and of the ſame colour that the men be of, painted as the men be: Howbeit when they are borne, they be not ſo much of an Oliue colour, and are farre whiter. For the chiefe cauſe that maketh them to be of this colour proceedes of anointings of oyle which they vſe among them: and they doe it for a certaine ceremonie which I could not learne, and becauſe of the Sunne which ſhineth hote vpon their bodies. The agilitie of the women is ſo great, that they can ſwimme ouer the great Riuers bearing their children vpon one of their armes. MY Lord Admirall of Chaſtillon, a noble man more deſirous of the publique then of his priuate benefite, vnderſtanding the pleaſure of the King his prince, which was to diſcouer new and ſtrange Countreys, cauſed veſſels fit for this purpoſe to be made ready with all diligence, and men to bee leuied meete for ſuch an enterpriſe: Among whom hee choſe Captaine Iohn Ribault, a man in trueth expert in ſea cauſes: which hauing receiued his charge, ſet himſelfe to Sea the yeere 1562. the eighteenth of Februarie, accompanied onely with two of the kings ſhippes, but ſo well furniſhed with Gentlemen, (of whoſe number I my ſelfe was one) and with olde Souldiers, that he had meanes to atchieue ſome notable thing and worthy of eternall memorie. Hauing therefore ſayled two moneths, neuer holding the vſuall courſe of the Spaniards, hee arriued in Florida, landing neere a Cape or Promontorie, which is no high lande, becauſe the coaſt is all flatte, but onely riſing by reaſon of the high woods, which at his arriuall he called Cape François in honour of our France. This Cape is diſtant from the Equator about thirtie degrees. Coaſting from this place towards the North, he diſcouered a very faire and great Riuer, which gaue him occaſion to caſt anker that hee might ſearch the ſame the next day very early in the morning: which being done by the breake of day, accompanied with Captaine Fiquinuille and diuers other ſouldiers of his ſhippe, he was no ſooner arriued on the brinke of the ſhoare, but ſtraight hee perceiued many Indians men and women, which came of purpoſe to that place to receiue the Frenchmen with all gentleneſſe and amitie, as they well declared by the Oration which their king made, and the preſents of Chamois ſkinnes wherewith he honoured our Captaine, which the day following cauſed a pillar of hard ſtone to be planted within the ſayde Riuer, and not farre from the mouth of the ſame vpon a little ſandie knappe, in which pillar the Armes of France were carued and engraued. This being done hee embarked himſelfe againe, to the ende alwayes to diſcouer the coaſt toward the North which was his chiefe deſire. After he had ſayled a certaine time he croſſed ouer to the other ſide of the riuer, and then in the preſence of certaine Indians, which of purpoſe did attend him, hee commaunded his men to make their prayers, to giue thankes to GOD, for that of his grace hee had conducted the French nation vnto theſe ſtrange places without any danger at all. The prayers being ended, the Indians which were very attentiue to hearken vnto them, thinking in my iudgement, that wee worſhipped the Sunne, becauſe wee alwayes had our eyes lifted vp toward heauen, roſe all vp and came to ſalute the Captaine Iohn Ribault, promiſing to ſhew him their King, which roſe not vp as they did, but remained ſtill ſitting vpon greene leaues of Bayes and Palmetrees: toward whom the Captaine went and ſate downe by him, and heard him make a long diſcourſe, but with no great pleaſure, becauſe hee could not vnderſtand his language, and much leſſe his meaning. The King gaue our Captaine at his departure a plume or fanne of Hernſhawes feathers died in red, and a baſket made of Palme-boughes after the Indian faſhion, and wrought very artificially, and a great ſkinne painted and drawen throughout with the pictures of diuers wilde beaſts ſo liuely drawen and portrayed, that nothing lacked but life. The Captaine to ſhew himſelfe not vnthankfull, gaue him pretie tinne bracelets, a cutting hooke, a looking glaſſe, and certaine kniues: whereupon the King ſhewed himſelfe to be very glad and fully contented. Hauing ſpent the moſt part of the day with theſe Indians, the Captaine imbarked himſelfe to paſſe ouer to the other ſide of the Riuer, whereat the king ſeemed to bee very ſorie. Neuertheleſſe being not able to ſtay vs, hee commaunded that with all diligence they ſhould take fiſh for vs: which they did with all ſpeede. For being entred into their Weares or incloſures made of reedes and framed in the faſhion of a Labyrinth or Maſe, they loaded vs with Troutes, great Mullets, Plaiſe, Turbuts, and maruellous ſtore of other ſortes of fiſhes altogether different from ours.

They paſſe ouer the riuer.

Goodly Mulberries white and red.

This done, we entred into our Boates and went toward the other ſhore. But before we came to the ſhore, we were ſaluted with a number of other Indians, which entring into the water to their armepits, brought vs many litle baſkets full of Maiz, and goodly Mulberries both red and white: Others offered themſelues to beare vs on ſhoare, where being landed we perceiued their King ſitting vpon a place dreſſed with boughes, and vnder a little Arbour of Cedars and Bay trees ſomewhat diſtant from the waters ſide. He was accompanied with two of his ſonnes which were exceeding faire and ſtrong, and with a troope of Indians who had all their bowes and arrowes in maruellous good order. His two ſonnes receiued our Captaine very graciouſly: but the king their father, repreſenting I wot not what kinde of grauitie, did nothing but ſhake his head a little: then the Captaine went forward to ſalute him, and without any other mouing of himſelfe he retained ſo conſtant a kind of grauitie, that hee made it ſeeme vnto vs that by good and lawfull right hee bare the title of a King. Our Captaine knowing not what to iudge of this mans behauiour, thought he was ielous becauſe wee went firſt vnto the other king, or elſe that he was not well pleaſed with the Pillar or Columne which he had planted. While thus he knew not what hereof to thinke, our Captaine ſhewed him by ſignes, that he was come from a farre Countrey to ſeeke him, to let him vnderſtand the amitie which he was deſirous to haue with him: for the better confirmation whereof, hee drewe out of a budget certaine trifles, as certaine bracelets couered as it were with ſiluer and guilt, which hee preſented him withall, and gaue his ſonnes certaine other trifles. Whereupon the King beganne very louingly to intreate both our Captaine and vs. And after theſe gentle intertainments, wee went our ſelues into the woods, hoping there to diſcouer ſome ſingularities: where were great ſtore of Mulberrie trees white and red, on the toppes whereof there was an infinite number of ſilkewormes. Following our way wee diſcouered a faire and great medowe, diuided notwithſtanding with diuers Mariſhes, which conſtrained vs by reaſon of the water, which enuironed it about, to returne backe againe towarde the Riuers ſide. Finding not the King there, which by this time was gone home to his houſe, wee entred into our Boates and ſayled towarde our ſhippes: where after we arriued, we called this Riuer The Riuer of May, becauſe we diſcouered it the firſt day of the ſayde moneth.

Great ſtore of ſilkewormes.

The riuer of May.

Soone after we returned to our ſhippes, wee weighed our ankers and hoyſed our ſailes to diſcouer the coaſt farther forward, along the which wee diſcouered another faire Riuer, which the Captaine himſelfe was minded to ſearch out, and hauing ſearched it out with the king and inhabitants thereof, hee named it Seine, becauſe it is very like vnto the Riuer of Seine in France. From this Riuer wee retired toward our ſhippes, where being arriued, we trimmed our ſailes to ſaile further toward the North, and to deſcry the ſingularities of the coaſt. But wee had not ſayled any great way before wee diſcouered another very faire Riuer, which cauſed vs to caſt anker ouer againſt it, and to trimme out two Boates to goe to ſearch it out. Wee found there an Ile and a king no leſſe affable then the reſt, afterwarde we named this Riuer Somme. From thence wee ſayled about ſixe leagues, after wee diſcouered another Riuer, which after wee had viewed was named by vs by the name of Loyre. And conſequently we there diſcouered fiue others: whereof the firſt was named Cherente, the ſecond Garonne, the third Gironde, the fourth Belle, the fift Grande: which being very well diſcouered with ſuch things as were in them, by this time in leſſe then the ſpace of threeſcore leagues wee had found out many ſingularities along nine Riuers. Neuertheleſſe not fully ſatiſfied wee ſayled yet further towarde the North, following the courſe that might bring vs to the Riuer of Iordan one of the faireſt Riuers of the North, and holding our wonted courſe, great fogges and tempeſts came vpon vs, which conſtrained vs to leaue the coaſt to beare toward the maine Sea, which was the cauſe that we loſt the ſight of our Pinneſſes a whole day and a night vntill the next day in the morning, what time the weather waxing faire and the Sea calme, wee diſcouered a Riuer which wee called Belle a veoir. After wee had ſayled three or foure leagues, wee began to eſpie our Pinneſſes which came ſtraight toward vs, and at their arriuall they reported to the Captaine, that while the foule weather and fogges endured, they harboured themſelues in a mightie Riuer which in bigneſſe and beautie exceeded the former: wherewithall the Captaine was exceeding ioyfull, for his chiefe deſire was to finde out an Hauen to harbour his ſhippes, and there to refreſh our ſelues for a while. Thus making thitherward wee arriued athwart the ſayde Riuer, (which becauſe of the faireneſſe and largeneſſe thereof wee named Port Royall) wee ſtrooke our ſailes and caſt anker at ten fathom of water: for the depth is ſuch, namely when the Sea beginneth to flowe, that the greateſt ſhippes of France, yea, the Arguzes of Venice may enter in there. Hauing caſt anker, the Captaine with his Souldiers went on ſhoare, and hee himſelfe went firſt on land: where we found the place as pleaſant as was poſſible, for it was all couered ouer with mightie high Oakes and infinite ſtore of Cedars, and with Lentiſkes growing vnderneath them, ſmelling ſo ſweetly, that the very fragrant odor only made the place to ſeeme exceeding pleaſant. As we paſſed thorow theſe woods we ſaw nothing but Turkeycocks flying in the Forreſts, Partridges gray and red, little different from ours, but chiefly in bigneſſe. Wee heard alſo within the woods the voyces of Stagges, of Beares, of Luſernes, of Leopards, & diuers other ſortes of Beaſtes vnknowen vnto vs. Being delighted with this place, we ſet our ſelues to fiſhing with nets, & we caught ſuch a number of fiſh, that it was wonderfull. And amongſt other wee tooke a certaine kind of fiſh which we call Sallicoques, which were no leſſe then Creuiſes, ſo that two draughts of the net were ſufficient to feede all the companie of our two ſhips for a whole day. The Riuer at the mouth thereof from Cape to Cape is no leſſe then 3. French leagues broad: it is diuided into two great armes, whereof the one runneth toward the Weſt, the other towards the North: And I beleeue in my iudgement that the arme which ſtretcheth towarde the North runneth vp into the Countrey as farre as the Riuer Iordan, the other arme runneth into the Sea, as it was knowen and vnderſtoode by thoſe of our company, which were left behind to dwell in this place. Theſe two armes are two great leagues broad: and in the middeſt of them there is an Ile, which is poynted towardes the opening of the great Riuer, in which Iland there are infinite numbers of all ſortes of ſtrange beaſts. There are Simples growing there of ſo rare properties, and in ſo great quantitie, that it is an excellent thing to behold them. On euery ſide there is nothing to be ſeene but Palmetrees, and other ſortes of trees bearing bloſſoms and fruite of very rare ſhape and very good ſmell. But ſeeing the euening approch, and that the Captaine determined to returne vnto the ſhippes, wee prayed him to ſuffer vs to paſſe the night in this place. In our abſence the Pilots and chiefe Mariners aduertiſed the Captaine that it was needefull to bring the ſhippes further vp within the Riuer, to auoyde the dangers of the windes which might annoy vs, by reaſon of our being ſo neere to the mouth of the Riuer: and for this cauſe the Captaine ſent for vs. Being come to our ſhippes, wee ſayled three leagues further vp within the Riuer, and there we caſt anker. A little while after, Iohn Ribault accompanied with a good number of ſouldiers imbarked himſelfe, deſirous to ſayle further vp into the arme that runneth toward the Weſt, and to ſearch the commodities of the place. Hauing ſayled twelue leagues at the leaſt, we perceiued a troope of Indians, which aſſoone as euer they eſpied the Pinneſſes, were ſo afrayd that they fled into the woods leauing behind them a yong Lucerne which they were a turning vpon a ſpit: for which cauſe the place was called Cape Lucerne: proceeding forth on our way, we found another arme of the Riuer, which ranne toward the Eaſt, vp which the Captaine determined to ſayle and to leaue the great current. A little while after they began to eſpie diuers other Indians both men and women halfe hidden within the woods: who knowing not that wee were ſuch as deſired their friendſhip, were diſmayed at the firſt, but ſoone after were emboldened, for the Captaine cauſed ſtore of marchandiſe to bee ſhewed them openly whereby they knew that we meant nothing but well vnto them: and then they made a ſigne that we ſhould come on lande, which wee would not refuſe. At our comming on ſhoare diuers of them came to ſalute our Generall according to their barbarous faſhion. Some of them gaue him ſkins of Chamois, others little baskets made of Palme leaues, ſome preſented him with Pearles, but no great number. Afterwards they went about to make an arbour to defend vs in that place from the parching heate of the Sunne. But wee would not ſtay as then. Wherefore the Captaine thanked them much for their good will, and gaue preſents to each of them: wherewith hee pleaſed them ſo well before hee went thence, that his ſuddaine departure was nothing pleaſant vnto them. For knowing him to bee ſo liberall, they would haue wiſhed him to haue ſtayed a little longer, ſeeking by all meanes to giue him occaſion to ſtay, ſhewing him by ſignes that he ſhould ſtay but that day onely, and that they deſired to aduertiſe a great Indian Lorde which had Pearles in great abundance, and Siluer alſo, all which things ſhould bee giuen vnto him at the Kings arriuall: ſaying further that in the meane time while that this great Lord came thither, they would lead him to their houſes, and ſhewe him there a thouſand pleaſures in ſhooting, and ſeeing the Stagge killed, therefore they prayed him not to denie them their requeſt. Notwithſtanding wee returned to our ſhippes, where after wee had bene but one night, the Captaine in the morning commanded to put into the Pinneſſe a pillar of hard ſtone faſhioned like a columne, wherein the Armes of the king of France were grauen, to plant the ſame in the faireſt place that he could finde. This done, wee imbarked our ſelues, and ſayled three leagues towards the Weſt: where we diſcouered a little riuer, vp which we ſayled ſo long, that in the ende we found it returned into the great current, and in his returne to make a litle Iland ſeparated from the firme land, where wee went on ſhore: and by commandement of the Captaine, becauſe it was exceeding faire and pleaſant, there wee planted the Pillar vpon a hillock open round about to the view, and inuironed with a lake halfe a fathom deepe of very good and ſweete water. In which Iland wee ſawe two Stagges of exceeding bigneſſe, in reſpect of thoſe which we had ſeene before, which we might eaſily haue killed with our harguebuzes, if the Captaine had not forbidden vs, mooued with the ſingular faireneſſe and bigneſſe of them. But before our departure we named the little riuer which enuironed this Ile, The Riuer of Liborne. Afterward we imbarked our ſelues to ſearch another Ile not farre diſtant from the former: wherein after wee had gone a land, wee found nothing but tall Cedars, the faireſt that were ſeene in this Countrey. For this cauſe wee called it The Ile of Cedars: ſo wee returned into our Pinneſſe to go towards our ſhippes.

A few dayes afterward Iohn Ribault determined to returne once againe toward the Indians which inhabited that arme of the Riuer which runneth toward the Weſt, and to carrie with him good ſtore of ſouldiers. For his meaning was to take two Indians of this place to bring them into France, as the Queene had commaunded him. With this deliberation againe wee tooke our former courſe ſo farre forth, that at the laſt wee came to the ſelfe ſame place where at the firſt we found the Indians, from thence we tooke two Indians by the permiſſion of the king, which thinking that they were more fauoured thē the reſt, thought themſelues very happy to ſtay with vs. But theſe two Indians ſeeing we made no ſhew at all that we would goe on land, but rather that wee followed the middeſt of the current, began to be ſomewhat offended, and would by force haue lept into the water, for they are ſo good ſwimmers that immediatly they would haue gotten into the forreſtes. Neuertheleſſe being acquainted with their humour, wee watched them narrowly and ſought by all meanes to appeaſe them: which we could not by any meanes do for that time, though we offered them things which they much eſteemed, which things they diſdained to take, and gaue backe againe whatſoeuer was giuen them, thinking that ſuch giftes ſhould haue altogether bound them, and that in reſtoring them they ſhould be reſtored vnto their libertie. In fine, perceiuing that all that they did auayled them nothing, they prayed vs to giue them thoſe things which they had reſtored, which we did incontinent: then they approched one toward the other and began to ſing, agreeing ſo ſweetely together, that in hearing their ſong it ſeemed that they lamented the abſence of their friendes. They continued their ſongs all night without ceaſing: all which time we were conſtrained to ly at anker by reaſon of the tyde that was againſt vs, but we hoyſed ſayle the next day very early in the morning, and returned to our ſhips. Aſſoone as we were come to our ſhips, euery one ſought to gratifie theſe 2 Indians, & to ſhew them the beſt countenance that was poſſible: to the intent that by ſuch courteſies they might perceiue the good deſire and affection which we had to remaine their friends in time to come. Then we offered them meate to eate, but they refuſed it, and made vs vnderſtand that they were accuſtomed to waſh their face and to ſtay vntill the Sunne were ſet before they did eate, which is a ceremonie common to all the Indians of Newe France. Neuertheleſſe in the end they were conſtrained to forget their ſuperſtitions, and to apply themſelues to our nature, which was ſomewhat ſtrange vnto them at the firſt. They became therfore more iocunde, euery houre made vs a 1000 diſcourſes, being merueilous ſory that we could not vnderſtand them. A few daies after they began to beare ſo good wil towards mee, that, as I thinke, they would rather haue periſhed with hunger & thirſt, then haue taken their refection at any mans hand but mine. Seeing this their good wil, I ſought to learne ſome Indian words, & began to aſke them queſtions, ſhewing thē the thing whereof I deſired to know the name, how they called it. They were very glad to tell it me, and knowing the deſire that I had to learne their language, they encouraged me afterward to aſke them euery thing. So that putting downe in writing the words and phraſes of the Indian ſpeech, I was able to vnderſtand the greateſt part of their diſcourſes. Euery day they did nothing but ſpeak vnto me of the deſire that they had to vſe me wel, if we returned vnto their houſes, and cauſe me to receiue all the pleaſures that they could deuiſe, aſwell in hunting as in ſeeing their very ſtrange and ſuperſtitious ceremonies at a certaine feaſt which they call Toya. Which feaſt they obſerue as ſtraightly as we obſerue the Sunday. They gaue me to vnderſtand, that they would bring me to ſee the greateſt Lord of this countrey which they called Chiquola, which exceedeth them in height (as they tolde me) a good foote and a halfe. They ſaid vnto me that he dwelt within the land in a very large place and incloſed exceeding high, but I could not learne wherewith. And as farre as I can iudge, this place whereof they ſpake vnto me, was a very faire citie. For they ſaid vnto me that within the incloſure there was great ſtore of houſes which were built very high, wherein there was an infinite number of men like vnto themſelues, which made none account of gold, of ſiluer, nor of pearles, ſeeing they had thereof in abundance. I began then to ſhew thē al the parts of heauē, to the intent to learne in which quarter they dwelt. And ſtraightway one of them ſtretching out his hand ſhewed me yͭ they dwelt toward the North, which makes me thinke that it was the riuer of Iordan. And now I remember, that in the raigne of the Emperour Charles the fift, certaine Spaniards inhabitants of S. Domingo (which made a voyage to get certaine ſlaues to work in their mines) ſtole away by ſubtilty the inhabitants of this riuer, to the number of 40, thinking to cary thē into their new Spaine. But they loſt their labour: for in deſpite they died al for hunger, ſauing one that was brought to the Emperor, which a litle while after he cauſed to be baptiſed, and gaue him his own name & called him Charles of Chiquola, becauſe he ſpake ſo much of this Lorde of Chiquola whoſe ſubiect hee was. Alſo, he reported continually, that Chiquola made his a bode within a very great incloſed citie. Beſides this proof, thoſe which were left in the firſt voyage haue certified me, that the Indians ſhewed thē by euident ſignes, that farther within the land toward the North, there was a great incloſure or city, where Chiquola dwelt. After they had ſtaied a while in our ſhips, they began to be ſory, and ſtil demanded of me whē they ſhould returne. I made them vnderſtand that the Captaines will was to ſend them home againe, but that firſt he would beſtow apparell of them, which fewe dayes after was deliuered vnto them. But ſeeing he would not giue them licence to depart, they reſolued with themſelues to ſteale away by night, and to get a litle boat which we had, and by the help of the tyde to saile home toward their dwellings, and by this meanes to saue themſelues. Which thing they failed not to doe, and put their enterprize in execution, yet leauing behinde them the apparel which the Captaine had giuen them, and carrying away nothing but that which was their owne, ſhewing well hereby that they were not void of reaſon. The Captaine cared not greatly for their departure, conſidering they had not bene vſed otherwiſe then well: and that therefore they would not eſtrange themſelues from the Frenchmen. Captaine Ribault therefore knowing the ſingular faireneſs of this riuer, deſired by all meanes to encourage ſome of his men to dwell there, well foreſeeing that this thing might be of great importance for the Kings ſeruice, and the releife of the Common wealth of France. Therfore proceeding on with his intent, he commanded the ankers to bee weighed and to ſet things in order to returne vnto the opening of the riuer, to the ende that if the winde came faire he might paſſe out to accompliſh the reſt of his meaning. When therefore we were come to the mouth of the riuer, he made them caſt anker, whereupon we ſtayed without diſcouering any thing all the reſt of the day. The next day he commanded that all the men of his ſhip ſhould come vp vpon the decke, ſaying that he had ſomewhat to ſay vnto them. They all came vp, and immediatly the Captaine began to ſpeake vnto them in this maner.

The Oration of Iohn Ribault to his company.

I thinke there is none of you that is ignorant of how great conſequence this our enterprize is, and alſo how acceptable it is vnto our yong King. Therefore my friendes (as one deſiring your honour and benefite) I would not faile to aduertiſe you all of the exceeding good happe which ſhould fall to them, which, as men of value and worthy courage, would make tryall in this our firſt diſcouerie of the benefits and commodities of this new land: which ſhould be, as I aſſure my ſelfe, the greateſt occaſion that euer could happen vnto them, to ariſe vnto the title and degree of honour. And for this cauſe I was deſirous to propoſe vnto you and ſet downe before your eyes the eternall memorie which of right they deſerue, which forgetting both their parents and their countrey haue had the courage to enterprize a thing of ſuch importance, which euen kings themſelues vnderſtanding to be men aſpiring to ſo high degree of magnanimitie and increaſe of their maieſties, doe not diſdaine ſo wel to regard, that afterwards imploying them in maters of weight & of high enterprize, they make their names immortall for euer. Howbeit, I would not haue you perſwade your ſelues, as many doe, that you ſhall neuer haue ſuch good fortune, as not being knowen neither to the king nor the Princes of the Realme, and beſides deſcending of ſo poore a ſtocke, that few or none of your parents, hauing euer made profeſſion of armes, haue bene knowen vnto the great eſtates. For albeit that from my tender yeeres I my ſelfe haue applyed all my induſtry to follow them, and haue hazarded my life in ſo many dangers for the ſeruice of my prince, yet could I neuer attaine therunto (not that I did not deſerue this title and degree of gouernment) as I haue ſeene it happen to many others, onely becauſe they deſcende of a noble race, ſince more regard is had of their birth then of their vertue. For wel I know that if vertue were regarded, ther would more be found worthy to deſerue the title, & by good right to be named noble and valiant. I will therefore make ſufficient anſwere to ſuch propoſitions and ſuch things as you may obiect againſt me, laying before you the infinite examples which we haue of the Romans; which concerning the point of honour were the firſt that triumphed ouer the world. For how many finde we among them, which for their ſo valiant enterprizes, not for the greatneſſe of their parentage, haue obtained the honour to tryumph? If we haue recourſe vnto their anceſters, wee ſhall finde that their parents were of ſo meane condition, that by labouring with their hands they liued very baſely. As the father of Ælius Pertinax, which was a poore artiſan, his Grandfather likewiſe was a bond man, as the hiſtoriographers do witnes: and neuertheleſſe, being moued with a valiant courage, he was nothing diſmayed for all this, but rather deſirous to aſpire vnto high things, he began with a braue ſtomacke to learne feates of armes, and profited ſo wel therein, that from ſtep to ſtep he became at length to be Emperour of the Romans. For all this dignitie he deſpiſed not his parents: but contrariwiſe, & in remembrance of them, he cauſed his fathers ſhop to be couered with a fine wrought marble, to ſerue for an example to mē deſcended of baſe & poore linages, to giue them occaſion to aſpire vnto high things notwithſtanding the meanneſſe of their anceſters. I wil not paſſe ouer in ſilence the excellencie & proweſſe of the valiant & renowned Agathocles the ſonne of a ſimple potter, and yet forgetting the contemptible eſtate of his father, he ſo applied himſelfe to vertue in his tender yeeres, that by the fauour of armes he came to be king of Sicilie: and for all this title he refuſed not to be counted the ſonne of a Potter. But the more to eternize the memorie of his parentes and to make his name renowned, he commanded that he ſhould be ſerued at the Table in veſſels of gold and ſiluer and others of earth: declaring thereby that the dignitie wherein hee was placed came not vnto him by his parents, but by his owne vertue onely. If I ſhal ſpeake of our time, I will lay before you onely Ruſten Baſſha, which may be a ſufficient example to all men: which though he were the ſonne of a poore heard-man, did ſo apply his youth in all vertue, that being brought vp in the ſeruice of the great Turke, he ſeemed to aſpire to great and high matters, in ſuch ſort that growing in yeres he increaſed alſo in courage, ſo far forth, that in fine for his excellent vertues he married the daughter of the great Turke his Prince. Howe much then ought ſo many worthy examples to moue you to plant here? Conſidering alſo that hereby you ſhalbe regiſtred for euer as the firſt that inhabited this ſtrang countrey. I pray you therfore all to aduiſe your ſelues thereof, and to declare your mindes freely vnto mee, proteſting that I will ſo well imprint your names in the kings eares, and the other princes, that your renowme ſhall hereafter ſhine vnquenchable through our Realme of France. He had ſcarcely ended his Oration, but the greateſt part of our ſouldiers replyed: that a greater pleaſure could neuer betide them, perceiuing well the acceptable ſeruice which by this meanes they ſhoulde doe vnto their Prince: beſides that this thing ſhould be for the increaſe of their honours: therfore they beſought the Captaine, before he departed out of the place, to begin to build them a Fort, which they hoped afterward to finiſh, and to leaue them munition neceſſarie for their defence, ſhewing as it ſeemed that they were diſpleaſed, that it was ſo long in doing. Whereupon Iohn Ribault being as glad as might be to ſee his men ſo well willing, determined the next day to ſearch the moſt fit and conuenient place to be inhabited. Wherefore he embarked himſelfe very earely in the morning and commanded them to followe him that were deſirous to inhabite there, to the intent that they might like the beter of the place. Hauing ſayled vp the great riuer on the North ſide, in coaſting an Iſle which ended with a ſharpe point toward the mouth of the riuer, hauing ſailed a while, he diſcouered a ſmall riuer, which entred into the Iſlande, which hee would not faile to ſearch out. Which done, & finding the ſame deep inough to harbour therein Gallies and Galliots in good number, proceeding further, he found a very open place, ioyning vpon the brinke thereof, where he went on land, and ſeeing the place fit to build a Fortreſſe in, and commodious for them that were willing to plant there, he reſolued incontinent to cauſe the bignes of the fortification to be meaſured out. And conſidering that there ſtayed but ſixe and twentie there, he cauſed the Fort to be made in length but ſixteene fathome, and thirteene in breadth, with flankes according to the proportion thereof. The meaſure being taken by me and Captaine Salles, we ſent vnto the ſhippes for men, and to bring ſhouels, pickaxes and other inſtruments neceſſarie to make the fortification. We trauailed ſo diligently, that in a ſhort ſpace the Fort was made in ſome ſort defenciable. In which meane time Iohn Ribault cauſed victuals and warrelike munition to be brought for the defence of the place. After he had furniſhed them with all ſuch things as they had neede of, he determined to take his leaue of them. But before his departure he vſed this ſpeech vnto Captaine Albert, which he left in this place.

Captaine Albert, I haue to requeſt you in the preſence of al theſe men, that you would quit your ſelfe ſo wiſely in your charge, and gouerne ſo modeſtly your ſmall companie which I leaue you, which with ſo good cheere remaineth vnder your obedience, that I neuer haue occaſion but to commend you, and to recount vnto the king (as I am deſirous) the faithfull ſeruice which before vs all you vndertake to doe him in his new France: And you companions, (quoth he to the Souldiers) I beſeech you alſo to eſteeme of Captaine Albert as if hee were my ſelfe that ſtayed here with you, yeelding him that obedience which a true ſouldier oweth vnto his Generall and Captaine, liuing as brethren one with another, without all diſſention: and in ſo doing God wil aſſiſt you and bleſſe your enterpriſes. Hauing ended his exhortation, we tooke our leaues of each of them, and ſayled toward our ſhippes, calling the Forte by the name of Charles-fort, and the Riuer by the name Chenonceau. The next day wee determined to depart from this place being as well contented as was poſſible that we had ſo happily ended our buſines, with good hope, if occaſion would permitte, to diſcouer perfectly the riuer of Iordan. For this cauſe we hoyſed our ſayles about ten of the clocke in the morning: after wee were ready to depart Captain Ribault commanded to ſhoote off our Ordinance to giue a farewel vnto our Frenchmen, which failed not to doe the like on their part. This being done wee ſailed toward the North: and then we named this riuer Porte Royal, becauſe of the largenes and excellent faires of the ſame. After that we had ſailed about 15 leagues from thence, we eſpied a riuer, whereupon wee ſent our pinneſſe thither to diſcouer it. At their returne they brought vs word that they found not paſt halfe a fathom water in the mouth therof. Which whē we vnderſtood, without doing any thing els, we continued our way, and called it the Baſe or Shallow riuer. As we ſtil went on ſounding we found

The riuer Baſe, 15 leagues Northwarde of Port Royall not paſt fiue or ſixe fathome water, although we were ſixe good leagues from the ſhoare: at length we found not paſt three fathomes, which gaue vs occaſion greatly to muſe. And without making any farther way we ſtrook our ſayles, partly becauſe we wanted water, & partly becauſe the night approched: during which time Captaine Iohn Ribault bethought with himſelfe wether it were beſt for him to paſſe any farther, becauſe of the eminent dangers which euery houre we ſaw before our eyes: or whither he ſhould content himſelfe with that which he had certainely diſcouered, & alſo left men to inhabite the countrey. Being not able for that time to reſolue with himſelfe, he referred it vntil the next day. The morning being come he propoſed to all the company what was beſt to be done, to the end that with good aduiſement euery man might deliuer his opinion. Some made anſwere, that according to their iudgement he had occaſion fully to content himſelfe, conſidering that he could doe no more: laying before his eyes, that he had diſcouered more in ſixe weekes, then the Spaniards had done in two yeres in the conqueſt of their New Spaine: and that he ſhould do the king very great ſeruice, if he did bring him newes in ſo ſhort a time of his happy diſcouerie. Other ſhewed vnto him the loſſe and ſpoile of his victuals, and on the other ſide the inconuenience that might happen by the ſhallow water that they found continually along the coaſt. Which things being well and at large debated, we reſolued to leaue the coaſt, forſaking the North, to take our way toward the Eaſt, which is the right way and courſe to our France, where we happily arriued the twentieth day of Iuly, the yere 1562.

Their arriuall in France 1562. the 20 of Iuly.

The ſtate and condition of thoſe which were left behind in Charles-fort.

OUr men after our departure neuer reſted, but night and day did fortifie themſelues, being in good hope that after their fort was finiſhed, they would begin to diſcouer farther vp within the riuer. It happened one day, as certaine of them were in cutting of rootes in the groues, that they eſpied on the ſudden an Indian that hunted the Deere, which finding himſelfe ſo neere vpon them, was much diſmayed, but our men began to draw neere vnto him and to vſe him ſo courteouſly, that he became aſſured and followed them to Charles-fort, where euery man ſought to doe him pleaſure. Captaine Albert was very ioyfull of his comming, which after he had giuen him a ſhirt and ſome other trifles, he aſked him of his dwelling: the Indian anſwered him that it was farther vp within the riuer, and that he was vaſſal of king Auduſta: he alſo ſhewed him with his hand the limits of his habitation. After much other talke the Indian deſired leaue to depart, becauſe it drew toward night, which Captaine Albert granted him very willingly. Certaine dayes after the Captaine determined to ſaile toward Auduſta, where being arriued, by reaſon of the honeſt entertaynment which he had giuen to the Indian, he was ſo courteouſly receiued, that the king talked with him of nothing elſe but of the deſire which he had to become his friend: giuing him beſides to vnderſtand, that he being his friend and allie, he ſhould haue the amitie of foure other kings, which in might & authoritie were able to do much for his ſake: Beſides all this, in his neceſſitie they might be able to ſuccour him with victuals. One of theſe kings was called Mayon, another Hoya, the third Touppa, and the fourth Stalame. He told him moreouer, that they would be very glad, when they ſhould vnderſtand the newes of his comming, and therefore he prayed him to vouchſafe to viſit them. The Captaine willingly conſented vnto him, for the deſire that he had to purchaſe friends in that place. Therefore they departed the next morning very early, and firſt arriued at the houſe of king Touppa, and afterward went into the other kings houſes, except the houſe of king Stalame. He receiued of each of them all the amiable courteſies that might be: they ſhewed themſelues to be as affectioned friends vnto him as was poſſible, and offered vnto him a thouſand ſmall preſents. After that he had remained by the ſpace of certaine daies with theſe ſtrange kings, he determined to take his leaue: and being come backe to the houſe of Auduſta, he commanded al his men to goe aboord their Pinneſſe: for he was minded to goe towardes the countrey of king Stalame, which dwelt toward the North the diſtance of 15 great leagues from Charles-fort. Therefore as they ſailed vp the riuer they entred into a great current, which they followed ſo farre till they came at the laſt to the houſe of Stalame: which brought him into his lodging, where he ſought to make them the beſt cheere he could deuiſe. He preſented immediatly vnto Captaine Albert his bow and arrowes, which is a ſigne and confirmation of alliance betweene them. He preſented him with Chamoys ſkinnes. The Captaine ſeeing the beſt part of the day was now paſt, tooke his leaue of king Stalame to returne to Charles-fort, where hee arriued the day following. By this time the friendſhip was growne ſo great betweene our men and king Auduſta, that in a manner all things were common betweene him and them: in ſuch ſort that this good Indian king did nothing of importance, but he called our men thereunto. For when the time drew neere of the celebrating their feaſts of Toya, which are ceremonies moſt ſtrange to recite, he ſent Ambaſſadours to our men to requeſt them on his behalfe to be there preſent. Whereunto they agreed moſt willingly for the deſire that they had to vnderſtand what this might be. They imbarked themſelues therefore and ſailed towards the kings houſe, which was already come forth on the way towards thē, to receiue them courteouſly, to bid them welcome & bring them to his houſe, where he ſought to intreat them the beſt he might. In the meane while the Indians prepared themſelues to celebrate the feaſt the morrow after, and the king brought them to ſee the place, wherein the feaſt ſhould be kept: where they ſaw many women round about, which laboured by al meanes to make the place cleane & neat. This place was a great circuit of ground with open proſpect and round in figure. On the morrow therefore early in the morning, all they which were choſen to celebrate the feaſt, being painted and trimmed with rich feathers of diuers colours, put themſelues on the way to go frō the kings houſe toward the place of Toya: whereunto when they were come they ſet themſelues in order, & followed three Indians, which in painting and in geſture were differing from the reſt: each of them bare a Tabret in their hand, dancing & ſinging in a lamentable tune, when they began to enter into the middeſt of the round circuit, being followed of others which anſwered them again. After that they had ſung, danced, and turned 3 times, they fel on running like vnbridled horſes, through the middeſt of the thickeſt woods. And then the Indian women continued all the reſt of the day in teares as ſad & woful as was poſſible: & in ſuch rage they cut the armes of the yong girles, which they lanced ſo cruelly with ſharpe ſhels of Muſkles that the blood followed which they flang into the ayre, crying out three times, He Toya. The king Auduſta had gathered all our men into his houſe, while the feaſt was celebrated, and was exceedingly offended when he ſaw them laugh. This he did, becauſe the Indians are very angry when they are ſeene in their ceremonies. Notwithſtanding one of our men made ſuch ſhift that by ſubtile meanes he gatte out of the houſe of Auduſta, and ſecretly went and hid himſelfe behinde a very thicke buſh, where at his pleaſure, he might eaſily diſcry the ceremonies of the feaſt. They three that began the feaſt are named Iawas: and they are as it were three Prieſtes of the Indian law: to whom they giue credite and beliefe partly becauſe that by kinred they are ordained to be ouer their Sacrifices, and partly alſo becauſe they be ſo ſubtile magicians that any thing that is loſt is ſtraightway recouered by their meanes. Againe they are not onely reuerenced for theſe things, but alſo becauſe they heale diſeaſes by I wotte not what kinde of knowledge and ſkill they haue. Thoſe that ran ſo through the woodes returned two dayes after: after their returne they began to dance with a cheerefull courage in the middeſt of the faire place, and to cheere vp their good olde Indian fathers, which either by reaſon of their too great age, or by reaſon of their naturall indiſpoſition and feebleneſſe were not called to the feaſt. When all theſe dances were ended, they fell on eating with ſuch a greedineſſe, that they ſeemed rather to deuoure their meate then to eate it, for they had neither eaten nor drunke the day of the feaſt, nor the two dayes following. Our men were not forgotten at this good cheere, for the Indians ſent for them all thither, ſhewing themſelues very glad of their preſence. While they remained certaine time with the Indians, a man of ours got a yong boy for certaine trifles, and inquired of him, what the Indians did in the wood during their abſence: which boy made him vnderſtand by ſignes, that the Iawas had made inuocations to Toya, and that by Magicall Characters they had made him come that they might ſpeake with him and demand diuers ſtrange things of him, which for feare of the Iawas he durſt not vtter. They haue alſo many other ceremonies, which I will not here rehearſe for feare of moleſting the reader with a matter of ſo ſmall importance.

When the feaſt therefore was finiſhed our men returned vnto Charles-fort: where hauing remained but a while their victualles beganne to waxe ſhort, which forced them to haue recourſe vnto their neighbours, and to pray them to ſuccour them in their neceſſitie: which gaue them part of all the victualles which they had, and kept no more vnto themſelues then would ſerue to ſow their fieldes. They tolde them farther that for this cauſe it was needefull for them to retire themſelues into the woods, to liue of Maſt and rootes vntill the time of harueſt, being as ſorry as might be that they were not able any farther to ayde them. They gaue them alſo counſell to goe toward the countreys of King Couexis a man of might and renowme in this prouince, which maketh his aboad toward the South abounding at all ſeaſons and repleniſhed with ſuch quantitie of mill, corne, and beanes that by his onely ſuccour they might be able to liue a very long time. But before they ſhould come into his territories, they were to repayre vnto a king called Ouade the brother of Couexis, which in mill, beanes, and corne was no leſſe wealthy, and withall is very liberall and which would be very ioyfull if he might but once ſee them. Our men perceiuing the good relation which the Indians made them of thoſe two kings reſolued to go thither: for they felt already the neceſſity which oppreſſed them. Therfore they made requeſt vnto king Maccou, that it would pleaſe him to giue them one of his ſubiects to guide thē the right way thither: whereupon he condicondeſcended very willingly, knowing that without his fauour they ſhould haue much ado to bring their interprize to paſſe. Wherefore after they had giuen order for all things neceſſary for the voyage, they put themſelues to Sea, and ſailed ſo farre that in the end they came into the countrey of Ouade, which they found to be in the riuer Belle. Being there arriued they perceiued a company of Indians, which aſſoone as they knew of their being there came before them. Aſſoone as they were come neere them, their guides ſhewed them by ſignes that Ouade was in this company, wherefore our men ſet forward to ſalute him. And then two of his ſonnes which were with him, being goodly and ſtrong men ſaluted them againe in very good ſort, and vſed very friendly intertainment on their part. The king immediatly began to make an Oration in his Indian language of the great pleaſure and contentment which he had to ſee them in that place, proteſting that he would become ſo loyall a friend of theirs hereafter, that he would be their faithfull defendour againſt all them that would offer to be their enemies. After theſe ſpeeches he led them toward his houſe, where he ſought to entreate them very courteouſly. His houſe was hanged about with Tapiſtrie of feathers of diuers colours the height of a pike. Moreouer the place where the king tooke his reſt was couered with white Couerlettes embroydered with deuiſes of very wittie and fine workemanſhip, and fringed round about with a Fringe dyed in the colour of Skarlet. They aduertiſed the king by one of the guides which they brought with them, how that (hauing heard of his great liberalitie) they had put to the Sea to come to beſeech him to ſuccour them with victuals in their great want and neceſſitie: and that in ſo doing, he ſhould binde them all hereafter to remaine his faithfull friends and loyall defenders againſt all his enemies. This good Indian aſſoone ready to doe them pleaſure, as they were to demand it, commanded his ſubiects that they ſhould fill our Pinneſſe with mil and beanes. Afterward he cauſed them to bring him ſixe pieces of his Tapiſtry made like litle couerlets, & gaue them to our men with ſo liberal a minde, as they eaſily perceiued the deſire which he had to become their friend. In recompence of all theſe gifts our men gaue him two cutting hookes and certaine other trifles, wherewith he held himſelfe greatly ſatiſfied. This being done, our men tooke their leaue of the king, which for their farewell, ſayd nothing els but that they ſhould returne if they wanted victuals, & that they might aſſure themſelues of him, that they ſhould neuer want any thing that was in his power. Wherefore they imbarked themſelues, and ſayled towards Charles-fort, which from this place might be ſome fiue and twenty leagues diſtant. But as ſoone as our men thought themſelues at their eaſe, & free from the dangers whereinto they had expoſed themſelues night and day in gathering together of victuals here and there: Lo, euen as they were aſleepe, the fire caught in their lodgings with ſuch furie, being increaſed by the winde, that the roome that was built for them before our mens departure, was conſumed in an inſtant, without being able to ſaue any thing, ſauing a little of their victualles. Whereupon our men being farre from all ſuccours, found themſelues in ſuch extremitie, that without the ayd of Almighty God, the onely ſearcher of the hearts and thoughts of men, which neuer forſaketh thoſe that ſeeke him in their afflictions, they had bene quite and cleane out of all hope. For the next day betimes in the morning the King Audulta and King Maccou came thither, accompanied with a very good companie of Indians, which knowing the miſfortune, were very ſory for it. And then they vttered vnto their ſubiects the ſpeedy diligence which they were to vſe in building another houſe, ſhewing vnto them that the Frenchmen were their louing friends, & that they had made it euident vnto them by the gifts and preſents which they had receiued: proteſting that whoſoeuer put not his helping hand vnto the worke with all his might, ſhould be eſteemed as vnprofitable, and as one that had no good part in him, which the Sauages feare aboue all things. This was the occaſion that euery man began to endeuour himſelfe in ſuch ſort, that in leſſe then 12 houres, they had begun and finiſhed a houſe which was very neere as great as the former. Which being ended, they returned home fully contented with a few cutting hookes, and hatchets, which they receiued of our men. Within a ſmall while after this miſchance, their victuals began to waxe ſhort: and after our men had taken good deliberation, thought and bethought themſelues againe, they found that there was no better way for them then to returne againe to the king Ouade and Couexis his brother. Wherefore they reſolued to ſend thither ſome of their company the next day following: which with an Indian Canoa ſayled vp into the countrey about 10 leagues: afterward they found a very faire & great riuer of freſh water, which they failed not to ſearch out: they found therein a great number of Crocodils, which in greatnes paſſe thoſe of the riuer Nilus: moreouer, al along the bankes thereof, there grow mighty high Cypreſſes. After they had ſtayed a ſmal while in this place, they purpoſed to follow their iourney, helping thẽſelues ſo wel with the tydes, that without putting themſelues in danger of the continuall perill of the Sea, they came into the countrey of Ouade: of whom they were moſt courteouſly receiued. They aduertiſed him of the occaſion, caſion wherefore they came againe to viſite him, and told him of the miſchance, which happened vnto them ſince their laſt voyages: how they had not onely loſt their houſhold ſtuffe by caſualtie of fire, but alſo their victuals which he had giuen them ſo bountifully: that for this cauſe they were ſo bolde as to come once againe vnto him, to beſeech him to vouchſafe to ſuccour them in ſuch neede and neceſſitie.

After that the king had vnderſtood their caſe, he ſent meſſengers vnto his brother Couexis, to requeſt him vpon his behalfe to ſend him ſome of his mill and beanes, which thing he did: and the next morning, they were come againe with victuals, which the king cauſed to be borne into their Canoa. Our men would haue taken their leaue of him, finding themſelues more then ſatiſfied with this liberalitie. But for that day hee would not ſuffer them, but retained them, and ſought to make them the beſt cheere hee could deuiſe. The next day very earely in the morning, he tooke them with him to ſhewe them the place where his corne grewe, and ſaide vnto them that they ſhould not want as long as all that mil did laſt. Afterward he gaue them a certaine number of exceeding faire pearles, & two ſtones of fine Chriſtal, and certaine ſiluer oare. Our men forgot not to giue him certaine trifles in recompence of theſe preſentes, and required of him the place whence the ſiluer oare and the Chriſtall came. He made them anſwere, that it came ten dayes iourney from his habitation vp within the countrey: and that the inhabitants of the countrey did dig the ſame at the foote of certaine high mountaines, where they found of it in very good quantitie. Being ioyfull to vnderſtand ſo good newes, and to haue come to the knowledge of that which they moſt deſired, they tooke their leaue of the king, and returned by the ſame ſaw, by which they came.

Note.

Behold therefore how our men behaued themſelues very well hitherto, although they had endured many great miſhaps. But miſfortune or rather the iuſt iudgement of God would haue it, that thoſe which could not bee ouercome by fire nor water, ſhould be vndone by their owne ſelues. This is the common faſhion of men, which cannot continue in one ſtate, and had rather to ouerthrow themſelues, then not to attempt ſome new thing dayly. We haue infinite examples in the ancient hiſtories, eſpecially of the Romanes, vnto which number this litle handfull of men, being farre from their countrey and abſent from their countreymen, haue alſo added this preſent example. They entred therefore into partialities and diſſentions, which began about a ſouldier named Guernache, which was a drummer of the French bands: which, as it was told me, was very cruelly hanged by his owne captaine, and for a ſmal fault: which captaine alſo vſing to threathen the reſt of his ſouldiers which ſtaied behind vnder his obedience, and peraduenture (as it is to be preſumed) were not ſo obedient to him as they ſhould haue bene, was the cauſe that they fell into a mutinie, becauſe that many times he put his threatnings in execution: whervpon they ſo chaſed him, that at the laſt they put him to death. And the principall occaſion that moued them thereunto was, becauſe he degraded another ſouldier named La Chere (which he had baniſhed) and becauſe he had not performed his promiſe: for hee had promiſed to ſend him victuals, from 8 dayes to 8 dayes, which thing he did not, but ſaid on the contrary, that he would be glad to heare of his death. He ſaid moreouer, that he would chaſtiſe others alſo, & vſed ſo euil ſounding ſpeeches, that honeſtie forbiddeth me to repeat thẽ. The ſouldiers ſeeing his madnes to increaſe from day to day, and fearing to fall into the dangers of the other, reſolued to kil him. Hauing executed their purpoſe, they went to ſeeke the ſouldier that was baniſhed, which was in a ſmall Iſland diſtant frõ Charles-fort about 3 leagues, where they found him almoſt half dead for hunger. When they were come home againe, they aſſembled themſelues together to chooſe one to be gouernour ouer them, whoſe name was Nicolas Barre a man worthy of commendation, and one which knewe ſo well to quite himſelfe of his charge, that all rancour and diſſention ceaſed among them, and they liued peaceably one with another. During this time, they began to build a ſmal Pinneſſe, with hope to return into France, if no ſuccours came vnto them, as they expected from day to day. And though there were no man among them that had any ſkill, notwithſtanding neceſſitie, which is the maiſtreſſe of all ſciences, taught them the way to build it. After that it was finiſhed, they thought of nothing elſe ſauing how to furniſh it with all things neceſſarie to vndertake the voyage. But they wanted thoſe things that of all other were moſt needefull, as cordage and ſayles, without which the enterpriſe coulde not come to effect. Hauing no meanes to recouer theſe things, they were in worſe caſe then at the firſt, and almoſt ready to fall into deſpayre. But that good God, which neuer forſaketh the afflicted, did ſuccour them in their neceſſitie.

A new Brigandine built in Florida.

As they were in theſe perplexities, king Auduſta and Maccou came to them, accompained with two hundred Indians at the leaſt, whom our Frenchmen went forth to meete withall, and ſhewed the king in what neede of cordage they ſtood: who promiſed them to returne within two dayes, and to bring ſo much as ſhould ſuffice to furniſh the Pinneſſe with tackling. Our men being pleaſed with theſe good newes & promiſes, beſtowed vpon them certaine cutting hookes and ſhirtes. After their departure our men ſought all meanes to recouer roſen in the woodes, wherein they cut the Pine trees round about, out of which they drew ſufficient reaſonable quantitie to bray the veſſell. Alſo they gathered a kind of moſſe which groweth on the trees of this countrey, to ſerue to calke the ſame withall. There now wanted nothing but ſayles, which they made of their owne ſhirtes and of their ſheetes. Within few dayes after the Indian kings returned to Charles fort with ſo good ſtore of cordage, that there was found ſufficient for tackling of the ſmall Pinneſſe. Our men as glad as might be, vſed great liberalitie towards them, and at their leauing of the countrey, left them all the marchandiſe that remained, leauing them thereby ſo fully ſatiſfied, that they departed from them with all the contentation of the worlde. They went forward therefore to finiſh the Brigandine, & vſed ſo ſpeedie diligence, that within a ſhort time afterward they made it ready furniſhed with all things. In the meane ſeaſon the winde came ſo fit for their purpoſe that it ſeemed to inuite them to put to the Sea: which they did without delay, after they had ſet all their things in order. But before they departed they embarked their artillerie, their forge, and other munitions of warre which Captaine Ribault had left them, and then as much mill as they could gather together. But being drunken with the too exceſſiue ioy, which they had conceiued for their returning into France, or rather depriued of all foreſight & conſideration, without regarding the inconſtancie of the winds, which change in a moment, they put themſelues to ſea, and with ſo ſlender victuals, that the end of their interpriſe became vnluckily and vnfortunate.

Roſen to bray ſhips.
Moſſe to calke ſhips.
Cordage for tackle.

They put to the ſea without ſufficient victuals.

For after they had ſayled the third part of their way, they were ſurprized with calmes which did ſo much hinder them, that in three weekes they ſailed not aboue fiue and twentie leagues. During this time their victuals conſumed, and became ſo ſhort, that euery man was conſtrained to eate not paſt twelue graines of mill by the day, which may be in value as much as twelue peaſon. Yea, and this felicitie laſted not long: for their victuals failed them altogether at once: and they had nothing for their more aſſured refuge but their ſhooes and leather ierkins which they did eat. Touching their beuerage, ſome of them dranke the ſea water, others did drink their owne vrine: and they remained in ſuch deſperate neceſſitie a very long ſpace, during the which part of them died for hunger. Beſide this extreme famine, which did ſo grieuouſly oppreſſe them, they fell euery minute of an houre out of all hope euer to ſee France againe, inſomuch that they were conſtrained to caſt the water continually out, that on al ſides entred into their Barke. And euery day they fared worſe and worſe: for after they had eaten vp their ſhooes and their leather ierkins, there aroſe ſo boyſtrous a winde and ſo contrary to their courſe, that in the turning of a hande, the waues filled their veſſell halfe full of water and bruſed it vpon the one ſide. Being now more out of hope thē euer to eſcape out of this extreme peril, they cared not for caſting out of the water which now was almoſt ready to drowne them. And as men reſolued to die, euery one fell downe backewarde, and gaue themſelues ouer altogether vnto the will of the waues. When as one of them a little hauing taken heart vnto him declared vnto them how litle way they had to ſayle, aſſuring them, that if the winde held, they ſhould ſee land within three dayes. This man did ſo incourage them, that after they had throwne the water out of the Pinneſſe they remained three dayes without eating or drinking, except it were of the ſea water. When the time of his promiſe was expired, they were more troubled then they were before, ſeeing they could not diſcry any land. Wherefore in this extreme deſpaire certaine among them made this motion, that it was better that one man ſhould dye, then that ſo many men ſhould periſh: they agreed therefore that one ſhould die to ſuſtaine the others. Which thing was executed in the perſon of La Chere, of whom we haue ſpoken heretofore, whoſe fleſh was deuided equally among his fellowes: a thing ſo pitifull to recite, that my pen is loth to write it.

Their victuals vtterly conſumed.

They drinke their vrine for want of freſh water.

Extreme famine.

After ſo long time and tedious trauels, God of his goodneſſe vſing his accuſtomed fauour, changed their ſorow into ioy, and ſhewed vnto them the ſight of land. Whereof they were ſo exceeding glad, that the pleaſure cauſed them to remaine a long time as men without ſence: whereby they let the Pinneſſe flote this and that way without holding any right way or courſe. But a ſmall Engliſh barke boarded the veſſell, in the which there was a Frenchman which had bene in the firſt voyage into Florida, who eaſily knew them, and ſpake vnto them, and afterward gaue them meat and drinke. Incontinently they recouered their naturall courages, and declared vnto him at large all their nauigation. The Engliſhmen conſulted a long while what were beſt to be done, and in fine they reſolued to put on land thoſe that were moſt feeble, and to cary the reſt vnto the Queene of England, which purpoſed at that time to ſend into Florida. Thus you ſee in briefe that which happened to them which Captaine Iohn Ribault had left in Florida. And now will I go forward with the diſcourſe of mine owne voyage.

It ſeemeth hee meaneth the voyage intended by Stukely.

The ſecond voyage vnto Florida, made and written by Captaine Laudonniere, which fortified and inhabited there two Summers and one whole Winter.

After our arriuall at Diepe, at our comming home, from our firſt voyage (which was the twentieth of Iuly 1562) we found the ciuil warres begun, which was in part the cauſe why our men were not ſuccoured, as Captaine Iohn Ribault had promiſed them: whereof it followed that Captaine Albert was killed by his ſouldiers, and the country abandoned, as heretofore we haue ſufficiently diſcourſed, and as it may more at large be vnderſtood by thoſe men which were there in perſon. After the peace was made in France, my Lord Admiral De Chaſtillon ſhewed vnto the king, that he heard no newes at all of the men which Captaine Iohn Ribault had left in Florida, & that it were pity to ſuffer them to periſh. In which reſpect, the king was content he ſhould cauſe 3 ſhips to be furniſhed, the one of ſixe ſcore tunnes, the other of 100, and the third of 60, to ſeeke them out, and to ſuccour them.

The ciuill warres the cauſe why the Frenchmen were not ſupplied, which were left behinde in their firſt voyage.

My Lord Admirall therefore being well informed of the faithfull ſeruice which I had done, aſwell vnto his Maieſtie as to his predeceſſors kings of France, aduertiſed the king how able I was to doe him ſeruice in this voyage, which was the cauſe that he made me chiefe Captaine ouer theſe 3 ſhippes, and charged me to depart with diligence to performe his commandement, which for mine owne part I would not gaineſay, but rather thinking my ſelfe happy to haue bene choſen out among ſuch an infinite number of others, which in my iudgement were very well able to haue quitted themſelues in this charge, I embarked my ſelfe at New Hauen the 22 of Aprill 1564, and ſayled ſo, that we fell neere vnto the coaſt of England: and then I turned towards the South, to ſayle directly to the fortunate Iſlands, at this preſent called the Canaries, one of which called the Iſle Saluage (becauſe as I thinke it is altogether without inhabitants) was the firſt that our ſhips paſſed. Sayling therefore on forward, we landed the next day in the Iſle of Teneriffa, otherwiſe called the Pike, becauſe that in the middeſt thereof there is an exceeding high mountaine, neere as high as that of Etna, which riſeth vp like a pike, into the top whereof no man can go vp but from the middeſt of May vntill the middeſt of Auguſt, by reaſon of the ouer great colde which is there all the yere: which is a wonderfull ſtrange thing, conſidering that it is not paſt 27 degrees and an half diſtant from the Equator. We ſaw it all couered ouer with ſnow, although it were then but the fift of May. The inhabitants in this Iſle being heretofore purſued by the Spaniards, retired themſelues into this mountaine, where for a ſpace they made warre with them, and would not ſubmit themſelues to their obedience, neither by foule nor faire meanes, they diſdained ſo much the loſſe of their Iſland. For thoſe which went thither on the Spaniards behalfe, left their carkaſes there, ſo that not ſo much as one of them returned home to bring newes. Notwithſtanding in the ende, the inhabitants not able to liue in that place according to their nature, or for want of ſuch things as were neceſſary for the commoditie of their liuelyhood, did all die there. After I had furniſhed my ſelfe with ſome freſh water, very good and excellent, which ſprang out of a rocke at the foote of this mountaine, I continued my courſe toward the Weſt, wherein the windes fauoured me ſo well, that 15 dayes after our ſhips arriued ſafe and ſound at the Antilles: and going on land at the Iſle of Martinino, one of the firſt of them, the next day we arriued at Dominica, twelue leagues diſtant from the former.

The Iſle of Teneriffa, or the Pike.

The Iſle of Martinino. Dominica an Iſland.

Dominica is one of the fayreſt Iſlands of the Weſt, full of hilles, and of very good ſmell. Whoſe ſingularities deſiring to know as we paſſed, and ſeeking alſo to refreſh our ſelues with freſh water, I made the Mariners caſt anker, after wee had ſayled about halfe along the coaſt thereof. As ſoone as we had caſt anker, two Indians (inhabitants of that place) ſayled toward vs in two Canoas full of a fruite of great excellencie which they call Ananas. As they approched vnto our Barke, there was one of them which being in ſome miſdoubt of vs, went backe againe on land, and fled his way with as much ſpeede as he could poſſibly. Which our men perceiued and entred with diligence into the other Canoa, wherein they caught the poore Indian, & brought him vnto me. But the poore fellow became ſo aſtonied in beholding vs, that he knew not which way to behaue himſelfe, becauſe that (as afterward I vnderſtood) he feared that he was fallen into the Spaniards hands, of whom he had bene taken once before, and which, as he ſhewed vs, had cut of his ſtones. At length this poore Indian was ſecure of vs, and diſcourſed vnto vs of many things, whereof we receiued very ſmall pleaſure, becauſe we vnderſtood not his minde but by his ſignes. Then he deſired me to giue him leaue to depart, and promiſed me that he would bring me a thouſand preſents, whereunto I agreed on condition that he would haue patience vntill the next day, when I purpoſed to goe on land, where I ſuffered him to depart after I had giuen him a ſhirte, and certaine ſmall trifles, wherewith he departed very well contented from vs.

The place where we went on ſhore was hard by a very high Rocke, out of which there ran a litle riuer of ſweet and excellent good water: by which riuer we ſtayed certaine dayes to diſcouer the things which were worthy to be ſeene, and traffiqued dayly with the Indians: which aboue all things beſought vs that none of our men ſhould come neere their lodgings nor their gardens, otherwiſe that we ſhould giue them great cauſe of ielouſie, and that in ſo doing, wee ſhould not want of their fruite which they call Ananas, whereof they offered vs very liberally, receiuing in recompence certaine things of ſmall value. This notwithſtanding, it happened on a day that certaine of our men deſirous to ſee ſome new things in theſe ſtrange countries, walked through the woods: and following ſtill the litle riuers ſide, they ſpied two ſerpents of exceeding bignes, which went ſide by ſide ouerthwart the way. My ſouldiers went before them thinking to let them from going into the woods: but the ſerpents nothing at all aſtonied at theſe geſtures glanced into the buſhes with fearful hyſſings: yet, for all that, my men drew their ſwords and killed them, and found them afterward 9 great foote long, and as big as a mans leg. During this combate, certaine others more vndiſcreete went and gathered their Ananas in the Indians gardens, trampling through them without any deſcretion: and not therewithall contented they wẽt toward their dwellings; whereat the Indians were ſo much offended, that without regarding any thing they ruſhed vpon them and diſcharged their ſhot, ſo that they hit one of my men named Martine Chaueau, which remained behind. We could not know whether hee were killed on the place, or whether he were taken priſoner: for thoſe of his company had inough to doe to ſaue themſelues without thinking of their companion. Whereof Monſieur de Ottigni my Lieutenant being aduertiſed, ſent vnto me to know whether I thought good that he ſhould lay an ambuſh for the Indians which had either taken or killed our man, or whether hee ſhould go directly to their dwellings to know the trueth. I ſent vnto him after good deliberation hereupon, that he ſhould not attempt any thing, and that for diuers occaſions: but contrariwiſe that he ſhould embarke himſelf with al diligence, & conſequently al they that were on land: which he did with ſpeed. But as he ſayled towards our ſhips he perceiued along the ſhore a great number of Indians which began to charge them with their arrowes: hee for his part diſcharged ſtore of ſhot againſt them, yet was not able to hurt them, or by any meanes to ſurpriſe them: for which cauſe he quite forſooke them, and came vnto our ſhip. Where ſtaying vntill the next day morning we ſet ſayle following our wonted courſe, and keeping the ſame, we diſcouered diuerſe Iſles conquered by the Spaniards, as the Iſles of S. Chriſtopher, and of the Saintes, of Monſerrate, and La Redonda: Afterward we paſſed between Anguilla and Anegada, ſayling toward New France. Where we arriued 15 dayes after, to witte, on Thurſeday the 22 of Iune about 3 of the clocke in the afternoone, and landed neere a litle riuer which is 30 degrees diſtant from the Equator, and 10 lagues aboue Cape François drawing toward the South, and about thirtie leagues aboue the Riuer of May. After wee had ſtrooken ſayle and caſt anker athwart the Riuer, I determined to goe on ſhore to diſcouer the ſame. Therefore being accompanied with Monſieur Ottigni, with Monſieur de Arlac mine Enſigne, & a certaine number of Gentlemen and ſouldiers, I embarked my ſelfe about 3 or 4 of the clocke in the euening. And being arriued at the mouth of the riuer, I cauſed the chanell to be ſounded, which was found to be very ſhallow, although that farther within the ſame the water was there found reaſonable deepe, which ſeparateth it ſelfe into two great armes, whereof one runneth toward the South, and the other toward the North. Hauing thus ſearched the Riuer, I went on land to ſpeake with the Indians which waited for vs vpon the ſhore, which at our comming on land, came before vs, crying with a loude voyce in their Indian language, Antipola Bonaſſou, which is as much to ſay, as brother, friend, or ſome ſuch like thing. After they had made very much of vs, they they ſhewed vs their Paracouſſy, that is to ſay, their King and Gouernour, to whom I preſented certaine toyes, wherewith he was well pleaſed. And for mine owne part, I prayſe God continually, for the great loue which I haue found in theſe Sauages, which were ſory for nothing, but that the night approched, and made vs retire vnto our ſhips.

The great loue and courteſie of the Floridians.

For though they endeuoured by al meanes to make vs tary with them, and ſhewed by ſignes the deſire that they had to preſent vs with ſome rare things, yet neuertheleſſe for many iuſt and reaſonable occaſions I would not ſtay on ſhore all night: but excuſing my ſelfe for all their offers, I embarked my ſelfe againe and returned toward my ſhips. Howbeit, before my departure, I named this Riuer, the riuer of Dolphines, becauſe that at mine arriuall, I ſaw there a great number of Dolphines, which were playing in the mouth thereof. The next day the 23 of this moneth (becauſe that toward the South I had not found any commodious place for vs to inhabit, and to build a fort) I gaue commandement to weigh anker, & to hoiſe our ſailes to ſaile toward the riuer of May, where we arriued two dayes after, & caſt anker. Afterward going on land, with ſome number of Gentlemen and Souldiers to know for a certaintie the ſingularities of this place, we eſpyed the Paracouſſy of the countrey, which came towards vs (this was the very ſame that we ſaw in the voyage of Captaine Iohn Ribault) which hauing eſpied vs, cryed very far off, Antipola, Antipola: and being ſo ioyful that he could not containe himſelfe, he came to meet vs, accompanied then with two of his ſonnes, as faire and mightie perſons as might be found in al the world, which had nothing in their mouthes but this word, Amy, Amy: that is to ſay, friend, friend: yea, and knowing thoſe which were there in the firſt voyage, they went principally to them to vſe this ſpeech vnto them. There was in their trayne a great number of men and women, which ſtil made very much of vs, and by euident ſignes made vs vnderſtand how glad they were of our arriuall. This good entertainment paſt, the Paracouſſy prayed me to goe ſee the pillar which we had erected in the voyage of Iohn Ribault (as we haue declared heretofore) as a thing which they made great account of.

The riuer of Dolphins, called Seloy by the Sauages.

Their arriuall at the riuer of May.

Hauing yeelded vnto him and being come to the place where it was ſet vp, wee found the ſame crowned with crownes of Bay, and at the foote thereof many little baskets full of Mill which they call in their language Tapaga Tapola. Then when they came thither they kiſſed the ſame with great reuerence and beſought vs to do the like, which we would not denie them, to the ende we might drawe them to be more in friendſhip with vs. This done, the Paracouſſy tooke me by the hand, as if he had deſire to make me vnderſtand ſome great ſecret, & by ſignes ſhewed me very well vp within the riuer the limits of his dominion, and ſaid that he was called Paracouſſy Satourioua, which is as much as King Satourioua. His children haue the ſelfe ſame title of Paracouſſy: The eldeſt is named Athore, a man, I dare ſay, perfect in beautie, wiſedome, and honeſt ſobrietie, ſhewing by his modeſt grauitie that he deſerueth the name which he beareth, beſids that he is gentle and tractable. After we had ſoiourned a certaine ſpace with them, the Paracouſſy prayed one of his ſonnes to preſent vnto me a wedge of ſiluer, which hee did & that with a good wil: in recompence whereof I gaue him a cutting hooke and ſome other better preſent: wherewith he ſeemed to be very well pleaſed. Afterward we tooke our leaue of them, becauſe the night approched, & then returned to lodge in our ſhippes. Being allured with this good entertainment I failed not the next day to imbarke my ſelfe againe with my Lieutenant Ottigni and a number of ſouldiers to returne toward the Paracouſſy of the riuer of May, which of purpoſe waited for vs in the ſame place, where the day before we conferred with him. We found him vnder the ſhadow of an arbour accompanied with foureſcore Indians at the leaſt, and apparelled at that time after the Indian faſhion, to wit, with a great Harts ſkinne dreſſed like Chamois, and painted with deuices of ſtrange and diuers colours, but of ſo liuely a portrature, and repreſenting antiquity, with rules ſo iuſtly compaſſed, that there is no Painter ſo exquiſite that could finde fault therewith: the naturall diſpoſition of this ſtrange people is ſo perfect and well guided, that without any ayd and fauour of artes, they are able by the helpe of nature onely to content the eye of artizans, yea euen of thoſe which by their induſtry are able to aſpire vnto things moſt abſolute.

The pillar ſet vp before by Ribault crowned with garlands of Laurell and inuironed with ſmall paniers full of corne, worſhipped by the Sauages.

Paracouſſy Satourioua.

A wedge of ſiluer.

Then I aduertiſed Paracouſſy Satourioua, that my deſire was to diſcouer farther vp into the riuer, but that this ſhould be with ſuch diligence that I would come againe vnto him very ſpeedily: wherewith he was content, promiſing to ſtay for me in the place where he was: and for an earneſt of his promiſe, he offered me his goodly ſkinne, which I refuſed then, and promiſed to receiue it of him at my returne. For my part I gaue him certaine ſmall trifles, to the intent to retaine him in our friendſhip.

Departing from thence, I had not ſayled three leagues vp the riuer, ſtill being followed by the Indians, which coaſted me a long the riuer, crying ſtill, Amy, Amy, that is to ſay friende, friende: but I diſcouered an hill of meane height, neere which I went on land, hard by the fieldes that were ſowed with mil, at one corner whereof there was an houſe built for their lodging, which keepe and garde the mill: for there are ſuch numbers of Corniſh choughes in this Countrey, which continually deuoure and ſpoyle the mill, that the Indians are conſtrained to keepe and watch it, otherwiſe they ſhould be deceiued of their harueſt. I reſted my ſelfe in this place for certaine houres, & commanded Monſieur de Ottigni, and my Sergeant to enter into the woodes to ſearch out the dwellings of the Indians: where after they had gone awhile, they came vnto a Mariſh of Reeds, where finding their way to beſtopped, they reſted vnder the ſhadow of a mightie Bay tree to refreſh themſelues a little and to reſolue which way to take. Then they diſcouered, as it were on the ſuddaine, fiue Indians halfe hidden in the woodes, which ſeemed ſomewhat to diſtruſt our men, vntill they ſaid vnto them in the Indian language Antipola Bonaſſou, to the end that vnderſtanding their ſpeech they might come vnto vs more boldely, which they did incontinently. But becauſe they ſawe, that the foure that went laſt, bare vp the traine of the ſkinne wherewith he that went formoſt was apparrelled, our men imagined that the foremoſt muſt needes bee ſome man of greater qualitie then the reſt, ſeeing that withal they called him Paracouſſy, Paracouſſy, wherfore ſome of our company went towards him, and vſing him courteouſly ſhewed him, Monſieur de Ottigni, their Lieutenant, for whom they had made an harbour with Bay and Palme boughes after the Indian faſhion, to the ende that by ſuch ſignes the Sauages might thinke the Frenchmen had compained with ſuch as they at other times.

Croſſes.

Monſieur de Ottigni.

The curteſie of the Floridians to the French.

The Indian Paracouſſy drew neere to the French, and began to make him a long Oration, which tended to no other end, but that he beſought the Frenchmen very earneſtly to come and ſee his dwelling and his parents, which they granted him, and ſtraight for pledge of better amitie, he gaue vnto my Lieutenant Ottigni, the very ſkinne that he was clad with.

Then he tooke him by the hande, leading him right toward the Mariſhes, ouer which the Paracouſſy, Monſieur Ottigni, and certaine other of our men were borne vpon the Indians ſhouldiers: and the reſt which could not paſſe becauſe of the myre and reedes, went through the woodes, and followed a narrow path which led them foorth vntill they came vnto the Paracouſſyes dwelling: out of which there came about fiftie Indians to receiue our men gallantly, and to feaſt them after their manner. After which they brought at their entrance a great veſſell of earth, made after a ſtrange faſhion full of fountaine water cleare and very excellent.

This veſſell was borne by an Indian, and there was another younger which bare of this water in another little veſſell of wood, and preſented thereof to euery one to drinke, obſeruing in doing the ſame, a certaine order and reuerence, which hee made to each of them, to whome hee gaue drinke. Our thirſt well quenched by this meanes, and our men beeing ſufficiently refreſhed, the Paracouſſy brought them to his fathers lodging, one of the oldeſt men that liued vpon the earth. Our men regarding his age, began to make much of him, vſing this ſpeech, Amy, Amy, that is to ſay, friende, friende, whereat the olde ſier ſhewed himſelfe very glad.

Men of exceeding olde age.

Afterward they queſtioned with him concerning the courſe of his age: whereunto he made anſwere, ſhewing that he was the firſt liuing originall, from whence fiue generations were deſcended, as he ſhewed vnto them by another olde man that ſate directly ouer againſt him, which farre exceeded him in age. And this man was his father, which ſeemed to be rather a dead carkeis then a liuing body: for his ſinewes, his veines, his artiers, his bones, and other parts, appeared ſo cleerely thorow his ſkinne, that a man might eaſily tell them, and diſcerne them one from another. Alſo his age was ſo great, that the good man had loſt his ſight, and could not ſpeake one onely word but with exceeding great paine. Monſieur de Ottigni hauing ſeene ſo ſtrange a thing, turned to the yoonger of theſe two olde men, praying him to vouchſafe to anſwere him to that which he demanded touching his age. Then the olde man called a company of Indians, and ſtriking twiſe vpon his thigh, and laying his hand vpon two of them, he ſhewed him by ſignes, that theſe two were his ſonnes: againe ſmiting vpon their thighes, he ſhewed him others not ſo olde, which were the children of the two firſt, which he continued in the ſame maner vntill the fift generation. But though this olde man had his father aliue more olde then himſelfe, and that both of them did weare their haire very long, and as white as was poſſible, yet it was tolde them, that they might yet liue thirtie or fortie yeeres more by the courſe of nature: although the younger of them both was not leſſe then two hundred and fiftie yeeres olde. After he had ended his communication, hee commaunded two young Egles to be giuen to our men, which he had bred vp for his pleaſure in his houſe. Hee cauſed alſo little Paniers made of Palme leaues full of Gourds red and blew to bee deliuered vnto them. For recompence of which preſents he was ſatiſfied with French toyes.

Sauages in Florida of 250. yeres olde.
Egles in Florida.

These two olde men cauſed our men to bee guided backe againe to the place from whence they came, by the young Paracouſſy which had brought them thither. And hauing taken leaue of the Paracouſſy, they came and ſought me out in the place where I ſtayed, and rehearſed vnto mee all that they had ſeene, praying mee alſo that I would rewarde their guide, which ſo frankely and heartily had receiued them into his houſe, which I would not faile to doe by any meanes.

Nowe was I determined to ſearch out the qualities of the hill. Therefore I went right to the toppe thereof, where we found nothing elſe but Cedars, Palme, and Baytrees of ſo ſoueraigne odour, that Baulme ſmelleth nothing like in compariſon. The trees were enuironed rounde about with Vines bearing grapes in ſuch quantitie, that the number would ſuffice to make the place habitable. Beſides this fertilitie of the ſoyle for Vines, a man may ſee Eſquine wreathed about the ſhrubs in great quantitie. Touching the pleaſure of the place, the Sea may bee ſeene plaine and open from it, and more then ſixe great leagues off, neere the Riuer Belle, a man may beholde the medowes diuided aſunder into Iles and Iſlets enterlacing one another: Briefly the place is ſo pleaſant, that thoſe which are melancholicke would be inforced to change their humour.

Cedars, Palmes, Bayes exceeding ſweete. Abundance of grapes. Eſquine a drugge excellent againſt the pockes.

After I had ſtayed there a while, I imbarked againe my people to ſayle towards the mouth of the Riuer, where wee found the Paracouſſy, which according to his promiſe waited for vs. Wherefore to content him, we went on ſhore, and did him that reuerence that on our part was requiſite. Then hee gaue me the ſkinne ſo richly painted, and I recompenſed him with ſomewhat of our marchandiſe. I forgat not to demaund of him the place whence the wedge of ſiluer came which he had giuen me before: whereunto he made me a very ſudden anſwere, which notwithſtanding I vnderſtood not, which he well perceiued. And then he ſhewed me by euident ſignes that all of it came from a place more within the Riuer by certaine dayes iourneyes from this place, and declared vnto vs that all that which they had thereof, they gat it by force of armes of the inhabitants of this place, named by them Thimogoa, their moſt ancient and naturall enemies, as hee largely declared. Whereupon when I ſawe with what affection hee ſpake when hee pronounced Thimogoa, I vnderſtoode what he would ſay. And to bring my ſelfe more into his fauour, I promiſed him to accompany him with all my force, if hee would fight againſt them: which thing pleaſed him in ſuch ſorte, that from thenceforth hee promiſed himſelfe the victorie of them, and aſſured mee that hee would make a voyage thither within a ſhort ſpace, would cauſe ſtore of Mill to be prepared, and would commaund his men to make ready their Bowes, and furniſh themſelues with ſuch ſtore of arrowes, that nothing ſhould bee wanting to giue battaile to Thimogoa. In fine hee prayed mee very earneſtly not to faile of my promiſe, and in ſo doing, hee hoped to procure mee Golde and Siluer in ſuch good quantitie, that mine affaires ſhoulde take effect according to mine owne and his deſire.

Siluer certaine dayes iourney vp within the riuer of May.
Thimogoa mortall enemies to Satourioua.

The matter thus fully reſolued vpon, I tooke my leaue of him to returne vnto my ſhippes, where after wee had reſted our ſelues all the night following, wee hoyſed ſayles the next day very early in the morning, and ſayled towarde the Riuer of Seine, diſtant from the Riuer of May about foure leagues: and there continuing our courſe towarde the North, wee arriued at the mouth of Somme, which is not paſt ſixe leagues diſtant from the Riuer of Seine: where wee caſt Anker, and went on ſhoare to diſcouer that place as wee had done the reſt. There wee were graciouſly and courteouſly receiued of the Paracouſſy of the Countrey, which is one of the talleſt men and beſt proportioned that may bee founde. His wife ſate by him, which beſides her Indian beautie, wherewith ſhee was greatly endewed, had ſo vertuous a countenance and modeſt grauitie, that there was not one amongſt vs but did greatly commend her.; ſhee had in her traine fiue of her daughters of ſo good grace and ſo well brought vp, that I eaſily perſwaded my ſelfe that their mother was their Miſtreſſe, and had taught them well and ſtraightly to preſerue their honeſtie. After that the Paracouſſy had receiued vs as I haue ſayd, hee commaunded his wife to preſent mee with a certaine number of bullets of ſiluer, for his owne part hee preſented mee with his bowe and his arrowes, as hee had done vnto Captaine Iohn Ribault in our firſt voyage, which is a ſigne of a perpetuall amitie and alliance with thoſe which they honour with ſuch a kinde of preſent. In our diſcourſing with one another, wee entred into ſpeach as touching the exerciſe of armes. Then the Paracouſſy cauſed a corſelet to be ſet on end, and prayed me to make a proofe of our Harguebuzes and their bowes: but this proofe pleaſed him very little; for aſſoone as hee knew that our Harguebuzes did eaſily pearce that which all the force of their bowes could not hurt, he ſeemed to be ſorie, muſing with himſelfe how this thing might bee done. Neuertheleſſe, going about to diſſemble in his minde that which his countenance could not doe by any meanes, hee began to fall into another matter, and prayed vs very earneſtly to ſtay with him that night in his houſe or lodging, affirming that no greater happineſſe could come vnto him then our long abode, which he deſired to recompence with a thouſand preſents.

Laudonnieres conſultation with his company where it might be beſt for them to plant.

Neuertheleſſe wee could not grant him this poynt, but tooke our leaue of him to returne to our ſhippes: where ſoone after I cauſed all my companie to bee aſſembled, with the Maſters and Pilots of my ſhippes, to conſult together of the place whereof wee ſhould make choiſe to plant our habitation. Firſt I let them vnderſtand, howe none of them were ignorant, that the part which was towarde the Cape of Florida, was altogether a mariſh Countrey, and therefore vnprofitable for our inhabitation: A thing which could yeelde neither profite to the King, nor any contentment or pleaſure to vs, if peraduenture we would inhabite there. On the other ſide if wee paſſed further toward the North to ſeeke out Port Royall, it would be neither very profitable nor conuenient: at the leaſt if wee ſhould giue credit to the report of them which remained there a long time, although the Hauen were one of the faireſt of the Weſt Indies: but that in this caſe the queſtion was not ſo much of the beautie of the place, as of things neceſſary to ſuſtaine life. And that for our inhabiting it was much more needefull for vs to plant in places plentifull of victuall, then in goodly Hauens, faire, deepe and pleaſant to the view. In conſideration whereof that I was of opinion, if it ſeemed good vnto them, to ſeate our ſelues about the Riuer of May: ſeeing alſo that in our firſt voyage wee found the ſame onely among all the reſt to abounde in Maiz and corne, beſides the Golde and Siluer that was found there: a thing that put me in hope of ſome happie diſcouerie in time to come.

Gold and ſiluer found at the riuer of May.

June the 29.

After I had propoſed theſe things, euery one gaue his opinion thereof: and in fine all reſolued, namely thoſe which had beene with me in the firſt voyage, that it was expedient to ſeate themſelues rather on the Riuer of May then on any other, vntill they might heare newes out of France. This poynt being thus agreed vpon, wee ſayled toward the Riuer, and vſed ſuch diligence, that with the fauour of the windes wee arriued there the morrow after about the breake of day, which was on Thurſday the 29. of the moneth of Iune. Hauing caſt anker, I embarked all my ſtuffe and the ſouldiers of my companie, to ſayle right toward the opening of the Riuer: wherein we entred a good way vp, and found a Creeke of a reaſonable bigneſſe, which inuited vs to refreſh our ſelues a little, while wee repoſed our ſelues there. Afterward wee went on ſhoare to ſeeke out a place plaine without trees, which wee perceiued from the Creeke.

But becauſe wee found it not very commodious for vs to inhabite there: wee determined to returne vnto the place which wee had diſcouered before, when wee had ſayled vp the Riuer. This place is ioyning to a mountaine, and it ſeemed vnto vs more fit and commodious to build a fortreſſe, then that where we were laſt. Therefore we tooke our way towards the fortreſſe being guided therein by the young Paracouſſy which had ledde vs before to his fathers lodging. Afterward we found a large plaine couered with high Pinetrees diſtant a little from the other: vnder which wee perceiued an infinite number of Stagges which brayed amidſt the plaine, athwart the which we paſſed: then wee diſcouered a little hill adioyning vnto a great vale very greene and in forme flat: wherein were the faireſt medowes of the world, and graſſe to feede cattel. Moreouer it is inuironed with a great number of brookes of freſh water, & high woods, which make the vale more delectable to the eye. After I had taken the viewe thereof at mine eaſe, I named it at the requeſt of our ſouldiers, The Vale of Laudonniere. Thus we went forward. Anon hauing gone a little forward, we met an Indian woman of tall ſtature, which alſo was an Hermaphrodite, who came before vs with a great veſſell full of cleere fountaine water, wherwith ſhe greatly refreſhed vs. For we were exceeding faint by reaſon of the ardent heate which moleſted vs as we paſſed through thoſe high woods. And I beleeue that without the ſuccour of that Indian Hermaphrodite, or rather, if it had not bene for the great deſire which we had had to make vs reſolute of our ſelues, we had taken vp our lodging all night in the wood. Being therefore refreſhed by this meane, wee gathered our ſpirits together, and marching with a cheerefull courage, wee came to the place which wee had choſen to make our habitation in: whereupon at that inſtant neere the riuers brinke we ſtrowed a number of boughes and leaues, to take our reſt on them the night following, which wee found exceeding ſweete, becauſe of the paine which before we had taken in our trauell.

On the morrow about the breake of day, I commaunded a trumpet to be ſounded, that being aſſembled we might giue God thankes for our fauourable and happie arriuall. There wee ſang a Pſalme of thankeſgiuing vnto God, beſeeching him that it would pleaſe him of his grace to continue his accuſtomed goodneſſe toward vs his poore ſeruaunts, and ayde vs in all our enterpriſes, that all might turne to his glory and the aduancement of our King. The prayer ended, euery man began to take courage.

They began their planting with prayer to God.

Afterward hauing meaſured out a piece of ground in forme of a triangle, wee indeuoured our ſelues of all ſides, ſome to bring earth, ſome to cut fagots, and others to raiſe and make the rampire, for there was not a man that had not either a ſhouell, or cutting hooke, or hatchet, as well to make the ground plaine by cutting downe the trees, as for the building of the Fort, which we did haſten with ſuch cheerfulneſſe, that within few dayes the effect of our diligence was apparant: in which meane ſpace the Paracouſſy Satouriona our neereſt neighbour, & on whoſe ground wee built our Fort, came vſually accompanyed with his two ſonnes and a great number of Indians to offer to doe vs all courteſie. And I likewiſe for my part beſtowed diuers of our trifles frankely on him, to the end he might know the good will we bare him, and thereby make him more deſirous of our friendſhip, in ſuch ſort, that as the dayes increaſed, ſo our amitie and friendſhip increaſed alſo.

After that our Fort was brought into forme, I began to build a Grange to retire my munition and things neceſſarie for the defence of our Fort: praying the Paracouſſy to command his ſubiects to make vs a couering of Palme leaues, and this to the ende that when that was done, I might vnfraight my ſhippes, and put vnder couerture thoſe things that were in them. Suddenly the Paracouſſy commaunded in my preſence all the Indians of his companie to dreſſe the next day morning ſo good a number of Palme leaues, that the Grange was couered in leſſe then two dayes: ſo that buſineſſe was finiſhed. For in the ſpace of thoſe two dayes, the Indians neuer ceaſſed from working, ſome in fetching Palme leaues, others in interlacing of them: in ſuch ſort that their Kings commandement was executed as he deſired.

In Florida they couer their houſes with Palme leaues

Our Fort was built in forme of a triangle. The ſide towarde the Weſt, which was toward the lande, was incloſed with a little trench and raiſed with turues made in forme of a Battlement of nine foote high: the other ſide which was toward the Riuer, was incloſed with a Palliſado of plankes of timber after the maner that Gabions are made. On the South ſide there was a kinde of baſtion within which I cauſed an houſe for the munition to be built: it was all builded with fagots and ſand, ſauing about two or three foot high with turfes, whereof the battlements were made. In the middeſt I cauſed a great Court to be made of eighteene paces long and broad, in the middeſt whereof on the one ſide drawing toward the South I builded a Corps de gard, and an houſe on the other ſide toward the North, which I cauſed to bee raiſed ſomewhat too high: for within a ſhort while after the wind beat it down: and experience taught me, that we may not build with high ſtages in this Countrey, by reaſon of the windes whereunto it is ſubiect. One of the ſides that incloſed my Court, which I made very faire and large, reached vnto the Grange of my munitions: and on the other ſide towardes the Riuer was mine owne lodging, round about which were galleries all couered. The principall doore of my lodging was in the middeſt of the great place, and the other was towarde the Riuer. A good diſtance from the Fort I built an Ouen to auoyde the danger againſt fire, becauſe the houſes are of Palme leaues, which will ſoone be burnt after the fire catcheth holde of them, ſo that with much adoe a man ſhall haue leaſure to quench them. Loe here in briefe the deſcription of our Fortreſſe, which I named Caroline in the honour of our Prince King Charles.

Caroline.

After wee were furniſhed with that which was moſt neceſſarie, I would not loſe a minute of an houre, without imploying of the ſame in ſome vertuous exerciſe: therefore I charged Monſieur de Ottigni my Lieutenant, a man in trueth worthy of all honour for his honeſtie and vertue, to ſearch vp within the Riuer, what this Thimogoa might be, whereof the Paracouſſy Satouriona had ſpoken to vs ſo often at our comming on ſhoare. For execution hereof the Paracouſly gaue him two Indians for his guides, which taking vpon them to lead him in this voyage, ſeemed to goe vnto a wedding, ſo deſirous they were to fight with their enemies.

The firſt voyage twentie leagues.

Ten leagues further.

Mayrra a king rich in golde and ſiluer.

Being imbarked they hoiſed ſayle, and hauing ſayled about twentie leagues, the Indians which ſtill looked on this ſide and that ſide to eſpie ſome of their enemies, diſcouered three Canoas. And immediatly they began to crie Thimogoa, Thimogoa, and ſpake nothing elſe but to haſten forward to goe fight with them: which the Captaine ſeemed to be willing to doe, to content them. When they came to boord them, one of the Indians gat holde of an Halbert, another of an Coutelas in ſuch a rage, that hee would haue leapt into the water to haue fought with them alone. Neuertheleſſe Ottigni would not let them doe it, for while hee deferred to boord them, he gaue the others reſpite to turne the prowes of their Canoas toward the ſhoare, and ſo to eſcape into the woods. Againe, the meaning of Ottigni was not to make warre vpon them of Thimogoa, but rather to make them friendes, and to make them thenceforth to liue in peace one with another if it were poſſible, hoping by this meane to diſcouer dayly ſome new thing, & eſpecially the certaine courſe of the Riuer. For this purpoſe he cauſed the barke to retire, wherein were the two Indians his guides, and went with his men towarde the Canoas which were on the Riuers ſide. Being come vnto them, he put certaine trifles into them, and then retired a good way from them, which thing cauſed the Indians which were fled away to returne to their boats, and to vnderſtand by this ſigne, that thoſe of our Barke were none of their enemies, but rather come onely to traffique with them. Wherefore being thus aſſured of vs, they called to our men to come neere vnto them: which they did incontinently and ſet foote on lande, and ſpake freely vnto them, with diuers ceremonies ouer long to recount. In the ende Ottigni demaunded of them by ſignes if they had any Golde or Siluer among them. But they tolde him they had none as then: and that if he would ſend one of his men with them, they would bring him without danger into a place where they might haue ſome. Ottigni ſeeing them ſo willing, deliuered them one of his men which ſeemed very reſolute, to vndertake this voyage: this fellow ſtayed with them vntill tenne of the clocke the next morning, ſo that Captaine Ottigny ſomewhat offended with his long ſtay, ſayled ten great leagues further vp the Riuer: although he knew not which way he ſhould goe, yet he went ſo farre vp that hee eſpied the Boate wherein his ſouldier was: which reported vnto him, that the Indians would haue carried him three great dayes iourney further, & told him that a King named Mayrra rich in Gold and Siluer, dwelt in thoſe quarters, and that for ſmall quantitie of marchandiſe enough might be had of him: yet that hee would not hazard himſelfe himſelfe without his leaue, and that he brought but a very little Golde. This being done, our men returned toward our Fort Caroline, after they had left the ſouldier with the Indians to enfourme himſelfe more and more of ſuch things as he might diſcouer more at leaſure.

The ſecond voyage.

Fifteene dayes after this voyage to Thimogoa, I diſpatched Captaine Vaſſeur and my Sergeant alſo to returne againe into this Countrey, and to ſeeke out the ſouldier which remained there in the former voyage. Being therefore imbarked, they ſayled two whole dayes: and before they came to the dwelling of the Indians, they found two of them on the Riuers ſide, which were expreſly ſent vnto that place to deſcry whether any of their enemies were come to that part, with intention to ſurpriſe them, as they did vſually.

King Molloua.

Olata Ouae Vtina a great king.

Fiue or ſixe pound weight of ſiluer.

When they perceiued Captaine Vaſſeur, they knew incontinently that he was none of their enemies, and therefore made no difficultie to come neere vnto the Barke, and ſhewed him by ſignes that the Souldier which they ſought was not in that place, but was at that preſent in the houſe of King Molloua which was vaſſall vnto another great King named by them Olata Ouae Vtina: and that if the Captaine would ſayle thitherward, hee ſhould come thither very quickly: wherwith he was content, and cauſed his men to rowe to that part which the Indians ſhewed him: whereat they were ſo glad, that they ranne quickly before by land to declare his arriuall, which was at the lodging of king Molloua, after he had rowed not paſt halfe a league. While king Molloua had ended intertaining Captaine Vaſſeur and his men, the ſouldier came in with fiue or ſixe pounds weight of ſiluer which he had trucked and traffiqued with Indians.

Fortie kings vaſſals to Vtina.

This King cauſed bread to bee made, and fiſh to bee dreſſed after the Indian faſhion to feaſt our men: to whom, while they were at meate, hee made a diſcourſe of diuers other Kings his friends & allies, reckoning vp to the number of nine of them by name, to wit, Cadecha, Chilili, Eclauou, Enacappe, Calany, Anacharaqua, Omittaqua, Aequera, Moquoſo: all which with him to the number of more then fortie, hee aſſured vs to bee the vaſſals of the moſt renowmed Olata Ouae Vtina, This done, hee went about likewiſe to diſcouer the enemies of Ouae Vtina, in which number hee placed as the firſt the Paracouſſy Satourioua Monarch of the confines of the riuer of May, which hath vnder his obeyſance thirtie other Paracouſſies, whereof there were ten which were all his brethren, and that therefore hee was greatly eſteemed in thoſe partes: then hee named three others no leſſe puiſſant then Satourioua, whereof the firſt dwelt two dayes iourney from his lord Olata Ouae Vtina, and ordinarily made warre vpon him, whoſe name was Potanou, a man cruell in warre, but pitifull in the execution of his furie. For hee tooke the priſoners to mercy, being content to marke them on the left arme with a great marke like vnto a ſeale, and ſo imprinted as if it had bene touched with an hotte yron, then hee let them goe without any more hurt. The two others were named Onatheaqua, and Houſtaqua, being great Lords, and abounding in riches, and principally Onatheaqua, which dwelt neere vnto the high mountaines, wherein there was abundance of many rare things, and infinite quantitie of a kinde of ſlate ſtone, wherewith they made wedges to cleaue their wood. The occaſion which (as he ſayd) mooued Potanou to wage warre againſt Olata Ouae Vtina, was the feare that he had, leſt he and his companions ſhould get of that hard ſtone in his Countrey, wherewith they headed their arrowes, and could not get it in any neerer place.

King Potanou.

An exceeding rich place.

Beſides all this, Molloua recited to Captaine Vaſſeur, that the kings allies the vaſſals of the great Olata, armed their breſts, armes, thighes, legs, & foreheads with large plates of gold and ſiluer: and that by this meanes the arrowes that were diſcharged vpon them could do them no maner of hurt at all, but rather were broken againſt them. Hereupon Captaine Vaſſeur inquired whether the Kings Onatheaqua and Houſtaqua were like vnto vs. For by the deſcription that they made of them, he began to doubt whether they were Spaniards or no: but Molloua tolde him that they were not, but that they were Indians like the reſt, ſauing that they painted their faces with blacke, and that the reſt as Molloua, painted them with red. Then my Lieutenant Vaſſeur, and my Sergeant promiſed him, that one day I ſhould march with my forces into thoſe Countreys, and that ioyning my ſelfe with his Lord Olata, I would ſubdue the inhabitants of the higheſt of thoſe mountaines. Hee was very glad of this ſpeach, and anſwered that the leaſt of theſe Kings which hee had named, ſhould preſent vnto the Generall of theſe ſuccours the height of two foot of gold and ſiluer, which by force of armes they had already gotten of thoſe two Kings, Onatheaqua, and Houſtaqua.

The good cheere being done, and the diſcourſes ended, my men imbarked themſelues againe, with intention to bring mee thoſe good newes vnto the Fort Caroline. But after they had ſayled a very long while downe the Riuer, and were come within three leagues of vs, the tyde was ſo ſtrong againſt them, that they were conſtrained to goe on lande, and to retire themſelues becauſe of the night, vnto the dwelling of a certaine Paracouſſy named Molona, which ſhewed himſelfe very glad of their arriuall: for hee deſired to know ſome newes of Thimogoa, and thought that the French men went thither for none other occaſion but for to inuade them. Which Captaine Vaſſeur perceiuing, diſſembled ſo wel, that he made him beleeue that he went to Thimogoa with none other intention, but to ſubdue them, and to deſtroy them with the edge of the ſword without mercy, but that their purpoſe had not ſuch ſucceſſe as they deſired, becauſe that the people of Thimogoa being aduertiſed of this enterpriſe, retired into the woods, and ſaued themſelues by flight: that neuertheleſſe they had taken ſome as they were fleeing away, which carried no newes thereof vnto their fellowes.

The Parocouſſy was ſo glad of this relation, that he interrupted him, and aſked Vaſſeur of the beginning and maner of his execution, and prayed him that hee would ſhew him by ſignes howe all things paſſed. Immediatly Francis la Caille the Sergeant of my band tooke his ſword in his hand, ſaying, that with the point thereof he had thruſt through two Indians which ranne into the woods, and that his companions had done no leſſe for their partes. And that if fortune had ſo fauoured them, that they had not beene diſcouered by the men of Thimogoa, they had had a victorie moſt glorious and worthie of eternall memorie. Hereupou the Paracouſſy ſhewed himſelfe ſo well ſatiſfied, that he could not deuiſe how to gratifie our men, which hee cauſed to come into his houſe to feaſt them more honourably: and hauing made Captaine Vaſſeur to ſit next him, and in his owne chaire (which the Indians eſteeme for the chiefeſt honour) and then vnderneath him two of his ſonnes, goodly and mightie fellowes, hee commanded all the reſt to place themſelues as they thought good. This done, the Indians came according to their good cuſtome, to preſent their drinke Caſſine to the Paracouſſy, and then to certaine of his chiefeſt friends, and the Frenchmen. Then hee which brought it ſet the cup aſide, and drew out a little dagger ſtucke vp in the roofe of the houſe, and like a mad man he lift his head aloft, and ranne apace, and went and ſmote an Indian which ſate alone in one of the corners of the hall, crying with a loud voyce, Hyou, the poore Indian ſtirring not at all for the blowe, which he ſeemed to endure patiently. He which held the dagger went quickly to put the ſame in his former place, and began againe to giue vs drinke, as hee did before: but he had not long continued, and had ſcarce giuen three or foure thereof, but he left his bowle againe, tooke the dagger in his hand, and quickly returned vnto him which hee had ſtrocken before, to whom he gaue a very ſore blow on the ſide, crying Hyou, as he had done before: and then hee went to put the dagger in his place, and ſet himſelfe downe among the reſt. A little while after he that had bene ſtricken fell downe backwards, ſtretching out his armes and legs, as if hee had bene ready to yeeld vp the latter gaſpe. And then the younger ſonne of the Paracouſſy apparelled in a long white ſkinne, fell downe at the feete of him that was fallen backward, weeping bitterly halfe a quarter of an houre: after, two other of his brethren clad in like apparell, came about him that was ſo ſtricken, and began to ſigh pitifully. Their mother bearing a little infant in her armes came from another part, and going to the place where her ſonnes were, at the firſt ſhee vſed infinite numbers of outcries, then one while lifting vp her eyes to heauen, another while falling downe vnto the ground, ſhee cryed ſo dolefully, that her lamentable mournings would haue moued the moſt hard and ſtony heart in the world with pitie. Yet this ſufficed not, for there came in a companie of young gyrles, which did neuer leaue weeping for a long while in the place where the Indian was fallen downe, whom afterward they tooke, and with the ſaddeſt geſtures they could deuiſe, carried him away into another houſe a little way off from the great hall of the Paracouſſy, and continued their weepings and mournings by the ſpace of two long houres: in which meane while the Indians ceaſſed not to drinke Caſſine, but with ſuch ſilence that one word was not heard in the parlour.

Vaſſeur being grieued that he vnderſtood not theſe ceremonies, demanded of the Paracouſſy what theſe things meant: which anſwered him ſlowly, Thimogoa, Thimogoa, without ſaying any more. Being more diſpleaſed then he was before with ſo ſleight an anſwere, he turned vnto another Indian the Paracouſſyes brother, who was a Paracouſſy as well as his brother, called Malica, which made him a like anſwere as hee did at the firſt, praying him to aſke no more of theſe matters, and to haue patience for that time. The ſubtill old Paracouſſy prayed him within a while after, to ſhew him his ſword, which he would not denie him, thinking that hee would haue beheld the faſhion of his weapons: but he ſoone perceiued that it was to another ende: for the old man holding it in his hand, beheld it a long while on euery place, to ſee if he could finde any blood vpon it, which might ſhew that any of their enemies had bene killed: for the Indians are woont to bring their weapons wherewith their enemies haue bene defeated, with ſome blood vpon them, for a token of their victories. But ſeeing no ſigne thereof vpon it, he was vpon the point to ſay vnto him, that he had killed none of the men of Thimogoa: when as Vaſſeur preuenting that which hee might obiect, declared and ſhewed vnto him by ſignes, the maner of his enterpriſe, adding, that by reaſon of the two Indians which he had ſlaine, his ſword was ſo bloudy, that hee was inforced to waſh and make it cleane a long while in the Riuer: which the olde man beleeued to be like to be true, and made no maner of replie thereunto.

King Malica.

Vaſſeur, La Caille, and their other companions went out of the hal to go into the roome whither they had carried the Indian: there they found the Paracouſſy ſitting vpon tapiſtries made of ſmall reedes, which was at meate after the Indian faſhion, and the Indian that was ſmitten hard by him, lying vpon the ſelfe ſame tapiſtry, about whom ſtoode the wife of the Paracouſſy, with all the young damſels which before bewailed him in the hall: which did nothing elſe but warme a great deale of moſſe in ſtead of napkins to rub the Indians ſide. Hereupon our men asked the Paracouſſy againe for what occaſion the Indian was ſo perſecuted in his preſence: hee anſwered, that this was nothing elſe but a kinde of ceremonie, whereby they would call to minde the death and perſecutions of the Paracouſſies their anceſtours executed by their enemie Thimogoa: alleaging moreouer, that as often as he himſelfe, or any of his friends and allies returned from the Countrey, whithout they brought the heads of their enemies, or without bringing home ſome priſoner, hee vſed for a perpetuall memorie of all his predeceſſors, to beate the beſt beloued of all his children with the ſelfe ſame weapons wherewith they had bene killed in times paſt: to the ende that by renewing of the wound their death ſhould be lamented afreſh. Now whē they were thus informed of thoſe ceremonies, they thanked the Paracouſſy for their good intertainement which they had receiued, & ſo ſetting ſaile came to me vnto the fort: where they declared all vnto me as I haue recited it heretofore. The eight and twentieth of July our ſhippes departed to returne into France. And within a while, about two moneths after our arriuall in Florida, the Paracouſſy Satourioua ſent certaine Indians vnto mee to knowe whether I would ſtande to my promiſe which I had made him at my firſt arriuall in that Countrey, which was that I would ſhewe my ſelfe friend to his friendes, and enemie vnto his enemies, and alſo to accompany him with a good number of Harquebuzes, when he ſhould ſee it expedient, and ſhould finde a fit occaſion to goe to warre. Now ſeeing he reſted vpon this promiſe, he prayed mee not to deferre the ſame: ſeeing alſo that making accompt thereof, hee had taken ſuch good order for the execution of his enterpriſe, that he was ready, and was furniſhed with all things that were neceſſary for the voyage: I made him anſwere, that for his amitie I would not purchaſe the enmitie of the other, and that albeit I would, yet notwithſtanding I wanted meanes to doe it. For it behoued mee at that preſent to make prouiſion of victuals and munition for the defence of my Fort. On the other ſide, that my Barkes were nothing ready, and that this enterpriſe would require time: Moreouer, that the Paracouſſy Satourioua might holde himſelfe ready to depart within two moneths, and that then I would thinke of fulfilling my promiſe to him.

The returne of their ſhips toward France the 28. of July.

The Indians caried this anſwere to their Paracouſſy, which was litle pleaſed with it, becauſe hee could not deferre his execution or expedition, aſwell becauſe all his victuals were ready, as alſo becauſe tenne other Paracouſſies were aſſembled with him for the performance of this enterpriſe. The ceremonie which this Sauage vſed before hee embarked his armie deſerueth not to be forgotten. For when hee was ſet downe by the Riuers ſide, being compaſſed about with ten other Paracouſſies, hee commaunded water to be brought him ſpeedily. This done, looking vp into heauen, he fell to diſcourſe of diuers things with geſtures that ſhewed him to be in exceeding great choller, which made him one while ſhake his head hither and thither, and by and by with I wote not what furie to turne his face toward the Countrey of his enemies, and to threaten to kill them. Hee oftentimes looked vpon the Sunne, praying him to graunt him a glorious victory of his enemies. Which when hee had done by the ſpace of halfe an houre, hee ſprinkled with his hand a little of the water which hee helde in a veſſell vpon the heads of the Paracouſſies, and caſt the reſt as it were in a rage and deſpite into a fire which was there prepared for the purpoſe. This done, hee cried out thriſe, He Thimogoa, and was followed with fiue hundreth Indians at the leaſt, which were there aſſembled, which cried all with one voyce, He Thimogoa. This ceremonie, as a certaine Indian tolde mee familiarly, ſignified nothing elſe, but that Satourioua beſought the Sunne to graunt vnto him ſo happy a victory, that hee might ſhed his enemies blood, as he had ſhed that water at his pleaſure. Moreouer, that the Paracouſſies which were ſprinckled with a part of that water, might returne with the heads of their enemies, which is the onely and chiefe triumph of their victories.

The ceremonie which they vſe before they goe to warre.

Satourioua followed with fiue hundreth Indians.

The Paracouſſy Satourioua had no ſooner ended his ceremonies and had taken a viewe of all his company, but he embarked himſelfe, and vſed ſuch diligence with his Almadies or boates, that the next day two houres before the Sunnes ſet, he arriued on the territories of his enemies about eight or tenne leagues from their villages. Afterward cauſing them all to goe on land, hee aſſembled his counſell, wherein it was agreed that fiue of the Paracouſsies ſhould ſaile vp the Riuer with halfe of the troupes, and by the breake of the day ſhould approche vnto the dwelling of their enemie: for his owne part, that hee would take his iourney through the woods and forreſts as ſecretly as hee coulde: that when they were come thither, as well they that went by water as hee which went by land ſhould not faile by the breake of the day to enter into the village, and cut them all in pieces, except the women and little children.

Conſultation before they aſſault their enemies.

These things which were thus agreed vpon, were executed with as great fury as was poſſible: which when they had done, they tooke the heades of their enemies which they had ſlaine, and cut off their haire round about with a piece of their ſkulles: they tooke alſo foure and twentie priſoners, which they led away, and retired themſelues immediatly vnto their Boates which wayted for them. Being come thither, they beganne to ſinge praiſes vnto the Sunne, to whom they attributed their victorie. And afterwards they put the ſkins of thoſe heads on the end of their iauelings, and went altogether toward the territories of Paracouſſy Omoloa, one of them which was in the company. Being come thither, they deuided their priſoners equally to each of the Paracouſſies, and left thirteene of them to Satourioua, which ſtraightway diſpatched an Indian his ſubiect, to carry newes before of the victory to them which ſtayed at home to guard their houſes, which immediatly beganne to weepe. But aſſoone as night was come, they neuer left dancing and playing a thouſand gambols in honour of the feaſt.

The next day the Paracouſſy Satourioua came home, who before hee entred into his lodging cauſed all the hairie ſkuls of his enemies to bee ſet vp before his doore, and crowned them with branches of Lawrell, ſhewing by this glorious ſpectacle the triumph of the victory which hee had obtained. Straightway beganne lamentation and mournings, which aſſoone as the night beganne were turned into pleaſures and dances.

After that I was aduertiſed of theſe things, I ſent a Souldier vnto Satourioua, praying him to ſende mee two of his priſoners: which hee denied mee, ſaying that hee was nothing beholding vnto mee, and that I had broken my promiſe, againſt the oath which I had ſworne vnto him at my arriuall. Which when I vnderſtoode by my Souldier, which was come backe with ſpeede, I deuiſed howe I might be reuenged of this Sauage, and to make him know how dearely this bolde brauado of his ſhould coſt him: therefore I commanded my Sergeant to prouide mee twentie Souldiers to goe with mee to the houſe of Satourioua: Where after I was come and entered into the hall without any maner of ſalutation, I went and ſate mee downe by him, and ſtayed a long while without ſpeaking any worde vnto him, or ſhewing him any ſigne of friendſhip, which thing put him deepely in his dumpes: beſides that certaine Souldiers remained at the gate, to whom I had giuen expreſſe commaundement to ſuffer no Indian to goe foorth: hauing ſtoode ſtill about halfe an houre with this countenance, at length I demaunded where the priſoners were which hee had taken at Thimogoa, and commaunded them preſently to bee brought vnto me.

Whereunto the Paracouſſy angry at the heart, and aſtonied wonderfully, ſtoode a long while without making any anſwere, notwithſtanding at laſt hee anſwered me very ſtoutly, that being afraide to ſee vs comming thither in ſuch warrelike maner they fled into the woods, and that not knowing which way they were gone, they were not able by any meanes to bring them againe; Then I ſeemed to make as though I vnderſtood not what he ſaide, and aſked for his priſoners againe, and for ſome of his principall allies. Then Satourioua commaunded his ſonne Athore to ſeeke out the priſoners, and to cauſe them to be brought into that place, which thing he did within an houre after.

Athore.

After they were come to the lodging of the Paracouſſy, they humbly ſaluted mee, and lifting vp their hands before me, they would haue fallen downe proſtrate as it were at my feet: but I would not ſuffer them, and ſoone after ledde them away with me vnto my owne Fort. The Paracouſſy being wonderfully offended with this brauado, bethought himſelfe by all meanes how hee might be reuenged of vs. But to giue vs no ſuſpition thereof, and the better to couer his intention, hee ſent his meſſengers oftentimes vnto vs bringing alwayes with them ſome kinde of preſents. Among others one day hee ſent three Indians, which brought vs two baſkets full of great Pumpions, much more excellent then thoſe which we haue in France, and promiſed me in their Kings behalfe, that during mine abode in that Countrey, I ſhould neuer want victuals: I thanked them for their Kings good will, and ſignified vnto them the great deſire which I had, aſwell for the benefit of Satourioua, as for the quiet of his Subiects, to make a peace betweene him and thoſe of Thimogoa: which thing coulde not chooſe but turne to their great benefite, ſeeing that being allied with the Kings of thoſe parts, hee had an open paſſage againſt Onatheaqua his ancient enemie, which otherwiſe he could not ſet vpon. Moreouer that Olata Ouae Vtina was ſo mightie a Paracouſſy, that Satourioua was not able to withſtand his forces: but being agreed together they might eaſily ouerthrow all their enemies, and might paſſe the confines of the fartheſt Riuers that were towards the South. The meſſengers prayed mee to haue patience vntill the morowe, at what time they would come againe vnto me to certifie me of their Lords inclination: which they failed not to doe, aduertiſing me that Paracouſſy Satourioua was the gladdeſt man in the world to treate of this accord (although indeed hee was quite contrary) and that he beſought mee to be diligent therein, promiſing to obſerue and performe whatſoeuer I ſhould agree vpon with thoſe of Thimogoa: which things the meſſengers alſo rehearſed vnto the priſoners which I had ledde away. After they were departed, I reſolued within two dayes to ſende backe againe the priſoners to Olata Ouae Vtina, whoſe ſubiects they were: but before I embarked them, I gaue them certaine ſmall trifles, which were little kniues or tablets of glaſſe, wherein the image of King Charles the ninth was drawen very liuely, for which they gaue me very great thankes, as alſo for the honeſt entertainment which was giuen them at the Fort Caroline. After this they embarked themſelues, with Captaine Vaſſeur, and with Monſieur de Arlac mine Enſigne, which I had ſent of purpoſe to remaine a certaine time with Ouae Vtina, hoping that the fauour of this great Paracouſſy would ſerue my turne greatly to make my diſcoueries in time to come. I ſent with him alſo one of my Sergeants, and ſixe gallant Souldiers.

Excellent Pumpions.

Thus things paſſed on this maner, and the hatred of Paracouſſy Satourioua againſt mee did ſtill continue, vntil that on the nine and twentieth of Auguſt a lightning from heauen fell within halfe a league of our Fort, more worthy I beleeue to be wondered at, and to bee put in writing, then all the ſtrange ſignes which haue bene ſeene in times paſt, and whereof the hiſtories haue neuer written. For although the medowes were at that ſeaſon all greene, and halfe couered ouer with water, neuertheleſſe the lightning in one inſtant conſumed aboue fiue hundred acres therewith, and burned with the ardent heate thereof all the foules which tooke their paſtime in the medowes, which thing continued for three dayes ſpace, which cauſed vs not a little to muſe, not being able to iudge whereof this fire proceeded: for one while wee thought that the Indians had burnt their houſes, and abandoned their places for feare of vs: another while wee thought that they had diſcouered ſome ſhippes in the Sea, and that according to their cuſtome they had kindled many fires here and there, to ſignifie that their Countrey was inhabited: neuertheleſſe being not aſſured, I determined to ſende to Paracouſſy Serranay to knowe the trueth thereof. But euen as I was vpon the point to ſende one by boate to diſcouer the matter, ſixe Indians came vnto mee from Paracouſſy Allimacany, which at their firſt entrie made vnto mee a long diſcourſe, and a very large and ample oration (after they had preſented mee with certaine baſkets full of Maiz, of Pompions and of Grapes) of the louing amitie which Allimacany deſired to continue with mee, and that hee looked from day to day when it would pleaſe mee to employ him in my ſeruice. Therefore conſidering the ſeruiceable affection that hee bare vnto mee, hee found it very ſtrange, that I thus diſcharged mine Ordinance againſt his dwelling, which had burnt vp an infinite ſight of greene medowes, and conſumed euen downe vnto the bottome of the water, and came ſo neere vnto his manſion, that hee thought hee ſawe the fire in his houſe: wherefore hee beſought mee moſt humbly to commaund my men that they would not ſhoote any more towards his lodging, otherwiſe that hereafter he ſhould be conſtrained to abandon his countrey, and to retire himſelfe into ſome place further off from vs.

The Sauages thinke the lightning to be diſcharging of the Chriſtians Ordinance.

Hauing vnderſtood the fooliſh opinion of this man, which notwithſtanding coulde not chooſe but bee very profitable for vs, I diſſembled what I thought thereof for that time, and anſwered the Indians with a cheerefull countenance, that the relation which they made vnto mee of the obedience of their Paracouſſy did pleaſe mee right well, becauſe that before hee had not behaued himſelfe in ſuch ſort towards mee, eſpecially when I ſummoned him to ſende mee the priſoners of great Olata Ouae Vtina which he detained, whereof notwithſtanding he made no great accompt, which was the principall cauſe wherefore I had diſcharged mine Ordinance againſt him: not that I meant to reach vnto his houſe (as I might haue done eaſily, if it had pleaſed me) but that I was content to ſhoote the halfe way to make him knowe my force: aſſuring him furthermore, that on condition that he would continue in his good affection, no more ordinance ſhould be diſcharged againſt him hereafter: and beſides that I would become his faithfull protectour againſt his greateſt enemies.

Laudonniere vſed the preſent occaſion to his profite.

The Indians contented with mine anſwere returned to aſſure their Paracouſſy, which notwithſtanding the aſſurance withdrewe himſelfe from his dwelling twentie or fiue and twentie leagues off, and that for the ſpace of more then two moneths. After that three dayes were expired, the fire was quite extinguiſhed. But for two dayes after there followed ſuch an exceſſiue heate in the aire, that the Riuer neere vnto which we planted our habitation, became ſo hoat, that I thinke it was almoſt ready to ſeeth. For there died ſo great abundance of fiſh, and that of ſo many diuers ſorts, that in the mouth of the Riuer onely there were founde dead ynough to haue loaden fiftie Carts, whereof there iſſued a putrefaction in the aire, which bred many dangerous diſeaſes amongſt vs, inſomuch that moſt of my men fell ſicke, and almoſt ready to ende their dayes. Yet notwithſtanding it pleaſed our mercifull God ſo to prouide by his prouidence, that all our men recouered their health without the loſſe of any one of them.

A wonderfull heate.

Monſieur de Arlac, Captaine Vaſſeur, and one of my Sergeants being embarked with their tenne Souldiers about the tenth of September, to cary backe the priſoners vnto Vtina, ſailed ſo farre vp the Riuer, that they diſcouered a place called Mayarqua diſtant from our Fort about foureſcore leagues, where the Indians gaue them good entertainement, and in many other villages which they found. From this place they rowed to the dwelling of Paracouſſy Vtina, which after hee had feaſted them according to his abilitie and power, prayed Monſieur de Arlac and all his Souldiers to ſtay a while with him, to ayde and aſſiſt him in battaile againſt one of his enemies called Potanou, whereunto Monſieur de Arlac conſented willingly. And becauſe hee knew not how long he might haue occaſion to ſtay in theſe parts, hee ſent mee Captaine Vaſſeur and the Barke backe againe, which brought home onely fiue Souldiers with him.

take his enemie Potanou in the morning by the breake of the day: to bring this to paſſe, hee made his men to trauaile all the night, which might be in number two hundred perſons, ſo well aduiſed, that they prayed our French-ſhot to be in the fore-front, to the ende (as they ſaide) that the noyſe of their pieces might aſtoniſh their enemies: notwithſtanding they coulde not march ſo ſecretly, but that thoſe of the village of Potanou, diſtant from the dwelling of Vtina about fiue and twentie leagues, were ware of them: which ſuddenly employed and beſtowed all their endeuour to defend their village encloſed all with trees, and iſſued out in great companies: but finding themſelues charged with ſhotte, (a thing wherewith they neuer had bene acquainted) alſo beholding the Captaine of their bande fall downe dead in the beginning of their ſkirmiſh, with a ſhot of an Harquebuſe which ſtrooke him in the forehead, diſcharged by the hande of Monſieur de Arlac, they left the place: and the Indians of Vtina gate into the village, taking men, women, and children priſoners. Thus Paracouſſy Vtina obtained the victory by the ayde of our men, which ſlew many of his enemies, and loſt in this conflict one of their companions, wherewith Vtina was very much grieued. Eight or tenne dayes after, I ſent Captaine Vaſſeur backe againe with a Barke to fetch home Monſieur de Arlac and his Souldiers, which at their returne brought mee certaine preſents from Vtina, as ſome ſiluer, a ſmall quantitie of golde, painted ſkinnes, and other things, with a thouſand thankes, which the Paracouſſy gaue me, which promiſed that if in any enterpriſe of importance I ſhould haue neede of his men, he would furniſh mee with three hundreth and aboue.

A dangerous practiſe againſt the Captaine and his Lieutenant.

While I thus trauailed to purchaſe friends, & to practiſe one while with one here, an other while with another there, certaine Souldiers of my company were ſuborned vnder hand by one named la Roquette of the Countrey of Perigort, which put in their heads that hee was a great Magician, and that by the ſecrets of Art-magicke he had diſcouered a Mine of golde and ſiluer farre vp within the Riuer, whereby (vpon the loſſe of his life,) euery Souldier ſhould receiue in ready Bullion the value of tenne thouſand Crownes, beſide and aboue fifteene hundred thouſand which ſhould be reſerued for the Kings Maieſtie: wherefore they allied themſelues with La Roquette and another of his confederates, whoſe name was Le Genre, in whom notwithſtanding I had great affiance. This Genre exceeding deſirous to enrich himſelfe in thoſe parts, and ſeeking to be reuenged, becauſe I would not giue him the carriage of the Paquet into France, ſecretly enfourmed the Souldiers that were already ſuborned by La Roquette, that I would depriue them of this great gaine, in that I did ſet them dayly on worke, not ſending them on euery ſide to diſcouer the Countreys: therefore that it were a good deede, after they had made mee vnderſtand ſo much, to ſeeke meanes to diſpatch mee out of the way, and to chooſe another Captaine in my place, if I would not giue them victuals according to their diſordinate appetite. Hee alſo brought mee word hereof himſelfe, making a large diſcourſe vnto mee of the good affection of the Souldiers, which all beſought mee that I would conduct them to the Countreys where the Mine was: I made him anſwere that all could not goe thither, and that it was neceſſary before their departure to ſettle our Fortreſſe in ſuch eſtate, that thoſe which were to ſtay at home behind ſhould remaine in ſecuritie againſt the Indians which might ſurpriſe them. Furthermore, that their maner of proceeding ſeemed ſtrange vnto mee, for that they imagined, that the Kings Maieſtie was at the charges of our voyage for none other ende, but onely to enrich them at their firſt arriuall, in as much as they ſhewed themſelues much more giuen vnto couetouſneſſe, then vnto the ſeruice of their Prince: But ſeeing mine anſwere tended vnto none other ende but to make our Fortreſſe ſtrong and defenſible, they determined to trauaile in the worke, and made an enſigne of olde linnen, which ordinarily they bare vpon the rampart when they went to woorke, alwayes wearing their weapons, which I thought they had done to incourage themſelues to worke the better. But as I perceiued afterwards, and that by the confeſſion of Genre ſent mee in letters which he writ to mee of that matter, theſe gentle Souldiers did the ſame for none other ende, but to haue killed mee, and my Lieutenant alſo, if by chance I had giuen them any hard ſpeeches.

Laudonniers Apothecarie.

About the twentieth of September, as I came home from the woods and coppiſes to finiſh the building of my Fort, (and that according to my vſuall maner, I marched firſt to giue encouragement vnto my Souldiers) I chafed my ſelfe in ſuch ſort, that I fell into a ſore and grieuous ſickeneſſe, whereof I thought I ſhould haue died: During which ſickeneſſe, I called Le Genre often vnto mee, as one that I truſted aboue all others, and of whoſe conſpiracies I doubted not any whit at all. In this meane while aſſembling his complices, ſometime in his chamber and ſometime in the woods to conſult with them, hee ſpake vnto them to chooſe another Captaine beſides mee, to the intent to put mee to death: but being not able by open force to execute his miſchieuous intention, hee gate him vnto mine Apothecarie, praying him inſtantly to mingle in my medicine, which I was to receiue one or two dayes after, ſome drugge that ſhould make mee pitch ouer the pearch, or at the leaſt that hee would giue him a little Arſenike or quicke Siluer, which hee himſelfe would put into my drinke. But the Apothecary denied him, as did in like maner Maſter S. which was Maſter of the fire-workes. Thus wholly diſappointed of both his meanes, hee with certaine others reſolued to hide a little barrell of gunne-powder vnderneath my bed, and by a traine to ſet it on fire.

The Maſter of the fire-workes.

Vpon theſe practiſes a Gentleman which I had diſpatched to returne into France, being about to take his leaue of me, aduertiſed me, that Gieure had giuen him a booke full of all kinde of lewde inuectiues and ſlanders againſt me, againſt Monſieur de Ottigny, and againſt the principal of my company: vpon which occaſion I aſſembled all my Souldiers together, and Captaine Bourdet with all his, which on the fourth of September arriued in the roade, and were come into our Riuer. In their preſence I cauſed the contents of the booke to bee read alowde, that they might beare record of the vntruths that were written againſt mee. Gieure, which had gotten him into the woods for feare of being taken, (where he liued for a while after with the Sauages by my permiſſion,) writ vnto mee often, and in many of his letters confeſſed vnto mee, that he had deſerued death, condemning himſelfe ſo farre foorth, that he referred all to my mercie and pitie.

Captaine Bourdet arriued in Florida the 4. of September.

The ſeuenth or eighth day of Nouember, after I had cauſed ſufficient prouiſion of ſuch victuals as were needefull to bee made, I ſent two of my men, to wit, La Roche Ferriere, and another towarde King Vtina, to diſcouer euery day more and more of the Countrey: where hee was the ſpace of fiue or ſixe moneths, during which hee diſcouered many ſmall villages, and among others one named Hoſtaqua, the King whereof being deſirous of my friendſhip, ſent vnto mee a quiuer made of a Luſerns ſkinne full of arrowes, a couple of bowes, foure or fiue ſkinnes painted after their maner, and a cheine of Siluer weying about a pounde weight. In recompence of which preſents I ſent him two whole ſutes of apparell, with certaine cutting hookes or hatchets.

After theſe things therefore in this ſort paſſed, about the tenth of this moneth, Captaine Bourdet determined to leaue mee and to returne into France. Then I requeſted him, yea rather was exceeding importunate with him, to carry home with him ſome ſixe or ſeuen Souldiers, whom I coulde not truſt by any meanes: which hee did for my ſake, and would not charge himſelfe with Gieure, which offered him a great ſumme of money, if it would pleaſe him to carry him into France: hee tranſported him onely to the other ſide of the Riuer. Three dayes after his departure thirteene Mariners which I had brought out of France, ſuborned by certaine other Mariners which Captaine Bourdet had left me, ſtole away my Barkes in maner following. Theſe Mariners of Captaine Bourdet put mine in the head, that if they had ſuch Barkes as mine were, they might gaine very much in the Iſles of the Antilles, and make an exceeding profitable voyage. Hereupon they beganne to deuiſe howe they might ſteale away my Barkes, and conſulted that when I ſhould command them to goe vnto the village of Sarauahi diſtant about a league and an halfe from our Fort, and ſituated vpon an arme of the Riuer, (whither according to my maner I ſent them dayly to ſeeke clay, to make bricke and morter for our houſes) they would returne no more, but would furniſh themſelues with victuals as well as they might poſſibly: and then would embarke themſelues all in one veſſell, and would goe their way: as in deede they did. And that which was worſe, two Flemiſh Carpenters, which the ſaide Bourdet had left mee, ſtole away the other Barke, and before their departure cut the cables of the Barke, and of the ſhip-boate, that it might goe away with the tyde, that I might not purſue them: ſo that I remained without either Barke or boate, which fell out as vnluckily for mee as was poſſible. For I was ready to imbarke my ſelfe with all ſpeede, to diſcouer as farre vp our Riuer, as I might by any meanes. Nowe my Mariners, (as I vnderſtood afterwards) tooke a Barke that was a paſſenger of the Spaniards neere the Iſle of Cuba, wherein they founde a certaine quantitie of golde and ſiluer, which they ſeazed vpon. And hauing this bootie they lay a while at Sea, vntill their victuals beganne to faile them: which was the cauſe, that oppreſſed with famine they came vnto Hauana the principall Towne of the Iſle of Cuba: whereupon proceeded that miſchiefe which hereafter I will declare more at large. When I ſaw my Barkes returned not at their wonted houre, and ſuſpecting that which fell out in deed, I commanded my Carpenters with all diligence to make a little boat with a flat bottome, to ſearch thoſe Riuers for ſome newes of theſe Mariners. The boate diſpatched within a day and a night, by reaſon that my Carpenters found planks and timber ready ſawed to their hands, as commonly I cauſed my Sawyers to prouide it, I ſent men to ſeeke ſome newes of my thieues: but all was in vaine. Therefore I determined to cauſe two great Barkes to be built, eche of which might be thirtie fiue, or thirtie ſixe foote long in the keele,

The thirde ſedition.

By Peru the French meane the coaſt of Carthagena and Nombre de Dios.

And now the worke was very well forwarde which I ſet my workemen about, when ambition and auarice, the mother of all miſchiefe, tooke roote in the hearts of foure or fiue ſouldiers which could not away with the worke and paines taking: and which from hence forward (namely one Fourneaux, and one La Croix, and another called Steuen le Geneuois, the three principall authors of the ſedition) beganne to practiſe with the beſt of my troupe, ſhewing them that it was a vile thing for men of honeſt parentage, as they were, to moyle themſelues thus with abiect and baſe worke, ſeeing they had the beſt occaſion of the worlde offered them to make themſelues all riche: which was to arme the two Barkes which were in building, and to furniſh them with good men: and then to ſaile vnto Peru, and the other Iſles of the Antilles, where euery Souldier might eaſily enrich himſelfe with tenne thouſand Crownes. And if their enterpriſe ſhould bee miſliked withall in France, they ſhould bee alwayes able, by reaſon of the great wealth that they ſhould gaine, to retire themſelues into Italy, vntill the heate were ouerpaſſed, and that in the meane ſeaſon ſome warre would fall out, which would cauſe all this to be quite forgotten.

The captaines charge at his ſetting forth.

This word of riches ſounded ſo well in the eares of my Souldiers, that in fine, after they had oftentimes conſulted of their affaires, they grew to the number of threeſcore and ſixe: which to colour their great deſire which they had to goe on ſtealing, they cauſed a requeſt to bee preſented vnto mee by Francis de la Caille Sergeant of my company, contayning in ſum a declaration of the ſmall ſtore of victuals that was left to maintaine vs, vntil the time that ſhippes might returne from France: for remedy whereof they thought it neceſſary to ſende to New Spaine, Peru, and all the Iſles adioyning, which they beſought mee to be content to graunt. But I made them anſwere, that when the Barkes were finiſhed, I would take ſuch good order in generall, that by meanes of the Kings marchandiſe, without ſparing mine owne apparell, wee would get victuals of the inhabitants of the Countrey: ſeeing alſo that wee had ynough to ſerue vs for foure moneths to come. For I feared greatly, that vnder pretence of ſearching victuals, they would enterpriſe ſomewhat againſt the King of Spaines Subiects, which in time to come might iuſtly bee layde to my charge, conſidering that at our departure out of France, the Queene had charged me very expreſly, to doe no kinde of wrong to the King of Spaines Subiects, nor any thing whereof he might conceiue any ielouſie.

Laudonniere kept 15. dayes priſoner by his owne ſouldiers.

They made as though they were content with this anſwere. But eight dayes after, as I continued in working vpon our Fort, and on my Barkes, I fell ſicke. Then my ſeditious companions forgetting all honour and duetie, ſuppoſing that they had found good occaſion to execute their rebellious enterpriſe, beganne to practiſe afreſh their former deſignes, handling their buſineſſe ſo well, during my ſickneſſe, that they openly vowed that they would ſeaze on the Corps de gard, and on the Fort, yea, and force mee alſo, if I woulde not conſent vnto their wicked deſire. My Lieutenant being hereof aduertiſed, came and tolde mee that he ſuſpected ſome euill practiſe: and the next day in the morning I was ſaluted at my gate with men in complet harneſſe, what time my Souldiers were about to play mee a ſhrewde tricke: then I ſent to ſeeke a couple of Gentlemen whom I moſt truſted, which brought mee word that the Souldiers were determined to come to me to make a requeſt vnto me: But I tolde them that this was not the faſhion to preſent a requeſt vnto a Captaine in this maner, and therefore they ſhould ſend ſome few vnto me to ſignifie vnto mee what they would haue. Hereupon the fiue chiefe authours of the ſedition armed with Corſlets, their Piſtolles in their handes already bent, preſt into my chamber, ſaying vnto mee, that they would goe to New Spaine to ſeeke their aduenture. Then I warned them to bee well aduiſed what they meant to doe: but they foorthwith replyed, that they were fully aduiſed already, and that I muſt graunt them this requeſt. Seeing then (quoth I) that I am enforced to doe it, I will ſende Captaine Vaſſeur and my Sergeant, which will make anſwere and giue mee an accompt of euery thing that ſhall be done in this voyage: And to content you, I thinke it good that you take one man out of euery chamber, that they may accompany Captaine Vaſſeur and my Sergeant. Whereupon, blaſpheming the Name of God, they anſwered that they muſt goe thither: and that there lacked nothing, but that I ſhould deliuer them the armour which I had in my cuſtodie, for feare leaſt I might vſe them to their diſaduantage (being ſo villanouſly abuſed by them:) wherein notwithſtanding I would not yeeld vnto them. But they tooke all by force, and caried it out of my houſe, yea and after they had hurt a Gentleman in my chamber, which ſpake againſt their doings, they layd hands on mee, and caried mee very ſicke, as I was, priſoner into a ſhippe which rode at ancker in the middeſt of the Riuer, wherein I was the ſpace of fifteene dayes, attended vpon with one man onely without permiſſion for any of my ſeruants to come to viſite mee: from euery one of whom, as alſo from the reſt that tooke my part, they tooke away their armour. And they ſent mee a paſſeport to ſigne, telling me plainely after I had denied them, that if I made any difficulty, they would all come and cut my throat in the ſhippe. Thus was I conſtrained to ſigne their Paſſe-port, and forthwith to grant them certaine mariners, with Trenchant an honeſt and ſkilfull Pilot. When the barks were finiſhed, they armed them with the kings munition, with powder, with bullets, and artillery, aſmuch as they needed, and choſe one of my Sergeants for their Captain, named Bertrand Conferrent, and for their Enſigne one named La Croix. They compelled Captaine Vaſſeur to deliuer them the flag of his ſhip. Then hauing determined to ſaile vnto a place of the Antilles, called Leauguaue, belonging vnto the king of Spaine, and there to goe on land on Chriſtmaſſe night, with intention to enter into the Church while the Maſſe was ſayd after midnight, and to murder all thoſe that they found there, they ſet ſaile the eight of December. But becauſe the greateſt part of them by this time repented them of their enterpriſe, and that now they began to fall into mutinies among themſelues, when they came foorth of the mouth of the riuer, the two barks diuided themſelues; the one kept along the coaſt vnto Cuba, to double the Cape more eaſily, and the other went right foorth to paſſe athwart the Iſles of Lucaya: by reaſon whereof they mette not vntill ſixe weeks after their departure. During which time the barke that tooke her way along the coaſt, wherein one of the chiefe conſpiratours named De Orange was Captaine, and Trenchant his Pilot, neere vnto a place called Archaha, tooke a Brigantine laden with a certaine quantity of Caſſaui, which is a kinde of bread made of roots, and yet neuertheleſſe is very white, and good to eat, and ſome little Wine, which was not without ſome loſſe of their men: for in one aſſault that the inhabitants of Archaha made vpon them, two of their men were taken, to wit, Steuen Gondeau, and one named Grand Pré, beſides two more that were ſlaine in the place, namely Nicolas Maſter and Doublet: yet neuertheleſſe they tooke the Brigantine, wherein they put all their ſtuffe that was in their owne Barke, becauſe it was of greater burthen and better of ſaile then their owne. Afterward they ſailed right vnto the Cape of Santa Maria nere to Leauguaue, where they went on land to calke and bray their ſhip which had a great leake. In this meane while they reſolued to ſaile to Baracou, which is a village of the Iſle of Iamaica: where at their arriuall they found a Carauel of fifty or threeſcore tunnes burden, which they tooke without any body in it: and after they had made good cheere in the village the ſpace of fiue or ſixe dayes, they embarked themſelues in it, leauing their ſecond ſhip: then they returned to the Cape of Tiburon, where they met with a Patach, which they tooke by force after a long conflict. In this Patach the gouernour of Iamaica was taken, with great ſtore of riches, aſwell of golde and ſiluer as of merchandiſe and wine, and many other things; wherewith our ſeditious companions not content, determined to ſeeke more in their carauell, and their gouernour of Iamaica alſo. After they were come to Iamaica, they miſſed of another carauel which did ſaue it ſelfe in the hauen. The gouernour being fine and ſubtile, ſeeing himſelfe brought vnto the place which he deſired and where he commanded, obtained ſo much by his faire words, that they which had taken him let him put two little boyes which were taken with him into a little cocke boat, and ſend them to his wife into the village, to aduertiſe her that ſhe ſhould make prouiſion of victuals to ſend vnto him. But in ſtead of writing vnto his wife, he ſpake vnto the boyes ſecretly that with all diligence ſhe ſhould ſend the veſſels that were in the hauens neere that place to ſuccour and reſcue him. Which ſhe did ſo cunningly, that on a morning about the breake of the day, as our ſeditious companions were at the hauens mouth (which reacheth aboue two leagues vp within the land) there came out of the hauen a malgualire which maketh ſaile both forward and backward, and then two great ſhippes, which might be ech of them of foureſcore or an hundred tunnes a piece, with good ſtore of ordinance, and well furniſhed with men: at whoſe comming our mutinous fellowes were ſurpriſed, being not able to ſee them when they came, aſwell becauſe of the darkneſſe of the weather, as alſo by reaſon of the length of the hauen, conſidering alſo they miſtruſted nothing. True it is that fiue or ſix & twenty that were in the brigantine diſcouered theſe ſhips when they were nere them, which ſeeing themſelues preſſed for want of leaſure to weigh their anker, cut their cable, and the trumpeter which was in it aduertiſed the reſt: whereupon the Spanyards ſeeing themſelues deſcried, diſcharged a volley of canon ſhot againſt the French men, which they followed by the ſpace of three leagues, and recouered their own ſhips: the brigantine which eſcaped away, paſſed in the ſight of the Cape des Aigrettes, and the Cape of S. Anthony ſituate in the Iſle of Cuba, & from thence paſſed within the ſight of Hauana; but Trenchant their pilot, and the trumpeter, and certaine other mariners of this brigantine, which were led away by force in this voyage (as elſwhere we haue declared) deſired nothing more then to returne to me: wherefore theſe men agreed together (if peraduenture the wind ſerued them well) to paſſe the chanell of Bahama, while their ſeditious companions were aſleepe: which they did accompliſh with ſuch good ſucceſſe, that in the morning toward the breake of the day about the fiue and twentieth of March they arriued vpon the coaſt of Florida: where knowing the fault which they had committed, in a kinde of mockery they counterfaited the Iudges: but they played not this pranke vntill they had tippled well of the Wine which remained yet in their prize. One counterfeited the Iudge, another preſented my perſon: one other after he had heard the matter pleaded, concluded thus: Make you your cauſes as good as it pleaſeth you, but if when you come to the fort Caroline the Captaine cauſe you not to be hanged, I will neuer take him for an honeſt man: others thought that my choler being paſſed, I would eaſily forget this matter. Their ſaile was no ſooner deſcried vpon our coaſt, but the king of the place named Patica, dwelling eight leagues diſtant from our fort, and being one of our good friends, ſent an Indian to aduertiſe me that he had deſcried a ſhippe vpon the coaſt, and that he thought it was one of our nation. Hereupon the brigantine oppreſſed with famine, came to an anker at the mouth of the riuer of May, when at the firſt bluſh we thought they had beene ſhippes come from France; which gaue vs occaſion of great ioy: but after I had cauſed her to be better viewed, I was aduertiſed that they were our ſeditious companions that were returned. Therefore I ſent them word by Captaine Vaſſeur and my Sergeant, that they ſhould bring vp their brigantine before the fortreſſe: which they promiſed to doe. Now there was not aboue two leagues diſtance from the mouth of the riuer where they caſt anker vnto the fortreſſe. The next day I ſent the ſame Captaine and Sergeant with thirty ſouldiers, becauſe I ſaw they much delayed their comming. Then they brought them: and becauſe certaine of them had ſworne at their departure, that they would neuer come againe within the fort, I was well pleaſed they ſhould keepe their oth. For this purpoſe I waited for them at the riuers mouth, where I made my barks to be built, and commanded my Sergeant to bring the foure chiefe authours of the mutiny on ſhore; whom I cauſed immediatly to be put in fetters: for my meaning was not to puniſh the reſt, conſidering that they were ſuborned, and becauſe my councell expreſly aſſembled for this purpoſe had concluded that theſe foure only ſhould die, to ſerue for an example to the reſt. In the ſame place I made an Oration vnto them in this maner.

Laudonnieres oration to his mutinous ſouldiers.

MY friends, you know the cauſe why our king ſent vs vnto this countrey; you know that he is our naturall Prince, whom we are bound to obey according to the cõmandement of God, in ſuch ſort, that we ought neither to ſpare our goods nor liues to do thoſe things that concerne his ſeruice: ye know, or at leaſt you cannot be ignorant, that beſides this general and naturall obligation, you haue this alſo ioyned thereunto, that in receiuing of him reaſonable pay and wages, you are bound to follow thoſe whom he hath eſtabliſhed ouer you to be your gouernours, and to command you in his name, hauing for this purpoſe giuen him an oth of fidelitie, which you cannot by any meanes reuoke for any faire apparance which you haue to doe the contrary: for this is reaſon, that ſeeing you liue vpon his charges on this condition, (this is reaſon I ſay) that you ſhould be faithfull vnto him. Notwithſtanding you haue had more regard vnto your vnbridled affections then vnto vertue, which inuited you to the obſeruance of your oth, in ſuch ſort that being become contemners of all honeſty, you haue paſſed your bonds, and thought that all things were lawfull for you. Whereupon it is fallen out, that while you thought to eſcape the iuſtice of men, you could not auoid the iudgement of God, which as a thing by no meanes to be auoided hath led you, and in ſpight of you hath made you to arriue in this place, to make you confeſſe how true his iudgements are, and that he neuer ſuffereth ſo foule a fault to eſcape vnpuniſhed.

The ſentence of death.

Execution.

The continuation of the hiſtory.

After that I had vſed vnto them theſe or the like ſpeeches, following that which wee had agreed vpon in councell, in reſpect of the crimes which they had committed, aſwel againſt the kings Maieſty as againſt mee which was their Captaine, I commanded that they ſhould be hanged. Seeing therefore that there was no ſtarting hole, nor meanes at all to ſaue themſelues from this arreſt, they tooke themſelues vnto their prayers: yet one of the foure, thinking to raiſe a mutiny among my ſouldiers, ſayd thus vnto them: What, brethren and companions, will you ſuffer vs to die ſo ſhamefully? And taking the word out of his mouth, I ſayd vnto him, that they were not companions of authours of ſedition and rebels vnto the kings ſeruice. Hereupon the ſouldiers beſought me not to hang them, but rather let them be ſhot thorow, & then afterward, if I thought good, their bodies might be hanged vpon certaine gibbets along the hauens mouth: which I cauſed preſently to be put in execution. Loe here what was the end of my mutinous ſouldiers, without which I had alwayes liued peaceably, and enioyed the good deſire which I had to make an happy and quiet voyage. But becauſe I haue ſpoken of nothing but their accidentes and aduentures which happened vnto them after their departure, without making any mention of our fort, I will returne to the matters from which I digreſſed, to declare that which fell out after their departure. Firſt I began to conſider, to the end I might confirme and make my ſelfe more conſtant in mine affliction, that theſe murmurers could not ground their ſedition vpon want of victuals: for from the time of our arriuall, euery ſouldier dayly vnto this day, and beſides vntill the eight and twentieth of February, had a loafe of bread weighing two and twenty ounces. Againe I recounted with my ſelfe that all new conqueſts by ſea or by land are ordinarily troubled with rebellions, which are eaſie to be raiſed, aſwell in reſpect of the diſtance of place, as in reſpect of the hope that the ſouldiers haue to make their profit, as we may be well informed both by ancient hiſtories and alſo by the troubles which lately happened vnto Chriſtopher Columbus, after his firſt diſcouery, to Francis Pizarro, & Diego de Almagro in Peru, & to Fernando Cortes. An hundred thouſand other things came vnto my minde, to incourage and confirme me. My Lieutenant Ottigny, and my Sergeant of my band came to ſeeke me in the ſhip, where I was priſoner, and caried me from thence in a barke aſſoone as our rebels were departed. After I was come vnto the fort, I cauſed all my company that remained, to be aſſembled in the midſt of the place before the Corps de garde, and declared vnto them the faults which they that had forſaken vs had committed, praying them to beare them in memory, to beare witneſſe thereof when need ſhould require. Forthwith I ordained new Captaines to command the troups; and preſcribed them an order, according whereunto they were to gouerne themſelues from thence forward, and to enter into their watch: for the greateſt part of the ſouldiers, of whom I had the beſt opinion, were gone away with them. My declaration ended, they promiſed mee all with one accord to obey mee moſt humbly, and to doe whatſoeuer I ſhould command them, though it were to die at my feet for the Kings ſeruice; wherein aſſuredly they neuer after failed: ſo that I dare ſay, after the departure of my mutinous companions I was as well obeyed as euer was Captaine in place where he commanded. The next day after my returne vnto the fort, I aſſembled my men together againe, to declare vnto them that our fort was not yet finiſhed, and that it was needfull that all of vs ſhould put thereto our helping hands, to aſſure our ſelues againſt the Indians: wherein hauing willingly agreed vnto mee, they raiſed it all with turfes from the gate vnto the riuer which is on the Weſt ſide. This done, I ſet my Carpenters on worke to make another barke of the ſame bigneſſe that the others were of: I commanded the Sawyers that they ſhould prepare plancks, the Smithes to prepare yron and nailes, and certaine others to make coales: ſo that the barke was finiſhed in eighteene dayes. Afterward I made another leſſer then the firſt, the better to diſcouer vp the riuer. In this meane ſpace the Indians viſited me, and brought me dayly certaine preſents, as Fiſh, Deere, Turki-cocks, Leopards, little Beares, and other things according to the place of their habitation. I recompenſed them with certaine Hatchets, Kniues, Beads of glaſſe, Combes, and Looking-glaſſes. Two Indians came vnto me one day to ſalute me on the behalfe of their King, whoſe name was Marracou, dwelling from the place of our fort ſome forty leagues toward the South, and tolde mee that there was one in the houſe of King Onathaqua which was called Barbu or the bearded man, and in the houſe of King Mathiaca another man whoſe name they knew not, which was not of their nation: whereupon I conceiued that theſe might be ſome Chriſtians. Wherefore I ſent to all the kings my neighbours to pray them, that if there were any Chriſtian dwelling in their countreys, they would finde meanes that he might be brought vnto mee, and that I would make them double recompenſe. They, which loue rewards, tooke ſo much paine, that the two men, whereof we haue ſpoken, were brought vnto the fort vnto me. They were naked, wearing their haire long vnto their hammes as the Sauages vſe to do, and were Spanyards borne, yet ſo well accuſtomed to the faſhion of the countrey, that at the firſt ſight they found our maner of apparell ſtrange. After that I had queſtioned of certaine matters with them, I cauſed them to be apparelled, and to cut their haire; which they would not looſe, but lapped it vp in a linnen cloth, ſaying that they would cary it into their countrey to be a teſtimony of the miſery that they had indured in the Indies. In the haire of one of them was found a little gold hidden, to the value of fiue and twenty crownes, which he gaue vnto me. And examining them of the places where they had bene, and how they came thither, they anſwered me that fifteene yeeres paſt, three ſhippes, in one of which they were, were caſt away ouer againſt a place named Calos vpon the Flats which are called The Martyres, and that the king of Calos recouered the greateſt part of the riches which were in the ſayd ſhippes, trauelling in ſuch ſort that the greateſt part of the people was ſaued, and many women; among which number there were three or foure women married, remaining there yet, and their children alſo, with this king of Calos. I deſired to learne what this king was. They anſwered me, that he was the goodlieſt and the talleſt Indian of the country, a mighty man, a warrier, and hauing many ſubiects vnder his obedience. They tolde me moreouer, that he had great ſtore of golde and ſiluer, ſo farre forth that in a certaine village he had a pit full thereof, which was at the leaſt as high as a man, and as large as a tunne: all which wealth the Spanyards fully perſwaded themſelues that they could cauſe me to recouer, if I were able to march thither with an hundred ſhot, beſides that which I might get of the common people of the countrey, which had alſo great ſtore thereof. They further alſo aduertiſed me, that the women going to dance, did weare about their girdles plates of golde as broad as a ſawcer, and in ſuch number, that the weight did hinder them to dance at their eaſe; and that the men ware the like alſo. The greateſt part of theſe riches was had, as they ſayd, out of the Spaniſh ſhippes, which commonly were caſt away in this ſtraight; and the reſt by the traffique which this king of Calos had with the other kings of the countrey: Finally, that he was had in great reuerence of his ſubiects; and that hee made them beleeue that his ſorceries and charmes were the cauſes that made the earth bring foorth her fruit: and that hee might the eaſier perſwade them that it was ſo, he retired himſelfe once or twiſe a yeere to a certaine houſe, accompanied with two or three of his moſt familiar friends, where hee vſed certaine inchantments; and if any man intruded himſelfe to goe to ſee what they did in this place, the king immediatly cauſed him to be put to death. Moreouer, they tolde me, that euery yeere in the time of harueſt, this Sauage king ſacrificed one man, which was kept expreſly for this purpoſe, and taken out of the number of the Spanyards which by tempeſt were caſt away vpon that coaſt. One of theſe two declared vnto me, that hee had ſerued him a long time for a meſſenger; and that often times by his commandement he had viſited a king named Oathcaqua, diſtant from Calos foure or fiue dayes iourney, which alwayes remained his faithfull friend: but that in the mid way there was an Iland ſituate in a great lake of freſh water, named Sarrope, about fiue leagues in bigneſſe, abounding with many ſorts of fruits, ſpecially in Dates, which growe on the Palme trees, whereof they make a woonderfull traffique; yet not ſo great as of a kinde of root, whereof they make a kinde of meale, ſo good to make bread of, that it is vnpoſſible to eate better, and that for fifteene leagues about, all the countrey is fed therewith: which is the cauſe that the inhabitants of the Iſle gaine of their neighbours great wealth and profit: for they will not depart with this root without they be well payed for it. Beſides that, they are taken for the moſt warlike men of all that countrey, as they made good proofe when the king of Calos, hauing made alliance with Oathcaqua, was depriued of Oathcaquaes daughter, which he had promiſed to him in mariage. He tolde me the whole matter in this ſort: As Oathcaqua well accompanied with his people caried one of his daughters, exceeding beautifull, according to the colour of the countrey, vnto king Calos, to giue her vnto him for his wife, the inhabitants of this Iſle aduertiſed of the matter, layed an ambuſh for him in a place where he ſhould paſſe, and ſo behaued themſelues, that Oathcaqua was diſcomfited, the betrothed yoong ſpouſe taken, and all the damoſels that accompanied her; which they caried vnto their Iſle; which thing in all the Indians countrey they eſteeme to be the greateſt victory: for afterward they marry theſe virgins, and loue them aboue all meaſure. The Spanyard that made this relation, tolde mee that after this defeat he went to dwell with Oathcaqua, and had bene with him full eight yeeres, euen vntill the time that he was ſent vnto me. The place of Calos is ſituate vpon a riuer which is beyond the Cape of Florida, forty or fifty leagues towards the Southweſt: and the dwelling of Oathcaqua is on this ſide the Cape toward the North, in a place which we call in the Chart Cannaueral, which is in 28 degrees.

The Floridians great traitours and diſſemblers.

About the fiue and twentieth of Ianuary Paracouſſy Satourioüa my neighbour ſent me certaine preſents by two of his ſubiects, to perſwade me to ioyne with him, and to make warre vpon Ouac Vtina which was my friend: and further beſought me to retire certaine of my men which were with Vtina; for whom if it had not bene, he had often times ſet vpon him, and defeited him. He beſought me heerein by diuers other kings his allies, which for three weekes or a moneths ſpace ſent meſſengers vnto mee to this end and purpoſe: but I would not grant vnto them that they ſhould make warre vpon him; yea rather contrariwiſe I endeuoured to make them friends; wherein they condeſcended vnto me, ſo farre foorth that they were content to allow of any thing that I would ſet downe: whereupon the two Spanyards which of long time knew well the nature of the Indians, warned me that in any caſe I ſhould not truſt vnto them, becauſe that when they ſhewed good countenance and the beſt cheere vnto men, then was the time that they would ſurpriſe and betray them; and that of their nature they were the greateſt traitours and moſt deepe diſſemblers of the world. Beſides I neuer truſted them but vpon good ground, as one that had diſcouered a thouſand of their crafts and ſubtilties, aſwell by experience as by reading of the hiſtories of late yeres. Our two barks were not ſo ſoone finiſhed, but I ſent Captaine Vaſſeur to diſcouer along the coaſt lying toward the North, and commanded him to ſaile vnto a riuer, the king whereof was called Audusta, which was lord of that place, where thoſe of the yere 1562 inhabited.

habited. I ſent him two ſutes of apparell, with certaine hatchets, kniues, and other ſmall trifles, the better to inſinuate my ſelfe into his friendſhip. And the better to win him, I ſent in the barke with captaine Vaſſeur a ſouldier called Aimon, which was one of them which returned home in the firſt voyage, hoping that king Auduſta might remember him. But before they were imbarked I commanded them to make inquiry what was become of another called Rouffi, which remained alone in thoſe parts when Nicolas Maſſon and thoſe of the firſt voyage imbarked themſelues to returne into France. They vnderſtood at their arriuall there, that a barke paſſing that way had caried away the ſame ſouldier: and afterward I knew for a certainty that they were Spaniards which had caried him to Hauana. The king Auduſta ſent me backe my barke full of mill, with a certaine quantity of beanes, two ſtags, ſome ſkinnes painted after their maner, and certaine pearles of ſmall value, becauſe they were burnt: and ſent me word that if I would dwel in his quarters, he would giue me a great countrey: and that after he had gathered his mill, he would ſpare me as much as I would haue. In the meane while there came vnto our fort a flocke of ſtocke-doues in ſo great number, and that for the ſpace of ſeuen weeks together, that euery day wee killed with harquebuſh ſhot two hundred in the woods about our fort. After that Captaine Vaſſeur was returned, I cauſed the two barks to be furniſhed againe with ſouldiers & mariners, and ſent them to cary a preſent from me vnto the widow of king Hiocaia, whoſe dwelling was diſtant from our fort about twelue legues Northward. She courteouſly receiued our men, ſent me backe my barks full of mill and acornes with certaine baſkets full of the leaues of Caſſine, wherwith they make their drinke. And the place where this widow dwelleth is the moſt plentifull of mill that is in all the coaſt, and the moſt pleaſant. It is thought that the queene is the moſt beautifull of all the Indians, and of whom they make moſt account: yea, and her ſubiects honour her ſo much, that almoſt continually they beare her on their ſhoulders, and will not ſuffer her to go on foot. Within a few dayes after the returne of my barks, ſhe ſent to viſit me by her Hiatiqui, which is as much to ſay, as her interpreter. Now while I thought I was furniſhed with victuals vntill the time that our ſhips might come out of France (for feare of keeping my people idle) I ſent my two barks to diſcouer along the riuer, and vp toward the head thereof, which went ſo far vp that they were thirty leagues good beyond a place named Mathiaqua, and there they diſcouered the entrance of a lake, vpon the one ſide whereof no land can be ſeene, according to the report of the Indians, which had oftentimes climed on the higheſt trees in the countrey to ſee land, and notwithſtanding could not diſcerne any: which was the cauſe that my men went no further, but returned backe; and in comming home went to ſee the Iſland of Edelano ſituated in the midſt of the riuer, as faire a place as any that may be ſeene thorow the world: for in the ſpace of ſome three leagues, that it may conteine in length and bredth, a man may ſee an exceeding rich countrey, and maruellouſly peopled. At the comming out of the village of Edelano to go vnto the riuers ſide a man muſt paſſe thorow an alley about three hundred paces long and fifty paces broad: on both ſides wherof great tres are planted, the boughes whereof are tied together like an arch, and meet together ſo artificially that a man would thinke it were an arbour made of purpoſe, as faire I ſay, as any in all chriſtendome, although it be altogether natural. Our men departing from this place rowed to Eneguape, then to Chilily, from thence to Patica, & laſtly they came vnto Coya: where leauing their barks in a litle creeke of the riuer with men to guard them, they went to viſit Vtina, which receiued them very courteouſly: and when they departed from his houſe, he intreated them ſo earneſtly, that ſixe of my men remained with him; of which number there was one gentleman, named Groutald, which after he had abode there about two moneths, and taken great paines to diſcouer the countrey, with another which I had left a great while there to that intent, came vnto me to the fort, and tolde me that he neuer ſaw a fairer countrey. Among other things, he reported vnto me that he had ſeene a place named Hoſtaqua, and that the king thereof was ſo mighty, that he was able to bring three or foure thouſand Sauages to the field; with whom if I would ioyne and enter into league, we might be able to reduce all the reſt of the inhabitants vnto our obedience: beſides that this king knew the paſſages vnto the mountaine of Apalatci, which the French men deſired ſo greatly to atteine vnto, and where the enemy of Hoſtaqua made his abode; which was eaſie to be ſubdued, if ſo be wee would enter into league together. This king ſent me a plate of a minerall that came out of this mountaine, out of the foot whereof there runneth a ſtreame of golde or copper, as the Sauages thinke, out of which they dig vp the ſand with an hollow and drie cane of reed vntill the cane be full; afterward they ſhake it, and finde that there are many ſmall graines of copper and ſiluer among this ſand: which giueth them to vnderſtand, that ſome rich mine muſt needs be in the mountaine. And becauſe the mountaine was not paſt fiue or ſixe dayes iourney from our fort, lying toward the Northweſt, I determined aſſoone as our ſupply ſhould come out of France, to remooue our habitation vnto ſome riuer more toward the North, that I might be nerer thereunto. One of my ſouldiers whoſe name was Peter Gamby, which had remained a long ſpace before in this countrey to learne the languages and traffique with the Indians, at the laſt came to the village of Edelano, where hauing gotten together a certaine quantity of golde and ſiluer, and purpoſing to returne vnto me, he prayed the king of the village to lend him a canoa (which is a veſſell made of one whole piece of wood, which the Indians vſe to fiſh withal, and to row vpon the riuers) which this lord of Edelano granted him. But being greedy of the riches which he had, he commanded two Indians, which he had charged to conduct him in the canoa, to murder him & bring him the merchandiſe and the gold which he had. Which the two traitours villanouſly executed: for they knockt him on the head with an hatchet, as he was blowing of the fire in the canoa to ſeethe fiſh. The Paracouſſy Vtina ſent certeine dayes afterward, to pray me to lend him a dozen or fifteene of my ſhot, to inuade his enemy Potanou, and ſent me word, that this enemy once vanquiſhed, he would make me paſſage, yea, and would conduct me vnto the mountaines in ſuch ſort, that no man ſhould be able to hinder me. Then I aſſembled my men to demand their aduice, as I was woont to do in all mine enterpriſes. The greater part was of opinion, that I ſhould do well to ſend ſuccour vnto this Paracouſſy, becauſe it would be hard for me to diſcouer any further vp into the countrey without his helpe: and that the Spanyards when they were imployed in their conqueſts, did alwayes enter into alliance with ſome one king to ruine another. Notwithſtanding, becauſe I did alwayes miſtruſt the Indians, and that the more after the laſt aduertiſement that the Spanyards had giuen me, I doubted leſt the ſmall number which Vtina demanded might incurre ſome danger; wherefore I ſent him thirty ſhot vnder the charge of my Lieutenant Ottigny, which ſtayed not aboue two dayes with Vtina, while he prepared victuals for his voyage, which ordinarily and according to the cuſtome of the countrey are caried by women and yoong boyes, and by hermaphrodites. Vtina ſetting forward with three hundred of his ſubiects, hauing ech of them their bowe and quiuer full of arrowes, cauſed our thirty ſhot to be placed in the foreward, and made them march all the day, vntill that the night approching, and hauing not gone paſt halfe the way, they were inforced to lie all night in the woods, nere a great lake, and there to incampe themſelues: they ſeparated themſelues by fire and fire, making ech of them a fire about the place where their king lay, for whoſe guard they ordeined a certeine number of thoſe archers, in whom he put moſt confidence. Aſſoone as day was come, the campe of the Indians marched within three leagues of Potanou: there king Vtina requeſted my Lieutenant to grant him foure or fiue of his men to go and diſcouer the countrey; which departed immediatly, and had not gone farre, but they perceiued vpon a lake, diſtant about three leagues from the village of Potanou, three Indians which fiſhed in a canoa. Now the cuſtome is that when they fiſh in this lake, they haue alwayes a company of watchmen, armed with bowes and arrowes to guard the fiſhers. Our men being hereof aduertiſed by thoſe of the company, durſt not paſſe any further, for feare of falling into ſome ambuſh: wherefore they returned towards Vtina, which ſuddenly ſent them backe with a greater company to ſurpriſe the fiſhers, before they might retire and aduertiſe their king Potanou of the comming of his enemies. Which they could not execute ſo politikely, but that two of them eſcaped; the third alſo did the beſt he could to ſaue himſelfe by ſwimming, in which meane while he was ſtayed with ſhot of arrowes, and they drew him ſtarke dead vnto the banks ſide, where our Indians ſlayed off the ſkinne of his head, cut off both his armes in the high way, reſeruing his haire for the triumph, which their king hoped to make for the defeat of his enemy. Vtina fearing leaſt Potanou aduertiſed by the fiſhers which were eſcaped, ſhould put himſelfe in armes to withſtand him valiantly, aſked counſell of his Iawa, which is aſmuch to ſay in their language as his Magician, whether it were beſt to goe any further. Then this Magician made certeine ſignes, hidious and fearefull to beholde, and vſed certeine words; which being ended, he ſayd vnto his king, that it was not beſt to paſſe any further, and that Potanou accompanied with two thouſand Indians at the leaſt ſtayed in ſuch and ſuch a place for him, to bidde him battell: and beſides this, that all the ſayd Indians were furniſhed with cords to binde the priſoners which they made full account to take.

The prediction of the Magician found true.

This relation cauſed Vtina to be vnwilling to paſſe any further: whereupon my Lieutenant being as angry as euer he might be, becauſe hee had taken ſo great paines without doing of any thing of account, ſayd vnto him, that hee would neuer thinke well of him nor of his people, if hee would not hazzard himſelfe: and that if he would not doe it, at the leaſt, that he would giue him a guide to conduct him and his ſmall company to the place where the enemies were encamped. Heereupon Vtina was aſhamed, and ſeeing the good affection of Monſieur de Ottigny determined to go forward: and he failed not to finde his enemies in the very place which the Magician had named: where the ſkirmiſh beganne, which laſted three long houres: wherein without doubt Vtina had beene defeated, vnleſſe our harquebuſiers had not borne the burthen and brunt of all the battell, and ſlaine a great number of the ſouldiers of Potanou, vpon which occaſion they were put to flight. Wherewithall Vtina being content for the preſent, cauſed his people to retire and returne homeward to the great diſcontentment of Monſieur de Ottigny, which deſired nothing more, then to purſue his victorie. After he was come home to his houſe he ſent meſſengers to eighteene or twentie villages of other kings his vaſſals, and ſummoned them to be preſent at the feaſts and dances which he purpoſed to celebrate becauſe of his victorie. In the meane while Monſieur de Ottigny refreſhed himſelfe for two dayes: and then taking his leaue of the Paracouſſi, and leauing him twelue of his men to ſee that Potanou, bethinking himſelfe of his late loſſe, ſhould not come to burne the houſes of Vtina, he ſet forward on his way to come vnto me vnto our Fort, where he vp and told me how euery thing had paſſed: and withall that he had promiſed the twelue ſouldiers, that he would come backe againe to fetch them. Then the kings my neighbours all enemies to Vtina, being aduertiſed of the returne of my Lieutenant, came to viſite me with preſents and to enquire how things had paſſed, praying me all to receiue them into my fauour, and to become enemie to Vtina, which notwithſtanding I would not grant them for many reaſons that mooued me.

Vtina hath 18 or 20 kings to his vaſſals.

The Indians are wont to leaue their houſes and to retire themſelues into the woods, the ſpace of three moneths, to wit Ianuary, February, and March: during which time by no meanes a man can ſee one Indian. For when they goe on hunting, they make little cottages in the woods, whereunto they retire themſelues, liuing vpon that which they take in hunting. This was the cauſe that during this time, we could get no victuals by their meanes: and had it not beene that I had made good prouiſion thereof, while my men had ſtore, vntill the end of Aprill (which was the time when at the vttermoſt, we hoped to haue had ſuccour out of France) I ſhould haue beene greatly amazed. This hope was the cauſe that the ſouldiers tooke no great care to looke well vnto their victuals, although I deuided equally among them that which I could get abroad in the countrey, without reſeruing vnto my ſelfe any more then the leaſt ſouldier of al the company. The moneth of May approching and no manner of ſuccour come out of France, we fell into extreme want of victuals, conſtrained to eate the rootes of the earth and certaine ſorrell which we found in the fields. For although the Sauages were returned by this time vnto their villages, yet they ſuccoured vs with nothing but certaine fiſh, without which aſſuredly wee had periſhed with famine. Beſides they had giuen vs before the greateſt part of their maiz and of their beanes for our marchandiſe. This famine held vs from the beginning of May vntill the middeſt of Iune. During which time the poore ſouldiers and handicraftſmen became as feeble as might be, and being not able to worke did nothing but goe one after another in Centinel vnto the clift of an hill, ſituate very neere vnto the Fort, to ſee if they might diſcouer any French ſhip. In fine being fruſtrated of their hope, they aſſembled altogether, & came to beſeech me to take ſome order that they might returne into France, conſidering that if we let paſſe the ſeaſon to embarke our ſelues, we were neuer like to ſee our countrey, where it could not be choſen but that ſome troubles were fallen out, ſeeing they had broken their promiſe made vnto vs, and that no ſuccour was come from thence. Therupon it was conſulted and reſolued by all the company, that the barke Breton ſhould be trimmed vp, wherof Captaine Vaſſeur had charge. But becauſe the ſhip was not bigge enough to receiue vs all, ſome thought good to build the Brigandine two deckes higher, which our mutinous ſouldiers had brought backe, and that 25 men ſhould hazard themſelues to paſſe therein into France. The reſt being better aduiſed ſaid that it ſhould be farre better to build a faire ſhippe vpon the keele of the Galiote which I had cauſed to be made, promiſing to labour couragiouſly thervpon. Then I enquired of my ſhipwrights to knowe in what ſpace they could make this ſhippe readie. They aſſured the whole company that being furniſhed with all things neceſſarie, they would make it readie by the 8 of Auguſt. Immediatly I diſpoſed of the time to worke vpon it, I gaue charge to Monſieur de Ottigny my Lieutenant to cauſe timber neceſſary for the finiſhing of both the veſſels to be brought, and to Monſieur de Arlac my Standart-bearer to goe with a barke a league off from the Fort to cut downe trees fit to make plankes, and to cauſe the ſawiers which he carried with him to ſaw them: and to my Sergeant of the company to cauſe fifteene or ſixteene men to labour in making coales: and to Maſter Hance keeper of the Artillery, & to the gunner to gather ſtore of roſen to bray the veſſels: wherein he vſed ſuch diligence, that in leſſe then 3 weekes he gathered 2 hogs-heads of the ſame together. There remained now but the principal, which was to recouer victuals to ſuſtaine vs while our worke endured: which I vndertooke to doe with yͤ reſt of my cōpany & the Mariners of the ſhip. To this end I embarked my ſelfe making vp the thirtieth in my great barke, to make a voyage of forty or fifty leagues, hauing with vs no prouiſion at all of victuals: whereby it may eaſily be gathered how ſimply thoſe of our Fort were prouided. True it is that certaine ſouldiers being better huſbandes then the reſt, and hauing made ſome prouiſion of maſt, ſolde a little meaſure thereof for fifteene and twentie ſous vnto their companions. During our voyage we liued of nothing elſe but raſpices, of a certaine round graine little and blacke, and of the rootes of palmitos which we got by the riuer ſides: wherein after we had ſayled a long time in vaine, I was conſtrained to returne to the Fort: where the ſouldiers beginning to be wearie of working, becauſe of the extreme famine which did conſume them, aſſembled themſelues and declared vnto me, that ſeeing we could get no victuals of the Indians, it was expedient for the ſauing of their liues, to ſeaze vpon the perſon of one of the Kings of the Countrie: aſſuring thẽſelues that one being taken, the ſubiects would not ſuffer our men to want victuals. I made them anſwere that this enterpriſe was not raſhly to be attempted: But that wee ought to haue good regarde vnto the conſequence that might inſue thereof. Hereupon they replyed vnto me, that ſeeing the time was paſt of our ſuccour from France, & that we were reſolued to abandon the Countrie, that there was no danger to conſtraine the Sauages to furniſh vs with victuals; which for the preſent I would not grant vnto them, but promiſed them aſſuredly that I would ſend to aduertiſe the Indians that they ſhould bring me victuals for exchange of marchandiſe and apparell: which they alſo did for the ſpace of certaine daies, during which they brought of their maſt and of their fiſh: which theſe Indians being traiterous, & miſchieuous of nature, and knowing our exceeding ſtrange famine, ſold vs at ſo deere a price, that for leſſe then nothing they had gotten from vs al the reſt of our marchandiſe which remained. And which was worſe, fearing to be forced by vs and ſeeing that they had gotten all from vs, they came no neerer to our Fort then the ſhot of an Harquebuze. Thither they brought their fiſh in their little boats, to which our poore ſouldiers were conſtrained to goe, and oftentimes (as I haue ſeene) to giue away the very ſhirts from their backs to get one fiſh. If at any time they ſhewed vnto the Sauages the exceſſiue price which they tooke, theſe villaines would anſwere them roughly & churliſhly: if thou make ſo great account of thy marchandiſe, eat it, and we will eat our fiſh: then fell they out a laughing and mocked vs with open throat. Whereupon our ſouldiers vtterly impatient, were oftentimes ready to cut them in pieces, and to make them pay the price of their fooliſh arrogancie. Notwithſtanding conſidering the inportance hereof, I tooke paines to appeaſe the impatient ſouldier: for I would not by any meanes enter into queſtion with the Sauages, & it ſuffiſed me to delay the time. Wherefore I deuiſed to ſend vnto Vtina to pray him to deale ſo farre foorth with his ſubiects, as to ſuccour me with maſt and maiz: which he did very ſparingly, ſending me 12 or 15 baſkets of maſt, and two of pinocks, which are a kind of little greene fruits which grow among the weedes in the riuer, and are as big as cheries: yea & this was not but by giuing of them in exchange twiſe as much marchandiſe and apparell as they were worth. For the ſubiectes of Vtina perceiued euidently the neceſſitie wherein we were, & began to vſe the like ſpeech vnto vs, as the others did: as it is commonly ſeene that neede altereth mens affections. While theſe things were in doing, a certain breathing ſpace preſented it ſelfe: for Vtina gaue me to vnderſtand that there was a king his ſubiect whoſe name was Aſtina, which he determined to take priſoner, and to chaſtiſe him for his diſobedience: that for this cauſe, if I would giue him aide with a certaine number of my ſouldiers, he would bring them to the village of Aſtina, where there was meanes to recouer maſt and maiz. In the meane ſeaſon he excuſed himſelfe vnto me becauſe he had ſent me no more maiz, and ſent me word that the little ſtore that he had left, was ſcarſely ſufficient for his ſeede-corne. Now being ſomewhat relieued, as I thought, by the hope which I had of this offer, I would not faile to ſend him the men which he deſired of me, which neuertheleſſe were very euill intreated: for he deceiued them, and in ſtead of leading them againſt Aſtina, he cauſed them to march againſt his other enemies. My Lieutenant which had the charge of this enterpriſe with Captaine Vaſſeur and my Sergeant was determined to be reuenged of Vtina and to cut him in pieces & his people: and had it not bene that they feared to do any thing againſt my wil, without all doubt they would haue put their enterpriſe in execution. Therfore they would not paſſe any further without aduertiſing me thereof. Wherefore being come backe againe vnto the Fort, angry & pricked deepely to the quicke for being ſo mocked, they made their cõplaints vnto me, declaring vnto me that they were almoſt dead for hunger. They told the whole matter to the reſt of the ſouldiers, which were very glad that they had not entred into that action, & reſolued, aſſembling themſelues againe together, to let me vnderſtand that they did perſiſt in their firſt deliberation, which was, to puniſh the boldneſſe and maliciouſnes of the Sauages, which they could no longer endure, & were determined to take one of their kings priſoner: which thing I was enforced to grant vnto them, to yͤ end to auoid

a greater miſchiefe, and the ſedition which I foreſaw would enſue, if I had made refuſall thereof. For, ſayd they, what occaſion haue you to deny vs, conſidering the neceſſitie wherein we are, and the ſmall account that they make of vs. Shall it not be lawfull for vs to puniſh them for the wrongs which they doe vnto vs, beſides that we know apparantly how little they reſpect vs? Is not this ſufficient although there were no neceſſitie at all, ſince they thus delude vs, and haue broken promiſe with vs? After I had therefore reſolued with them to ſeaze on the perſon of Vtina, which beſides that he had giuen vs occaſion hereof, was alſo moſt able to help vs to recouer victuals, I departed with fiftie of my beſt ſouldiers all embarked in two Barkes & we arriued in the dominions of Vtina, diſtant from our Fort about 40 or 50 leagues: then going on ſhore we drew towards his village ſituated 6 great leagues from the riuer, where we tooke him priſoner, howbeit not without great cries and alarmes, and led him away in our barkes, hauing firſt ſignified vnto his Father in law and his chiefe ſubiects, that in that I had taken him, it was not for any deſire that I had to doe him any harme, but onely to relieue my neceſſitie and want of victuals which oppreſſed me, and that in caſe they would helpe me to ſome, I would find meanes to ſet him againe at libertie: that in the meane ſpace I would retire my ſelfe into my Barkes (for I feared leaſt they would there aſſemble themſelues together, and that ſome miſchiefe might thereof inſue) where I would ſtay for him two dayes to receiue his anſwere: notwithſtanding that my meaning was not to haue any thing without exchange of marchandiſe. This they promiſed they would doe. And in very deede the very ſame euening, his wife accompanied with all the women of the village came vnto the Riuers brinke, and cryed vnto me to enter into the barke, to ſee her huſband and her ſonne, which I held both priſoners. I diſcouered the next day fiue or ſixe hundred Indian archers, which drew neere vnto the riuer ſide, and came to me to ſignifie vnto me how that during the abſence of their king, their enemie Potanou being thereof aduertiſed, was entred into their village, and had ſet all on fire. They prayed me that I would ſuccour them: neuertheleſſe in the meane while they had one part of their troope in ambuſh, with intent to ſet vpon me if I had come on land, which was eaſie for mee to diſcerne. For ſeeing that I refuſed ſo to doe, they greatly doubted that they were diſcouered, and ſought by all meanes to remooue out of my minde that euill opinion which I had conceiued of them. They brought mee therefore fiſh in their little boates and of their meale of Maſt, they made alſo of their drinke which they call caſſine, which they ſent to Vtina and me.

Now albeit I had gotten this point of them that I held their king priſoner, yet neuertheleſſe I could not get any great quantitie of victuals for the preſent: the reaſon was, becauſe they thought that after I had drawen victuals from them, I would put their king to death. For they meaſured my will according to their cuſtome, whereby they put to death all the men priſoners that they take in warre. And thus being out of all hope of his libertie, they aſſembled themſelues in the great houſe, and hauing called all the people together they propoſed the election of a new King, at which time the Father in lawe of Vtina ſet one of the kings young ſonnes vpon the Royall throne: and tooke ſuch paynes that euery man did him homage by the maior part of the voyces. This election had like to haue bene the cauſe of great troubles among them. For there was a kinſman of the kings neere adioyning, which pretended a Title to the kingdome, and in deede he had gotten one part of the ſubiects: notwithſtanding this enterpriſe could not take effect, foraſmuch as by a common conſent of the chiefe, it was conſulted and concluded, that the ſonne was more meete to ſucceede the Father then any other. Now all this while I kept Vtina with me, to whom I had giuen ſome of mine apparell to cloth him, as I had likewiſe done vnto his ſonne. But his ſubiects which before had an opinion that I would haue killed him, being aduertiſed of the good entertainment which I vſed towards him, ſent two men which walked along the riuer, and came to viſite him, and brought vs ſome victuals. Theſe two men at their comming were receiued by me with all courteſie, and entertained according to the victuals which I had. While theſe things thus paſſed, there arriued from all quarters many Sauages of the countries adioyning, which came to ſee Vtina, and ſought by all meanes to perſwade me to put him to death, offering that if I would do ſo, they would take order that I ſhould want no victuals. There was alſo a King my neighbour whoſe name was Saturioüa, a ſubtill and craftie man, and one that ſhewed by proofe that he was greatly practiſed in affaires. This King ſent ordinarily meſſengers vnto me, to pray me to deliuer Vtina vnto him: and to win me the more eaſily, he ſent twiſe ſeuen or eight baſkets of Maiz or of Maſt, thinking by this way to allure me, & to make me come to cōpoſition with him: in the end notwithſtanding when he ſaw he loſt his time, he ceaſed to viſite me with ambaſſages & victuals: & in the meane while I was not able with ẏ ſame ſtore of victuals which I had, ſo well to proportion out the trauaile vpon the ſhips which we built to returne into France, but that in the end we were conſtrained to indure extreme famine, which continued among vs all the moneth of May: for in this latter ſeaſon, neither Maiz nor Beanes, nor Maſt was to be found in the villages, becauſe they had employed all for to ſowe their fields, inſomuch that we were conſtrayned to eate rootes, which the moſt part of our men punned in the morters which I had brought with me to beate gunnepowder in, and the graine which came to vs from other places: ſome tooke the wood of Eſquine, beate it, and made meale thereof, which they boyled with water, and eate it: others went with their harquebuſies to ſeeke to kill ſome foule. Yea this miſerie was ſo great, that one was found that gathered vp among the filth of my houſe, all the fiſh bones that he could finde, which he dried and beate into powder to make bread thereof. The effects of this hideous famine appeared incontinently among vs, for our bones eftſoones beganne to cleaue ſo neere vnto the ſkinne, that the moſt part of the ſouldiers had their ſkinnes peirced thorow with them in many partes of their bodies: in ſuch ſort that my greateſt feare was, leaſt the Indians would riſe vp againſt vs, conſidering that it would haue bene very hard for vs to haue defended our ſelues in ſuch extreme decay of all our forces, beſides the ſcarſitie of all victuals, which fayled vs all at once. For the very riuer had not ſuch plentie of fiſh as it was wont, and it ſeemed that the land and water did fight againſt vs. Now as we were thus vpon termes of diſpayre, about the end of the moneth of May, and the beginning of Iune, I was aduertiſed by certaine Indians that were my neighbours, that in the high Countrey vp aboue the riuer, there was new Maiz, and that that countrey was moſt forward of all. This cauſed me to take vpon me to go thither with a certaine number of my men, and I went vp the riuer to a place called Enecaque: where I met the ſiſter of Vtina in a village where ſhe made vs very good cheere and ſent vs fiſh. We found that which was tolde vs to be true: for the maiz was now ripe: but by this good lucke one ſhrewde turne happened vnto me. For the moſt part of my ſouldiers fell ſicke with eating more of it then their weakened ſtomackes could digeſt. We had alſo beene the ſpace of foure dayes ſince we departed from our Fort, without eating any thing, ſauing little pinockes, and a little fiſh, which we got of the fiſhers which wee met ſometimes along the riuer. And yet this was ſo little that certaine ſouldiers eate priuily little whelpes which were newly whelped. The next day I purpoſed to go into yͤ Ile of Edelano to take the king which had cauſed one of my men to be ſlaine, as I haue mentioned before: but being aduertiſed of my departing out of my Fort, and of the way which I tooke vp the riuer, he feared that I went foorth with a purpoſe to be reuenged of the euill turne which he played: ſo that when I came thither, I found the houſes emptie, for he was retyred a little before with all his people: & I could not by any meanes keepe my ſouldiers, being angry becauſe they had loſt one of their companions, from ſetting the village on fire. At my departure from thence I paſſed backe againe by Enecaque, where I gathered as much maiz as I could poſſibly: which with great diligence I conueied to our Fort to ſuccour my poore men, which I had left in great neceſſitie. They therefore ſeeing me a farre off comming, ranne to that ſide of the riuer where they thought I would come on land: for hunger ſo pinched them to the heart, that they could not ſtay vntill the victuals were brought them to the Fort. And that they well ſhewed aſſoone as I was come, and that I had diſtributed that little maiz among them, which I had giuen to ech man, before I came out of the barke: for they eate it before they had taken it out of the huſke. But ſeeing my ſelfe in this extreme neede, I tooke paines day by day to ſeeke ſome villages where there was ſome food. And as I trauailed this way and that way, it happened that two of my Carpenters were killed by the two ſonnes of king Emola, and by one whoſe name was Caſti, as they went on walking to the village called Athore. The cauſe of this murder was, becauſe they could not refraine thẽſelues as they walked through the fields from gathering a little maiz, which as they were doing, they were taken in the maner: wherof I was preſently aduertiſed by an Indian which a little before had brought me a preſent frõ Nia Cubacani Queene of a village, and neighbour to our Fort. Vpon receipt of this aduertiſement, I ſent my Sergeant with a number of ſouldiers which found nothing elſe but the 2 dead corpſes, which they buried and returned without doing any other exploit, becauſe the inhabitants were fled away, fearing they ſhould be puniſhed for ſuch a foule fact. As theſe things thus paſſed, & that by this time we had almoſt driuen out the moneth of May, two ſubiects of king Vtina came vnto me with an Hermaphrodite, which ſhewed mee that by this time the maiz was ripe in the greateſt part of their quarters. Whereupon Vtina ſignified vnto me that in caſe I would carrie him home to his houſe, he would take ſuch good order that I ſhould haue plentie of maiz & beanes: and withall, that the field which he had cauſed to be ſowen for me, ſhould be reſerued to my vſe. I conſulted with my men concerning this matter, and found by the aduice of all my company, that it was beſt to grant him his requeſt, ſaying, that he had meanes to ſuccour vs with food ſufficient to ſerue our turnes for our embarkement, and that therefore I might do well to carry him home. Wherefore I cauſed the two barks forthwith to be made readie, wherin I ſailed to Patica, a place diſtant from his village 8 or 9 leagues, where I found no bodie, for they were gotten into the woods, and would not ſhew themſelues, albeit Vtina ſhewed himſelfe vnto them, for as much as they imagined that I ſhould be conſtrained to let him go. But ſeeing no body to ſhew themſelues, I was conſtrained to hazard one of my men which had bene acquainted with the ſtate of the countrie, to whom I deliuered the young ſonne of Vtina, and commanded him to goe with diligence to the village of Vtina, vnto his father in law and his wife, to aduertiſe them that if they would haue their king againe, they ſhould bring me victuals vnto the ſide of the little riuer whither I was gone. At my mans comming euery one made much of the little childe, neither was there a man that thought not himſelfe well appaide to touch him. His father in law and his wife hearing of theſe newes came preſently towards our barkes, and brought bread which they gaue vnto my ſouldiers, they held me there three dayes, and in the meane while did all that they could to take me: which preſently I diſcouered, and therefore ſtood diligently vpon my gard. Wherefore perceiuing they could not haue their purpoſe, and that they were already diſcouered, they ſent to aduertiſe me that as yet they could not helpe me to victuals, and that the corne was not yet ripe. Thus I was conſtrained to returne and to carry backe Vtina home, where I had much adoe to ſaue him from the rage of my ſouldiers: which perceiuing the maliciouſnes of the Indians, went about to haue murdered him. Moreouer it ſeemed they were content that they had gotten the ſonne, & that they cared not greatly for the father. Now my hope fayling me on this ſide, I deuiſed to ſend my men to the villages where I thought the maiz was by this time ripe; I went to diuers places, and cōtinued ſo doing 15 daies after, when as Vtina beſought me again to ſend him vnto his village, aſſuring himſelfe that his ſubiects would not ſticke to giue me victuals: and that in caſe they refuſed ſo to do, he was content that I ſhould do what I thought good with him. I vndertooke this voyage the ſecond time with the two barkes furniſhed as before. At my comming vnto the little riuer, we found his ſubiects there, which failed not to come thither with ſome quantitie of bread, beanes, and fiſh, to giue my ſouldiers. Neuertheleſſe returning againe to their former practiſe they ſought all meanes to entrap me, hoping to cry quittance for the impriſonment of their king, if they might haue gotten the victorie of me. But after that they ſawe the ſmall meanes, which they had to annoy me, they returned to intreaties, and offered that if I would giue them their king with certaine of my ſouldiers, they would conduct them vnto the village, and that the ſubiects ſeeing him, would be more willing to giue vs victuals. Which thing notwithſtanding I would not grant vnto them (miſtruſting their ſubtiltie, which was not ſo couert, but that one might eſpie day at a little hole) vntill they had firſt giuen me two men in pledge with charge that by the next day they ſhould bring me victuals. Which thing they granted, and gaue mee two men which I put in chaines for feare they ſhould eſcape away, as I knew well they were inſtructed to doe. Foure dayes were ſpent in theſe conferences, at the end whereof they declared vnto me, that they could not fully and wholly performe their promiſe: and that the vttermoſt that they could doe for the preſent, was to cauſe ech ſubiect to bring his burthen of mill. To conclude, they were content to doe ſo on condition that I would ſend them their two pledges within ten dayes. As my Lieutenant was ready to depart, I warned him aboue all things to take heede he fell not into the Indians hands: becauſe I knew them to be very ſubtill and craftie to enterprize and execute any thing to our diſaduantage. He departed therefore with his troope, and came to the ſmall riuer whereinto we were accuſtomed to enter to approch as neere as we could vnto the village of Vtina, being ſixe French leagues diſtant from thence. There he went on ſhore, put his men in good array, and drew ſtreight towards the great houſe that was the kings, where the chiefe men of the countrey were aſſembled, which cauſed very great ſtore of victuals to be brought now one and then another, in doing whereof they ſpent notwithſtanding three or foure dayes: in which meane while they gathered men together to ſet vpon vs in our retreit. They vſed therefore many meanes to holde vs ſtill in breath. For one while they demanded their pledges, another while (ſeeing my Lieutenant would not yeeld to them, vntill ſuch time as they had brought the victuals vnto the boats, according to the agreement paſſed betweene vs) they ſignified vnto him that the women and young children were affraide out of all meaſure to ſee fire in their matches ſo neere their harquebuſes: and that therefore they moſt earneſtly beſought them to put them out, that they might more eaſily get people ynough to carry the victuals, and that they for their partes would leaue their bowes and arrowes, and would be contented that their ſeruants ſhould carrie them. This ſecond requeſt was as flatly denied them as the former: For it was an eaſie matter to ſmel out their intention. But while theſe things were thus in handling, Vtina by no meanes was to be ſeene, but hid and kept himſelfe ſecret in a little houſe apart, where certaine choſen men of mine went to ſee him ſhewing themſelues agreeued with him for the long delayes of his ſubiects: whereunto he anſwered, that his ſubiects were ſo much incenſed againſt vs, that by no meanes poſſible he was able to keepe them in ſuch obedience as he willingly would haue done, and that he could not hold them from waging of warre againſt Monſieur de Ottigny. That he alſo called to minde, that euen while he was priſoner, at what time our men ledde him into his Country to obtaine ſome victuals, he ſaw along the high wayes arrowes ſticke vp, at the endes whereof long haires were faſtened, which was a certaine ſigne of open warre proclaimed, which arrowes the Captaine alſo carried with him to the fort.

A certaine ſigne of warre.

He ſaid further that in reſpect of the good will he bare to the Captaine, he forewarned his Lieutenant that his ſubiects were determined to cut downe the trees, and cauſe them to fall athwart the little riuer where the boates were, to keepe them from departing thence, that they might fight with them at their eaſe, and that if it thus fell out, he aſſured him for his part he would not be there to meddle in the matter. And that which much more augmented the ſuſpition of warre was, that as my meſſengers departed from Vtina, they heard the voyce of one of my men, which during the voyage had alwayes beene among the Indians, and whom as yet they would neuer render, vntill they had gotten their pledges home. This poore fellow cryed out a maine becauſe two Indians would haue carried him into the woods to haue cut his throat: whereupon he was ſuccoured and deliuered. Theſe admonitions being well vnderſtoode, after ripe deliberation thereof Monſieur de Ottigny reſolued to retire himſelfe the ſeuen and twentieth of Iuly. Wherefore he ſet his ſouldiers in order, and deliuered to ech of them a ſacke full of mill: and afterward hee marched toward his barkes, thinking to preuent the enterpriſe of the ſauages.

An alley of 3 or 4 hundred paces long.

There is at the comming forth of the village a great alley about three or foure hundred paces long, which is couered on both ſides with great trees. My Lieutenant diſpoſed his men in this alley and ſet them in ſuch order as they deſired to march: for he was well aſſured that if there were any ambuſh, it would be at the comming out of the trees. Therefore he cauſed Monſieur de Arlac mine Enſigne to march ſomewhat before with 8 harquebuſiers to diſcouer whether there were any danger: beſides he commanded one of my Sergeants & Corporals to march on the out ſide of the alley with foure harquebuſiers while he himſelfe conducted the reſt of his company through it.

A ſkirmiſh betwene the Sauages and the French.

Now as he ſuſpected, ſo it fell out: for Monſieur de Arlac met with two or three hundred Indians at the end of the alley, which ſaluted him with an infinite number of their arrowes, & with ſuch furie that it was eaſie to ſee with what deſire they ſought to charge vs. Howbeit they were ſo well ſuſtained in the firſt aſſault which mine Enſigne gaue them, that they which fell downe dead, did ſomewhat abate the choler of thoſe which remained aliue. This done my Lieutenant haſted to gaine ground in ſuch ſort as I haue already ſaid.

A ſecond freſh charge of Sauages.

After he had marched about foure hundred paces, he was charged afreſh with a newe troope of Sauages which were in number about 300, which aſſayled him before, while the reſt of the former ſet vpon him behind. This ſecond aſſault was ſo valiantly ſuſtayned, that I may iuſtly ſay that Monſieur de Ottigny ſo well diſcharged his dutie, as was poſſible for a good Captaine to doe. And ſo it ſtood them vpon: for he had to deale with ſuch kind of men, as knewe well how to fight and to obey their head which conducted them, and which knewe ſo well to behaue themſelues in this conflict, as if Ottigny had not preuented their practiſe, he had beene in danger to haue bene defeated.

The Floridians maner of fight.

Their maner in this fight was, that when two hundred had ſhot, they retyred themſelues and gaue place to the reſt that were behind, and all the while had their eye and foot ſo quicke and readie, that aſſoone as euer they ſaw the harquebuze layde to the cheeke, ſo ſoone were they on the ground, and eftſoone vp to anſwere with their bowes and to flie their way, if by chance they perceiued we went about to take them: for there is nothing that they feare ſo much, becauſe of our ſwords and daggers.

The Floridians chiefe feare.

This conflict continued and laſted from nine of the clocke in the morning, vntill the night departed them. And if Ottigny had not bethought himſelfe to cauſe his men to breake the arrowes which they found in the way, & ſo to depriue the Sauages of the meanes to beginne againe, without all doubt he ſhould haue had very much to do: for by this meane they lacked arrowes, and ſo were conſtrained to retire themſelues. During the time of the conflict they cryed and made ſignes that they were the Captaines and Lieutenants friends: and that they fought for none other cauſe but to be reuenged on the ſouldiers, which were their mortall enemies. My Lieutenant being come vnto his boates tooke a reuiew of his companie, and found two men wanting which were killed, of whom the one was called Iames Sale, and the others name was Meſureur.

Two ſlaine.

He found moreouer 22 of them wounded, which with much adoe he cauſed to be brought vnto the boates.

Two & twenty wounded.

All the mill that he found among his company came but to two mens burdens, which he deuided equally among them. For aſſoone as the conflict began, euery man was conſtrained to leaue his ſacke to put his hand to his weapon. In this meane while I remained at the Forte, and cauſed euery man diligently to trauell, hoping that my Lieutenant would bring vs victuals. But ſeeing the time conſume away, I began to ſuſpect the truth of that which fell out, whereof I was aſſured immediately after at their returne. Seeing therefore mine hope fruſtrate on that ſide, I made my prayer vnto God, and thanked him of his grace which hee had ſhewed vnto my poore ſouldiers which were eſcaped: Afterward I thought vpon new meanes to obtaine victuals, aſwell for our returne into France, as to driue out the time vntill our embarking. I was aduertiſed by certaine of our company, which vſually went on hunting into the woods and through the villages, that in the village Sarauahi ſituated on the other ſide of the riuer, and two leagues diſtant from the Forte, and in the village Emoloa there were fieldes wherein the mill was very forward, and that there was thereof in thoſe partes in great abundance. Wherefore I cauſed my boates to be made ready, and ſent my Sergeant thither with certaine ſouldieurs, which vſed ſuch diligence, that wee had good ſtore of mill. I ſent alſo to the riuer which the Sauages call Iracana, named by Captaine Ribault the Riuer of Somme, where Captaine Vaſſeur and my Sergeant arriued with two boates and their ordinary furniture, and found there a great aſſembly of the Lords of the countrey, among whome was Athore the ſonne of Satourioua, Apalou, and Tacadocorou, which were there aſſembled to make merrie: becauſe that in this place are the faireſt maids and women of all the countrey. Captaine Vaſſeur in my name gaue certaine ſmall trifles to all the Lords, to the Queene, to the maids and women of the villages. Whereupon the boates were foorthwith laden with mill, after they had made our men as good cheere as they could deuiſe. The Queene ſent me two ſmall Mats ſo artificially wrought as it was vnpoſſible to make better. Nowe finding our ſelues by this meane ſufficiently furniſhed with victuals, we began each of vs in his place, to trauaile and vſe ſuch diligence, as the deſire to ſee our natiue countrey might mooue vs. But becauſe two of our Carpenters were ſlaine by the Indians (as heretofore I mentioned) Iohn de Hais, maſter Carpenter, a man very worthy of his vocation, repaired vnto me, and tolde me that by reaſon of want of men hee was not able to make me vp the ſhip againſt the time that he had promiſed me: which ſpeech cauſed ſuch a mutinie among the ſouldiers that very hardly he eſcaped killing: howbeit I appeaſed them aſwell as I could, and determined to worke no more from thencefoorth vpon the ſhippe, but to content our ſelues to repaire the Brigandine which I had. So we began to beate downe all the houſes that were without the Fort, and cauſed coles to be made of the timber thereof: likewiſe the ſouldiers beate downe the palliſade which was toward the waters ſide, neither was I euer able to keepe them from doing it. I had alſo determined to beat downe the Fort before my departure and to ſet it on fire, for feare leaſt ſome new-come gueſt ſhould haue enioyed and poſſeſſed it. In the meane while there was none of vs to whom it was not an extreme griefe to leaue a countrey, wherein wee had endured ſo great trauailes and neceſſities, to diſcouer that which we muſt forſake through our owne countreymens default. For if wee had bene ſuccoured in time & place, & according to the promiſe that was made vnto vs, the warre which was between vs and Vtina, had not fallen out, neither ſhould wee haue had occaſion to offend the Indians, which with all paines in the world I entertained in good amitie, aſwell with merchandiſe and apparel, as with promiſe of greater matters, and with whom I ſo behaued my ſelf, that although ſometimes I was conſtrained to take victuals in ſome few villages, yet I loſt not the alliance of eight Kings and Lords my neighbours, which continually ſuccoured and ayded me with whatſoeuer they were able to afford. Yea this was the principall ſcope of all my purpoſes, to winne and entertaine them, knowing how greatly their amitie might aduance our enterpriſe, and principally while I diſcouered the commodities of the countrey, and ſought to ſtrengthen my ſelfe therein. I leaue it to your cogitation to thinke how neere it went to our hearts, to leaue a place abounding in riches (as we were thoroughly enformed thereof) in comming whereunto, and doing ſeruice vnto our Prince, we left our owne countrey, wiues, children, parents, and friends, and paſſed the perils of the ſea, and were therein arriued, as in a plentifull treaſure of all our hearts deſire. As ech of vs were much tormented in minde with theſe or ſuch like cogitations, the third of Auguſt I deſcried foure ſayles in the ſea, as I walked vpon a little hill, whereof I was exceeding well apaid: I ſent immediately one of them which were with me to aduertiſe thoſe of the Fort thereof, which were ſo glad of thoſe newes, that one would haue thought them to bee out of their wittes to ſee them laugh and leape for ioy. After theſe ſhips had caſt anker, we deſcried that they ſent one of their ſhip boates to land: whereupon I cauſed one of mine to be armed with diligence, to ſend to meete them, and to know who they were. In the meane while, fearing leſt they were Spaniards, I ſet my ſouldiers in order and in readineſſe, attending the returne of

The great importance of this enterpriſe.

Captaine Vaſſeur and my Lieutenant, which were gone to meete them, which brought me word that they were Engliſhmen: and in trueth they had in their company one whoſe name was Martine Atinas of Diepe, which at that time was in their ſeruice, which on the behalfe of Maſter Iohn Hawkins their Generall came to requeſt mee that I would ſuffer them to take freſh water, whereof they ſtood in great neede, ſignifying vnto me that they had bene aboue fifteene dayes on the coaſt to get ſome. Hee brought vnto mee from the Generall two flagons of wine, and bread made of wheate: which greatly refreſhed me, foraſmuch as for ſeuen moneths ſpace I neuer taſted a drop of wine: neuertheleſſe it was all diuided among the greateſt part of my ſouldiers. This Martine Atinas had guided the Engliſhmen vnto our coaſt, where with he was acquainted: for in the yeere 1562 he came thither with me, and therefore the Generall ſent him to me. Therefore after I had granted his requeſt, hee ſignified the ſame vnto the Generall, which the next day following cauſed one of his ſmall ſhippes to enter into the riuer, and came to ſee me in a great ſhipboate, accompanied with gentlemen honourably apparelled, yet vnarmed. He ſent for great ſtore of bread and wine, to diſtribute thereof to euery one: On my part I made him the beſt cheere I could poſſibly, and cauſed certaine ſheepe and poultry to be killed, which vntill this preſent I had carefully preſerued hoping to ſtore the countrey withall. For notwithſtanding all the neceſſities and ſickneſſe that happened vnto me, I would not ſuffer ſo much as one chicken to be killed: by which meanes in a ſhort time I had gathered together aboue an hundred pullets. Nowe three dayes paſſed, while the Engliſh General remained with me, during which time the Indians came in from all parts to ſee him, and aſked me whether he were my brother: I tolde them he was ſo, and ſignified vnto them, that he was come to ſee me and ayde me with ſo great ſtore of victuals, that from thence forward I ſhould haue no neede to take any thing of them. The bruite hereof incontinently was ſpread ouer ouer all the countrey, in ſuch ſort as Ambaſſadours came vnto me from all parts, which on the behalfe of the kings their maſters deſired to make alliance with me: and euen they, which before ſought to make warre againſt me, came to offer their friendſhip and ſeruice vnto me: Whereupon I receiued them and gratified them with certaine preſents. The General immediatly vnderſtood the deſire & vrgent occaſion which I had to returne into France: whereupon he offred to tranſport me and all my company home: whereunto notwithſtanding I would not agree, being in doubt vpon what occaſion he made ſo large an offer. For I knewe not how the caſe ſtood betweene the French and the Engliſh: and although hee promiſed me on his faith to put mee on land in France, before hee would touch in England, yet I ſtood in doubt leaſt he would attempt ſomewhat in Florida in the name of his miſtreſſe. Wherefore I flatly refuſed his offer: whereupon there aroſe a great mutinie among my ſouldiers, which ſayd that I ſought to deſtroy them all, and that the Brigandine, whereof I ſpake before, was not ſufficient to tranſport them, conſidering the ſeaſon of the yeere wherein wee were. The bruite and mutiny increaſed more and more: for after that the Generall was returned to his ſhips, he told certaine gentlemen and ſouldiers which went to ſee him, partly to make good cheere with him, hee declared, I ſay vnto them, that he greatly doubted that hardly we ſhould be able to paſſe ſafely in thoſe veſſels which we had: and that in caſe we ſhould enterpriſe the ſame, we ſhould no doubt be in great ieopardy: notwithſtanding, if I were ſo contented, he would tranſport part of my men in his ſhips, and that he would leaue me a ſmall ſhip to tranſport the reſt. The ſouldiers were no ſooner come home, but they ſignified the offer vnto their companions, which incontinently conſented together that in caſe I would not accept the ſame, they would embarke themſelues with him and forſake mee, ſo that he would receiue them according to his promiſe. They therefore aſſembled themſelues all together and came to ſeeke me in my chamber, and ſignified vnto me their intention, whereunto I promiſed to anſwere within one houre after. In which meane ſpace I gathered together the principall members of my company, which after I had broken the matter with them, anſwered me all with one voyce, that I ought not to refuſe this offer, nor contemne the occaſion which preſented it ſelfe, and that they could not thinke euill of it in France, if being forſaken, as we were, we aided our ſelues with ſuch means as God had ſent vs. After ſundry debatings of this matter, in concluſion I gaue mine aduiſe, that wee ought to deliuer him the price of the ſhip which he was to leaue vs, and that for my part I was content to giue him the beſt of my ſtuffe, and the ſiluer which I had gathered in the countrey. Wherupon notwithſtanding it was determined that I ſhould keepe the ſiluer, for feare leſt the Queene of England ſeeing the ſame, ſhould the rather bee encouraged to ſet footing there, as before ſhe had deſired: that it was far better to carie it into France to giue encouragement vnto our Princes not to leaue off an enterpriſe of ſo great importance for our common wealth, and that ſeeing wee were reſolued to depart, it was farre better to giue him our Artillerie, which otherwiſe we ſhould be conſtrained to leaue behind vs, or to hide it in the ground by reaſon of the weakeneſſe of our men, being not able to embarke the ſame. This point being thus concluded and reſolued on, I went my ſelfe vnto the Engliſh Generall, accompanied with my Lieutenant, and Captaine Vaſſeur, Captaine Verdier, and Trenchant the Pilot, and my Sergeant, all men of experience in ſuch affaires and knowing ſufficiently how to driue ſuch a bargaine. We therefore tooke a view of the ſhip which the Generall would ſell, whom we drew to ſuch reaſon, that he was content to ſtand to mine owne mens iudgement, who eſteemed it to be worth ſeuen hundreth crowns, whereof we agreed very friendly. Wherefore I deliuered him in earneſt of the ſumme, two baſtards, two mynions, one thouſand of iron, & one thouſand of powder. This bargaine thus made, he conſidered the neceſſity wherin we were, hauing for all our ſuſtenance but mill and water: whereupon being moued with pitie, he offred to relieue me with 20 barels of meale, ſixe pipes of beanes, one hogſhead of ſalt, and a hundred of waxe to make candels. Moreouer foraſmuch as he ſawe my ſouldiers goe barefoote, hee offred me beſides fifty paires of ſhoes, which I accepted and agreed of a price with him, and gaue him a bill of mine hand for the ſame, for which vntill this preſent I am indebted to him. He did more then this: for particularly he beſtowed vpon my ſelfe a great iarre of oyle, a iarre of vineger, a barell of Oliues, and a great quantitie of Rice, and a barell of white Biſcuit. Beſides he gaue diuers preſents to the principall Officers of my company according to their qualities: ſo that I may ſay that we receiued as many courteſies of the Generall, as it was poſſible to receiue of any man liuing. Wherein doubtleſſe he hath wonne the reputation of a good and charitable man, deſeruing to be eſteemed aſmuch of vs all as if he had ſaued all our liues. Incontinent after his departure I ſpared no paine to haſten my men to make biſcuits of the meale which he had left me, and to hoope my caſke to take in water needfull for the voyage. A man may well thinke what diligence we vſed, in reſpect of the great deſire we had to depart, wherein we continued ſo well, that the fifteenth day of Auguſt the biſcuit, the greateſt part of our water, & all the ſouldiers ſtuffe was brought aboord: ſo that from that day forward wee did nothing but ſtay for good windes to driue vs into France: which had freed vs from an infinite number of miſchiefes which afterward wee ſuffred, if they had come as we deſired: but it was not Gods good pleaſure, as ſhall appeare hereafter. Being thus in a readineſſe to ſet ſayle, we bethought our ſelues that it would doe well to bring certaine men and women of the countrey into France, to the end that if this voyage ſhould be taken in hand againe they might declare vnto their Kings the greatneſſe of our King, the excellencie of our Princes, the goodneſſe of our Countrey, and the maner of liuing of the Frenchmen: and that they might alſo learne our language, to ſerue our turnes thereby in time to come. Wherein I tooke ſo good order, that I found meanes to bring away with me the goodlieſt perſons of all the countrey, if our intentions had ſucceeded as I hoped they would haue done. In the meane ſeaſon the Kings my neighbours came often to ſee and viſite me: which, after that they vnderſtood that I would returne into France, demanded of mee whether I meant to returne againe or no, and whether it ſhould be in ſhort time. I ſignified vnto them that within tenne Moones (ſo they call their Moneths) I would viſite them againe with ſuch force, that I would be able to make them Conquerours ouer all their enemies. They prayed me that I would leaue them my houſe, that I would forbid my ſouldiers to beate downe the Fort and their lodgings, and that I would leaue them a boate to ayde them withall in their warre againſt their enemies. Which I made as though I would grant vnto them, to the end I might alwaies remaine their friend vntill my laſt departure.

Auguſt 15.

The Floridians meaſure their moneths by the reuolutions of the Moone.

The third voyage of the Frenchmen made by Captaine Iohn Ribault vnto Florida.

AS I was thus occupied in theſe conferences, the winde and the tide ſerued well to ſet ſayle, which was the eight and twentieth of Auguſt, at which inſtant Captaine Vaſſeur which commanded in one of my ſhippes, and Captaine Verdier which was chiefe in the other, now ready to goe foorth, began to deſcry certaine ſayles at ſea, whereof they aduertiſed mee with diligence: whereupon I appointed to arme foorth a boate in good order to goe to diſcrie and know what they were. I ſent alſo to the Centinels, which I cauſed to be kept on a little knappe, to cauſe certaine men to climbe vp to the toppe of the higheſt trees the better to diſcouer them. They deſcried the great boate of the ſhippes, which as yet they could not perfectly diſcerne, which as farre as they could iudge, ſeemed to chaſe my boate, which by this time was paſſed the barre of the riuer: ſo that we could not poſſibly iudge whether they were enemies which would haue caried her away with them: for it was too great a ken to iudge the trueth thereof. Upon this doubt I put my men in order and in ſuch ſuch array as though they had beene enemies: and indeede I had great occaſion to miſtruſt the ſame: for my boate came vnto their ſhip about two of the clocke in the afternoone, and ſent me no newes all that day long to put me out of doubt who they ſhould be. The next day in the morning about eight or nine of the clocke I ſaw ſeuen boates (among which mine owne was one) full of ſouldiers enter into the riuer, hauing euery man his harquebuze and morion on his head, which marched all in battaile along the cliffes where my centinels were, to whom they would make no kind of anſwere, notwithſtanding all the demandes that were made vnto them, inſomuch as one of my ſouldiers was conſtrained to beſtowe a ſhot at them without doing hurt neuertheleſſe to any of them, by reaſon of the diſtance between him and the boates. The report hereof being made vnto me, I placed each of my men in his quarter, with full deliberation to defend our ſelues, if they had bene enemies, as in trueth wee thought them to haue bene: likewiſe I cauſed the two ſmall field-pieces which I had left me, to be trimmed in ſuch ſort, as if in approching to the Fort they had not cryed that it was Captaine Ribault, I had not failed to haue diſcharged the ſame vpon them.

The arriual of Captaine Iohn Ribault at the Fort the 28 of Auguſt 1565.

Note.

False reports of Laudonniere to the Admirall of France.

Afterward I vnderſtood that the cauſe why they entred in this maner, proceeded of the falſe reports which had bene made vnto my Lord Admirall by thoſe which were returned into France in the firſt ſhippes. For they had put in his head, that I played the Lord and the King, and that I would hardly ſuffer that any other ſaue my ſelfe ſhould enter in thither to gouerne there. Thus we ſee how the good name of the moſt honeſt is oftentimes aſſayled by ſuch, as hauing no meanes to win themſelues credit by vertuous and laudable endeuours, thinke by debaſing of other mens vertues to augment the feeble force of their faint courage, which neuertheleſſe is one of the moſt notable dangers which may happen in a commonwealth, and chiefly among men of warre which are placed in gouernment.

The danger of backbiting.

For it is very hard, yea vtterly vnpoſſible, that in gouerning of a company of men gathered out of diuers places and ſundry Nations, and namely ſuch as we know them to be in our warres, it is, I ſay, vnpoſſible, but there will be alwayes ſome of euill conditions and hard to be ruled, which eaſily conceiue an hatred againſt him, which by admonitions and light corrections endeuoureth to reduce them to the diſcipline of warre. For they ſeeke nothing elſe, but for a ſmall occaſion grounded vpon a light pretext to ſound into the eares of great Lords that which miſchieuouſly they haue contriued againſt thoſe, whoſe execution of iuſtice is odious vnto them. And albeit I will not place my ſelfe in the ranke of great and renowmed Captaines, ſuch as liued in times paſſed, yet we may iudge by their examples, how hurtfull backbiters haue beene vnto commonwealths.

Alcibiades baniſhed by backbiters.

I will onely take Alcibiades for witneſſe in the commonwealth of the Athenians, which by this meane was caſt into baniſhment, whereupon his citizens felt the ſmart of an infinite number of miſchiefes: inſomuch as in the end they were conſtrained to call him home againe, and acknowledge at length the fault they had committed in forgetting his good ſeruices, and rather beleeuing a falſe report, then hauing had regard vnto ſo many notable exploits which in former time hee had atchieued. But that I looſe not my ſelfe in digreſſing ſo farre in this my iuſtification, I will returne againe to my firſt courſe.

Laudonnieres receiuing of Captaine Ribault.

Being therfore aduertiſed that it was Captaine Ribault, I went foorth of the Fort to goe to meete him, and to do him all the honour I could by any meanes, I cauſed him to be welcommed with the artillery, and a gentle volley of my ſhot, whereunto he anſwered with his. Afterward being come on ſhore and receiued honourably with ioy, I brought him to my lodging, reioycing not a little becauſe that in this company I knew a good number of my friends, which I intreated in the beſt ſorte that I was able, with ſuch victuals as I could get in the countrey, and that ſmall ſtore which I had left me, with that which I had of the Engliſh General. Howbeit I marueiled not a little when as all of them with one voice began to vtter vnto me theſe or the like ſpeeches. My Captaine, we praiſe God that we haue found you aliue, and chiefly becauſe we know, that the reports which haue bene made of you, are falſe. Theſe ſpeeches mooued me in ſuch ſort, that I would needes out of hand know more, miſtruſting ſome euill. Wherefore hauing accoſted Captaine Iohn Ribault, & going both of vs aſide together out of the Fort, he ſignified vnto me the charge which he had, praying mee not to returne into France, but to ſtay with him my ſelfe and my company, and aſſured me that he would make it well thought of at home. Whereupon I replyed that out of this place I would do him all ſeruice: that for the preſent I could not nor ought not accept this offer, ſince he was come for no other intent then to occupie the place which I before poſſeſſed, that I could haue no credite to be there commanded: that my friends would neuer like of it, and that he would hardly giue me that counſaile, if in good earneſt I ſhould demand his aduiſe therin. He made me anſwere, that he would not command me, that we ſhould be companions, & that he would build another fortreſſe, & that he would leaue mine owne vnto me. This notwithſtanding I fully aduertiſed him that I could not receiue a greater comfort then the newes which he brought me to returne into France:

and farther that though I ſhould ſtay there, yet it muſt needes be that one of vs both was to command with title of the Kings Lieutenant, that this could not well agree together: that I had rather haue it caſt in my teeth to be the poreſt begger in the world, then to be commanded in that place, where I had endured ſo much to inhabite and plant there, if it were not by ſome great Lord or Knight of the order: and that in theſe reſpects I prayed him very hartily to deliuer me the letters which my Lord Admirall had written vnto me, which he performed.

The contents of thoſe letters were theſe.

Letters of the Lord Admirall vnto Laudonniere.

CAptaine Laudonniere, becauſe ſome of them which are returned from Florida ſpeake indifferently of the Countrey, the King deſireth your preſence, to the end, that according to your tryall, he may reſolue to beſtow great coſt thereon, or wholly to leaue it: and therfore I ſend Captaine Iohn Ribault to bee gouernour there, to whom you ſhall deliuer whatſoeuer you haue in charge, and informe him of all things you haue diſcouered. And in a poſtſcript of the letter was thus written. Thinke not, that whereas I ſend for you, it is for any euill opinion or miſtruſt that I haue of you, but that it is for your good and for your credit, and aſſure your ſelfe that during my life you ſhall find me your good Maſter.

CHASTILLON.

Accuſations againſt him.

Laudonnieres anſwere thereunto.

Now after I had long diſcourſed with Captaine Ribault, Captaine la Grange accoſted mee, and told me of an infinite number of falſe reports which had bene made of mee to my great hinderance:
and among other things he informed me, that my Lord Admirall tooke it very euill that 1.
I had caried a woman with mee: likewiſe that ſome bodie had tolde him that I went about to 2.
counterfeit the King, and to play the tyrant: that I was too cruell vnto the men that went with 3. 4.
mee: that I ſought to be aduanced by other meanes then by my Lord Admirall: and that I had 5.
written to many Lords of the Court, which I ought not to haue done. Whereunto I anſwered, that the woman was a poore chambermayd, which I had taken vp in an Inne, to ouerſee my 1. houſhold buſineſſe, to looke to an infinite ſort of diuers beaſts, as ſheepe and poultrie which I caried ouer with me to ſtore the countrey withall: that it was not meete to put a man to attend this buſineſſe: likewiſe, conſidering the length of the time that I was to abide there, mee thought it ſhould not offend any body to take a woman with me, aſwell to help my ſouldiers in their ſickeneſſes, as in mine owne, whereinto I fell afterward. And how neceſſary her ſeruice was for vs, ech one at that time might eaſily perceiue: That all my men thought ſo well of her, that at one inſtant there were ſixe or ſeuen which did demand her of me in mariage; as in very deede one of them had her after our returne. Touching that which was ſayd that I playd the King, theſe reports 2. were made, becauſe I would not beare with any thing which was againſt the duety of my charge, and the Kings ſeruice. Moreouer, that in ſuch enterpriſes it is neceſſary for a Gouernour to make himſelfe knowen and obeyed, for feare leaſt euery body would become a maſter, perceiuing themſelues far from greater forces. And that if the tale-tellers called this rigour, it rather 3. proceeded of their diſobedience, then of my nature leſſe ſubiect to cruelty then they were to rebellion.
For the two laſt points, that I had not written to any of the Lords of the Court but by the 4. aduice & commandement of my Lord Admirall, which willed me at my departure to ſend part of ſuch things as I ſhould find in the countrey vnto the Lords of the Counſel: to the end that being mooued by this meane, they might deale with the Queene mother for the continuance of this enterpriſe:
that hauing bene ſo ſmall time in the countrey, continually hindred with building of fortreſſes, and vnlading of my ſhips, I was not able to come by any newe or rare things to ſend them, whereupon I thought it beſt to content them in the meane while with letters, vntill ſuch time as I might haue longer ſpace to ſearch out the Countrey, and might recouer ſomething to ſende them: the diſtribution of which letters I meant not otherwiſe but to referre to my Lord Admirals good pleaſure: that if the bearer had forgot himſelfe ſo farre, as that he had broken the couering of the letters, and preſented them himſelfe for hope of gaine, it was not my commandement.
And that I neuer honoured noble man ſo much, nor did to any man more willing and faithfull 5.
ſeruice then to my Lord Admirall, nor euer ſought aduancement but by his meanes. You ſee how things paſſed for this day. The next day the Indians came in from all parts, to know what people theſe were: to whom I ſignified that this was he which in the yeere 1562. arriued in this countrey, and erected the pillar which ſtood at the entrie of the riuer. Some of them knew him:
for in trueth he was eaſie to be knowen by reaſon of the great bearde which he ware. He receiued many preſents of them which were of the villages neere adioyning, among whom there were ſome

ſome that he had not yet forgotten. The kings Homoloa, Serauahi, Alimacani, Malica, and Caſti came to viſit him and welcome him with diuers gifts according to their manner. I aduertiſed them that hee was ſent thither by the king of France, to remaine there in my roome, and that I was ſent for. Then they demanded and prayed him, if it might ſtand with his good pleaſure, to cauſe the merchandiſe that hee had brought with him to be deliuered them, and that in fewe daies they would bring him to the mountaines of Apalatcy, whither they had promiſed to conduct me, and that in caſe they performed not their promiſe, that they were content to be cut in pieces. In thoſe mountaines, as they ſayd, is found redde copper, which they call in their language Sieroa Pira, which is as much to ſay as red mettall, whereof I had a piece, which at the very inſtant I ſhewed to Captaine Ribault, which cauſed his gold-finer to make an aſſay thereof, which reported vnto him that it was perfect golde. About the time of theſe conferences, commings and goings of the kings of the countrey, being weakened with my former trauaile, and fallen into a melancholy vpon the falſe reports that had bene made of mee, I fell into a great continuall feuer, which held me eight or nine dayes: during which time Captaine Ribault cauſed his victuals to be brought on ſhore, and beſtowed the moſt part thereof in the houſe which my Lieutenant had built about two hundred paſes without the forte: which hee did to the ende they might bee the better defended from the weather, and likewiſe to the intent that the meale might bee nerer to the bake-houſe, which I had built of purpoſe in that place, the better to auoide the danger of the fire, as I ſayd before. But loe howe oftentimes miſfortune doth ſearch and purſue vs, euen then when we thinke to be at reſt! loe ſee what happened after that captaine Ribault had brought vp three of his ſmall ſhips into the riuer, which was the fourth of September! Sixe great Spaniſh ſhips arriued in the rode, where four of our greateſt ſhips remained, which caſt anker, aſſuring our men of good amity. They aſked how the chiefe captaines of the enterpriſe did, & called them all by their names and ſurnames. I report me to you if it could be otherwiſe but theſe men before they went out of Spaine muſt needs be informed of the enterpriſe & of thoſe that were to execute the ſame. About the breake of day they began to make toward our men: but our men which truſted them neuer a deale, had hoyſed their ſayles by night, being ready to cut the ſtrings that tyed them. Wherefore perceiuing that this making toward our men of the Spaniards was not to doe them any pleaſure, and knowing wel that their furniture was too ſmal to make head againſt them, becauſe that the moſt part of their men were on ſhore, they cut their cables, left their ankers, and ſet ſaile. The Spaniards ſeeing themſelues diſcouered, ſent them certaine volleis of their great ordinance, made ſaile after them, and chaſed them all day long: but our men got way of them ſtill toward the ſea. And the Spaniards ſeeing they could not reach them, by reaſon that the French ſhips were better of ſaile then theirs, and alſo becauſe they would not leaue the coaſt, turned backe and went on ſhore in the riuer Seloy, which we cal the riuer of Dolphines 8 or 10 leagues diſtant from the place where we were. Our men therefore finding themſelues better of ſaile then they, followed them to deſcry what they did, which after they had done, they returned vnto the riuer of May, where captaine Ribault hauing deſcried them, embarked himſelfe in a great boat to know what newes they had. Being at the entry of the riuer he met with the boat of captaine Couſets ſhip, wherin there was a good number of men which made relation vnto him of all the Spaniards doings: and how the great ſhip named the Trinitie had kept the ſea, and that ſhe was not returned with them. They told him moreouer that they had ſeen three Spaniſh ſhips enter into the riuer of Dolphins, & the other three remained in the rode; farther that they had put their ſouldiers, their victuals & munition on land. After he vnderſtood theſe newes hee returned to the fortreſſe, and came to my chamber where I was ſick, and there in the preſence of the captaines, La Grange, S. Marie, Ottigny, Viſty, Yonuille, and other gentlemen, he propounded, that it was neceſſary for the kings ſeruice, to embarke himſelfe with all his forces, and with the three ſhips that were in the rode to ſeeke the Spaniſh fleete, whereupon he aſked our aduiſe. I firſt replyed, and ſhewed vnto him the conſequence of ſuch an enterpriſe, aduertiſing him among other things of the perilous flawes of windes that riſe on this coaſt, and that if it chanced that hee were driuen from the ſhore, it would be very hard for him to recouer it againe, that in the meane while they which ſhould ſtay in the Forte ſhould be in feare and danger. The Captaines, Saint Marie, and La Grange declared vnto him farther, that they thought it not good to put any ſuch enterpriſe in execution, that it was farre better to keepe the land, & do their beſt indeuour to fortifie themſelues: And that after that the Trinitie (which was the principall ſhip) were returned, there would be much more likelyhood to enterpriſe this voyage. This notwithſtanding he reſolued to vndertake it, and that which more is, after he vnderſtoode by king Emola, one of our neighbours which arriued vpon the handling of theſe matters, that the Spaniards in great numbers were gone on ſhore, which had taken poſſeſſion of the houſes of Seloy, in the moſt part whereof they had placed their Negros, which they had brought to labour, and alſo lodged themſelues and had caſt diuers trenches about them. Thus for the conſiderations which he had, and doubting (as he might well doe) that the Spanyards would encampe themſelues there to moleſt vs, and in the ende to chaſe vs out of the Countrey, he reſolued and continued in his embarkment, cauſed a Proclamation to be made, that all ſouldiers that were vnder his charge ſhould preſently with their weapons embarke them, and that his two enſignes ſhould march: which was put in execution. He came into my chamber, and prayed me to lend him my Lieutenant, mine enſigne, and my ſergeant, and to let all my good ſouldiers, which I had, goe with him, which I denied him, becauſe my ſelfe being ſicke, there was no man to ſtay in the fort. Thereupon he anſwered me that I needed not to doubt at all, and that he would returne the morrow after, that in the meane ſpace Monſieur de Lys ſhould ſtay behind to looke to all things. Then I ſhewed vnto him that he was chiefe in this Countrey, and that I for my part had no further authoritie: that therefore hee would take good aduiſement what hee did, for feare leaſt ſome inconuenience might enſue. Then he tolde me that he could doe no leſſe, then to continue this enterpriſe, and that in the letter which he had receiued from my Lord Admirall, there was a poſtſcript, which hee ſhewed mee written in theſe wordes: Captaine Iohn Ribault, as I was encloſing vp this letter, I receiued a certaine aduice, that Don Pedro Melendes departeth from Spaine to goe to the coaſt of Newe France: ſee you that you ſuffer him not to encroch vpon you, no more then he would that you ſhould encroch vpon him. You ſee (quoth he) the charge that I haue, and I leaue it vnto your ſelfe to iudge, if you could do any leſſe in this caſe, conſidering the certaine aduertiſement that we haue, that they are already on lande, and will inuade vs. This ſtopped my mouth. Thus therefore confirmed or rather obſtinate in this enterpriſe, and hauing regard rather vnto his particular opinion then vnto the aduertiſments which I had giuen him, and the inconueniences of the time whereof I had forewarned him, he embarked himſelfe the eight of September, and tooke nine enſigne and eight and thirtie of my men away with him. I report mee to thoſe that know what warres meane, if when an enſigne marcheth, any ſouldier that hath any courage in him will ſtay behind, to forſake his enſigne: Thus no man of commandement ſtayed behind with mee, for ech one followed him as chiefe, in whoſe name ſtraight after his arriuall, all cries and proclamations were made. Captaine Grange, which liked not very well of this enterpriſe, was vnto the tenth of the moneth with mee, and would not haue gone aborde, if it had not beene for the inſtant requeſtes that Captaine Ribault made vnto him, which ſtaid two dayes in the rode attending vntill La Grange was come vnto him: Who being come abord, they ſet ſayle altogether, and from that time forward I neuer ſaw them more. The very day that he departed, which was the tenth of September, there roſe ſo great a tempeſt accompanied with ſuch ſtormes, that the Indians themſelues aſſured me that it was the worſt weather that euer was ſeene on the coaſt: whereupon two or three dayes after, fearing leaſt our ſhips might be in ſome diſtreſſe, I ſent for Monſieur du Lys vnto mee, to take order to aſſemble the reſt of our people to declare vnto them what neede wee had to fortifie our ſelues: which was done accordingly: and then I gaue them to vnderſtand the neceſſity and inconueniences whereinto we were like to fall, aſwel by the abſence of our ſhips, as by the neereneſſe of the Spanyards, at whoſe hands we could looke for no leſſe then an open and ſufficient proclamed war, ſeeing they had taken land and fortified themſelues ſo neere vnto vs. And if any miſfortune were fallen vnto our men which were at Sea, we ought to make a full account with our ſelues that wee were to endure many great miſeries, being in ſo ſmall number, and ſo many wayes afflicted as we were. Thus euery one promiſed mee to take paines: and therefore conſidering that their proportion of victuals was ſmall, and that ſo continuing, they would not bee able to doe any great worke, I augmented their allowance: although that after the arriuall of Captaine Ribault my portion of victuals was allotted vnto mee as vnto a common ſouldier, neither was I able to giue ſo much as part of a bottell of wine to any man which deſerued it: for I was ſo farre from hauing meanes to doe ſo, that the Captaine himſelfe tooke two of my boates, wherein the reſt of the meale was, which was left me of the biſcuits which I cauſed to bee made to returne into France: ſo that if I ſhoulde ſay that I receiued more fauour at the handes of the Engliſhmen beeing Strangers vnto mee, I ſhoulde ſay but a trueth. Wee beganne therefore to fortifie our ſelues and to repaire that which was broken downe, principally toward the water ſide, where I cauſed threeſcore foote of trees to be planted, to repaire the Paliſſado with the plankes which I cauſed to bee taken of the Shippe which I had builded. Neuertheleſſe notwithſtanding all our diligence and trauaile, wee were neuer able fully to repaire it by reaſon of the ſtormes, which commonly did vs ſo great annoy, that wee could not finiſh our incloſure. Laudonniers eſcape.

I tooke a muſter of the men, which captaine Ribault had left me, to ſee if there were any that wanted weapon: I found nine or ten of them whereof not paſt two or three had euer drawen ſword out of a ſcabbard, as I thinke. Let them which haue bene bold to ſay, that I had men ynough left me, ſo that I had meanes to defend my ſelfe, giue eare a little now vnto mee, and if they haue eyes in their heads, let them ſee what men I had. Of the nine there were foure but yong ſtriplings, which ſerued Captaine Ribault and kept his dogs, the fift was a cooke: among thoſe that were without the fort, and which were of the foreſaid company of Captaine Ribault, there was a Carpenter of threeſcore yeeres olde, one a Beere-brewer, one olde Croſſe-bow maker, two Shoomakers, and foure or fiue men that had their wiues, a player on the Virginals, two ſeruants of Monſieur du Lys, one of Monſieur de Beauhaire, one of Monſieur de la Grange, and about foureſcore and fiue or ſixe in all, counting aſwel Lackeys as women and children. Behold the goodly troupe ſo ſufficient to defend themſelues, and ſo couragious as they haue eſteemed them to be: and for my part I leaue it to others conſideration to imagine whether Captaine Ribault woulde haue left them with me to haue borrowed my men, if they had bene ſuch. Thoſe that were left me of mine owne company were about ſixteene or ſeuenteene that coulde beare armes, and all of them poore and leane: the reſt were ſicke and maymed in the conflict which my Lieutenant had againſt Vtina. This view being thus taken, wee ſet our watches, whereof wee made two Centinels, that the ſouldiers might haue one night free. Then wee bethought our ſelues of thoſe which might bee moſt ſufficient, among whome wee choſe two, one of whom was named Monſieur Saint Cler, and the other Monſieur de la Vigne, to whom we deliuered candles and Lanterns to goe round about the fort to viewe the watch, becauſe of the foule and foggie weather. I deliuered them alſo a ſandglaſſe or clocke, that the Centinels might not be troubled more one then another. In the meane while I ceaſed not, for all the foule weather nor my ſickneſſe which I had, to ouerſee the Corps de garde. The night betweene the nineteenth and twentieth of September La Vigne kept watch with his company, wherein he vſed all endeuour, although it rayned without ceaſing. When the day was therefore come, and that hee ſaw that it rayned ſtill worſe then it did before, hee pitied the Centinels ſo too moyled and wette: and thinking the Spanyardes woulde not haue come in ſuch a ſtrange time, hee let them depart, and to ſay the trueth, hee went himſelfe vnto his lodging. In the meane while one which had ſomething to doe without the fort, and my trumpet which went vp vnto the rampart perceiued a troupe of Spanyards which came downe from a little knappe. Where incontinently they beganne to cry alarme, and the Trumpetter alſo: Which aſſoone as euer I vnderſtoode, forthwith I iſſued out, with my target and ſword in my hand, and gatte mee into the middeſt of the Court, where I beganne to crie vpon my ſouldiers. Some of them which were of the forward ſort went toward the breach, which was on the Southſide, and where the munitions of the artillerie lay, where they were repulſed and ſlaine. By the ſelfe ſame place two enſignes entred, which immediately were planted on the wals. Two other enſignes alſo entred on the other ſide toward the Weſt, where there was another breach: and thoſe which were lodged in this quarter, & which ſhewed themſelues, were likewiſe defeated. As I went to ſuccour them which were defending the breach on the ſouthweſt ſide, I encountred by chance a great company of Spaniards, which had already repulſed our men and were now entred, which draue me backe vnto the court of the fort: being there I eſpied with them one called Francis Iean, which was one of the Mariners which ſtole away my barks, and had guided and conducted the Spanyards thither. Aſſoone as he ſawe me, he began to ſay, This is the Captaine. This troupe was led by a captaine whoſe name, as I thinke, was Don Pedro Melendes: theſe made certain puſhes at me with their pikes which lighted on my target. But perceiuing that I was not able to withſtand ſo great a company, and that the court was already wonne, and their enſignes planted on the ramparts, & that I had neuer a man about me, ſauing one only whoſe name was Bartholomew, I entred into the yard of my lodging, into which they followed me, and had it not bene for a tent that was ſet vp, I had bin taken: but the Spanyards which followed me were occupied in cutting of the cordes of the tent, and in the meane while I ſaued my ſelfe by the breach which was on the Weſt ſide neere vnto my Lieutenants lodging, and gate away into the woods: where I found certain of my men which were eſcaped, of which number there were three or foure which were ſore hurt. Then ſpake I thus vnto them: Sirs, ſince it hath pleaſed God that this miſchance is happened vnto vs, we muſt needs take the paines to get ouer the marſhes vnto the ſhips which are at the mouth of the riuer. Some would needs go to a little village which was in the woods, the reſt followed me through the reedes in the water, where being able to go no farther by reaſon of my ſickneſſe which I had, I ſent two of my men which were with me, which could ſwim well, vnto the ſhips, to aduertiſe them of that which had happened, and to ſend them word to come and helpe me. They were not able that day to get vnto the ſhips to certifie them thereof: ſo I was conſtrained to ſtand in the water vp to the ſhoulders all that night long, with one of my men which would neuer forſake me. The next day morning, being ſcarcely able to draw my breath any more, I betooke me to my prayers with the ſouldier which was with mee, whoſe name was Iohn du Chemin: for I felt my ſelfe ſo feeble, that I was afraid I ſhould die ſuddenly: and in truth if he had not imbraced me in both his armes, and ſo held me vp, it had not bene poſſible to ſaue me. After we had made an ende of our prayers, I heard a voyce, which in my iudgement was one of theirs which I had ſent, which were ouer againſt the ſhips and called for the ſhip boat, which was ſo in deed: and becauſe thoſe of the ſhips had vnderſtanding of the taking of the fort by one called Iohn de Hais, maſter Carpenter, which fled vnto them in a ſhallop, they had ſet ſaile to run along the coaſt to ſee if they might ſaue any: wherin doubtleſſe they did very well their endeuour. They went ſtraight to the place where the two men were which I had ſent, and which called them. Aſſoone as they had receiued them in and vnderſtood where I was, they came and found me in a pitifull caſe. Fiue or ſixe of them tooke me and caried me into the ſhallop: for I was not able by any means to go one foot. After I was brought into the ſhallop ſome of the Mariners took their clothes from their backs to lend them me, and would haue caried me preſently to their ſhips to giue me a little Aqua vitæ. Howbeit I would not goe thither, vntill I had firſt gone with the boat along the reeds, to ſeeke out the poore ſoules which were ſcattered abroad, where we gathered vp 18 or 20 of them. The laſt that I took in was the nephew of the Treaſurer le Beau. After we were al come to the ſhips, I comforted them as well as I could, and ſent back the boat againe with ſpeed to ſee if they could find yet any more. Vpon her returne, the Mariners told mee how that captaine Iames Ribault which was in his ſhip about two muſkets ſhot diſtant from the fort, had parled with the Spaniards, and that Francis Iean came vnto his ſhip, where hee ſtaied a long ſpace, whereat they greatly marueiled, conſidering hee was the cauſe of this enterpriſe, how hee would let him eſcape. After I was come into the ſhip called the Greyhound, captaine Iames Ribault & captaine Valuot came to ſee me: and there we concluded to returne into France. Now foraſmuch as I found the ſhip vnfurniſhed of Captaine, Pilot, Maſter, and Maſters-mate, I gaue aduice to chooſe out one of the moſt able men among al the mariners, & that by their owne voices. I tooke alſo ſixe men out of another ſmall ſhip, which we had ſunke becauſe it wanted ballaſt and could not be ſaued. Thus I increaſed the furniture of the ſhip wherein I was my ſelfe embarked, and made one, which had bene Maſters-mate in the foreſaid ſmall ſhip, Maſter of mine. And becauſe I lacked a pilot, I prayed Iames Ribault that he would grant me one of the foure men that he had in his ſhip, which I ſhould name vnto him, to ſerue me for a Pilot: he promiſed to giue me them, which neuertheleſſe he did not at the inſtant when wee were ready to depart, notwithſtanding all the ſpeech I vſed to him, in declaring that it was for the kings ſeruice. I was conſtrained to leaue the ſhip behind me which I had bought of the Engliſh Captaine, becauſe I wanted men to bring her away. For captaine Iames Ribault had taken away her furniture: I tooke away her ordnance onely, which was all diſmounted, whereof I gaue nine pieces to Iames Ribault to carrie into France, the other fiue I put into my ſhip. The 25 of September wee ſet ſailes to returne into France, and Captaine Iames Ribault and I kept company all that day and the next vntill three or foure a clock in the afternoone: but becauſe his ſhip was better at bowline then ours, he kept him to the wind and left vs the ſame day. Thus we continued our voyage, wherein we had marueilous flawes of wind. And about the eight and twentieth of October in the morning at the breake of the day we diſcried the Iſle of Flores, one of the Açores, where immediatly vpon our approching to the land we had a mightie guſt of wind which came from the Northeaſt, which cauſed vs to beare againſt it foure dayes: afterward the wind came South and Southeaſt, and was alwayes variable. In all the time of our paſſage we had none other foode ſauing biſcuit and water. About the tenth or eleuenth of Nouember, after we had ſailed a long time, and ſuppoſing we were not farre from land, I cauſed my men to ſound, where they found threeſcore and fifteene fathoms water, whereat we all reioyced, and praiſed God becauſe we had ſailed ſo proſperouſly. Immediatly after I cauſed them to ſet ſaile again and ſo we continued our way: but foraſmuch as we had borne too much toward the Northeaſt we entred into Saint Georges chanell, a place much feared of all Sailers, and where as many ſhips are caſt away: But it was a faire gift of God that we entred in it when the weather was cleare. We ſailed all the night, ſuppoſing wee had bene ſhot into the narrow Sea betweene England and France, and by the next day to reach Diepe, but we were deceiued of our longing: for about two or three of the clocke after midnight as I walked vpon the hatches, I diſcried land round about me, whereat wee were aſtonied. Immediatly I cauſed them to ſtrike ſaile and ſound: we found we had not vnder vs paſt 8 fathoms of water, whereupon

I commanded them to ſtay till breake of day: which being come, and ſeeing my Mariners told me that they knew not this land, I commanded them to approch vnto it. Being neere thereunto I made them caſt anker, & ſent the boat on ſhore to vnderſtand in what Countrey we were. Word was brought me that we were in Wales a prouince of England. I went incontinently on land, where after I had taken the ayre, a ſickeneſſe tooke mee whereof I thought I ſhould haue dyed. In the meane while I cauſed the ſhip to be brought into the bay of a ſmall towne called Swanſey, where I found merchants of S. Malo, which lent me money, wherewith I made certaine apparel for my ſelfe and part of my company that was with me: and becauſe there were no victuals in the ſhip, I bought two Oxen, and ſalted them, and a tunne of Beere, which I deliuered into his hands which had charge of the ſhip, praying him to cary it into France, which he promiſed me to doe: for mine owne part I purpoſed with my men to paſſe by land, and after I had taken leaue of my Mariners, I departed from Swanſey, and came that night with my company to a place called Morgan, where the Lord of the place, vnderſtanding what I was, ſtayed me with him for the ſpace of 6 or 7 dayes, and at my departure moued with pitie to ſee me goe on foot, eſpecially being ſo weake as I was, gaue me a litle Hackny. Thus I paſſed on my iourney firſt to Briſtoll, & then to London, where I went to doe my duty to Monſieur de Foix, which for the preſent was the kings Ambaſſador, and holpe me with mony in my neceſſitie. From thence I paſſed to Caleis, afterward to Paris, where I was informed that the king was gone to Molins to ſoiourne there: incontinently, & with all the haſt I could poſſibly make, I gate me thither with part of my cōpany. Thus briefly you ſee the diſcourſe of all that happened in New France ſince the time it pleaſed the kings Maieſty to ſend his ſubiects thither to diſcouer thoſe parts. The indifferent and vnpaſſionate readers may eaſily weigh the truth of my doings, and be vpright iudges of the endeuor which I there vſed. For mine owne part I wil not accuſe nor excuſe any: it ſufficeth mee to haue followed the truth of the hiſtory, whereof many are able to beare witneſſe, which were there preſent. I will plainly ſay one thing, That the long delay that Captaine Iohn Ribault vſed in his embarking, and the 15. daies that he ſpent in rouing along the coaſt of Florida, before he came to our fort Caroline, were the cauſe of the loſſe that we ſuſteined. For he diſcouered the coaſt the 14 of Auguſt, and ſpent the time in going from riuer to riuer, which had bene ſufficient for him to haue diſcharged his ſhips in, and for me to haue embarked my ſelfe to returne into France. I wote well that al that he did was vpon a good intent: yet in mine opinion he ſhould haue had more regard vnto his charge, then to the deuiſes of his owne braine, which ſometimes hee printed in his head ſo deeply, that it was very hard to put them out: which alſo turned to his vtter vndoing: for hee was no ſooner departed from vs, but a tempeſt tooke him, which in fine wrackt him vpon the coaſt, where all his ſhippes were caſt away, and he with much adoe eſcaped drowning, to fall into their hands which cruelly maſſacred him and all his company.

The French Fleete caſt away on the coaſt of Florida.

The fourth voyage of the Frenchmen into Florida, vnder the conduct of Captaine Gourgues, in the yeere, 1567.

Captaine Gourgues a Gentleman borne in the Countrey neere vnto Bourdeaux incited with a deſire of reuenge, to repaire the honour of his nation, borowed of his friends and ſold part of his owne goods to ſet forth and furniſh three ſhips of indifferent burthen with all things neceſſary, hauing in them an hundred and fiftie ſouldiers, and foureſcore choſen Mariners vnder Captaine Cazenoue his lieutenant, and Francis Bourdelois Maſter ouer the Mariners. He ſet forth the 22 of Auguſt 1567. And hauing endured contrary winds and ſtormes for a ſeaſon, at length hee arriued and went on ſhore in the Iſle of Cuba. From thence he paſſed to the Cape of Saint Antony at the end of the Ile of Cuba, about two hundred leagues diſtant from Florida, where the captaine diſcloſed vnto them his intention which hitherto he had concealed from them, praying and exhorting them not to leaue him being ſo neere the enemie, ſo well furniſhed, and in ſuch a cauſe: which they all ſware vnto him, and that with ſuch courage that they would not ſtay the full Moone to paſſe the chanell of Bahama, but ſpeedily diſcouered Florida, where the Spanyards ſaluted them with two Canon ſhot from their fort, ſuppoſing that they had beene of their nation, and Gourgues ſaluted them againe to entertaine them in this errour, that hee might ſurpriſe them at more aduantage, yet ſailing by them, & making as though he went to ſome other place vntil he had ſailed out of ſight of the place, ſo that about euening, hee landed 15 leagues from the fort, at the mouth of the Riuer Tacatacouru, which the Frenchmen called Seine, becauſe they thought it to bee like Seine in France. Afterward perceiuing the ſhore to bee couered with Sauages with their bowes and arrowes, (beſides the ſigne of peace and amitie which he made them from his ſhips) he ſent his Trumpetter, to aſſure them, that they were come thither for none other ende but to renew the amitie and ancient league of the French with them. The Trumpetter did his meſſage ſo well (by reaſon he had bene there before vnder Laudonniere) that he brought backe from king Satourioua, the greateſt of all the other kings, a kidde and other meat to refreſh vs, beſides the offer of his friendſhip and amitie. Afterward they retired danſing in ſigne of ioy, to aduertiſe all the kings Satouriouaes kinſmen to repaire thither the next day to make a league of amitie with the Frenchmen. Whereupon in the meane ſpace our generall went about to ſound the chanel of the riuer to bring in his ſhips, and the better to traffike and deale with the Sauages, of whom the chiefe the next day in the morning preſented themſelues, namely the great king Satourioua, Tacatacourou, Halmacanir, Athore, Harpaha, Helmacapé, Helicopilé, Molloua, and others his kinſmen and allies, with their accuſtomed weapons. Then ſent they to intreate the French general to come on ſhore, which he cauſed his men to do with their ſwords and harquebuſies, which he made them leaue behind them, in token of mutuall aſſurance, leauing his men but their ſwords only, after that the Sauages complaining thereof had left and likewiſe ſent away their weapons at the requeſt of Gourgues. This done Satourioua going to meet him, cauſed him to ſit on his right hand in a ſeat of wood of lentiſque couered with moſſe made of purpoſe like vnto his owne. Then two of the eldeſt of the company pulled vp the brambles & other weeds which were before them, and after they had made the place very cleane, they all ſate round about them on the ground. Afterward Gourgues being about to ſpeake, Satourioua preuented him, declaring at large vnto him the incredible wrongs, and continuall outrages that all the Sauages, their wiues and children had receiued of the Spanyards ſince their comming into the Countrey and maſſacring of the Frenchmen, with their continuall deſire if we would aſſiſt them throughly to reuenge ſo ſhamefull a treaſon, aſwell as their owne particular griefes, for the firme good will they alwayes had borne vnto the Frenchmen. Whereupon Gourgues giuing them his faith, and making a league betweene them and him with an othe gaue them certaine preſents of daggers, kniues, looking glaſſes, hatchets, rings, belles, and ſuch other things, trifles vnto vs, but precious vnto theſe kings: which moreouer, ſeeing his great liberality, demanded eche one a ſhirt of him to weare onely on their feſtiuall dayes, and to be buried in at their death. Which things after that they had receiued, and Satourioua had giuen in recompenſe to Captaine Gourgues two chaines of ſiluer graines which hung about his necke, and ech of the kings certaine deere ſkinnes dreſſed after their manner, they retired themſelues danſing and very iocond, with promiſe to keep all things ſecret, and to bring vnto the ſayd place good companies of their ſubiects all well armed to be auenged throughly on the Spanyards. In the meane ſpace Gourgues very narrowly examined Peter de Bré borne in Newhauen, which being but a yong ſtripling eſcaped out of the fort into the woods while the Spanyards murdered the reſt of the French, & was afterward brought vp with Satourioua, which at that time beſtowed him on our generall, whoſe aduiſe ſtoode him in great ſteade: Whereupon he ſent to diſcouer the fort and the eſtate of the enemies by certaine of his men, being guided by Olotacara Satouriouaes nephew which hee had giuen him for this purpoſe and for aſſurance of Eſtampes a gentleman of Cominges, and others which he ſent to diſcry the ſtate of the enemies. Moreouer he gaue him a ſonne of his ſtarke naked as all of them are, and his wife which he loued beſt of all the reſt, of eighteene yeeres olde, apparelled with the moſſe of trees, which for 3 dayes ſpace were in the ſhips, vntil our men returned from diſcrying the ſtate of the enemie, and the kings had furniſhed their preparation at their rende-uous. Their marching being concluded, and the Sauages rende-vous being appointed them beyond the riuer Salinacani, of our men called Somme, they all dranke with great ſolemnitie their drinke called Caſſine, made of the iuice of certaine hearbs (as they are wont to do, when they go to any place of danger,) which hath ſuch force, that it taketh from them hunger and thirſt for 24 houres, and Gourgues was faine to make as though he drank thereof for company. Afterward they lift vp their handes and ſware all that they would neuer forſake him. Olotocara followed him with pike in hand. Being all met at the riuer of Sarauahi, not without great trouble, by reaſon of the raine and places full of water which they muſt needes paſſe, which hindred their paſſage, they were diſtreſſed with famine finding nothing by the way to eat, their Bark of prouiſion being not arriued, which was to come vnto him from the ſhips, the ouerſight and charge whereof he had left vnto Burdelois with the reſt of the Mariners. Now he had learned that the Spanyards were foure hundred ſtrong, deuided into three forts builded and flanked, and well fortified vpon the riuer of May, the great fort eſpecially begunne by the French, and afterward repaired by them: vpon the moſt dangerous and principall landing place whereof, two leagues lower and neerer towarde the Riuers mouth, they had made two ſmaller Forts, which were defended, the riuer paſſing betweene them, with ſixe ſcore ſouldiers, good ſtore of artillery and other munition, which they had in the ſame. From Saracary vnto theſe ſmal forts was two leagues ſpace, which he found very painful, becauſe of the bad waies and continual raines. Afterward he departed from the riuer Catacouru with 10. ſhot, to view the firſt fort, and to aſſault it the next day in the morning by the breake of day, which hee could not doe, becauſe of the foule weather, and darkneſſe of the night. King Helicopile ſeeing him out of quiet in that he had failed of his purpoſe there, aſſured him to guide him a more eaſie way, though it were farther about. Inſomuch as leading him through the woods, he brought him within ſight of the fort, where he diſcerned one quarter which was but begun to bee entrenched. Thus after he had ſounded the ſmall riuer that falleth downe thereby, hee ſtayed vntill ten of the clock in the morning for an ebbe water, that his men might paſſe ouer there, vnto a place where he had ſeene a litle groue between the riuer & the fort (that he might not be ſeene to paſſe and ſet his ſouldiers in array) cauſing them to faſten their flaſks to their Morions, & to hold vp their ſwords and kaliuers in their hands, for feare leaſt the water, which reached vp to their girdles, ſhould not wet them: where they found ſuch abundance of great oyſters, and ſhels which were ſo ſharpe, that many had their legs cut with them, and many others loſt their ſhoes. Notwithſtanding aſſoone as they were paſſed ouer, with a French courage they prepared themſelues to the aſſault on the ſunday eue next after Eaſter day, in Aprill 1568. Inſomuch that Gourgues to employ the ardent heat of this good affection, gaue twenty ſhot to his Lieutenant Cazenoue, and ten Mariners laden with pots and balles of wild fire to burne the gate: and then he aſſaulted the Fort on another ſide, after he had made a ſhort ſpeech vnto his men of the ſtrange treaſons which the Spanyards had plaid their companions. But being diſcried as they came holding downe their heads within two hundred paces from the Fort, the Gunner being vpon the terrace of the Fort, after he had cried, Arme, Arme, theſe be French men, diſcharged twiſe vpō them a coluerine, wheron the Armes of France were grauen, which had bin taken from Laudonniere. But as he went about to charge it the third time, Olotocara, which had not learned to keepe his ranke, or rather moued with rage, lept on the platforme, and thruſt him through the bodie with his pike and ſlew him. Whereupon Gourgues aduanced forward, and after he had heard Cazenoue cry, that the Spaniards which iſſued out armed at the cry of the alarme, were fled, hee drew to that part, and ſo hemmed them in betweene him and his Lieutenant, that of threeſcore there eſcaped not a man, ſauing only fifteene reſerued vnto the ſame death which they had put the French vnto. The Spanyards of the other fort in the meane while ceaſed not to play with their ordinance, which much annoied the aſſailants: although to anſwere them they had by this placed and oftentimes pointed the foure pieces found in the firſt Fort. Whereupon Gourgues being accompanied with fourescore ſhot went abord the barke which met him there to good purpoſe to paſſe into the wood neere vnto the Fort, out of which he ſuppoſed the Spanyards would iſſue to ſaue themſelues thorow the benefit of the woods in the great fort, which was not paſt one league diſtant from yͤ ſame. Afterward the Sauages not ſtaying for the returne of the bark, lept al into the water holding vp their bowes & arrowes in one hand, & ſwimming with the other, ſo that the Spaniards ſeing both yͤ ſhores couered with ſo great a number of men, thought to flee towards the woods: but being charged by the French, and afterward repulſed by the Sauages, toward whō they would haue retired, they were ſooner then they would bereft of their liues. To conclude they al there ended their dayes ſauing 15 of thoſe which were reſerued to be executed for the example of others. Wherupon Captaine Gourgues hauing cauſed al that he found in the ſecond fort to be tranſported vnto the firſt, where he ment to ſtrengthen himſelfe to take reſolution againſt the great Fort, the ſtate whereof hee did not vnderſtand: in fine a Sergeant of a band one of the priſoners aſſured him that they might be there very neere 300 wel furniſhed vnder a braue Gouernor, which had fortified there, attending farther ſuccours. Thus hauing obtained of him the platforme, the height, the fortification and paſſages vnto it, and hauing prepared eight good lathers, and raiſed all the Countrey againſt the Spanyard, that he neither might haue newes, nor ſuccours, nor retract on any ſide, he determined to march forward. In the meane while the Gouernour ſent a Spanyard diſguiſed like a Sauage to ſpie out the ſtate of the French. And though he were diſcouered by Olotocara, yet he vſed all the cunning he could poſſibly to perſwade them that he was one of the ſecond fort, out of which hauing eſcaped, and ſeeing none but ſauages on euery ſide, he hoped more in yͤ Frenchmens then their mercy, vnto whom he came to yeeld himſelf diſguiſed like a ſauage, for feare leſt if he ſhould haue bin knowen, he ſhould haue bin maſſacred by thoſe Barbarians: but the ſpie being brought face to face with the ſergeant of the the band, & conuicted to be one of the great fort, was reſerued vntil an other time: after that he had aſſured Gourgues that the bruit was that he had 2000 Frenchmen with him for feare of whom the 200 and threeſcore Spaniardes which remained in the great fort, were greatly aſtonied. Whereupon Gourgues being reſolued to ſet vpon them, while they were thus amazed, and leauing his Standrad-bearer and a Captaine with fifteene ſhot to keepe the Fort, and the entry of the Riuer, he cauſed the Sauages to depart by night to lye in ambuſh within the woods on both ſides of the riuer, then he departed in the Morning, leading the Sergeant and the ſpy faſt bound along with him, to ſhew him that in deede, which they had only made him vnderſtand before in paynting. As they marched Olotocara a reſolute Sauage which neuer left the Captaine, ſaid vnto him, that he had ſerued him faithfully, and done whatſoeuer hee had commaunded him, that he was aſſured to dye in the conflict at the great Fort, wherein neuertheleſſe he would not faile, though it were to ſaue his life: but he prayed him to giue that vnto his wife, if hee eſcaped not, which he had meant to beſtow on him, that ſhee might bury the ſame with him, that thereby hee might be better welcome vnto the village of the ſoules or ſpirits departed. To whom Captaine Gourgues anſwered, after he had commended his faithfull valour, the loue toward his wife, and his noble care of immortall honour, that he deſired rather to honour him aliue then dead, and that by Gods helpe he would bring him home againe with victorie. After the diſcouerie of the Fort, the Spanyards were no niggards of their Canon ſhotte, nor of two double Coluerines, which being mounted vpon a Bulwarke, commaunded all along the Riuer, which made captaine Gorgues to get to the hill couered with wood, at the foot whereof the Fort beginneth, and the forreſt or wood continueth and ſtretcheth foorth beyond it: ſo that he had ſufficient couerture to approch thereunto without offence. He purpoſed alſo to remaine there vntill the Morning, wherein hee was reſolued to aſſault the Spaniards by ſcaling their walles on the ſide toward the hill, where the Trench ſeemed not ſufficiently flanked for the defence of the courtains, and from whence part of his men might draw them that were beſieged, which ſhould ſhew themſelues to defend the rampart while the reſt were comming vp. But the Gouernour haſtened his vnhappy deſtinie, cauſing threeſcore ſhotte to ſallie foorth, which paſſing through the Trenches, aduaunced forward to deſcrye the number and valour of the French, whereof twentie vnder the conduct of Cazenoue, getting betweene the Fort and them which now were iſſued foorth, cut off their repaſſage, while Gorgues commanded the reſt to charge them in the Front, but not to diſcharge but neere at hand, and ſo that they might be ſure to hitte them, that afterward with more eaſe they might cut them in pieces with their ſwordes. So that turning their backs aſſoone as they were charged, and compaſſed in by his Lieutenant, they remayned all ſlaine vpon the place. Whereat the reſt that were beſieged were ſo aſtonied, that they knew none other meane to ſaue their liues, but by fleeing into the Woodes adioyning, where neuertheleſſe being incountred againe by the arrowes of the Sauages which lay in wayte there for them (whereof one ranne through the target and body of a Spanyard, which therewithall fell downe ſtarke dead) ſome were conſtrayned to turne backe, chooſing rather to dye by the hand of the French, which purſued them: aſſuring themſelues, that none of them could finde any fauour neyther with the one nor the other Nation, whom they had alike and ſo out of meaſure cruelly intreated, ſauing thoſe which were reſerued to be an example for the time to come. The Fort when it was taken, was found well prouided of all neceſſaries: namely of fiue double Coluerines, and foure Mynions, with diuers other ſmall pieces of all ſorts, and eighteene groſſe cakes of gunnepowder, all ſorts of weapons, which Gourgues cauſed with ſpeede to be imbarked, ſauing the powder and other moueables, by reaſon it was all conſumed with fire through the negligence of a Sauage, which in ſeething of his fiſh, ſet fire on a traine of powder which was made and hidden by the Spanyardes, to haue feaſted the French at the firſt aſſault, thus blowing vp the ſtore houſe, and the other houſes buylt of Pine trees. The reſt of the Spaniards being led away priſoners with the others, after that the Generall had ſhewed them the wrong which they had done without occaſion to all the French Nation, were all hanged on the boughs of the ſame trees, whereon the French hung: of which number fiue were hanged by one Spaniard, which perceiuing himſelfe in the like miſerable eſtate, co feſſed his fault, and the iuſt iudgement which God had brought vpon him. But in ſtead of the w ting which Pedro Melendes had hanged ouer them, importing theſe wordes in Spaniſh, I doe not this as vnto French men, but as vnto Lutherans, Gourgues cauſed to be imprinted with a ſearing iron in a table of Firrewood, I doe not this as vnto Spaniardes, nor as vnto Mariners, but as vnto Traitors, Robbers, and Murtherers. Afterward conſidering he had not men inough to keepe his Forts which he had wonne, much leſſe to ſtore them, fearing alſo leſt the Spaniard which hath Dominions neere adioyning ſhould renew his forces, or the Sauages ſhould preuaile againſt the French men, vnleſſe his Maieſtie would ſend thither, hee reſolued to raze them. And indeede, after he had aſſembled, and in the ende perſwaded all the Sauage kings ſo to doe, they

The taking of the third Fort.

The writings hanged ouer the French, and Spaniards ſlaine in Florida, cauſed their ſubiects to runne thither with ſuch affection, that they ouerthrew all the three Forts flatte euen with the ground in one day. This done by Gourgues, that hee might returne to his Shippes which were left in the Riuer of Seyne called Tacatacourou, fifteene leagues diſtant from thence, he ſent Cazenoue and the artillery by water: afterward with foure ſcore harquebuſiers, armed with corſlets, and matches light, followed with fortie Mariners bearing pikes, by reaſon of the ſmall confidence he was to haue in ſo many Sauages, he marched by land alwayes in battell ray, finding the wayes couered with Sauages, which came to honour him with preſents and prayſes, as the deliuerer of all the countreis round about adioyning. An old woman among the reſt ſayd vnto him, that now ſhe cared not any more to dye, ſince ſhe had ſeene the Frenchmen once againe in Florida, and the Spaniards chaſed out. Briefly being arriued, and finding his ſhips ſet in order, and euery thing ready to ſet ſayle, hee counſelled the kings to continue in the amitie and ancient league which they had made with the king of France, which would defend them againſt all Nations: which they all promiſed, ſhedding teares becauſe of his departure, Olocotara eſpecially: for appeaſing of whom he promiſed them to returne within twelue Moones, (ſo they count the yeeres) and that his king would ſend them an army, and ſtore of kniues for preſents, and all other things neceſſary. So that after he had taken his leaue of them, and aſſimbled his men, he thanked God of all his ſucceſſe ſince his ſetting forth, and prayed to him for an happy returne. The third of May 1568. all things were made ready, the Rendez-vous appoynted, and the Ankers weighed to ſet ſayle ſo proſperouſly, that in ſeuenteene dayes they ranne eleuen hundred leagues: continuing which courſe they arriued at Rochel the firſt of Iune, the foure and thirtieth day after their departure from the Riuer of May, hauing loſt but a ſmall Pinneſſe and eight men in it, with a few gentlemen and others which were ſlaine in the aſſaulting of the Forts. After the cheere and good intertainment which he receiued of thoſe of Rochel, hee ſayled to Burdeaux to informe Monſieur Monluc of the things aboue mentioned, albeit hee was aduertiſed of eighteene Pinneſſes, and a great Shippe of two hundred Tunnes full of Spanyardes, which being aſſured of the defeat in Florida, and that he was at Rochel, came as farre as Che-de Bois, the ſame day that he departed thence, and followed him as farre as Blay (but he was gotten already to Bordeaux) to make him yeeld another account of his voyage, then that, wherewith hee made many Frenchmen right glad. The Catholicke king being afterward informed that Gourgues could not eaſily be taken, offered a great ſumme of money to him that could bring him his head, praying moreouer king Charles to doe iuſtice on him as of the authour of ſo bloody an act contrary to their alliance and good league of friendſhippe. In ſo much as comming to Paris to preſent himſelfe vnto the King, to ſignifie vnto him the ſucceſſe of his Voyage, and the meanes which hee had to ſubdue this whole Countrey vnto his obedience, (wherein hee offered to imploy his life, and all his goods) hee found his entertainement and anſwere ſo contrary to his expectation, that in fine hee was conſtrayned to hide himſelfe a long ſpace in the Court of Roan, about the yeere 1570 And without the aſſiſtance of Preſident Marigny, in whoſe houſe he remayned certaine dayes, and of the Receiuer of Vacquieulx, which alwayes was his faithfull friend, hee had beene in great danger. Which grieued not a litle Dominique de Gourgues, conſidering the ſeruices which hee had done aſwell vnto him as to his predeceſſours kings of France. Hee was borne in Mount Marſan in Guyenne, and imployed for the ſeruice of the moſt Chriſtian Kings in all the Armies made ſince theſe twentie fiue or thirtie yeeres: at laſt he had the charge and honour of a Captaine, which in a place neere vnto Siene, with thirtie Souldyers ſuſtayned the brunt of a part of the Spaniſh Armie, by which beeing taken in the aſſault, and hauing all his men cutte in pieces, hee was put into a Galley in token of the good warre and ſingular fauour which the Spanyard is woont to ſhewe vs. But as the Galley was going toward Sicillie, beeing taken by the Turkes, ledde away to Rhodes, and thence to Conſtantinople, it was ſhortly afterwarde recouered by Romeguas, commaunder ouer the Armie of Malta. By this meane returning home, hee made a Voyage on the coaſt of Africa, whence hee tooke his courſe to Breſil, and to the South Sea. At length beeing deſirous to repayre the honour of France, he ſet vpon Florida with ſuch ſucceſſe as you haue heard. So that being become by his continuall warlike actions both by Land and Sea no leſſe valiant Captaine then ſkilfull Mariner, hee hath made himſelfe feared of the Spanyard, and acceptable vnto the Queene of England for the deſert of his vertues. To conclude, he dyed in the yeere 1582, to the great griefe of ſuch as knew him.

The birth, life and death of captaine Gourgues.

The relation of Pedro Morales a Spaniard, which ſir Francis Drake brought from Saint Auguſtines in Florida, where he had remayned ſixe yeeres, touching the ſtate of thoſe partes, taken from his mouth by Maſter Richard Hakluyt 1586.

Three ſcore leagues vp to the Northweſt from Saint Helena are the mountaines of the golde and Chryſtall Mines, named Apalatci.

The riuer of Wateri is thirtie leagues from S.Helena Northward, which is able to receiue any Fleete of ſhips of great burden.

Wateri a goodly riuer.

Wateri and Caiowa are two kings, and two riuers to the North of Saint Helena.

Oriſtou,	Kings and Riuers to the South of Saint Helena.
Ahoia, Ahoiaue,
Iſamacon,
Icoſa or Dicoſa

The Spaniards haue killed three hundred of the ſubiects of Potanou.

The greateſt number of Spaniards that haue bene in Florida this ſixe yeeres, was three hundred, and now they were but two hundred in both the Forts.

There is a great City ſixteene or twentie dayes iourney from Saint Helena Northweſtward, which the Spaniards call La grand Copal, which they thinke to bee very rich and exceeding great, and haue bene within the ſight of it, ſome of them.

La grand Copal a rich citie.

They haue offered in generall to the King to take no wages at all of him, if he will giue them leaue to diſcouer this citie, and the rich mountaines, and the paſſage to a ſea or mighty Lake which they heare to be within foure and twenty dayes trauel from Saint Helena, which is in 32. degrees of latitude: and is that riuer which the French called Port-royal.

He ſaith alſo that he hath ſeene a rich Diamond which was brought from the mountaines that lye vp in the countrey Weſtward from S.Helena. Theſe hils ſeeme wholy to be the mountaines of Apalatci, whereof the Sauages aduertiſed Laudonniere, and it may bee they are the hils of Chaunis Temoatam, which Maſter Lane had aduertiſement of.

The relation of Nicholas Burgoignon, aliâs Holy, whom ſir Francis Drake brought from Saint Auguſtine alſo in Florida, where he had remayned ſixe yeeres, in mine and Maſter Heriots hearing.

This Nicholas Burgoignon ſayth, that betweene S.Auguſtine and S Helen there is a Caſique whoſe name is Caſicôla, which is lord of ten thouſand Indians, and another caſique whoſe name is Dicaſca, and another called Touppekyn toward the North, and a fourth named Potanou toward the South, and another called Moſcita toward the South likewiſe. Beſides theſe he acknowledgeth Oriſtou, Ahoia, Ahoiaue, Iſamacon, alledged by the Spaniard.

He further affirmeth, that there is a citie Northweſtward from S.Helenes in the mountaines, which the Spaniards call La grand Copal, and is very great and rich, and that in theſe mountains there is great ſtore of Chriſtal, golde, and Rubies, and Diamonds: And that a Spaniard brought from thence a Diamond which was worth fiue thouſand crownes, which Pedro Melendes the marques nephew to olde Pedro Melendes that ſlew Ribault, & is now gouerner of Florida, weareth. He ſaith alſo, that to make paſſage vnto theſe mountaines, it is needefull to haue ſtore of Hatchets to giue vnto the Indians, and ſtore of Pickaxes to breake the mountaines, which ſhine ſo bright in the day in ſome places, that they cannot behold them, and therefore they trauell vnto them by night. Alſo corſlets of Cotton, which the Spanyards call Zecopitz, are neceſſary to bee had againſt the arrowes of the Sauages.

He ſayth farther, that a Tunne of the ſaſſafras of Florida is ſolde in Spaine for ſixtie ducates: and that they haue there great ſtore of Turkie cocks, of Beanes, of Peaſon, and that there are great ſtore of pearles,

The things, as he reporteth, that the Floridians make moſt account of, are red Cloth, or redde Cotton to make bawdricks or gyrdles: copper, and hatchets to cut withall.

The Spaniards haue all demaunded leaue at their owne coſts, to diſcouer theſe mountaines, which the King denyeth, for feare leſt the Engliſh or French would enter into the ſame action, once knowen.

All the Spaniards would paſſe vp by the riuer of Saint Helena vnto the mountaines of golde and Chryſtall.

The Spaniards entring 50. leagues vp Saint Helena, found Indians wearing golde rings at their noſtrels and eares. They found alſo Oxen, but leſſe then ours.

Oxen.

Sixe leagues from Saint Helena toward the North, there is a poynt that runneth farre into the ſea, which is the marke to the Seamen to finde Saint Helena and Waterin.

Waterin is a riuer fortie leagues diſtant Northward from Saint Helena, where any fleete of great ſhips may ride ſafely. I take this riuer to be that which we call Waren in Virginia, whither at Chriſtmaſſe laſt 1585. the Spaniards ſent a barke with fortie men to diſcouer where we were ſeated: in which barke was Nicholas Burgoignon the reporter of all theſe things.

The Spaniards of S. Auguſtine haue ſlaine three hundred of the ſubiects of Potanou. One Potaſſi is neighbour to Potanou. Oratina is he which the French hiſtory calleth Olata Outina. Calauai is another caſique which they knowe.

SVNDRY VOYAGES MADE FROM Nueua Galicia, and Nueua Viſcaia in new Spaine, to the 15. Prouinces of new Mexico, and to Quiuira and Cibola, all ſituate on the backeſide of Guaſtecan, Florida, and Virginia, as farre as 37. degrees of Northerly latitude: with a deſcription of the riuers, lakes, cities, townes, nations, fertile ſoyle, and temperate ayre in thoſe partes; and moſt certaine notice of many exceeding rich ſiluer-mines, and other principall commodities.

A diſcourſe of the famous Coſmographer Iohn Baptiſta Ramuſius, concerning the three voyages of Frier Marco de Niça, Francis Vaſquez de Coronado, and Ferdinando Alorchon next following: taken out of his third volume of Nauigations and Voyages.

THe right honourable Don Antonio de Mendoça being ſent by Charles the Emperour to be viceroy of Mexico and Nueua Eſpanna, and hauing vnderſtood that Don Ferdinando Cortez had ſent many ſhips along the coaſt of Nueua Eſpanna to diſcouer countries, and to find out the Iſles of the Malucos, began himſelfe to deſire to do the like, as viceroy of Nueua Eſpanna; and hereupon they fell out: for Cortez ſaid that he was general and diſcouerer of the South ſea, and that it belonged to him to ſetforth thoſe voyages. On the other ſide, the lord Don Antonio alledged that it belonged to him to make that diſcouery, as being viceroy of Nueua Eſpanna. So that they fell at great variance, and Cortez returned into Spaine to complaine vnto the Emperour. Don Antonio in the meane ſeaſon hauing obteined knowledge of the voiage, which Andrew Dorantez (who was one of the company of Pamphilo Naruaez that eſcaped, as you may reade in the relation of Aluaro Nunnez, called Cabeça de Vaca) made; ſent Frier Marco de Niça with a Negro of the ſaid Dorantez to diſcouer that country. Which Frier Marco de Niça being returned, & hauing informed his lordſhip of all his diſcouery, he ſent captain Francis Vaſquez de Coronado with many Spaniards on horſebacke and Indians on foot: likewiſe he ſent a fleete by ſea, whereof Ferdinando Alorchon was captaine, as may be ſeene in the relations following.

An extract of a letter of captaine Francis Vaſques de Coronado, written to a Secretary of the right noble Don Antonio de Mendoça, viceroy of of Nueua Eſpanna. Dated in Culiacan, the 8. of March 1539.

HE ſaith that Frier Marcus de Niça arriued in the Prouince of Topira, where he found all the Indians fled vnto the mountaines for feare of the Chriſtians, and that for his ſake they came all downe to ſee him, with great ioy & boldneſſe. They are men of good making, and whiter then others, and their women are more beautifull then others of the neighbour-prouinces. There are no great cities there, yet are the houſes built of ſtone, and are very good, and in them they haue great ſtore of gold, which is as it were loſt, becauſe they know not what vſe to put it to. The people weare Emeralds and other precious iewels vpon their bodies: they are valiant, hauing very ſtrong armour made of ſiluer, faſhioned after diuers ſhapes of beaſts. They worſhip for their gods ſuch things as they haue in their houſes, as namely hearbes, and birdes, and ſing ſongs vnto them in their language, which differeth but litle from that of Culiacan. They told the Frier that they were willing to become Chriſtians, and the Emperors ſubiects, for they were without a gouernour; with condition that no man ſhould hurt them: and that they would change their golde for ſuch things as they wanted. Commandement was giuen, that they ſhould bee receiued without doing them any diſpleaſure. Neere vnto this countrey there is another Prouince heretofore diſcouered by our men, where the people go naked without any thing before them: they are very hardly reduced to Chriſtianitie, and they are valiant and ſtoute. Their houſes are couered with ſtraw. They ſeeke no other riches but to feede cattel. They goe at certaine ſeaſons to their ſacrifices into a valley ſituate in that Prouince, which is inhabited with people, eſteemed by thoſe of the countrey as ſaints and prieſts, whom they call Chichimecas, which dwell in the woods without houſes: and they eate ſuch things as they of the countrey giue them of almes. They goe naked, and are tanned in the ſmoke, and tye their priuie member with a ſtring vnto their knee, and the women likewiſe goe ſtarke naked. They haue certain temples couered with ſtrawe, with ſmall round windowes full of the ſkuls of dead men; before their temple is a great round ditch, the brim whereof is compaſſed with the figure of a ſerpent made of gold and ſiluer, and with another mixture of vnknowen metals: and this ſerpent holdeth his tayle in his mouth. They of this valley from time to time caſt lots, whoſe lucke it ſhal be to be ſacrificed, and they make him great cheere, on whom the lotte falleth, and with great ioy they crowne him with flowers vpon a bed prepared in the ſayd ditch all full of flowres and ſweete hearbes, on which they lay him along, and lay great ſtore of dry wood on both ſides of him, and ſet it on fire on eyther part, and ſo he dyeth. Where he continueth ſo quietly without being bound, as though hee did ſomething, wherein he tooke great pleaſure. And they ſay that hee is a Saint, and doe worſhippe him for that yeere, and ſing prayſes, and Hymnes vnto him, and afterward ſet vp his head with the reſt in order within thoſe windowes. Alſo they ſacrifice their priſoners, whom they burne in another deeper ditch, and not with the foreſayde ceremonies. The Spanyardes which are in Xaliſco write, that hauing good aſſiſtance, they hope that thoſe people will become Chriſtians. The Countrey is very good and fruitfull, and hath great ſtore of good and wholeſome waters.

A Letter of Francis Vazquez de Coronado, Gouernour of Nueua Galicia, to the lord Don Antonio de Mendoça, Viceroy of Nueua Eſpanna.

Dated in Saint Michael of Culiacan the 8. of March, 1539.

Of the hard paſſage from Saint Michael of Culiacan to Topira. The deſcription of that Prouince, and of another neere vnto the ſame, very rich in gold and precious ſtones. The number of the people which Vazquez caried with him in his iourney thither; and how greatly Frier Marcus of Niça is honoured by the Indians of Petatlan.

BY the helpe of God I meane to ſet forward from this City of S. Michael of Culiacan toward Topira the 10. of Aprill: neither can I any ſooner ſet forward, becauſe the powder and match which your Lordſhip ſendeth mee, cannot be brought thither before that time, and I thinke it be now in Compoſtella. Beſides this, I am to paſſe many leagues ouer mightie high mountaines, which reach vp to the ſkyes, and ouer a Riuer, which at this preſent is ſo bigge and ſwolne, that it can in no place be waded ouer. And if I depart at the time aforeſayde, they ſay wee may wade ouer it. They tolde mee that from hence to Topira was not aboue 50. leagues; and I haue learned ſince that it is aboue foure ſcore leagues. I doe not remember that I hatte written to your Lordſhippe the information which I haue of Topira: and though I had written thereof vnto you, yet becauſe that ſince that time I haue learned ſomething more, I thinke it meete to ſignifie the ſame vnto your Lordſhip in theſe my letters. It may pleaſe your honour therefore to vnderſtand, that they tell mee, that Topira is a very populous Prouince, lying betweene two riuers, and that there are aboue 50. inhabited townes therein. And that beyond the ſame there is another Countrey greater then it, the name whereof the Indians could not tell mee, wherein there is great ſtore of victuals of Maiz, French peaſon, Ari or Pepper, Melons, and Gourds, and great ſtore of Hennes of the countrey. The people weare on their bodies golde, Emeralds, and other precious ſtones, and are ſerued commonly in golde and ſiluer, wherewith they couer their houſes: and the chiefe men weare great chaines of golde well wrought, about their necks, and are apparelled with paynted garments, and haue ſtore of wilde kine; and they ſay they enter not into their countrey, becauſe themſelues haue no great ſtore of people: theſe Indians being many in number, and very valiant. That which here I ſay, I learned by two other relations of Indians dwelling neere vnto them. I meane to ſet forward at the time before mentioned, and I carrie with me 150. horſemen, and twelue ſpare horſes, and 200. footmen, croſſebow-men, and gunners. I take alſo with mee liue hogs, ſheepe, and all ſuch things as I can get for money: aſſure your Lordſhip that I meane not to returne to Mexico, vntil I be able to informe your honour more perfectly, what the ſtate of that place is: and if I find ought that we may doe good in, I will ſtay there, vntill I haue aduertiſed your Lordſhip, that you may command what you will haue done: and if it fall out ſo vnluckily, that there be nothing of importance, I will ſeeke to diſcouer 100. leagues farther, wherein (I hope in God) there will be ſomething found in which your Lordſhip may imploy all theſe gentlemen, and thoſe which ſhall come hither hereafter. I thinke I cannot chuſe but ſtay there: and the waters, the ſeaſons, and diſpoſition of the countrey, and other accidents wil direct mee what is beſt to be done. Frier Marco de Niça entred a good way into the country, accompanied with Stephan Dorantez, the 7. of February laſt paſt: when I departed from them, I left them with aboue 100. Indians of Pecatlan, and from the time of their comming thither they greatly honoured the father, ſhewing him all the courteſies they could poſſibly. I cannot ſend you, nor deſcribe vnto you his entrance among them better then I haue done in all my relations which I wrote in my letters from Compoſtella, and I ſignified vnto you all things to the full from the citie of S. Michael: and though there be but the tenth part of thoſe things, it is a great matter. Herewithall I haue ſent your Lordſhip a Letter, which I receiued from the ſaid father: the Indians tell me, that all the people of the countrey doe greatly reuerence him: and I beleeue he may trauel many leagues farther in that ſort. He ſaith, that if he finde any good countrey, he will write to me thereof: I will not goe thither without informing your Lordſhip of my iourney. I hope in God, that by one way or other wee ſhall diſcouer ſome good thing.

Another greater Prouince.

A Letter written by the moſt honourable Lord Don Antonio de Mendoça, Vice-roy of Nueua Eſpanna, to the Emperors Maieſtie.

Of certaine Noblemen which ſought to diſcouer the end of the firme land of Nueua Eſpanna toward the North. The arriuall of Vazquez de Coronado with Frier Marco at S. Michael of Culiacan, with commiſſion to the Gouernors of thoſe partes, to pacifie the Indians, and not to make them ſlaues any more.

IN the ſhips that went laſt from hence (whereof Michael de Vſnago was Admiral) I wrote vnto your Maieſtie, how I had ſent two Franciſcan Friers to diſcouer the end of this firme land, which ſtretcheth to the North. And becauſe their iourney fell out to greater purpoſe then was looked for, I will declare the whole matter from the beginning. It may pleaſe your Maieſtie to call to mind how often I wrote vnto your Highneſſe, that I deſired to know the ende of this Prouince of Nueua Eſpanna, becauſe it is ſo great a countrey, and that we haue yet no knowledge thereof. Neither had I onely this deſire; for Nunno de Guzman departed out of this city of Mexico with 400 horſemen, and 14000. Indians footemen borne in theſe Indias, being the beſt men, & the beſt furniſhed, which haue bene ſeene in theſe parts: and he did ſo litle with them, that the moſt part of them were conſumed in the enterprize, & could not enter nor diſcouer any more then already was diſcouered. After this the ſaide Nunno Guzman beeing Gouernour of Nueua Galicia, ſent Captaines and Horſemen foorth diuers times, which ſped no better then he had done. Likewiſe the Marques de valle Hernando Cortez ſent a captaine with 2. ſhips to diſcouer the coaſt: which 2. ſhips and the captaine periſhed. After that he ſent againe 2. other ſhips, one of the which was diuided from her conſort, and the Maſter and certaine mariners ſlue the captaine, & vſurped ouer the ſhip. After this they came to an Iſland, where the Maſter with certaine mariners going on land, the Indians of the country ſlew them, and tooke their boat: and the ſhip with thoſe that were in it, returned to the coaſt of Nueua Galicia, where it ran on ground. By the men which came home in this ſhip, the Marques had knowledge of the countrey which they had diſcouered: and then, either for the diſcontentment which hee had with the biſhop of Saint Domingo, and with the Iudges of this royal audience in Mexico, or rather becauſe of his ſo proſperous ſucceſſe in all things here in Nueua Eſpanna, without ſeeking any farther intelligence of the ſtate of that Iſland, he ſet forward on that voyage with 3. Ships, and with certaine footemen and horſemen, not throughly furniſhed with things neceſſary; which fell out ſo contrary to his expectation, that the moſt part of the people which he carryed with him, dyed of hunger. And although he had ſhips, and a Countrey very neere him abounding with victuals, yet could hee neuer finde meanes to conquer it, but rather it ſeemed, that God miraculouſly did hide it from him: and ſo he returned home without atchieuing ought elſe of moment. After this, hauing heere in my company Andrew Dorantez, which is one of thoſe who were in the voyage of Panphilo Naruaez, I often was in hand with him, ſuppoſing that he was able to doe your Maieſtie great ſeruice, to imploy him with fortie or fiftie horſes, to ſearch out the ſecret of thoſe parts. and hauing prouided all things neceſſary for his iourney, and ſpent much money in that behalfe, the matter was broken off, I wot not how, and that enterpriſe was giuen ouer. Yet of the things which were prouided for that purpoſe, I had left mee a Negro, which returned from the foreſayde voyage of Naruaez with Dorantez, and certaine ſlaues which I had bought, and certaine Indians which I had gathered together, who were borne in thoſe North partes, whome I ſent with Frier Marco de Niça, and his companion a Franciſcan Frier, becauſe they had bene long trauelled, and exerciſed in thoſe partes, and had great experience in the affaires of the Indies, and were men of good life and conſcience; for whom I obtained leaue of their ſuperiours: and ſo they went with Francis Vazquez de Coronado, gouernour of Nueua Galicia vnto the Citie of Saint Michael of Culiacan, which is the laſt Prouince ſubdued by the Spaniards towarde that quarter, being two hundred leagues diſtant from this Citie of Mexico. Aſſoone as the gouernour, and the Friers were come vnto that Citie, hee ſent certaine of thoſe Indians which I had giuen him, home into their Countrey, to ſignifie, and declare to the people of the ſame. That they were to vnderſtand, that your Maieſtie had commaunded they ſhould not hereafter bee made ſlaues, and that they ſhould not be afrayd any more, but might returne vnto their houſes, and liue peaceably in them, (for before that time they had bin greatly troubled by the euil dealings which were vſed toward them) and that your Maieſtie would cauſe them to be chaſtened, which were the cauſes of their vexation. With theſe Indians about twentie dayes after returned about 400. men; which comming before the gouernour ſaid vnto him, that they came on the behalfe of al their Countrey-men, to tell him, that they deſired to ſee and know thoſe men which did them ſo great a pleaſure as to ſuffer them to returne to their houſes, and to ſow Maiz for their ſuſtenance: for by the ſpace of many yeres they were driuen to flee into the mountaines, hiding themſelues like wild beaſts, for feare leſt they ſhould be made ſlaues, and that they and all the reſt of their people were ready to doe whatſoeuer ſhould bee commaunded them. Whom the gouernour comforted with good wordes, and gaue them victuals, and ſtayed them with him three or foure dayes, wherein the Friers taught them to make the ſigne of the Croſſe, and to learne the name of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and they with great diligence ſought to learne the ſame. After theſe dayes hee ſent them home againe, willing them not to be afraid, but to be quiet, giuing them apparel, beades, kniues, and other ſuch like things, which I had giuen him for ſuch purpoſes. The ſayde Indians departed very well pleaſed, and ſaid, that whenſoeuer hee would ſend for them, they and many others would come to doe whatſoeuer he would command them. The entrance being thus prepared, Frier Marco and his companion, with the Negro and other ſlaues, and Indians which I had giuen him, went forward on their voyage 10. or 12. dayes after. And becauſe I had likewiſe aduertiſement of a certaine Prouince called Topira ſituate in the mountaines; and had appoynted the gouernour Vazquez de Coronado, that he ſhould vſe meanes to learne the ſtate thereof; he ſuppoſing this to be a matter of great moment, determined himſelfe to goe and ſearch it, hauing agreed with the ſayd Frier, that he ſhould returne by that part of the mountaine, to meete with him in a certaine valley called Valle de los Coraçones, beeing 120. leagues diſtant from Culiacan. The gouernour trauelling into this Prouince (as I haue written in my former letters) found great ſcarcity of victuals there, and the mountaines ſo craggy, that he could finde no way to paſſe forward, and was inforced to returne home to Saint Michael: ſo that aſwell in chuſing of the entrance, as in not being able to finde the way, it ſeemeth vnto all men, that God would ſhut vp the gate to all thoſe, which by ſtrengh of humane force haue gone about to attempt this enterpriſe, and hath reueiled it to a poore and bare-footed Frier. And ſo the Frier beganne to enter into the Land, who becauſe he found his entrance ſo well prepared, was very well receiued; and becauſe he wrote the whole ſucceſſe of his voyage, according to the inſtruction which I had giuen him to vndertake the ſame, I wil not write any more at large, but ſend your Maieſtie this copy of all ſuch things as he obſerued in the ſame.

A relation of the reuerend father Frier Marco de Niça, touching his diſcouery of the kingdome of Ceuola or Cibola, ſituate about 30.degrees of latitude, to the North of Nueua Eſpanna.

Chap.1.

Frier Marco de Niça departeth from Saint Michael in the Prouince of Culiacan, ſtanding in 24.degrees of Northerly latitude: and comming to the Towne of Petatlan, receiueth many courteſies of the Indians there. Departing from thence, he had information of many Iſlands, and of a great countrey inhabited with ciuil people; he commeth to Vacupa: where during his aboad, he heard newes of Ceuola, and of the ſtate of the 7.Cities, and of other prouinces, & of the rich Iſlands of perles, which extend northward vpon the coaſt.

I Frier Marco de Niça of the order of S.Francis, for the execution of the inſtruction of the right honourable lord Don Antonio de Mendoça, Vice-roy and captaine Generall for the Emperors Maieſtie in New Spaine, departed from the towne of S.Michael in the prouince of Culiacan on Friday the 7.of March, in the yeere 1539. hauing for my companion Frier Honoratus, and carying with me Stephan a Negro, belonging to Andrew Dorantez, and certaine of thoſe Indians which the ſayde lord Vice-roy had made free, and bought for this purpoſe: whom Francis Vazquez de Coronado gouernour of Nueua Galicia deliuered me, and with many other Indians of Petatlan, and of the towne called Cuchillo, which is ſome 50.leagues from Petatlan, who came to the valley of Culiacan, ſhewing themſelues to bee exceeding glad, becauſe they were certified by the Indians which had bin ſet free, whom the ſaid gouernour had ſent before to aduertiſe them of their libertie, that none of them from thence forth ſhould be made ſlaues, and that no man ſhould inuade them, nor vſe them badly; ſignifying vnto them, that the Emperors Maieſty had willed and commanded that it ſhould be ſo. With the foreſaid company I went on my voyage vntill I came to the towne of Petatlan, finding all the way great intertainment, and prouiſion of victuals, with roſes, flowres, and other ſuch things, and bowers which they made for me of chalke and boughs platted together in all places where there were no houſes. In this towne of Petatlan I reſted 3.dayes, becauſe my companion Honoratus fell ſo ſicke, that I was conſtrained to leaue him there behinde.

Then, according to my ſaid inſtruction, I followed my iourney as the holy Ghoſt did leade me, without any merit of mine, hauing in my company the ſaid Stephan the Negro of Dorantez, and certaine of the Indians which had bin ſet at liberty, and many of the people of the countrey, which gaue me great intertainment and welcome in all places where I came, and made mee bowers of trees, giuing me ſuch victuals as they had, although they were but ſmall: becauſe (as they ſaid) it had not rained there in 3 yeres, and becauſe the Indians of this countrey ſought meanes rather to hide themſelues, then to ſowe corne, for feare of the Chriſtians of the towne of S.Michael, which were wone to make in-roades euen to that place, and to warre vpon them, and to cary them away captiues. In all this way, which may be about 25 or 30.leagus from that part of Petatlan, I ſaw nothing worthy the noting, ſaue that there came to ſeeke me certaine Indians from the Iſland, where Fernando Cortez the Marques of the valley had bin, of whom I was informed, that it was an iſland, & not firme land, as ſome ſuppoſe it to be. They came to yͤ firme land vpon certaine rafts of wood: and from the maine to the iſland is but halfe a league by ſea, litle more or leſſe. Likewiſe certaine Indians of another iſland greater then this came to viſit me, which iſland is farther off, of whom I was informed that there were 30.other ſmal iſlands, which were inhabited, but had ſmal ſtore of victuals, ſauing 2.which haue Maiz or corne of the country. Theſe Indians had about their necks many great ſhels which were mother of Pearle. I ſhewed them pearles which I carryed with me for a ſhew, and they told me that there were in the Iſlands great ſtore of them, and thoſe very great: howbeit I ſaw none of them. I followed my voyage through a deſert of 4.dayes iourney, hauing in my company both the Indians of the iſlands, & thoſe of the mountaines which I had paſſed, and at the end of this deſert I found other Indians which marueiled to ſee me, becauſe they had no knowledge of any Chriſtians, hauing no traffike nor conuerſation with thoſe Indians which I had paſſed, in regard of the great deſert which was between them. Theſe Indians interteined me exceeding courteouſly, & gaue me great ſtore of victuals, & ſought to touch my garmēts, and called me Hayota, which in their language ſignifieth A man come from heauen. Theſe Indians I aduertiſed by my interpreter, according to my inſtructions, in the knowledge of our Lord God in heauen, & of the Emperor. In theſe countries & in all places els by all wayes and meanes poſſible, I ſought information where any Countreys were of more Cities and people of ciuilitie and vnderſtanding, then thoſe which I had found; and I could heare no newes of any ſuch: howbeit they tolde mee, that foure or fiue dayes iourney within the Countrey, at the foote of the mountaines, there is a large and mightie plaine, wherein they tolde mee, that there were many great Townes, and people clad in Cotton: and when I ſhewed them certaine Metals which I carryed with mee, to learne what riche Metals were in the Lande, they tooke the minerall of Golde and tolde mee, that thereof were veſſelles among the people of that plaine, and that they carryed certaine round greene ſtones hanging at their noſtrilles, and at their eares, and that they haue certaine thinne plates of that Golde, wherewith they ſcrape off their ſweat, and that the walles of their Temples are couered therewith, and that they vſe it in all their houſhold veſſels. And becauſe this Valley is diſtant from the Sea-coaſt, and my inſtruction was not to leaue the Coaſt, I determined to leaue the diſcouery thereof vntill my returne; at which time I might doe it more commodiouſly.

This was the valley of Coracones.

Thus I trauelled three dayes iourney through Townes inhabited by the ſayde people, of whome I was receiued as I was of thoſe which I had paſſed, and came vnto a Towne of reaſonable bigneſſe, called Vacupa, where they ſhewed mee great courteſies, and gaue mee great ſtore of good victuals, becauſe the ſoyle is very fruitfull, and may bee watered. This Towne is fortie leagues diſtant from the Sea. And becauſe I was ſo farre from the Sea, it being two dayes before Paſſion Sunday, I determined to ſtay there vntill Eaſter, to informe my ſelfe of the Iſlandes, whereof I ſayde before that I had information. And ſo I ſent certaine Indians to the Sea by three ſeuerall wayes, whom I commaunded to bring mee ſome Indians of the Sea-coaſt and of ſome of thoſe Iſlandes, that I might receiue information of them: and I ſent Stephan Dorantez the Negro another way, whom I commaunded to goe directly Northward fiftie or threeſcore leagues, to ſee if by that way hee might learne any newes of any notable thing which wee ſought to diſcouer, and I agreed with him, that if hee found any knowledge of any peopled and riche Countrey which were of great importance, that hee ſhould goe no further, but ſhould returne in perſon, or ſhould ſende mee certaine Indians with that token which wee were agreed vpon, to wit, that if it were but a meane thing, hee ſhould ſende mee a white Croſſe of one handfull long; and if it were any great matter, one of two handfuls long; and if it were a Countrey greater and better then Nueua Eſpanna, hee ſhould ſend mee a great croſſe. So the ſayde Stephan departed from mee on Paſſion-ſunday after dinner: and within foure dayes after the meſſengers of Stephan returned vnto me with a great Croſſe as high as a man, and they brought me word from Stephan, that I ſhould forthwith come away after him, for hee had found people which gaue him information of a very mighty Prouince, and that he had certaine Indians in his company, which had bene in the ſayd Prouince, and that he had ſent me one of the ſaid Indians. This Indian told me, that it was thirtie dayes iourney from the Towne where Stephan was, vnto the firſt Citie of the ſayde Prouince, which is called Ceuola. Hee affirmed alſo that there are ſeuen great Cities in this Prouince, all vnder one Lord, the houſes whereof are made of Lyme and Stone, and are very great, and the leaſt of them with one lofte aboue head; and ſome of two and of three loftes, and the houſe of the Lorde of the Prouince of foure; and that all of them ioyne one vnto the other in good order, and that in the gates of the principall houſes there are many Turqueſ-ſtones cunningly wrought, whereof hee ſayth they haue there great plentie: alſo that the people of this Citie goe very well apparelled: and that beyond this there are other Prouinces, all which (hee ſayth) are much greater then theſe ſeuen cities. I gaue credite to his ſpeach, becauſe I found him to bee a man of good vnderſtanding: but I deferred my departure to follow Stephan Dorantes, both becauſe I thought hee would ſtay for mee, and alſo to attend the returne of my meſſengers which I had ſent vnto the Sea, who returned vnto me vpon Eaſter day, bringing with them certaine inhabitants of the Sea-coaſt, and of two of the Iſlands. Of whom I vnderſtoode, that the Iſlandes aboue mentioned were ſcarce of victuals, as I had learned before, and that they are inhabited by people, which weare ſhelles of Pearles vpon their foreheads, and they ſay that they haue great Pearles, and much Golde. They informed mee of foure and thirtie Iſlandes, lying one neere vnto another: they ſay that the people on the Sea-coaſt haue ſmall ſtore of victuals, as alſo thoſe of the Iſlandes, and that they traffique one with the other vpon raftes. This coaſt ſtretcheth Northward as is to bee ſeene. Theſe Indians of the Coaſt brought me certaine Targets made of Cow-hydes very well dreſſed, which were ſo large, that they couered them from the head to the very foote, with a hole in the toppe of the ſame to looke out before: they are ſo ſtrong, that a Croſſebow (as I ſuppoſe) will not pierce them.

Chap. 2.

He hath new information of the ſeuen Cities by certaine Indians called Pintados, and of three other kingdomes called Marata, Acus, and Totonteac, being Countreys very rich in Turqueſes and Hides of cattel. Following his voyage through thoſe countries, he taketh poſſeſſion thereof for the Emperors Maieſtie, and of the Indians is much honoured and ſerued with victuals.

The ſame day came three Indians of thoſe which I called Pintados, becauſe I ſaw their faces, breaſts and armes painted. Theſe dwel farther vp into the countrey towards the Eaſt, and ſome of them border vpon the ſeuen cities, which ſayd they came to ſee mee, becauſe they had heard of me: and among other things, they gaue me information of the ſeuen cities, and of the other Prouinces, which the Indian that Stephan ſent me had tolde mee of, almoſt in the very ſame maner that Stephan had ſent mee worde; and ſo I ſent backe the people of the ſea-coaſt: and two Indians of the Iſlandes ſayde they would goe with mee ſeuen or eight dayes.

So with theſe and with the three Pintados aboue mentioned, I departed from Vacupa vpon Eaſter tueſday, the ſame way that Stephan went, from whom I receiued new meſſengers with a Croſſe of the bigneſſe of the firſt which he ſent me: which haſtened mee forward, and aſſured me that the land which I ſought for, was the greateſt and beſt countrey in all thoſe partes. The ſayd meſſengers told mee particularly without fayling in any one poynt, all that which the firſt meſſenger had tolde mee, and much more, and gaue mee more plaine information thereof. So I trauelled that day being Eaſter tueſday, and two dayes more, the very ſame way that Stephan had gone: at the end of which 3 dayes they tolde mee, that from that place a man might trauell in thirtie dayes to the citie of Ceuola, which is the firſt of the ſeuen. Neither did one onely tell me thus much, but very many; who tolde me very particularly of the greatneſſe of the houſes, and of the faſhion of them, as the firſt meſſengers had informed me. Alſo they told me, that beſides theſe ſeuen Cities, there are 3. other kingdomes which are called Marata, Acus, and Totonteac. I enquired of them wherefore they trauelled ſo farre from their houſes? They ſaid that they went for Turqueſes, and Hides of kine, and other things; and that of all theſe there was great abundance in this Countrey. Likewiſe I enquired how, and by what meanes they obteined theſe things? They tolde me, by their ſeruice, and by the ſweat of their browes, and that they went vnto the firſt citie of the Prouince which is called Ceuola, and that they ſerued them in tilling their ground, and in other buſineſſes, and that they giue them Hydes of oxen, which they haue in thoſe places, and turqueſes for their ſeruice, and that the people of this city weare very fine and excellent turqueſes hanging at their eares and at their noſtrils. They ſay alſo, that of theſe turqueſes they make fine workes vpon the principall gates of the houſes of this citie. They tolde mee, that the apparell which the inhabitants of Ceuola weare, is a gowne of cotten downe to the foote, with a button at the necke, and a long ſtring hanging downe at the ſame, and that the ſleeues of theſe gownes are as broad beneath as aboue. They ſay, they gyrd themſelues with gyrdles of turqueſes, and that ouer theſe coates ſome weare good apparel, others hides of kine very well dreſſed, which they take to bee the beſt apparell of that countrey, whereof they haue there great quantitie. Likewiſe the women goe apparelled, and couered downe to the foote. Theſe Indians gaue me very good intertainment, and curiouſly enquired the day of my departure from Vacupa, that at my returne they might prouide me of foode and lodging. They brought certaine ſicke folkes before mee, that I might heale them, and ſought to touch my apparell, and gaue mee certaine Cow-hydes ſo well trimmed and dreſſed, that by them a man might coniecture that they were wrought by ciuile people, and all of them affirmed, that they came from Ceuola.

Another village.

The next day I followed my iourney, and carrying with mee the Pintados, I came to another Village where I was well receiued by the people of the ſame: who likewiſe ſought to touch my garments, and gaue mee as particular knowledge of the Lande aforeſayde, as I had receiued of thoſe which mette mee before: and alſo tolde mee, that from that place certaine people were gone with Stephan Dorantez foure or fiue dayes iourney. And here I found a great croſſe, which Stephan had left me for a ſigne, that the newes of the good Countrey increaſed, and left worde, that with all haſte they ſhould ſende mee away, and that hee would ſtay for mee at the ende of the firſt Deſert that he mette with. Heere I ſet vp two Croſſes, and tooke poſſeſſion according to mine inſtruction, becauſe that the Countrey ſeemed better vnto mee then that which I had paſſed, and that I thought it meete to make an acte of poſſeſſion as farre as that place.

In this maner I trauailed fiue dayes, alwayes finding inhabited places with great hoſpitalitie and intertainments, and many Turqueſes, and Oxe-hides, and the like report concerning the countrey. Heere I vnderſtood, that after two dayes iourney I ſhould finde a deſert where there is no foode; but that there were certaine gone before to build mee lodgings, and to carrie foode for mee: whereupon I haſtened my way, hoping to finde Stephan at the ende thereof, becauſe in that place hee had left worde that hee would ſtay for mee. Before I came to the deſert, I mette with a very pleaſant Towne, by reaſon of great ſtore of waters conueighed thither to water the ſame. Heere I mette with many people both men and women clothed in Cotton, and ſome couered with Oxe-hydes, which generally they take for better apparell then that of cotton. All the people of this Village goe in Caconados, that is to ſay, with Turqueſes hanging at their noſtrilles and eares: which Turqueſes they call Cacona. Amongſt others, the Lord of this Village came vnto me, and two of his brethren very well appareled in Cotton, who alſo were in Caconados, each of them hauing his collar of Turqueſes about his necke: and they preſented vnto mee many wilde beaſtes, as Conies, Quailes, Maiz, nuttes of Pine trees, and all in great abundance, and offered mee many Turqueſes, and dreſſed Oxe-hydes, and very faire veſſels to drinke in, and other things; whereof I would receiue no whit. And hauing my garment of gray cloth, which in Spaine is called çaragoça, the Lord of this Village, and the other Indians touched my gowne with their handes, and tolde mee, that of ſuch Cloth there was great ſtore in Totonteac, and that the people of that Countrey wore the ſame. Whereat I laughed, and ſayde that it was nothing elſe but ſuch apparell of Cotton as they wore. And they replyed: We would haue thee thinke that we vnderſtand, that that apparell which thou weareſt, and that which we weare are of diuers ſortes. Vnderſtand thou, that in Ceuola all the houſes are full of that apparell which we weare, but in Totonteac there are certaine litle beaſts, from whom they take that thing wherewith ſuch apparell as thou weareſt, is made. I prayed them to informe mee more playnely of this matter. And they tolde mee that the ſayde beaſtes were about the bigneſſe of the two braches or ſpaniels which Stephan caryed with him, and they ſay that there is great ſtore of that cattell in Totonteac.

He entreth into a deſert, and the Indians ſuffer him to want nothing neceſſary. Following his Voyage, he commeth into a fertile valley, and hath certaine knowledge giuen him (as he had before) of the ſtate of Ceuola, and of Totonteac; and that the coaſt of the ſea in 35. degrees trendeth much to the Weſtward: and alſo of the kingdomes of Marat and Acus.

The next day I entred into the Deſert, and where I was to dine, I found bowers made, and victuals in abundance by a riuers ſide; and at night I found bowers and victuals in like ſort, and after that maner I found for 4. dayes trauell: all which time the wilderneſſe continueth.

A deſert of foure dayes iourney.

At the ende of theſe foure dayes, I entred into a valley very well inhabited with people. At the firſt Village there mette me many men and women with victuals, and all of them had Turqueſes hanging at their noſtrils and eares, and ſome had collars of turqueſes like thoſe which the Lord of the Village before I came to the Deſert, and his two brethren wore; ſauing that they ware them but ſingle about their neckes; and theſe people weare them three or foure times double, and goe in good apparell, and ſkinnes of Oxen: and the women weare of the ſayd Turqueſes at their noſtrils and eares, and very good waſt-coats and other garments. Heere there was as great knowledge of Ceuola, as in Nueua Eſpanna of Temiſtitan, and in Peru of Cuzco: and they tolde vs particularly the maner of their houſes, lodgings, ſtreetes and market-places, as men that had bene oftentimes there, and as thoſe which were furniſhed from thence with things neceſſary for the ſeruice of their houſholde, as thoſe alſo had done, which I already had paſſed. I tolde them it was impoſſible that the houſes ſhould be made in ſuch ſort as they informed mee, and they for my better vnderſtanding tooke earth or aſhes, and powred water thereupon, and ſhewed me how they layd ſtones vpon it, and how the buylding grewe vp, as they continued laying ſtones thereon, vntill it mounted aloft. I aſked them whether the men of that Countrey had wings to mount vp vnto thoſe loftes: whereat they laughed, and ſhewed mee a Ladder in as good ſort as I my ſelfe was able to deſcribe it. Then they tooke a Staffe and helde it ouer their heads, and ſaid that the lofts were ſo high one aboue another. Likewiſe heere I had information of the woollen cloth of Totonteac, where they ſay are houſes like thoſe of Ceuola, and better and more in number, and that it is a great Prouince, and hath no gouernour.

Here I vnderſtood that the coaſt of the ſea trended much toward the Weſt: for vnto the entrance of this firſt deſert which I paſſed, the coaſt ſtill ſtretched Northward: and becauſe the trending of the coaſt is a thing of great importance, I was deſirous to knowe and ſee it: and I ſaw plainely, that in 35. degrees the coaſt ſtretcheth to the Weſt, whereat I reioyced no leſſe, then of the good newes within land, and ſo I returned backe to proceede on my iourney.

This graduation is miſtaken by 6. or 7. degrees at the leaſt.

Through the foreſayd valley I trauailed fiue dayes iourney, which is inhabited with goodly people, and ſo aboundeth with victuals, that it ſufficeth to feede aboue three thouſand horſemen: it is all well watered and like a garden: the burroughs and townes are halfe and a quarter of a league long, and in all theſe villages, I found very ample report of Ceuola, whereof they made ſuch particular relation vnto me, as people which goe yeerely thither to earne their liuing. Here I found a man borne in Ceuola, who told me that he came thither, hauing eſcaped from the gouernour or Lieutenant of the towne; for the Lord of theſe ſeuen Cities liueth and abideth in one of thoſe townes called Ahacus, and in the reſt he appoynteth lieu-tenants vnder him. This towneſman of Ceuola is a white man of a good complexion, ſomewhat well in yeeres, and of farre greater capacitie then the inhabitants of this valley, or then thoſe which I had left behind me. Hee ſayde that hee would goe with mee, that I might begge his pardon: and of him I learned many particulars: he tolde me that Ceuola was a great Citie, inhabited with great ſtore of people, and hauing many Streetes and Market-places: and that in ſome partes of this Citie there are certaine very great houſes of fiue ſtories high, wherein the chiefe of the Citie aſſemble themſelues at certaine dayes of the yeere. He ſayeth that the houſes are of Lyme and Stone, according as others had tolde mee before, and that the gates, and ſmall pillars of the principall houſes are of Turqueſes, and all the veſſels wherein they are ſerued, and the other ornaments of their houſes were of golde: and that the other ſixe Cities are built like vnto this, whereof ſome are bigger: and that Ahacus is the chiefeſt of them. Hee ſayth that toward the Southeaſt there is a kingdome called Marata, and that there were woont to be many, and thoſe great Cities, which were all built of houſes of Stone, with diuers lofts; and that theſe haue and doe wage warre with the Lord of the ſeuen cities, through which warre this kingdome of Marata is for the moſt part waſted, although it yet continueth and mainteineth warre againſt the other.

Ahacus.

Marata lieth toward the Southeaſt.

Likewiſe he ſaith, that the kingdome called Totanteac lyeth toward the Weſt, which he ſaith is a very mightie Prouince, repleniſhed with infinite ſtore of people and riches: and that in the ſayde Kingdome they weare woollen cloth like that which I weare, and other finer ſorts of woollen cloth made of the fleeces of thoſe beaſtes which they deſcribed before vnto me; and that they are a very ciuile people. Moreouer hee tolde me, that there is another great Prouince and kingdome called Acus; for there is Acus, and Ahacus with an aſpiration, which is the principall of the ſeuen cities: and Acus without an aſpiration is a kingdome and Prouince of it ſelfe. He told me alſo, that the apparel which they weare in Ceuola is after the ſame maner as they before had certified me, and that all the inhabitants of the Citie lie vpon beddes rayſed a good height from the ground, with quilts and canopies ouer them, which couer the ſayde Beds: and hee tolde mee that he would goe with me to Ceuola and farther alſo, if I would take him with me. The like relation was giuen vnto me in this towne by many others, but not ſo particularly. I trauelled three dayes iourney through this valley: the inhabitants whereof made mee exceeding great cheere and intertainement. In this valley I ſaw aboue a thouſand Oxe-hides moſt excellently trimmed and dreſſed. And here alſo I ſaw farre greater ſtore of Turqueſes and chaines made thereof, then in all places which I had paſſed; and they ſay, that all commeth from the city of Ceuola, whereof they haue great knowledge, as alſo of the kingdome of Marata, and of the kingdomes of Acus and Totonteac.

Totonteac lyeth Weſt.

Chap. 4.

Of a very great beaſt with one horne vpon his fore-head; and of the courteſies which the Indians ſhewed Frier Marcus of Niça, in his Voyage. Alſo how cruelly Stephan Dorantez and his companions were vſed vpon their arriuall at Ceuola, by the Lorde thereof.

A mightie beaſt with one horne.

HEre they ſhewed me an hide halfe as bigge againe as the hide of a great oxe, and tolde me that it was the ſkin of a beaſt which had but one horne vpon his forehead, & that this horne bendeth toward his breaſt, and that out of the ſame goeth a point right forward, wherein he hath ſo great ſtrength, that it will breake any thing how ſtrong ſo euer it be, if he runne againſt it, and that there are great ſtore of theſe beaſts in that Countrey. The colour of the hide is of the colour of a great Goat-ſkin, and the haire is a finger thicke. Here I had meſſengers from Stephan which brought me word, that by this time he was come to the fartheſt part of the deſert, and that he was very ioyfull, becauſe the farther he went, the more perfect knowledge he had of the greatneſſe of the countrey, and ſent me word, that ſince his departure from me, hee neuer had found the Indians in any lye; for euen vnto that very place he had found al in ſuch maner as they had informed him, & hoped that he ſhould find the like at his arriuall in the valley which he was going vnto, as he had found in the villages before paſſed. I ſet vp croſſes, and vſed thoſe acts and ceremonies, which were to be done according to my inſtructions. The inhabitants requeſted me to ſtay here three or foure daies, becauſe that from this place there were foure dayes iourney vnto the deſert, and from the firſt entrance into the ſame deſert vnto the citie of Ceuola are 15 great dayes iourney more; alſo that they would prouide victuals for me and other neceſſaries for that voyage. Likewiſe they told me, that with Stephan the Negro were gone aboue 300 men to beare him company, and to carry victuals after him, and that in like ſort many of them would go with me to ſerue me, becauſe they hoped to returne home rich. I thanked them, and willed them to ſet things in order with ſpeede, and ſo I reſted there three dayes, wherein I alwayes informed my ſelfe of Ceuola, and of as many other things as I could learne, and called many Indians vnto mee, and examined them ſeuerally, and all of them agreed in one tale, and told me of the great multitude of people, and of the order of the ſtreetes, of the greatneſſe of the houſes, and of the ſtrength of the gates, agreeing altogether with that which the reſt before had told me. After three dayes many aſſembled themſelues to go with me, 30 of the principal of whom I tooke, being very well apparelled, and with chaines of turqueſes, which ſome of them weare fiue or ſixe times double, and other people to cary things neceſſary for them and me, and ſo ſet forward on my voyage.

Fifteene daies iourney from the end of the deſert to Ceuola or Ciuola.

Thus I entred into the ſecond deſert on the 9 of May, and trauelled the firſt day by a very broad and beaten way, & we came to diner vnto a water, where the Indians had made prouiſion for me: and at night we came to another water, where I found a houſe which they had fully made vp for me, and another houſe ſtood made where Stephan lodged when he paſſed that way, and many old cottages and many ſignes of fire which the people had made that trauelled to Ceuola by this way. In this ſort I trauelled 12 dayes iourney being alway well prouided of victuals, of wild beaſts, Hares, and Partridges of the ſame colour and taſt with thoſe of Spaine although they are not ſo big, for they be ſomewhat leſſe.

The ſecond deſert entred the 9. of May.

Twelue dayes iourney.

Here met vs an Indian the ſonne of one of the chiefe men that accompanied mee, which had gone before with Stephan, who came in a great fright, hauing his face and body all couered with ſweat, and ſhewing exceeding ſadneſſe in his countenance; and he told mee that a dayes iourney before Stephan came to Ceuola he ſent his great Mace made of a gourd by his meſſengers, as he was alwayes woont to ſend them before him, that hee might knowe in what ſort hee came vnto them, which gourd had a ſtring of belles vpon it, and two feathers one white and another red, in token that he demanded ſafe conduct, and that he came peaceably. And when they came to Ceuola before the Magiſtrate, which the Lord of the citie had placed there for his Lieutenant, they deliuered him the ſayde great gourd, who tooke the ſame in his hands, and after he had ſpyed the belles, in a great rage and fury hee caſt it to the ground, and willed the meſſengers to get them packing with ſpeed, for he knew well ynough what people they were, and that they ſhould will them in no caſe to enter into the citie, for if they did hee would put them all to death. The meſſengers returned and tolde Stephan how things had paſſed, who anſwered them, that it made no great matter, and would needes proceed on his voyage till he came to the citie of Ceuola: where he found men that would not let him enter into the towne, but ſhut him into a great houſe which ſtoode without the citie, and ſtraightway tooke all things from him which hee caried to truck and barter with them, and certaine turqueſes, and other things which he had receiued of the Indians by the way, and they kept him there all that night without giuing him meate or drinke, and the next day in the morning this Indian was a thirſt, and went out of the houſe to drinke at a riuer that was neere at hand, and within a little while after he ſaw Stephan running away, and the people followed him, and ſlew certaine of the Indians which went in his company. And when this Indian ſaw theſe things, he hid himſelfe on the banks of the riuer, and afterward croſſed the high way of the deſert. The Indians that went with me hearing theſe newes began incontinently to lament, and I thought theſe heauie and bad newes would coſt mee my life, neither did I feare ſo much the loſſe of mine owne life, as that I ſhould not bee able to returne to giue information of the greatneſſe of that Countrey, where our Lord God might be glorified: and ſtreight way I cut the cords of my budgets which I carried with me ful of merchandiſe for traffique, which I would not doe till then, nor giue any thing to any man, and began to diuide all that I carried with mee among the principall men, willing them not to be afraid, but to goe forward with me, and ſo they did. And going on our way, within a dayes iourney of Ceuola wee met two other Indians of thoſe which went with Stephan, which were bloody and wounded in many places: and alſoone as they came to vs, they which were with mee began to make great lamentation. Theſe wounded Indians I aſked for Stephan, and they agreeing in all poynts with the firſt Indian ſayd, that after they had put him into the foreſayd great houſe without giuing him meat or drinke all that day and all that night, they tooke from Stephan all the things which hee carried with him. The next day when the Sunne was a lance high, Stephan went out of the houſe, and ſome of the chiefe men with him, and ſuddenly came ſtore of people from the citie, whom alſoone as hee ſawe he began to run away and we likewiſe, and forthwith they ſhot at vs and wounded vs, and certaine dead men fell vpon vs, and ſo we lay till night and durſt not ſtirre, and we heard great rumours in the citie, and ſaw many men and women keeping watch and ward vpon the walles thereof, and after this we could not ſee Stephan any more, and wee thinke they haue ſhot him to death, as they haue done all the reſt which went with him, ſo that none are eſcaped but we onely.

Chap. 5.

The ſituation and greatneſſe of the Citie of Ceuola, and how frier Marcus tooke poſſeſſion thereof and of other prouinces, calling the ſame The new kingdome of S. Francis, and how after his departure from thence being preſerued by God in ſo dangerous a voyage, he arriued at Compoſtella in Nueua Galicia.

HAuing conſidered the former report of the Indians, and the euill meanes which I had to proſecute my voyage as I deſired, I thought it not good wilfully to looſe my life as Stephan did; and ſo I told them, that God would puniſh thoſe of Ceuola, and that the Viceroy when he ſhould vnderſtand what had happened, would ſend many Chriſtians to chaſtiſe them: but they would not beleeue me, for they ſayde that no man was able to withſtand the power of Ceuola. And herewithall I left them, and went aſide two or three ſtones caſt, and when I returned I found an Indian of mine which I had brought from Mexico called Marcus, who wept and ſayde vnto me: Father, theſe men haue conſulted to kill vs, for they ſay, that through your and Stephans meanes their fathers are ſlaine, and that neither man nor woman of them ſhall remaine vnſlaine. Then againe I deuided among them certaine other things which I had, to appeaſe them, whereupon they were ſomewhat pacified, albeit they ſtill ſhewed great griefe for the people which were ſlaine. I requeſted ſome of them to goe to Ceuola, to ſee if any other Indian were eſcaped, with intent that they might learne ſome newes of Stephan; which I could not obtaine at their handes. When I ſaw this, I ſayd vnto them, that I purpoſed to ſee the citie of Ceuola, whatſoeuer came of it. They ſayde that none of them would goe with me. At the laſt when they ſawe mee reſolute, two of the chiefe of them ſayde they would goe with me; with whome and with mine Indians and interpreters I followed my way, till I came within ſight of Ceuola, which is ſituate on a plaine at the foote of a round hill, and maketh ſhew to bee a faire citie, and is better ſeated then any that I haue ſeene in theſe partes. The houſes are builded in order, according as the Indians told me, all made of ſtone with diuers ſtories, and flatte roofes, as farre as I could diſcerne from a mountaine, whither I aſcended to viewe the citie. The people are ſomewhat white, they weare apparell, and lie in beds, their weapons are bowes, they haue Emralds and other iewels, although they eſteeme none ſo much as turqueſes, wherewith they adorne the walles of the porches of their houſes, and their apparell and veſſels, and they vſe them in ſtead of money through all the Countrey. Their apparell is of cotton and of oxe hides, and this is their moſt commendable and honourable apparell. They vſe veſſels of gold and ſiluer, for they haue no other mettall, whereof there is greater vſe and more abundance then in Peru, and they buy the ſame for turqueſes in the prouince of the Pintados, where there are ſayd to be mines of great abundance. Of other kingdomes I could not obtaine ſo particular inſtruction. Diuers times I was tempted to goe thither, becauſe I knewe I could but hazard my life, and that I had offered vnto God the firſt day that I began my iourney: in the ende I began to bee afraid, conſidering in what danger I ſhould put my ſelfe, and that if I ſhould dye, the knowledge of this Countrey ſhould be loſt, which in my iudgement is the greateſt and the beſt that hitherto hath beene diſcouered: and when I tolde the chiefe men, what a goodly citie Ceuola ſeemed vnto mee, they anſwered me that it was the leaſt of the ſeuen cities, and that Totonteac is the greateſt and beſt of them all, becauſe it hath ſo many houſes and people, that there is no ende of them. Hauing ſeene the diſpoſition and ſituation of the place, I thought good to name that Countrey El Nueuo reyno de ſan Franciſco: in which place I made a great heape of ſtones by the helpe of the Indians, and on the toppe thereof I ſet vp a ſmall ſlender croſſe becauſe I wanted meanes to make a greater, and ſayd that I ſet vp that croſſe and heape in the name of the moſt honourable Lord Don Antonio de Mendoça Viceroy and Captaine generall of Nueua Eſpanna, for the Emperour our Lord, in token of poſſeſſion, according to mine inſtruction. Which poſſeſſion I ſayd that I tooke in that place of all the ſeuen cities, & of the kingdomes of Totonteac, of Acus, and of Marata. Thus I returned with much more feare then victuals, and went vntill I found the people which I had left behind mee, with all the ſpeede that I could make, whome I ouertooke in two dayes trauell, and went in their company till I had paſſed the deſert, where I was not made ſo much of as before: for both men and women made great lamentation for the people which were ſlaine at Ceuola, and with feare I haſtened from the people of this valley, and trauelled tenne leagues the firſt day, and ſo I went daily eight or ten leagues, without ſtaying vntill I had paſſed the ſecond deſert. And though I were in feare, yet I determined to go to the great plaine, whereof I ſaid before, that I had information, being ſituate at the foote of the mountaines, and in that place I vnderſtoode, that this plaine is inhabited for many dayes iourney toward the Eaſt, but I durſt not enter into it, conſidering, that if hereafter wee ſhoulde inhabite this other Countrey of the ſeuen cities, and the kingdomes before mentioned, that then I might better diſcouer the ſame, without putting my ſelfe in hazard, and leaue it for this time, that I might giue relation of the things which I had now ſeene. At the entrance of this plaine I ſawe but ſeuen Townes onely of a reaſonable bigneſſe, which were a farre off in a lowe valley beeing very greene and a moſt fruitfull ſoyle, out of which ranne many Riuers. I was informed that there was much golde in this valley, and that the inhabitants worke it into veſſels and thinne plates, wherewith they ſtrike and take off their ſweat, and that they are people that will not ſuffer thoſe of the other ſide of the plaine to traffique with them, and they could not tell me the cauſe thereof. Here I ſet vp two croſſes, and tooke poſſeſſion of the plaine and valley in like ſort and order, as I did at other places before mentioned. And from thence I returned on my voyage with as much haſte as I coulde make, vntill I came to the citie of Saint Michael in the prouince of Culiacan, thinking there to haue found Francis Vazquez de Coronado gouernour of Nueua Galicia, and finding him not there, I proceeded on my iourney till I came to the Citie of Compoſtella, where I found him. I write not here many other paticularities, becauſe they are impertinent to this matter: I only report that which I haue ſeene, and which was told me concerning the Countreys through which I trauelled, and of thoſe which I had information of.

Compoſtella in 21. degrees of latitude.

The relation of Francis Vazquez de Coronado, Captaine generall of the people which were ſent in the name of the Emperours maieſtie to the Countrey of Cibola newly diſcouered, which he ſent to Don Antonio de Mendoça Viceroy of Mexico, of ſuch things as happened in his voyage from the 22. of Aprill in the yeere 1540. which departed from Culiacan forward, and of ſuch things as hee found in the Countrey which he paſſed.

Chap. 1.

Francis Vazquez departeth with his armie from Culiacan, and after diuers troubles in his voyage, arriueth at the valley of the people called Los Caracones, which he findeth barren of Maiz: for obtaining whereof hee ſendeth to the valley called The valley of the Lord: he is informed of the greatneſſe of the valley of the people called Caracones, and of the nature of thoſe people, and of certaine Iſlands lying along that coaſt.

The 22. of the moneth of Aprill laſt paſt I departed from the prouince of Culiacan with part of the army, and in ſuch order as I mentioned vnto your Lordſhip, and according to the ſucceſſe I aſſured my ſelfe, by all likelihood that I ſhall not bring all mine armie together in this enterpriſe: becauſe the troubles haue bene ſo great and the want of victuals, that I thinke all this yeere wil not be ſufficient to performe this enterpriſe, & if it ſhould bee performed in ſo ſhort a time, it would be to the great loſſe of our people. For as I wrote vnto your Lordſhip, I was foure-

This was but 200. leagues from Mexico.

ſcore dayes in trauailing to Culiacan, in all which time I and thoſe Gentlemen my companions which were horſemen, carried on our backs and on our horſes, a little victuall, ſo that from henceforward wee carried none other needefull apparell with vs, that was aboue a pound weight: and all this notwithſtanding, and though wee put our ſelues to ſuch a ſmall proportion of victuals which wee carried, for all the order that poſſibly wee could take, wee were driuen to our ſhifts. And no maruayle, becauſe the way is rough and long: and with the carriage of our Harquebuſes downe the mountaines and hilles, and in the paſſage of Riuers, the greater part of our corne was ſpoyled. And becauſe I ſend your Lordſhip our voyage drawen in a Mappe, I will ſpeake no more thereof in this my letter.

Frier Marcus of Niza.

Thirtie leagues before wee arriued at the place which the father prouinciall tolde vs ſo well of in his relation, I ſent Melchior Diaz before with fifteene horſes, giuing him order to make but one dayes iourney of two, becauſe hee might examine all things, againſt mine arriuall: who trauailed foure dayes iourney through exceeding rough Mountaines where hee found neither victuals, nor people, nor information of any things, ſauing that hee found two or three poore little villages, containing 20. or 30. cottages a piece, and by the inhabitants thereof hee vnderſtoode that from thence forward there were nothing but exceeding rough mountaines which ran very farre, vtterly diſinhabited and voyd of people. And becauſe it was labour loſt, I would not write vnto your Lordſhip thereof.

It grieued the whole company, that a thing ſo highly commended, and whereof the father had made ſo great bragges, ſhould be found ſo contrary, and it made them ſuſpect that all the reſt would fall out in like ſort. Which when I perceiued I ſought to encourage them the beſt I coulde, telling them that your Lordſhippe alwayes was of opinion, that this voyage was a thing caſt away, and that wee ſhould fixe our cogitation vpon thoſe ſeuen Cities, and other prouinces, whereof wee had knowledge: that there ſhould bee the ende of our enterpriſe: and with this reſolution and purpoſe wee all marched cheerefully through a very badde way which was not paſſable but one by one, or elſe wee muſt force out with Pioners the path which wee founde, wherewith the Souldiours were not a little offended, finding all that the Frier had ſayde to bee quite contrary: for among other things which the father ſayde and affirmed, this was one, that the way was plaine and good, and that there was but one ſmall hill of halfe a league in length. And yet in trueth there are mountaines which although the way were well mended could not bee paſſed without great danger of breaking the horſes neckes: and the way was ſuch, that of the cattell which your Lordſhip ſent vs for the prouiſion of our armie wee loſt a great part in the voyage through the roughneſſe of the rockes. The lambes and ſheepe loſt their hoofes in the way: and of thoſe which I brought from Culiacan, I left the greater part at the Riuer of Lachimi, becauſe they could not keepe company with vs, and becauſe they might come ſoftly after vs, foure men on horſebacke remained with them which are nowe come vnto vs, and haue brought vs not paſt foure and twentie lambes, and foure ſheepe, for all the reſt were dead with trauailing through that rough paſſage, although they trauailed but two leagues a day, and reſted themſelues euery day.

The valley of the people called Caracones.

At length I arriued at the valley of the people called Caracones, the 26. day of the moneth of May: and from Culiacan vntill I came thither, I could not helpe my ſelfe, ſaue onely with a great quantitie of bread of Maiz: for ſeeing the Maiz in the fieldes were not yet ripe, I was conſtrained to leaue them all behind me. In this valley of the Caracones wee found more ſtore of people then in any other part of the Countrey which wee had paſſed, and great ſtore of tillage. But I vnderſtood that there was ſtore thereof in another valley called The Lords valley, which I woulde not diſturbe with force, but ſent thither Melchior Diaz with wares of exchange to procure ſome, and to giue the ſayde Maiz to the Indians our friendes which wee brought with vs, and to ſome others that had loſt their cattell in the way, and were not able to carry their victuals ſo farre which they brought from Culiacan. It pleaſed God that wee gate ſome ſmall quantitie of Maiz with this traffique, whereby certaine Indians were releiued and ſome Spanyards.

Valle del Sennor.

The valley de los Caracones diſtant fiue dayes iourney from the Weſterne ſea.

And by that time that wee were come to this valley of the Caracones, ſome tenne or twelue of our horſes were dead through wearineſſe: for being ouercharged with great burdens, and hauing but little meate, they could not endure the trauaile. Likewiſe ſome of our Negros and ſome of our Indians dyed here; which was no ſmall want vnto vs for the performance of our enterpriſe. They tolde me that this valley of the Coracones is fiue dayes iourney from the Weſterne Sea. I ſent for the Indians of the Sea coaſt to vnderſtand their eſtate, and while I ſtayed for them the horſes reſted: and I ſtayed there foure dayes, in which ſpace the Indians of the Sea coaſt came vnto mee: which told mee, that two dayes ſayling from their coaſt of the Sea, there were ſeuen or eight Iſlands right ouer againſt them, well inhabited with people, but badly furniſhed with victuals, and were a rude people: And they told mee, that they had ſeene a Shippe paſſe by not farre from the ſhore; which I wote not what to thinke whither it were one of thoſe that went to diſcouer the Countrey, or elſe a Ship of the Portugals.

Seuen or eight Iſles, which are the Iſles of California.

Chap. 2.

They come to Chichilticale: after they had reſted themſelues two dayes there, they enter into a Countrey very barren of victuals, and hard to trauaile for thirtie leagues, beyond which they found a Countrey very pleaſant, and a riuer called Rio del Lino, they fight with the Indians being aſſaulted by them, and with victorie vanquiſhing their citie, they relieued themſelues of their pinching hunger.

I Departed from the Caracones, and alwayes kept by the Sea coaſt as neere as I could iudge, and in very deed I ſtill found my ſelfe the farther off: in ſuch ſort that when I arriued at Chichilticale I found my ſelfe tenne dayes iourney from the Sea: and the father prouinciall ſayd that it was onely but fiue leagues diſtance, and that hee had ſeene the ſame. Wee all conceiued great griefe and were not a little confounded, when we ſaw that wee found euery thing contrary to the information which he had giuen your Lordſhip.

Chichilticale ten dayes iourney from the ſea.

The Indians of Chichilticale ſay, that if at any time they goe to the Sea for fiſh, and other things that they carry, they goe trauerſing, and are tenne dayes iourney in going thither. And I am of opinion that the information which the Indians giue me ſhould be true. The ſea returneth toward the Weſt right ouer againſt the Coracones the ſpace of tenne or twelue leagues, Where I found that your Lordſhips ſhips were ſeene, which went to diſcouer the hauen of Chichilticale, which father Marcus of Niça ſayd to bee in fiue and thirtie degrees. God knoweth what griefe of mind I haue ſuſtained: becauſe I am in doubt that ſome miſhappe is fallen vnto them: and if they follow the coaſt, as they ſayde they would, as long as their victuals laſt which they carry with them, whereof I left them ſtore in Culiacan, and if they be not fallen into ſome miſfortune, I hope well in God that by this they haue made ſome good diſcouerie, and that in this reſpect their long ſtaying out may be pardoned.

This Chichilticale is indeede but in 28. deg.

I reſted my ſelfe two dayes in Chichilticale, and to haue done well I ſhould haue ſtayed longer, in reſpect that here wee found our horſes ſo tyred: but becauſe wee wanted victuals, wee had no leaſure to reſt any longer: I entred the confines of the deſert Countrey on Saint Iohns eeue, and to refreſh our former trauailes, the firſt dayes we founde no graſſe, but worſer way of mountaines and badde paſſages, then wee had paſſed alreadie: and the horſes being tired, were greatly moleſted therewith: ſo that in this laſt deſert wee loſt more horſes then wee had loſt before: and ſome of my Indians which were our friendes dyed, and one Spanyard whoſe name was Spinoſa; and two Negroes, which dyed with eating certaine herbes for lacke of victuals. From this place I ſent before mee one dayes iourney the maſter of the fielde Don Garcia Lopez de Cardenas with fifteene horſes to diſcouer the Countrey, and prepare our way: wherein hee did like himſelfe, and according to the confidence which your Lordſhip repoſed in him. And well I wote he fayled not to do his part: for as I haue enformed your Lordſhip, it is moſt wicked way, at leaſt thirtie leagues and more, becauſe they are inacceſſible mountaines.

The 23. of Iune.

Don Garcia Lopez de Cardenas

But after wee had paſſed theſe thirtie leagues, wee found freſh riuers, and graſſe like that of Caſtile, and ſpecially of that ſort which we call Scaramoio, many Nutte trees and Mulberie trees, but the Nutte trees differ from thoſe of Spayne in the leafe: and there was Flaxe, but chiefly neere the bankes of a certayne riuer which therefore wee called El Rio del Lino, that is to ſay, the riuer of Flaxe: wee found no Indians at all for a dayes trauaile, but afterward foure Indians came out vnto vs in peaceable maner, ſaying that they were ſent euen to that deſert place to ſignifie vnto vs that wee were welcome, and that the next day all the people would come out to meete vs on the way with victuals: and the maſter of the fielde gaue them a croſſe, willing them to ſignifie to thoſe of their citie that they ſhould not feare, and they ſhould rather let the people ſtay in their houſes, becauſe I came onely in the name of his maieſtie to defend and ayd them.

A goodly and fruitfull countrey found.

Rio del Lino.

And this done, Fernando Aluarado returned to aduertiſe mee, that certaine Indians were come vnto them in peaceable maner, and that two of them ſtayed for my comming with the maſter of the fielde. Whereupon I went vnto them and gaue them beades and certaine ſhort clokes, willing them to returne vnto their citie, and bid them to ſtay quiet in their houſes, and feare nothing. And this done I ſent the maſter of the field to ſearch whether there were any bad paſſage which the Indians might keepe againſt vs, and that hee ſhould take and defend it vntill the next day that I ſhoulde come thither. So hee went, and found in the way a very bad paſſage, where wee might haue ſuſtayned very great harme: wherefore there hee ſeated himſelfe with his company that were with him: and that very night the Indians came to take that paſſage to defend it, and finding it taken, they aſſaulted our men there, and as they tell mee, they aſſaulted them like valiant men; although in the ende they retired and fledde away; for the maſter of the fielde was watchfull, and was in order with his company: the Indians in token of retreate ſounded on a certaine ſmall trumpet, and did no hurt among the Spanyards. The very ſame night the maſter of the fielde certified mee hereof. Whereupon the next day in the beſt order that I could I departed in ſo great want of victuall, that I thought that if wee ſhould ſtay one day longer without foode, wee ſhould all periſh for hunger, eſpecially the Indians, for among vs all we had not two buſhels of corne: wherefore it behooued mee to pricke forward without delay. The Indians here and their made fires, and were anſwered againe afarre off as orderly as wee for our liues could haue done, to giue their fellowes vnderſtanding, how wee marched and where we arriued.

They arriue at the citie of Cibola.

The arrogancie of the people of Cibola.

Aſſoone as I came within ſight of this citie of Granada, I ſent Don Garcias Lopez Campemaſter, frier Daniel, and frier Luys, and Fernando Vermizzo ſomewhat before with certaine horſemen to ſeeke the Indians and to aduertiſe them that our comming was not to hurt them, but to defend them in the name of the Emperour our Lord, according as his maieſtie had giuen vs in charge: which meſſage was deliuered to the inhabitants of that countrey by an interpreter. But they like arrogant people made ſmall account thereof; becauſe we ſeemed very few in their eyes, and that they might deſtroy vs without any difficultie: and they ſtrooke frier Luys with an arrow on the gowne, which by the grace of God did him no harme.

Commandement to vſe gentleneſſe to the Sauages.

In the meane ſpace I arriued with all the reſt of the horſemen, and footemen, and found in the fieldes a great ſort of the Indians which beganne to ſhoote at vs with their arrowes: and becauſe I would obey your will and the commaund of the Marques, I woulde not let my people charge them, forbidding my company, which intreated mee that they might ſet vpon them, in any wiſe to prouoke them, ſaying that that which the enemies did was nothing, and that it was not meete to ſet vpon ſo fewe people. On the other ſide the Indians perceiuing that wee ſtirred not, tooke great ſtomacke and courage vnto them: inſomuch that they came hard to our horſes heeles to ſhoote at vs with their arrowes. Whereupon ſeeing that it was now time to ſtay no longer, and that the friers alſo were of the ſame opinion, I ſet vpon them without any danger: for ſuddenly they fled part to the citie which was neere and well fortified, and other into the field, which way they could ſhift: and ſome of the Indians were ſlaine, and more had beene if I would haue ſuffered them to haue bene purſued.

There were 800 men within the towne. Gomara, Hiſt. gen. cap. 213.

They defend the wals with ſtones like thoſe of Hochelaga.

But conſidering that hereof wee might reape but ſmall profite, becauſe the Indians that were without, were fewe, and thoſe which were retired into the citie, with them which ſtayed within at the firſt were many, where the victuals were whereof wee had ſo great neede, I aſſembled my people, and deuided them as I thought beſt to aſſault the citie, and I compaſſed it about: and becauſe the famine which wee ſuſtained ſuffered no delay, my ſelfe with certaine of theſe gentlemen and ſouldiers put our ſelues on foote, and commaunded that the croſſebowes and harquebuſiers ſhoulde giue the aſſault, and ſhoulde beate the enemies from the walles, that they might not hurt vs, and I aſſaulted the walles on one ſide, where they tolde me there was a ſcaling ladder ſet vp, and that there was one gate: but the croſſebowmen ſuddenly brake the ſtrings of their bowes, and the harquebuſiers did nothing at all: for they came thither ſo weake and feeble, that ſcarcely they coulde ſtand on their feete: and by this meanes the people that were aloft on the wals to defend the towne were no way hindered from doing vs all the miſchiefe they could: ſo that twiſe they ſtroke mee to the ground with infinite number of great ſtones, which they caſt downe: and if I had not beene defended with an excellent good headpiece which I ware, I thinke it had gone hardly with mee: neuertheleſſe my companie tooke mee vp with two ſmall wounds in the face, and an arrowe ſticking in my foote, and many blowes with ſtones on my armes and legges, and thus I went out of the battell very weake. I thinke that if Don Garcias Lopez de Cardenas the ſecond time that they ſtrooke mee to the ground had not ſuccoured mee with ſtriding ouer mee like a good knight, I had beene in farre greater danger then I was. But it pleaſed God that the Indians yeelded themſelues vnto vs, and that this citie was taken: and ſuch ſtore of Maiz was found therein, as our neceſſitie required. The Maſter of the fielde, and Don Pedro de Touar, and Fernando de Aluarado, and Paul de Melgoſa Captaines of the footemen eſcaped with certaine knocks with ſtones: though none of them were wounded with arrowes, yet Agoniez Quarez was wounded in one arme with the ſhot of an arrowe, and one Torres a towneſman of Panuco was ſhot into the face with another, and two footemen more had two ſmall woundes with arrowes. And becauſe my armour was gilded and glittering, they all layd load on mee, and therefore I was more wounded then the reſt, not that I did more then they, or put my ſelfe forwarder then the reſt, for all theſe Gentlemen and ſouldiers carried themſelues as manfully as was looked for at their hands. I am nowe well recouered I thanke God, although ſomewhat bruiſed with ſtones. Likewiſe in the ſkirmiſh which wee had in the fieldes, two or three other ſouldiers were hurt, and three horſes ſlaine, one of Don Lopez, the other of Viliega and the third of Don Alonſo Manrique, and ſeuen or eight other horſes were wounded; but both the men and horſes are whole and ſound.

Chap. 3.

Of the ſituation and ſtate of the ſeuen cities called the Kingdome of Cibola, and of the cuſtomes and qualities of thoſe people, and of the beaſts which are fonnd there.

IT remaineth now to certifie your Honour of the ſeuen cities, and of the kingdomes and prouinces whereof the Father prouinciall made report vnto your Lordſhip. And to bee briefe, I can aſſure your honour, he ſayd the trueth in nothing that he reported, but all was quite contrary, ſauing onely the names of the cities, and great houſes of ſtone: for although they bee not wrought with Turqueſes, nor with lyme, nor brickes, yet are they very excellent good houſes of three or foure or fiue loftes high, wherein are good lodgings and faire chambers with lathers in ſtead of ſtaires, and certaine cellers vnder the ground very good and paued, which are made for winter, they are in maner like ſtooues: and the lathers which they haue for their houſes are all in a maner mooueable and portable, which are taken away and ſet downe when they pleaſe, and they are made of two pieces of wood with their ſteppes, as ours be. The ſeuen cities are ſeuen ſmall townes, all made with theſe kinde of houſes that I ſpeake of: and they ſtand all within foure leagues together, and they are all called the kingdome of Cibola, and euery one of them haue their particular name: and none of them is called Cibola, but altogether they are called Cibola. And this towne which I call a citie, I haue named Granada, as well becauſe it is ſomewhat like vnto it, as alſo in remembrance of your lordſhip. In this towne where I nowe remaine, there may bee ſome two hundred houſes, all compaſſed with walles, and I thinke that with the reſt of the houſes which are not ſo walled, they may be together fiue hundred. There is another towne neere this, which is one of the ſeuen, & it is ſomwhat bigger then this, and another of the ſame bigneſſe that this is of, and the other foure are ſomewhat leſſe: and I ſend them all painted vnto your lordſhip with the voyage. And the parchment wherein the picture is, was found here with other parchments. The people of this towne ſeeme vnto me of a reaſonable ſtature, and wittie, yet they ſeeme not to bee ſuch as they ſhould bee, of that iudgement and wit to builde theſe houſes in ſuch ſort as they are. For the moſt part they goe all naked, except their priuie partes which are couered: and they haue painted mantles like thoſe which I ſend vnto your lordſhip. They haue no cotton wooll growing, becauſe the countrey is colde, yet they weare mantels thereof as your honour may ſee by the ſhewe thereof: and true it is that there was found in their houſes certaine yarne made of cotton wooll. They weare their haire on their heads like thoſe of Mexico, and they are well nurtured and conditioned: And they haue Turqueſes I thinke good quantitie, which with the reſt of the goods which they had, except their corne, they had conueyed away before I came thither: for I found no women there, nor no youth vnder fifteene yeeres olde, nor no olde folkes aboue ſixtie, ſauing two or three olde folkes, who ſtayed behinde to gouerne all the reſt of the youth and men of warre. There were found in a certaine paper two poynts of Emralds, and certaine ſmall ſtones broken which are in colour ſomewhat like Granates very bad, and other ſtones of Chriſtall, which I gaue one of my ſeruaunts to lay vp to ſend them to your lordſhip, and hee hath loſt them as hee telleth me. Wee found heere Guinie cockes, but fewe. The Indians tell mee in all theſe ſeuen cities, that they eate them not, but that they keepe them onely for their feathers. I beleeue them not, for they are excellent good, and greater then thoſe of Mexico. The ſeaſon which is in this countrey, and the temperature of the ayre is like that of Mexico: for ſometime it is hotte, and ſometime it raineth: but hitherto I neuer ſawe it raine, but once there fell a little ſhowre with winde, as they are woont to fall in Spaine.

Excellent houſes foure or fiue loftes high.

The ſnow and cold are woont to be great, for ſo ſay the inhabitants of the Countrey: and it is very likely ſo to bee, both in reſpect of the maner of the Countrey, and by the faſhion of their houſes, and their furres and other things which this people haue to defend them from colde. There is no kind of fruit nor trees of fruite. The Countrey is all plaine, and is on no ſide mountainous: albeit there are ſome hillie and bad paſſages. There are ſmall ſtore of Foules: the cauſe whereof is the colde, and becauſe the mountaines are not neere. Here is no great ſtore of wood, becauſe they haue wood for their fuell ſufficient foure leagues off from a wood of ſmall Cedars. There is moſt excellent graſſe within a quarter of a league hence, for our horſes as well to feede them in paſture, as to mowe and make hay, whereof wee ſtoode in great neede, becauſe our horſes came hither ſo weake and feeble. The victuals which the people of this countrey haue, is Maiz, whereof they they haue great ſtore, and alſo ſmall white Peaſe: and Veniſon, which by all likelyhood they feede vpon, (though they ſay no) for wee found many ſkinnes of Deere, of Hares, and Conies. They eate the beſt cakes that euer I ſawe, and euery body generally eateth of them. They haue the fineſt order and way to grinde that wee euer ſawe in any place. And one Indian woman of this countrey will grinde as much as foure women of Mexico. They haue moſt excellent ſalte in kernell, which they fetch from a certaine lake a dayes iourney from hence. They haue no knowledge among them of the North Sea, nor of the Weſterne Sea, neither can I tell your lordſhip to which wee bee neereſt: But in reaſon they ſhould ſeeme to bee neereſt to the Weſterne Sea: and at the leaſt I thinke I am an hundred and fiftie leagues from thence: and the Northerne Sea ſhould bee much further off. Your lordſhip may ſee howe broad the land is here. Here are many ſorts of beaſts, as Beares, Tigers, Lions, Porkeſpicks, and certaine Sheep as bigge as an horſe, with very great hornes and little tailes, I haue ſeene their hornes ſo bigge, that it is a wonder to behold their greatneſſe. Here are alſo wilde goates whoſe heads likewiſe I haue ſeene, and the pawes of Beares, and the ſkins of wilde Bores. There is game of Deere, Ounces, and very great Stagges: and all men are of opinion that there are ſome bigger then that beaſt which your lordſhip beſtowed vpon me, which once belonged to Iohn Melaz. They trauell eight dayes iourney vnto certaine plaines lying toward the North Sea. In this countrey there are certaine ſkinnes well dreſſed, and they dreſſe them and paint them where they kill their Oxen, for ſo they ſay themſelues.

Chap. 4.

Of the ſtate and qualities of the kingdomes of Totonteac, Marata, and Acus, quite contrary to the relation of Frier Marcus. The conference which they haue with the Indians of the citie of Granada which they had taken, which had fiftie yeres paſt foreſeene the comming of the Chriſtians into their countrey. The relation which they haue of other ſeuen cities, whereof Tucano is the principall, and how he ſent to diſcouer them. A preſent of diuers things had in theſe countreys ſent vnto the Viceroy Mendoça by Vaſques de Coronado.

Totonteac is an hotte lake.
Tadouac ſeemeth becauſe it is a lake, and endeth in ac to haue ſome affinitie herewith.
Other townes neere a riuer.

The kingdome of Totonteac ſo much extolled by the Father prouinciall, which ſayde that there were ſuch wonderfull things there, and ſuch great matters, and that they made cloth there, the Indians ſay is an hotte lake; about which are fiue or ſixe houſes; and that there were certaine other, but that they are ruinated by warre. The kingdome of Marata is not to be found, neither haue the Indians any knowledge thereof. The kingdome of Acus is one onely ſmall citie, where they gather cotton which is called Acucu. And I ſay that this is a towne. For Acus with an aſpiration nor without, is no word of the countrey. And becauſe I geſſe that they would deriue Acucu of Acus, I ſay that it is this towne whereinto the kingdom of Acus is conuerted. Beyond this towne they ſay there are other ſmall townes which are neere to a riuer which I haue ſeene and haue had report of by the relation of the Indians. I would to God I had better newes to write vnto your lordſhip: neuertheleſſe I muſt ſay the trueth: And as I wrote to your lordſhip from Culiacan, I am nowe to aduertiſe your honour as wel of the good as of the bad. Yet this I would haue you bee aſſured, that if all the riches and the treaſures of the world were heere, I could haue done no more in the ſeruice of his Maieſtie and of your lordſhippe, then I haue done in comming hither whither you haue ſent mee, my ſelfe and my companions carrying our victuals vpon our ſhoulders and vpon our horſes three hundred leagues; and many dayes going on foote trauailing ouer hilles and rough mountaines, with other troubles which I ceaſe to mention, neither purpoſe I to depart vnto the death, if it pleaſe his Maieſtie and your lordſhip that it ſhall be ſo.

Three dayes after this citie was taken, certaine Indians of theſe people came to offer mee peace, and brought mee certaine Turqueſes and badde mantles, and I receiued them in his Maieſties name with all the good ſpeaches that I could deuiſe, certifying them of the purpoſe of my comming into this countrey, which is in the name of his Maieſtie, and by the commaundement of your Lordſhip, that they and all the reſt of the people of this prouince ſhould become Chriſtians, and ſhould knowe the true God for their Lorde, and receiue his Maieſtie for their King, and earthly Soueraigne: And herewithall they returned to their houſes, and ſuddenly the next day they ſet in order all their goods and ſubſtance, their women and children, and fled to the hilles, leauing their townes as it were abandoned, wherein remained very fewe of them. When I ſawe this, within eight or tenne dayes after being recouered of my woundes, I went to the citie, which I ſayde to bee greater then this where I am, and found there ſome fewe of them, to whom I ſayde that they ſhould not bee afrayd, and that they ſhould call their gouernour vnto mee: howbeit, foraſmuch as I can learne or gather, none of them hath any gouernour: for I ſawe not there any chiefe houſe, whereby any preeminence of one ouer another might bee gathered. After this an olde man came, which ſayd that hee was their lord, with a piece of a mantle made of many pieces, with whom I reaſoned that ſmall while that hee ſtayed with mee, and hee ſayd that within three dayes after, hee and the reſt of the chiefe of that towne would come and viſite mee, and giue order what courſe ſhould bee taken with them. Which they did: for they brought mee certaine mantles and ſome Turqueſes. I aduiſed them to come downe from their holdes, and to returne with their wiues and children to their houſes, and to become Chriſtians, and that they would acknowledge the Emperours maieſtie for their King and lorde. And euen to this preſent they keepe in thoſe ſtrong holdes their women and children, and all the goods which they haue. I commaunded them that they ſhould paint mee out a cloth of all the beaſtes which they knowe in their countrey: And ſuch badde painters as they are, foorthwith they painted mee two clothes, one of their beaſtes, another of their birdes and fiſhes. They ſay that they will bring their children, that our religious men may inſtruct them, and that they deſire to knowe our lawe: And they aſſure vs, that aboue fiftie yeeres paſt it was prophecied among them, that a certaine people like vs ſhould come, and from that part that wee came from, and that they ſhould ſubdue all that countrey.

Turqueſes. Mantles.

The Indians flee to the hils with their wiues, children and goods.

A citie greater then Granada.

Two tables painted by the Indians, one of beaſts, another of birdes and fiſhes.

An old propheſie that thoſe parts ſhould be ſubdued by Chriſtians.

That which theſe Indians worſhip as farre as hitherto wee can learne, is the water: for they ſay it cauſeth their corne to growe, and maintaineth their life; and that they know none other reaſon, but that their anceſters did ſo. I haue ſought by all meanes poſſible to learne of the inhabitants of theſe townes, whether they haue any knowledge of other people, countreys and cities: And they tell mee of ſeuen cities which are farre diſtant from this place, which are like vnto theſe, though they haue not houſes like vnto theſe, but they are of earth, and ſmall: and that among them much cotton is gathered. The chiefe of theſe townes whereof they haue knowledge, they ſay is called Tucano: and they gaue mee no perfect knowledge of the reſt. And I thinke they doe not tell me the trueth, imagining that of neceſſitie I muſt ſpeedily depart from them, and returne home. But herein they ſhall ſoone finde themſelues deceiued. I ſent Don Pedro de Touar with his companie of footemen and with certaine other horſemen to ſee this towne: And I would not haue diſpatched this packet vnto your lordſhip, vntill I had knowen what this towne was, if I had thought that within twelue or fifteene dayes I might haue had newes from him: for hee will ſtay in this iourney thirtie dayes at leaſt. And hauing examined that the knowledge hereof is of ſmall importance, and that the colde and the waters approch: I thought it my duety to doe according as your lordſhip gaue mee charge in your inſtructions, which is, that immediatly vpon mine arriuall here, I ſhould ſignifie ſo much vnto your lordſhip, and ſo I doe, ſending withall the bare relation of that which I haue ſeene. I haue determined to ſend round about the countrey from hence to haue knowledge of all things, and rather to ſuffer all extremitie, then to leaue this enterpriſe to ſerue his maieſtie, if I may find any thing wherein I may performe it, and not to omit any diligence therein, vntill your lordſhip ſend mee order what I ſhall doe. Wee haue great want of paſture: and your lordſhip alſo ſhal vnderſtand, that amongall thoſe which are here, there is not one pound of raiſins, nor ſuger, nor oyle, nor any wine, ſaue only one pinte which is ſaued to ſay Maſſe: for all is ſpent & ſpilt by the way. Now your lordſhip may prouide vs what you thinke needefull. And if your honour meane to ſend vs cattell, your lordſhip muſt vnderſtand that they will bee a ſommer in comming vnto vs: for they will not be able to come vnto vs any ſooner. I would haue ſent your lordſhippe with this diſpatch many muſters of things which are in this countrey: but the way is ſo long and rough, that it is hard for me to doe ſo: neuertheleſſe I ſend you twelue ſmall mantles, ſuch as the people of the countrey are woont to weare, and a certaine garment alſo, which ſeemeth vnto me to bee well made: I kept the ſame, becauſe it ſeemed to mee to bee excellent well wrought, becauſe I beleeue that no man euer ſawe any needle worke in theſe Indies, except it were ſince the Spaniards inhabited the ſame. I ſend your Lordſhippe alſo two clothes painted with the beaſts of this countrey, although as I haue ſayde, the picture bee very rudely done, becauſe the painter ſpent but one day in drawing of the ſame. I haue ſeene other pictures on the walles of the houſes of this citie with farre better proportion, and better made. I ſend your honour one Ox-hide, certaine Turqueſes, and two earerings of the ſame, and fifteene combes of the Indians, and certain tablets ſet with theſe Turqueſes, and two ſmall baſkets made of wicker, whereof the Indians haue great ſtore. I ſend your lordſhip alſo two rolles which the women in theſe parts are woont to weare on their heads when they fetch water from their welles, as wee vſe to doe in Spaine. And one of theſe Indian women with one of theſe rolles on her head, will carie a pitcher of water without touching the ſame with her hande vp a lather. I ſend you alſo a muſter of the weapons wherewith theſe people are woont to fight, a buckler, a mace, a bowe, and certaine arrowes, among which are two with points of bones, the like whereof, as theſe conquerours ſay, haue neuer beene ſeene. I can ſay nothing vnto your lordſhippe touching the apparell of their women. For the Indians keepe them ſo carefully from vs, that hitherto I haue not ſeene any of them, ſauing onely two olde women, and theſe had two long robes downe to the foote open before, and girded to them, and they are buttoned with certaine cordons of cotton. I requeſted the Indians to giue me one of theſe robes, which they ware, to ſend your honour the the ſame, ſeeing they would not ſhewe mee their women. And they brought mee two mantles which aree theſe, which I ſend you as it were painted: they haue two pendents like the women of Spaine, which hang ſomewhat ouer their ſhoulders. The death of the Negro is moſt certaine: for here are many of the things found which hee carried with him: And the Indians tell me that they killed him here, becauſe the Indians of Chichilticale tolde them that hee was a wicked villaine, and not like vnto the Chriſtians: becauſe the Chriſtians kill no women: and hee killed women; and alſo he touched their women, which the Indians loue more then themſelues; therefore they determined to kill him: But they did it not after ſuch ſort as was reported, for they killed none of the reſt of thoſe that came with him: neither ſlewe they the young lad which was with him of the prouince of Petatlan, but they tooke him and kept him in ſafe cuſtodie vntill nowe. And when I ſought to haue him, they excuſed themſelues two or three dayes to giue him mee, telling mee that hee was dead, and ſometimes that the Indians of Acucu had carried him away. But in concluſion, when I tolde them that I ſhould bee very angry if they did not giue him mee, they gaue him vnto me. Hee is an interpreter, for though hee cannot well ſpeake their language, yet hee vnderſtandeth the ſame very well. In this place there is found ſome quantitie of golde and ſiluer, which thoſe which are ſkilfull in minerall matters eſteeme to be very good. To this houre I could neuer learne of theſe people from whence they haue it: And I ſee they refuſe to tell mee the trueth in all things, imagining, as I haue ſayde, that in ſhort time I would depart hence, but I hope in God they ſhall no longer excuſe themſelues. I beſeech your lordſhip to certifie his Maieſtie of the ſucceſſe of this voyage. For ſeeing wee haue no more then that which is aforeſayd, and vntill ſuch time as it pleaſe God that wee finde that which wee deſire, I meane not to write my ſelfe. Our Lorde God keepe and preſerue your Excellencie.

From the Prouince of Cibola, and from this citie of Granada the third of Auguſt 1540.
Francis Vaſques de Coronado kiſſeth the hands of your Excellencie.

The reſt of this voyage to Acuco, Tiguex, Cicuic, and Quiuira, and vnto the Weſterne Ocean, is thus written in the generall hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies by Francis Lopez de Gomara, Chap. 214.

Acuco. The Weſterne ſea diſcouered. Tiguex. Axa and Quiuira.

BEcauſe they would not returne to Mexico without doing ſomething, nor with emptie hands, they agreed to paſſe further into the countrey, which was tolde them to bee better and better. So they came to Acuco, a towne vpon an exceeding ſtrong hill. And from thence Don Garcias Lopez de Cardenas with his companie of horſemen went vnto the Sea: and Francis Vaſques went to Tiguex, which ſtandeth on the banke of a great riuer. There they had newes of Axa and Quiuira. There they ſayde was a King whoſe name was Tatarrax, with a long beard, horie headed, and rich, which was girded with a Bracamart, which prayed vpon a payre of beades, which worſhipped a Croſſe of golde, and the image of a woman, the Queene of heauen. This newes did greatly reioyce and cheere vp the armie: although ſome thought it to bee falſe, and the report of the Friers. They determined to goe thither, with intention to winter in ſo rich a countrey as that was reported to bee. One night the Indians ranne away, and in the morning they found thirtie horſes dead, which put the armie in feare. In their iourney they burnt a certaine towne: And in another towne which they aſſaulted, they killed certaine Spaniards, and wounded fiftie horſes, and the inhabitants drewe into their towne Francis de Ouando wounded or dead, to eate and ſacrifice him as they thought, or peraduenture to ſee more perfectly, what maner of men the Spaniards were: for there was not found there any ſigne of ſacrificing men. Our people layde ſiege vnto the towne, but could not take it in more then fiue and fortie dayes ſpace. The townesmen that were beſieged, dranke ſnowe in ſtead of water: and ſeeing themſelues forlorne they made a fire, wherein they caſt their mantles, feathers, Turqueſes and precious things, that thoſe ſtrangers might not enioy them. They iſſued out in a ſquadron with their women and children in the middeſt, to make way by force, and to ſaue themſelues, but fewe eſcaped the edge of our ſwordes and the horſes, and a certaine riuer which was neere the towne. Seuen Spaniards were ſlaine in this conflict, and foureſcore were wounded, and many horſes: whereby a man may ſee of what force reſolution is in neceſſitie. Many Indians returned to the towne with the women and children, and defended themſelues, vntill our men ſet fire on the towne. In this countrey there are melons, and white and redde cotton, whereof they make farre larger mantels, then in other parts of the Indies. From Tigues they went in foure dayes iourney to Cicuic, which is a ſmall towne, and foure leagues from thence they met with a new kind of oxen wild and fierce, whereof the firſt day they killed foureſcore, which ſufficed the armie with fleſh. From Cicuic they went to Quiuira, which after their accompt, is almoſt three hundred leagues diſtant, through mighty plaines, and ſandie heathes ſo ſmooth, and weariſome, and bare of wood, that they made heapes of oxe-dung for want of ſtones and trees, that they might not loſe themſelues at their returne: for three horſes were loſt on that plaine, and one Spaniard, which went from his cõpanie on hunting. All that way & plaines are as full of crookbacked oxen, as the mountaine Serena in Spaine is of ſheepe: but there is no people but ſuch as keepe thoſe cattell. They were a great ſuccour for the hunger and want of bread which our people ſtoode in. One day it rayned in that plaine a great ſhowre of haile, as bigge as Orenges, which cauſed many teares, weakeneſſe, and vowes. At length they came to Quiuira and found Tatarrax, whome they ſought, an hoarie headed man, naked, and with a iewell of copper hanging at his necke, which was all his riches. The Spaniards ſeeing the falſe report of ſo famous riches, returned to Tiguex, without ſeeing either croſſe or ſhewe of Chriſtianitie: and from thence to Mexico. In the ende of March of the yeere 1542. Francis Vaſquez fell from his horſe in Tiguex, and with the fall fell out of his wits, and became madde. Which ſome tooke to bee for griefe, and others thought it to be but counterfeited: for they were much offended with him, becauſe hee peopled not the countrey.

The Spaniards would haue inhabited the countrey.

Quiuira is in fortie degrees: it is a temperate countrey, and hath very good waters, and much graſſe, plummes, mulberries, nuts, melons and grapes, which ripen very well. There is no cotton: and they apparell themſelues with oxe-hides and deeres ſkinnes. They ſawe ſhippes on the ſea coaſt, which bare Alcatrarzes or Pellicanes of golde and ſiluer in their prows, and were laden with marchandiſes, and they thought them to bee of Cathaya, and China, becauſe they ſhewed our men by ſignes that they had ſayled thirtie dayes.

Ships ſeene on the ſea coaſt of Quiuira, which were 30. dayes in ſayling thither.

Frier Iohn de Padilla ſtayed behinde in Tigues, with another of his companions called Frier Francis, and returned to Quiuira, with ſome dozen Indians of Mechuacan, and with Andrew de Campo a Portugall, the gardiner of Francis de Solis: Hee tooke with him horſes and mules with prouiſion. Hee tooke ſheepe and hennes of Caſtile, and ornaments to ſay Maſſe withall. The people of Quiuira ſlewe the Friers, and the Portugall eſcaped with certaine Indians of Mechuacan. Who albeit at that time he eſcaped death, yet could hee not free himſelfe out of captiuitie: for by and by after they caught him againe. But ten moneths after he was taken captiue, hee fled away with a couple of dogs. As hee trauailed, hee bleſſed the people with a croſſe, whereunto they offered much, and whereſoeuer hee came, they gaue him almes, lodging, and foode. He came to the countrey of the Chichimechas, and arriued at Panuco. When he came to Mexico, hee ware his haire very long, and his beard tyed vp in a lace, and reported ſtrange things of the lands, riuers and mountaines that he had paſſed.

Andrew de Campo trauailed from Quiuira to Panuco.

It grieued Don Antonio de Mendoça very much that the army returned home: for hee had ſpent aboue threeſcore thouſand peſos of golde in the enterpriſe, and ought a great part thereof ſtill. Many ſought to haue dwelt there; but Francis Vaſquez de Coronado, which was rich, and lately married to a faire wife, would not conſent, ſaying, that they could not maintaine nor defend garment alſo, which ſeemeth vnto me to bee well made: I kept the ſame, becauſe it ſeemed to mee to bee excellent well wrought, becauſe I beleeue that no man euer ſawe any needle worke in theſe Indies, except it were ſince the Spaniards inhabited the ſame. I ſend your Lordſhippe alſo two clothes painted with the beaſts of this countrey, although as I haue ſayde, the picture bee very rudely done, becauſe the painter ſpent but one day in drawing of the ſame. I haue ſeene other pictures on the walles of the houſes of this citie with farre better proportion, and better made. I ſend your honour one Oxe-hide, certaine Turqueſes, and two earerings of the ſame, and fifteene combes of the Indians, and certain tablets ſet with theſe Turqueſes, and two ſmall baſkets made of wicker, whereof the Indians haue great ſtore. I ſend your lordſhip alſo two rolles which the women in theſe parts are woont to weare on their heads when they fetch water from their welles, as wee vſe to doe in Spaine. And one of theſe Indian women with one of theſe rolles on her head, will carie a pitcher of water without touching the ſame with her hande vp a lather. I ſend you alſo a muſter of the weapons wherewith theſe people are woont to fight, a buckler, a mace, a bowe, and certaine arrowes, among which are two with points of bones, the like whereof, as theſe conquerours ſay, haue neuer beene ſeene. I can ſay nothing vnto your lordſhippe touching the apparell of their women. For the Indians keepe them ſo carefully from vs, that hitherto I haue not ſeene any of them, ſauing onely two olde women, and theſe had two long robes downe to the foote open before, and girded to them, and they are buttoned with certaine cordons of cotton. I requeſted the Indians to giue me one of theſe robes, which they ware, to ſend your honour the the ſame, ſeeing they would not ſhewe mee their women. And they brought mee two mantles which aree theſe, which I ſend you as it were painted: they haue two pendents like the women of Spaine, which hang ſomewhat ouer their ſhoulders. The death of the Negro is moſt certaine: for here are many of the things found which hee carried with him: And the Indians tell me that they killed him here, becauſe the Indians of Chichilticale tolde them that hee was a wicked villaine, and not like vnto the Chriſtians: becauſe the Chriſtians kill no women: and hee killed women; and alſo he touched their women, which the Indians loue more then themſelues; therefore they determined to kill him: But they did it not after ſuch ſort as was reported, for they killed none of the reſt of thoſe that came with him: neither ſlewe they the young lad which was with him of the prouince of Petatlan, but they tooke him and kept him in ſafe cuſtodie vntill nowe. And when I ſought to haue him, they excuſed themſelues two or three dayes to giue him mee, telling mee that hee was dead, and ſometimes that the Indians of Acucu had carried him away. But in concluſion, when I tolde them that I ſhould bee very angry if they did not giue him mee, they gaue him vnto me. Hee is an interpreter, for though hee cannot well ſpeake their language, yet hee vnderſtandeth the ſame very well. In this place there is found ſome quantitie of golde and ſiluer, which thoſe which are ſkilfull in minerall matters eſteeme to be very good. To this houre I could neuer learne of theſe people from whence they haue it: And I ſee they refuſe to tell mee the trueth in all things, imagining, as I haue ſayde, that in ſhort time I would depart hence, but I hope in God they ſhall no longer excuſe themſelues. I beſeech your lordſhip to certifie his Maieſtie of the ſucceſſe of this voyage. For ſeeing wee haue no more then that which is aforeſayd, and vntill ſuch time as it pleaſe God that wee finde that which wee deſire, I meane not to write my ſelfe. Our Lorde God keepe and preſerue your Excellencie.

From the Prouince of Cibola, and from this citie of Granada the third of Auguſt 1540.
Francis Vaſques de Coronado kiſſeth the hands of your Excellencie.

The reſt of this voyage to Acuco, Tiguex, Cicuic, and Quiuira, and vnto the Weſterne Ocean, is thus written in the generall hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies by Francis Lopez de Gomara, Chap. 214.

Acuco. The Weſterne ſea diſcouered. Tiguex. Axa and Quiuira.

BEcauſe they would not returne to Mexico without doing ſomething, nor with emptie hands, they agreed to paſſe further into the countrey, which was tolde them to bee better and better. So they came to Acuco, a towne vpon an exceeding ſtrong hill. And from thence Don Garcias Lopez de Cardenas with his companie of horſemen went vnto the Sea: and Francis Vaſques went to Tiguex, which ſtandeth on the banke of a great riuer. There they had newes of Axa and Quiuira. There they ſayde was a King whoſe name was Tatarrax, with a long beard, horie headed, and rich, which was girded with a Bracamart, which prayed vpon a payre of beades, which worſhipped a Croſſe of golde, and the image of a woman, the Queene of heauen. This newes did greatly reioyce and cheere vp the armie: although ſome thought it to bee falſe, and the report of the Friers. They determined to goe thither, with intention to winter in ſo rich a countrey trey as that was reported to bee. One night the Indians ranne away, and in the morning they found thirtie horſes dead, which put the armie in feare. In their iourney they burnt a certaine towne: And in another towne which they aſſaulted, they killed certaine Spaniards, and wounded fiftie horſes, and the inhabitants drewe into their towne Francis de Ouando wounded or dead, to eate and ſacrifice him as they thought, or peraduenture to ſee more perfectly, what maner of men the Spaniards were: for there was not found there any ſigne of ſacrificing men. Our people layde ſiege vnto the towne, but could not take it in more then fiue and fortie dayes ſpace. The townesmen that were beſieged, dranke ſnowe in ſtead of water: and ſeeing themſelues forlorne they made a fire, wherein they caſt their mantles, feathers, Turqueſes and precious things, that thoſe ſtrangers might not enioy them. They iſſued out in a ſquadron with their women and children in the middeſt, to make way by force, and to ſaue themſelues, but fewe eſcaped the edge of our ſwordes and the horſes, and a certaine riuer which was neere the towne. Seuen Spaniards were ſlaine in this conflict, and foureſcore were wounded, and many horſes: whereby a man may ſee of what force reſolution is in neceſſitie. Many Indians returned to the towne with the women and children, and defended themſelues, vntill our men ſet fire on the towne. In this countrey there are melons, and white and redde cotton, whereof they make farre larger mantels, then in other parts of the Indies. From Tigues they went in foure dayes iourney to Cicuic, which is a ſmall towne, and foure leagues from thence they met with a new kind of oxen wild and fierce, whereof the firſt day they killed foureſcore, which ſufficed the armie with fleſh. From Cicuic they went to Quiuira, which after their accompt, is almoſt three hundred leagues diſtant, through mighty plaines, and ſandie heathes ſo ſmooth, and weariſome, and bare of wood, that they made heapes of oxe-dung for want of ſtones and trees, that they might not loſe themſelues at their returne: for three horſes were loſt on that plaine, and one Spaniard, which went from his cõpanie on hunting. All that way & plaines are as full of crookbacked oxen, as the mountaine Serena in Spaine is of ſheepe: but there is no people but ſuch as keepe thoſe cattell. They were a great ſuccour for the hunger and want of bread which our people ſtoode in. One day it rayned in that plaine a great ſhowre of haile, as bigge as Orenges, which cauſed many teares, weakeneſſe, and vowes. At length they came to Quiuira and found Tatarrax, whome they ſought, an hoarie headed man, naked, and with a iewell of copper hanging at his necke, which was all his riches. The Spaniards ſeeing the falſe report of ſo famous riches, returned to Tiguex, without ſeeing either croſſe or ſhewe of Chriſtianitie: and from thence to Mexico. In the ende of March of the yeere 1542. Francis Vaſquez fell from his horſe in Tiguex, and with the fall fell out of his wits, and became madde. Which ſome tooke to bee for griefe, and others thought it to be but counterfeited: for they were much offended with him, becauſe hee peopled not the countrey.

The Spaniards returne to Tiguex, and ſo to Mexico 1542.
The Spaniards would haue inhabited the countrey.

Quiuira is in fortie degrees: it is a temperate countrey, and hath very good waters, and much graſſe, plummes, mulberries, nuts, melons and grapes, which ripen very well. There is no cotton: and they apparell themſelues with oxe-hides and deeres ſkinnes. They ſawe ſhippes on the ſea coaſt, which bare Alcatrarzes or Pellicanes of golde and ſiluer in their prows, and were laden with marchandiſes, and they thought them to bee of Cathaya, and China, becauſe they ſhewed our men by ſignes that they had ſayled thirtie dayes.

Ships ſeene on the ſea coaſt of Quiuira, which were 30. dayes in ſayling thither.

Frier Iohn de Padilla ſtayed behinde in Tigues, with another of his companions called Frier Francis, and returned to Quiuira, with ſome dozen Indians of Mechuacan, and with Andrew de Campo a Portugall, the gardiner of Francis de Solis: Hee tooke with him horſes and mules with prouiſion. Hee tooke ſheepe and hennes of Caſtile, and ornaments to ſay Maſſe withall. The people of Quiuira ſlewe the Friers, and the Portugall eſcaped with certaine Indians of Mechuacan. Who albeit at that time he eſcaped death, yet could hee not free himſelfe out of captiuitie: for by and by after they caught him againe. But ten moneths after he was taken captiue, hee fled away with a couple of dogs. As hee trauailed, hee bleſſed the people with a croſſe, whereunto they offered much, and whereſoeuer hee came, they gaue him almes, lodging, and foode. He came to the countrey of the Chichimechas, and arriued at Panuco. When he came to Mexico, hee ware his haire very long, and his beard tyed vp in a lace, and reported ſtrange things of the lands, riuers and mountaines that he had paſſed.

Andrew de Campo trauailed from Quiuira to Panuco.

It grieued Don Antonio de Mendoça very much that the army returned home: for hee had ſpent aboue threeſcore thouſand peſos of golde in the enterpriſe, and ought a great part thereof ſtill. Many ſought to haue dwelt there; but Francis Vaſquez de Coronado, which was rich, and lately married to a faire wife, would not conſent, ſaying, that they could not maintaine nor defend themſelues in ſo poore a countrey, and ſo farre from ſuccour. They trauailed aboue nine hundred leagues in this countrey.

The foreſayd Francis Lopez de Gomara in his generall hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies, Chap. 215. writeth in maner following of certaine great and ſtrange beaſts neuer ſeene nor heard of in our knowen world of Aſia, Europe, and Africa: which ſomewhat reſembling our oxen, hauing high bunches on their backes like thoſe on the backes of Camels, are therefore called by him Vacas corcobadas, that is to ſay, Crooke-backed oxen, being very deformed & terrible in ſhewe, and fierce by nature: which notwithſtanding for foode, apparell, and other neceſſarie vſes, are moſt ſeruiceable and beneficiall to the inhabitants of thoſe countreys. He reporteth alſo in the ſame chapter of certaine ſtrange ſheepe as bigge as horſes, and of dogs which vſe to carie burthens of 50. pound weight pound weight vpon their backes.

Theſe are much like the people that Captain Frobiſher brought into England from Meta incognita.

ALl the way betweene Cicuic and Quiuira is a moſt plaine ſoyle, without trees and ſtones, and hath but fewe and ſmall townes. The men clothe and ſhooe themſelues with lether; and the women which are eſteemed for their long lockes, couer their heads and ſecrets with the ſame. They haue no bread of any kinde of graine, as they ſay: which I account a very great matter. Their chiefeſt foode is fleſh, and that oftentimes they eate rawe, either of cuſtome or for lacke of wood. They eate the fatte as they take it out of the Oxe, and drinke the blood hotte, and die not therewithall, though the ancient writers ſay that it killeth, as Empedocles and others affirmed, they drinke it alſo colde diſſolued in water. They ſeeth not the fleſh for lacke of pots, but roſt it, or to ſay more properly, warme it at a fire of Oxe-dung: when they eate, they chawe their meate but little, and rauen vp much, and holding the fleſh with their teeth, they cut it with raſors of ſtone, which ſeemeth to be great beſtialitie: but ſuch is their maner of liuing and faſhion. They goe together in companies, and mooue from one place to another, as the wilde Moores of Barbarie called Alarbes doe, following the ſeaſons, and the paſture after their Oxen.

The deſcription of the oxen of Quiuira.

Theſe Oxen are of the bigneſſe and colour of our Bulles, but their hornes are not ſo great. They haue a great bunch vpon their fore ſhoulders, and more haire on their fore part then on their hinder part: and it is like wooll. They haue as it were an horſe-mane vpon their backe bone, and much haire and very long from the knees downeward. They haue great tuffes of haire hanging downe their foreheads, and it ſeemeth that they haue beardes, becauſe of the great ſtore of haire hanging downe at their chinnes and throates. The males haue very long tailes, and a great knobbe or flocke at the end: ſo that in ſome reſpect they reſemble the Lion, and in ſome other the Camell. They puſh with their hornes, they runne, they ouertake and kill an horſe when they are in their rage and anger. Finally, it is a foule and fierce beaſt of countenance and forme of bodie. The horſes fledde from them, either becauſe of their deformed ſhape, or elſe becauſe they had neuer ſeene them. Their maſters haue no other riches nor ſubſtance: of them they eat, they drinke, they apparel, they ſhooe themſelues: and of their hides they make many things, as houſes, ſhooes, apparell and ropes: of their bones they make bodkins: of their ſinewes and haire, threed: of their hornes, mawes, and bladders, veſſels: of their dung, fire: and of their calues-ſkinnes, budgets, wherein they drawe and keepe water. To bee ſhort, they make ſo many things of them as they haue neede of, or as many as ſuffice them in the vſe of this life.

Sheepe as big as horſes.

There are alſo in this countrey other beaſtes as big as horſes, which becauſe they haue hornes and fine wool, they cal them ſheepe, and they ſay that euery horne of theirs weigheth is fiftie pound weight.

Mightie dogs carrying 50. pound weight.

There are alſo great dogs which will fight with a bull, and will carrie fiftie pound weight in ſackes when they goe on hunting, or when they remooue from place to place with their flockes and heards.

EL VIAIE QVE HIZO ANTONIO de ESPEIO en el anno de ochenta y tres : el qual con ſus companneros deſcubrieron vna tierra en que hallaron quinze Prouincias todas llenas de pueblos, y de caſas de quatro y cinco altos, a quien puſieron por nombre El nueuo Mexico, por parecerſe en muchas coſas al viejo. Eſta à la parte del Norte, y ſe cree que por ella, y por poblado, ſe puede venir haſta llegar a la tierra que llaman del Labrador.

Del Nueuo Mexico, y de ſu deſcubrimiento, y lo que del ſe ſabe.

YA dixe en el titulo del libro, que el anno de mil y quinientos y ochenta y tres, ſe auian deſcubierto quinze Prouincias, aquien los inuentores llamaron El nueuo Mexico en la tierra firme de Nueua Eſpanna, y prometi de dar noticia del deſcubrimiento, como lo hare con la mayor breuedad que ſea poſſible, porque ſi vuiera de poner diffuſamente todo lo que vieron y ſupieron, fuera meneſter hazer dello nueua hiſtoria, La ſubſtancia dello es, que el anno de mil y quinientos y ochenta y vno, teniendo noticia vn Religioſo de la Orden de ſant Franciſco, que ſe llamaua fray Auguſtin Ruyz, que moraua en el valle de ſant Bartholome, por relation de ciertos Indios Conchos que ſe comunicauan con otros ſus conuezinos llamados Paſſaguates: que hazia la parte del Norte (caminando ſiempre por tierra) auia ciertas poblaciones grandes, y nunca ſabidas de nueſtros Eſpannoles, ni deſcubiertas, con zelo de caridad, y de ſaluacion de las almas, pidio licencia al Conde de Corunna Virey de la dicha Nueua Eſpanna, y a ſus mayores, para yr a ellas, a procurar aprender ſu lengua, y ſabida, bautizarlos, y predicarles el ſanto Euangelio. Alcançada la licentia de los ſobredichos, tomando otros dos companneros de ſu meſma Orden, ſe partio con ocho ſoldados, que de voluntad le quiſieron acompannar, a poner en execucion ſu Chriſtiano y zeloſo intento. Los quales a pocos dias de camino toparon con vna Prouincia, que ſe llamaua de los Tiguas, diſtante de las minas de ſancta Barbola (de donde començaron la jornada) dozientas y cinquenta leguas hazia el Norte, en la qual por cierta ocaſion los naturales le mataron al dicho padre vno de ſus dos companneros. El qual, los ſoldados que yuan cō el, viendo, y ſintiēdo el ſucceſſo, y temiēdo que del ſe podria ſeguir otro mayor danno, acordaron de comū conſentimiento de boluerſe a las minas de donde auian ſalido, con conſideracion de que la gente que yua era muy poca para reſiſtir a los ſucceſſos que ſe podian offrecer en tanta diſtancia de la viuienda de los Eſpannoles, y tan lexos del neceſſario ſocorro. Los dos Religioſos que hauian quedado, no ſolo no vinieron en ſu parecer, mas antes viendo la ocaſion para poner en execucion ſu buen deſſeo, y tanta mies madura para la meſa de Dios, viendo que no podian perſuadir a los ſoldados a paſſar adelante en el deſcubrimiento, ſe quedaron ellos en la dicha Prouincia con tres muchachos Indios, y vn meſtizo, que auian lleuado conſigo, pareciendoles que aunque quedaſſen ſolos, eſtauan alli ſeguros, por la affabilidad y amor con que los naturales della los tratauan. Llegados los ocho ſoldados adonde deſſeauā, embiaron luego la nueua al dicho Virey delo ſuccedido a la ciudad de Mexico, que diſta de las dichas minas de ſanta Barbora ciento y ſeſenta leguas. Sintieron mucho los religioſos de ſant Franciſco la quedada de ſus hermanos : y timiendo no los mataſſen viendo los ſolos, començaron a mouer los animos de algunos ſoldados, para que en compannia de otro Religioſo de la meſma Orden llamado fray Bernardino Beltran, tornaſſen à la dicha Prouincia, a ſacar de peligro a los dichos dos Religioſos, y proſeguir con la empreſa començada.

En eſta a ſazon eſtaua en las dichas minas por cierta ocaſion vn vezino de la ciudad de Mexico, llamado Antonio de Eſpejo, hombre rico, y de mucho animo y induſtria, y zeloſo del ſeruicio de la maieſtad del Rey Don Philippe nueſtro ſennor, natural de Cordoua. El qual como entendieſſe el deſſeo delos dichos religioſos, y la importancia del negocio, ſe offrecio a la jornada, y a gaſtar enella parte de ſu hazienda, y a rieſgar ſu vida, ſiendo le para ello concedida licencia de alguna perſona que repreſentaſſe a ſu maieſtad, la qual procurandola los dichos religioſos, le fue dada por el Capitan Iuā de Ontiueros Alcalde mayor por ſu mageſtad en los pueblos que llaman las quatro Cienegas, que ſon en la gouuernacion de la Nueua Vizcaya, Antonio de Eſpejo morio en la Hauana 1589.

El dicho Antonio de Eſpejo tomo el negocio con tantas veras, que en muy pocos dias iuntò los ſoldados y baſtimentos neceſſarios para hazer la iornada, gaſtando en ello buena parte de ſu hazienda: y partio con todos ellos del valle de ſant Bartholome a los diez. de Nouiembre de mil y quinientos y ochenta y dos, lleuando para lo que ſe offrecieſſe ciento y quinze cauallos, y mulas, y muchas armas, municiones, y baſtimentos, y alguna gente de ſeruicio.

Conchos Indios.

Endereço ſu camino hazia el Norte, y a dos jornadas topo mucha cantidad de Indios de los que llaman Conchos en Rancherias o poblaciones de caſas pagicas. Los quales como lo ſupieſſen, y tuuieſſen dello relacion muy de atras, los ſalieron a recebir con mueſtras de alegria. La comida deſtos, y de los de la Prouincia, que es grande, es de carne de conejos, liebres, y venados que matan, y lo ay todo en grandiſſima cantidad. Tienen mucho maiz, que es el trigo de las Indias, calabaças, y melones, y en abundancia: y ay muchos rios que crian mucha cantidad de peſcado muy bueno, y de diuerſas ſuertes: andan caſi todos deſnudos, y las armas que vſan ſon arco y flecha, y viuen debaxo de gouierno, y ſennorio de Caciques, como los Mexicanos, y no les hallaron Idolos, ni pudieron entender que adoraſſen à nadie, por lo qual facilmente conſintieron en que les puſieſſen los Chriſtianos cruzes, y quedaron muy contentos con ellas, deſpues de auer ſido informados de los nueſtros de la ſignificacion dellas, que ſe hizo por interpretes que lleuauan, por cuyo medio ſupieron de otras poblaciones, para adonde los dichos Conchos los guiaron, acompannandolos mas de veinte y quatro leguas, que todas eſtauan pobladas de gente de ſu nacion, y los ſalian a recebir de paz, por auiſo que embiauan los Caciques de vnos pueblos a otros.

Paſſaguates Indios.

Toboſos Indios.

Andadas las veinte y quatro leguas dichas, toparon otra nacion de Indios, llamados Paſſaguates, los quales viuiã al modo que los ya dichos Conchos ſus conuezinos, y hizieron con ellos lo proprio, guiandolos adelante otras quatro jornadas, con los auiſos de los Caciques, de la manera ya dicha: hallaron los nueſtros en eſte camino muchas minas de plata, al parecer de los que lo entendian, de mucho, y muy rico metal. Vna jornada deſtas toparon otra nacion, llamada los Toboſos, los quales en viendo el raſtro de los nueſtros, ſe huyeron a las ſierras, dexando ſus caſas y pueblos deſiertos. Supoſe deſpues que algunos annos antes auian acudido por alli ciertos ſoldados que yuan en buſca de minas, y auian lleuado cautiuos a ciertos naturales, lo qual tenia temeroſos y abiſpados a los demas. El Capitan dio orden como los fueſſen a llamar, aſſegurandolos de que no les ſeria hecho ningun mal, y dioſe tan buena manna que hizo venir a muchos, aquien regalò, y dio dones, acariciandolos, y declarandoles por el interprete, que no yuan a hazer mal a nadie, con lo qual ſe boluieron todos a ſoſſegar, y conſintierõ les puſieſſen Cruzes, y declaraſſen el myſterio dellas, moſtrando recebir dello gran contentamiento, en cuya demoſtracion los fueron acompannando, como lo auian hecho ſus vezinos, haſta que los metieron en tierra poblada de otra nacion differente, que diſtauan de la ſuya coſa de doze leguas: vſan arco, y flecha, y andan deſnudos.

Proſigueſe del deſcubrimiento del Nueuo Mexico.

Iumanos Indios.

LA nacion haſta donde los dicho Toboſos los guiaron ſe llamaua Iumanos, a quien por otro nombre llaman los Eſpannoles Patarabueyes: tienen vna Prouincia grande, y de muchos pueblos con mucha gente, y las caſas eran con açoteas, y de calicanto, y los pueblos traçados por buen orden: tienen todos los hombres y mugeres los roſtros rayados, y los braços, y piernas: es gente corpulenta, y de mas policia, que los que haſta alli auian viſto, y tenian muchos mantenimientos, y mucha caça de pie y de buelo, y gran cantidad de peſcado, a cauſa de tener grandes rios qne vienen de hazia el Norte, y alguno tan grande como Guadalquiuir, el qual entra en la propria mar del Norte. Tiene muchas lagunas de agua ſalada que ſe quaja cierto tiempo del anno, y ſe haze muy buena ſal. Es gente bellicoſa, y moſtraronlo luego, porque la primera noche que los nueſtros aſſentaron real, les flecharon, y mataron cinco cauallos, hiriendo muy mal otros tantos, y no dexaran ninguno a vida, ſino por las guardas que los defendieron. Hecho eſte mal recado, deſpoblaron el lugar, y ſe ſubieron a vna ſierra que eſtaua cerca, adonde fue luego por la mannana el Capitan con otros cinco ſoldados bien armados con vn interprete llamado Pedro, Indio de ſu meſma nacion, y con buenas razones los quieto y dexo de paz, haziendolos baxar a ſu pueblo y caſas, y perſuadiendolos a que dieſſen auiſo a ſus vezinos de que no eran hombres: que hazian mal a nadie, ni les yuan a tomar ſus haziendas: que lo alcanço facilmente con ſu prudencia, y con darles a los Caciques algunas ſartas de quentas de vidrio que lleuaua para eſte effecto, y ſombreros, y otras ninnerias: con eſte, y con el buen tratamiento que les hazian, ſe fueron muchos dellos en compannia de los nueſtros algunos dias, caminando ſiempre por la ribera del rio grande arriba dicho, por toda la qual hauia muchos pueblos de Indios deſta nacion, que duraron por eſpacio de doze jornadas, en todas las quales auiſados los vnos Caciques de los otros ſalian a recebir a los nueſtros ſin arcos, ni flechas, y les trayan muchos mantenimientos, y otros regalos y dadiuas, en eſpecial cueros y camuças muy bien adereçados, y que no les excedian en eſto las de Flandes. Es gente toda veſtida, y hallaron que tenian alguna lumbre de nueſtra ſancta Fee, porque ſennalauan a Dios mirando al cielo, y le llaman en ſu lengua Apalito, y le conocen por ſennor, de cuya larga mano, y miſericordia confieſſan auer recibido la vida, y el ſer natural, y los bienes temporales. Venian muchos dellos, y las mugeres y ninnos, a que el Religioſo, que diximos que yua con el dicho Capitan y ſoldados, los ſantiguaſſe, y echaſſe la benedicion: el qual como les preguntaſſe de quien auian entendido aquel conocimiento de Dios que tenian: reſpondieron, que de tres Chriſtianos, y vn negro, que auian paſſado por alli, y detenidoſe algunos dias en ſu tierra, que ſegun las ſennas que dieron, eran Aluar Nunnes Cabeça de Vaca, y Dorantes, y Caſtillo Maldonado, y vn negro, que todos ellos auian eſcapado de la armada con que entro Panfilo de Narbaez en la Florida, y deſpues de auer ſido muchos dias eſclauos, vinieron a dar a eſtos pueblos, haziendo Dios por medio dellos muchos milagros, y ſanando con el tocamento ſolo de ſus manos muchos enfermos, por lo qual dexaron gran nombre en toda aquella tierra. Toda eſta Prouincia quedo de paz, y muy ſoſſegada, en cuya demonſtracion fueron acompannando y ſiruiendo a los nueſtros algunos dias por la orilla del rio que diximos arriba.

Apalito.

A pocos dias toparon con vna gran poblacion de Indios, adonde los ſalieron a recebir por nueua que tuuieron de ſus vezinos, y les ſacaron muchas coſas muy curioſas de pluma de differentes colores, y muchas mantas de algodon barretadas de azul y blanco, como las que traen de la China, para reſcatarlas, y trocarlas por otras coſas. Yuan todos, aſſi hombres como mugeres, y ninnos veſtidos de camuças muy buenas y bien adobadas, y nunca pudieron los nueſtros entender que nacion era por falta de interprete que intendieſſe ſu lengua, aunque por ſennas tratauan con ellos, à los quales como les moſtraſſen algunas piedras de metal rico, y les preguntaſſen ſi hauia de aquello en ſu tierra: Reſpondieró por las meſmas ſennas que cinco dias de camino de alli hazia el Poniente, auia de aquello en muy gran cantidad, y que ellos los guiarian para alla, y ſe lo moſtrarian, como lo cumplieron deſpues, acompannandolos por eſpacio de veynte y dos leguas, todas pobladas de gente de ſu meſma nació: a quien immediatamente ſe ſeguia por el meſmo rio arriba otra de mucha mas gente que la de la paſſada, de quien fueron bien recibidos, y regalados con muchos preſentes, eſpecialmente de peſcado que hauia infinito, a cauſa de vnas lagunas grandes que cerca de alli hauia, que lo crian en la abundancia dicha. Eſtuuieron entre eſtos tres dias, en los quales de dia, y de noche les hizieron muchos bayles a ſu modo, con particular ſignification de alegria: no ſe ſupo como ſe llamaua eſta nacion por falta de interprete, aunque entendieron que ſe extendia mucho, y que era muy grande. Entre eſtos hallaron vn Indio Concho de nacion, que les dixo, y ſennalo, que quinze iornadas de alli hazia el Poniente hauia vna laguna muy ancha, y cerca della muy grandes pueblos, y caſas de tres y quatro altos, y la gente bien veſtida, y la tierra de muchos baſtimentos, el qual ſe offrecio de lleuarlos alla, y holgaran los nueſtros dello, y ſolo lo dexaron de poner en effecto, pro proſeguir el intento con que auian començado la jornada, que era yr al Norte a dar ſocorro a los Religioſos arriba dichos.

Lagunas grandes.

Laguna muy ancha.

En eſta Prouincia lo que particularmente notaron fue, que hauia muy buen temple, y muy ricas tierras, y mucha caça de pie y buelo, y muchos metales ricos, y otras coſas particulares, y de prouecho.

Muchos Metales ricos.

Deſta Prouincia fueron ſiguiendo ſu derrota por eſpacio de quinze dias, ſin topar en todos ellos ninguna gente por entre grãdes pinales de pinnas y pinnones, como los de Caſtilla: al cabo de los quales auiendo caminado a ſu parecer ochenta leguas, toparon vna pequenna Rancheria, o pueblo de poca gente, y en ſus caſas, que eran pobres, y de paja, gran cantidad de cueros de venados tan bien aderçados como los de Flandes, y mucha ſal blanca, y muy buena. Hizieronles muy buen hoſpedaje dos dias que alli eſtuuieron, deſpues delos quales los acompannaron como doze leguas a vnas poblaciones grandes, caminando ſiempre por el rio del Norte ya dicho, haſta llegar a la tierra que llaman el Nueuo Mexico.

Eſtaua toda la ribera del dicho rio llena de grandiſſimas alamedas de alamos blancos, y en partes tomauan quatro leguas de ancho, y anſi meſmo de muchos nogales, y parrales como los de Caſtilla. Auiendo caminado dos dias por eſtas alamedas, y noguerales, toparó diez pueblos que eſtauã aſſentados en la ribera del dicho rio por ambas partes, ſin otros que ſe moſtrauan mas deſuiados, en los quales les parecio auia mucha gente, y la que ellos vieron paſſauan en numero de diez mil animas. En eſta Prouincia los regalaró mucho cõ recebimientos, y con lleuarlos a ſus pueblos, donde les dauan mucha comida, y gallinas de la tierra, y otras coſas, y todo con gran voluntad. Aqui hallaron caſas de quatro altos, y bien edificadas, y con galanos apoſentos, y en las mas dellas auia eſtufas para tiempo de inuierno. Andauan veſtidos de algodon, y de cuero de venado, y el traje, aſſi de los hombres, como de las mugeres, es al modo del de los Indios del reyno de Mexico: y lo que les cauſo mas eſtranneza, fue ver que todos ellos, y ellas andauan calçados con çapatos y botas de buen cuero con ſuelas de vaca, coſa que haſta alli nunca la auian viſto. Las mugeres trayan el cabello muy peynado, y compueſto, y ſin coſa ſobre la cabeça. En todos eſtos pueblos auia Caciques que los gouernauan como entre los Indios Mexicanos, con Alguaziles para executar ſus mandamientos, los quales van por el pueblo, diziendo à vozes la voluntad de los Caciques, y que la pongan por obra. En eſta Prouincia hallaron los nueſtros muchos Idolos que adorauan, y en eſpecial que tenian en cada caſa vn templo para el Demonio, donde le lleuauan de ordinario de comer, y otra coſa, que de la manera que entre los Chriſtianos tenemos en los caminos cruzes; aſſi tienen ellos vnas como capillas altas, donde dizẽ, deſcanſa, y ſe recrea el Demonio, quando va de vn pueblo a otro: las quales eſtan muy adornadas y pintadas. En todas las ſementeras, o labranças, que las tienen muy grandes, tienen a vn lado dellas vn portal con quatro pilares, donde comen los trabajadores, y paſſan la ſieſta, porque es la gente muy dada ala labor, y eſtan de ordinario en ella: es tierra de muchos montes y pinales. Las armas que vſan ſon arcos muy fuertes, y flechas con las puntas de pedernal con que paſſan vna cota, y macanas, que ſon vnos palos de media vara de largo, y llanos todos de pedernales agudos, que baſtan a partir por medio vn hombre, y anſi meſmo vnas como adargas de cuero de vaca crudio.

Metales muy buenos.

Deſpues de auer eſtado en eſta Prouincia quatro dias, y a poca diſtancia toparon con otra, que ſe llamaua la Prouincia de los Tiguas, en la qual auia diez y ſeys pueblos: en el vno de los quales, llamado por nombre Poala, hallaron que auian muerto los indios à los dichos dos padres fray Franciſco Lopez, y fray Auguſtin, a quien yuan a buſcar, y juntamente a tres muchachos, y vn meſtizo. Quando los deſte pueblo, y ſus conuezinos vieron a los nueſtros, remordiendo les la propria conſciencia, y temiendoſe que yuan a caſtigarlos, y tomar vengança de las muertes de los dichos padres, no los oſaron eſperar, antes dexando ſus caſas deſiertas ſe ſubieron a las ſierras mas cercanas, de donde nunca los pudieron hazer baxar, aunque lo procuraron con alagos y mannas. Hallaron en los pueblos y caſas muchos mantenimientos, y gran infinidad de gallinas de la tierra, y muchas ſuertes de metales, y algunos que parecian muy buenos. No ſe pudo entender claramente que tanta gente fueſſe la deſta Prouincia, por cauſa de auerſe (como ya dixe) ſubido a la ſierra.

Minas ricas.

Auiendo hallado muertos a los que buſcauan, entraron en conſulta ſobre ſi ſe boluerian à la Nueua Vizcaya, de donde hauian ſalido, o paſſarian adelante: en lo qual vuo diuerſos pareceres: pero como alli entendieſſen, que a la parte de Oriente de aquella Prouincia, y muy diſtante de alli hauian grandes pueblos y ricos, hallandoſe alli tan cerca, acordo el dicho Capitan Antonio de Eſpejo de conſentimiento del Religioſo ya dicho, llamado fray Bernardino Beltran, y de la mayor parte de ſus ſoldados, y companneros, de proſeguir con el deſcubrimiento haſta ver en que paraua, para poder dar dello noticia cierta y clara a ſu Mageſtad, como teſtigos de viſta: y aſſi conformes determinaron que quedandoſe alli el Real, fueſſen el Capitan con dos companneros en demanda de ſu deſſeo, que lo puſieron por obra. Y a dos dias de camino toparon con vna Prouincia donde vieron onze pueblos, y en ellos mucha gente, que a ſu parecer paſſaua en numero de quarenta mil animas: era tierra muy fertil y baſtecida, cuyos confines eſtan immediatamente juntos con las tierras de Cibola, donde ay muchas vacas, de cuyos cueros ſe viſten, y de algodon: ſiguiendo en la manera del gouierno el orden que guarden ſus conuezinos: ay ſennales de muchas minas ricas, y aſſi hallauan metales dellas en algunas caſas de los Indios, los quales tienen, y adoran Idolos: recibieronlos de paz, y dieron les de comer. Viſto eſto, y la diſpoſicion de la tierra, ſe boluieron al real de donde auian ſalido, a dar noticia a ſus companneros de todo lo ſobredicho.

Llegados al Real (como eſta dicho) tuuieron noticia de otra Prouincia, llamada los Quires, que eſtaua el rio del Norte arriba ſeys leguas de diſtancia, y como ſe partieſſen para alla, y llegaſſen vna legua della, les ſalieron a recebir de paz mucha cantidad de Indios, y a rogar que ſe fueſſen con ellos a ſus pueblos, que como lo hizieſſen, fueron muy bien recebidos y regalados. Vieron ſolamente cinco pueblos en eſta Prouincia, en los quales auia muy gran cantidad de gente, y la que ellos vieron paſſaua de quinze mil animas, y adoran Idolos como ſus vezinos. Hallaron en vno deſtos pueblos vna Vrraca en vna jaula, como ſe vſa en Caſtilla, y tiraſoles, como los que ſe traen de la China, pintados en ellos el ſol y la luna, y muchas eſtrellas. Donde como tomaſſen la altura, ſe hallaron en treynta y ſiete grados y medio debaxo del Norte.

Quires

Salieron deſta Prouincia, y caminando por el proprio rumbo, y a catorze leguas, hallaron otra Prouincia, llamada los Cunames, donde vieron otros cinco pueblos, y el principal dellos, y mas grande ſe llamaua Cia, que era tan grande que tenia ocho plaças, cuyas caſas eran encaladas, y pintadas de colores, y mejores que las que hauian viſto en las Prouincias atras: parecioles que la gente que vieron paſſauan de veynte mil animas: hizieron preſente a los nueſtros de muchas mantas curioſas, y de coſas de comer muy bien guiſadas, y juzgaron ſer la gente mas curioſa, y de mayor policia, de quantas haſta alli hauian viſto, y de mejor gouierno: monſtraronles ricos metales, y vnas ſierras alli cerca de donde los ſacauan. Aqui tuuieron noticia de otra Prouincia, que ſtaua hazia el Nordueſte, que ſe determinaron de yr a ella.

Como vuieſſen andado como ſeys leguas, toparon con la dicha Prouincia, que ſe llamaua de los Amejes, en la qual hauia ſiete pueblos muy grandes, y en ellos a ſu entender mas de treynta mil animas. Vno deſtos ſiete pueblos dixeron era muy grande y hermoſo, que le dexaron de yr a ver, aſſi por eſtar detras de vna ſierra, como por temor de algun ruyn ſucceſſo, ſi a caſo ſe diuidian los vnos de los otros. Es gente al modo de la Prouincia ſu vezina, y tan abaſtada como ella, y de tan buen gouierno,

A quinze leguas deſta Prouincia, caminando ſiempre hazia el Poniente, hallaron vn pueblo grande llamado Acoma, era de mas de ſeys mil animas, y eſtaua aſſẽtado ſobre vno penna alta que tenia mas de cinquenta eſtados en alto, no teniendo otra entrada ſino por vna eſcalera que eſtaua hecha en la propria penna, coſa que admiro mucho a los nueſtros: toda el agua que en el pueblo auia era de ciſternas, Tienen ſus ſembrados dos leguas de alli, y ſacan el agua para regarlos de vn rio pequenno que eſta cerca, en cuya ribera vieron muy grandes roſales como los de aca de Caſtilla. Ay muchas ſierras con ſennales de metales, aunque no ſubieron a verlo, por ſer los Indios dellas muchos, y muy bellicoſos. Eſtuuieron los nueſtros en eſte lugar tres dias, en vno de los quales los naturales les hizieron vn bayle muy ſolenne, ſaliendo a el con galanos veſtidos, y con juegos muy ingenioſos, con que holgaron en ſe eſtremo.

Veynte y quartro leguas de aqui, hazia el Poniente, dieron con vna Prouincia, que ſe nombra en lengua de los naturales Zuny, y la llaman los Eſpannoles Cibola, ay en ella grã cantidad de Indios, en la qual eſtuuo Franciſco Vazquez Coronado, y dexo muchas Cruzes pueſtas, y otras ſennales de Chriſtianidad que ſiempre ſe eſtauan en pie. Hallaron anſi meſmo tres Indios Chriſtianos que ſe auian quedado de aquella jornada, cuyos nombres eran Andres de Cuyoacan, Gaſpar de Mexico, y Antonio de Guadalajara, los quales tenian caſi oluidada ſu meſma lengua, y ſabian muy bien la delos naturales, aunque a pocas bueltas que les hablaron ſe entendieron facilmente. De quien ſupieron que ſeſenta jornadas de alli auia vna laguna, o lago muy grande, en cuyas riberas eſtauan muchos pueblos grandes y buenos, y que los naturales tenian mucho oro, de lo qual era indicion el traer todos braceletes y orejeras dello: y que como el ſobredicho Franciſco Vazquez Coronado tuuieſſe noticia muy cierta dello, hauia ſalido deſta Prouincia de Cibola para yr alla, y auiendo andado doze jornadas le falto el agua, y ſe determino de boluer, como lo hizo, con determinacion de tornar otra vez mas de propoſito a ello, que deſpues no lo puſo en execució, porque la muerte le atajo los paſſos y penſamientos.

Vna legua antes que llegaſſen al primer pueblo, les ſalieron a recebir mas de dos mil Indios cargados de baſtimentos , a quien el dicho Capitan dio algunas coſas de poco precio, que a ellos les parecio ſer de mucho, y las eſtimaron mas que ſi fueran de oro. Llegando mas cerca del pueblo, que ſe llamaua Zaguato, ſalio a recebirlos gran muchedumbre de Indios, y entre ellos los Caciques, haziendo tanta demoſtracion de plazer y regozijo, que echauan mucha harina de maiz por el ſuelo, para que la piſaſſen los cauallos : con eſta fieſta entraron en el, y fueron muy bien hoſpedados, y regalados, que ſe lo pago en parte el Capitan, con dar a todos los mas principales ſombreros, y quentas de vidrio, y otras muchas coſas que lleuaua para ſemejantes offrecimientos.

Deſpacharon luego los dichos Caciques recados a todos los de aquella Prouincia, dandoles noticia de la venida de los hueſpedes, y de como eran hombres muy corteſes, y no les hazian mal : lo qual fue baſtante para hazer los venir a todos cargados de preſentes para los nueſtros, y de que los importunaſſen,fueſſen con ellos a holgarſe a ſus pueblos, que lo hizieron,aunque ſiempre con recado de lo que podia ſucceder. Por lo qual el dicho Capitan vſo de vna cautela, y fue dezir a los Caciques, que por quanto los cauallos eran muy brauos, y les auian dicho que los querian matar, ſeria neceſſario hazer vn fuerte de calicanto donde meter los para euitar el danno que querian hazer en los Indios. Creyeronlo los Caciques tan de veras que dentro de pocas horas juntaron tanta gente que hizieron el dicho fuerte que los nueſtros querian con vna preſteza increyble. Demas deſto, diziendo el Capitan que ſe queria yr, le traxeron vn preſente de 40. mil mantas de algodon pintadas y blancas, y mucha cantidad de pannos de manos con borlas en las puntas, y otras muchas coſas, y entre ellas metales ricos, y que moſtrauan tener mucha plata. Hallaron entre eſtos Indios muy gran noticia de la laguna grande arriba dicha, y conformaron con los otros en lo tocante a las riquezas, y mucha abundantia de oro.

Fiado el Capitan deſta gente, y de ſus buenos animos, acordo a cabo de algunos dias de dexar alli cinco de ſus companneros con los demas Indios amigos, para que ſe boluieſſen a la prouincia de Zuny con el bagaje, y de yrſe el con los quatro que quedauan a la ligera en deſcubrimẽto de cierta noticia que tenia de vnas minas muy ricas. Lo qual pueſto por obra ſe partio con las guias que lleuaua, y como vuieſſe caminado hazia el proprio Poniente quarenta y cinco leguas, topo con las dichas minas, y ſaco con ſus proprias manos riquiſſimos metales, y de mucha plata: y las minas,que eran de vna veta muy ancha,eſtauan en vna ſierra adonde ſe podia ſubir con facilidad, a cauſa de hauer para ello camino abierto. Cerca de las auia algunos pueblos de Indios ſerranos que les hizieron amiſtad, y los ſalieron a recebir con Cruzes en las cabeças, y otras ſennales de paz. Aqui cerca toparon dos rios razonables, a cuyas orillas hauia muchas parras de vuas muy buenas, y grandes nogueraIes, y mucho lino como lo de Caſtilla, y dixeron por ſennas que detras de aquellas ſierras eſtaua vno que tenia mas de ocho leguas de ancho,pero no ſe pudo entender que tan cerca,aunque hizieron demonſtracion que corria hazia la mar del Norte, y que en las riberas del de vna y orta banda ay muchos pueblos tan grandes, que en ſu comparacion aquellos en que eſtaua eran barrios.

Deſpues de hauer tomado toda eſta relaciõ, ſe partio el dicho Capitan para la Prouincia de Zuny, adonde hauia mandado yr a los dichos companneros : y como llegaſſe a ella con ſalud, hauiendo ydo por muy buen camino, hallo con ella a ſus cinco companneros, y al dicho padre Fray Bernardino con los ſoldados que ſe auian determinado de boluer, como ya diximos, que aun no ſe auian partido, por ciertas ocaſiones : a los quales los naturales hauian hecho muy buen tratamiento, y dadoles todo lo neceſſario muy complidamente, haziendo deſpues lo meſmo çon el capitan, y los que con el venian, a quien ſalieron a recebir con demonſtracion de alegria, y dieron muchos baſtimentos para la jornada que hauian de hazer, rogandoles que boluiſſen con breuedad, y traxeſſen muchos Caſtillas (que aſſi llaman a los Eſpannoles) y que a todos les darian de comer. Por lo qual para poderlo hazer con comodidad auian ſembrado aquel anno mas trigo y ſemillas, que en todos los paſſados.

En eſte tiempo ſe retificaron en ſu primera determinacion el dicho religioſo, y los ſoldados arriba dichos, y acordaron de boluerſe a la prouincia de donde auian ſalido con el deſignio que queda dicho, a quien ſe junto Gregorio Hernandez que auia ſido Alferez en la jornada: los quales partidos, quedando el Capitan con ſolos ocho ſoldados, ſe reſoluio de ſeguir lo començado y correr por el Rio del Norte arriba, que lo puſo por obra. Y hauiendo caminado como ſeſenta leguas hazia la prouincia de los Quires ya dicha, doze leguas de alli hazia la parte del Oriente, hallaron vna prouincia que ſe llamaua los Hubates, donde los Indios los recibieron de paz, y les dieron muchos mantenimientos, y noticia de que cerca de alli hauia vnas minas muy ricas, que las hallaron, y ſacaron dellas metales reluzientes y buenos, con los quales ſe boluieron al pueblo de donde auian ſalido. Iuzgaron eſta prouincia por de haſta veynte y cinco mil animas, todos muy bien veſtidos de mantas de algodon pintadas, y camuças muy bien adereçadas. Tienen muchos montes de pinales y cedros, y las caſas de los pueblos ſon de quatro y cinco altos. Aqui tuuieron noticia de otra prouincia que eſtaua vna jornada de alli, que ſe llamaua de los Tamos, en que hauia mas de quarenta mil animas, donde como llegaſſen no les quiſieron dar de comer los moradores della, ni admitirlos en ſus pueblos: por lo qual, y por el peligro en que eſtauan, y eſtar algunos ſoldados enfermos, y ſer tan pocos (como hauemos dicho) ſe determinaron de yrſe ſaliendo para tierra de Chriſtianos, y lo puſieron en execucion a principio de Iulio del anno de ochenta y tres, ſiendo guiados por vn Indio que ſe fue con ellos, y los lleuo por camino differente del que a la venida hauian traydo, por vn rio abaxo, a quien llamaron de las vacas, por auer gran muchedumbre dellas en toda ſu ribera, por donde caminaron ciento y veynte leguas, topando las ordinariamente: de aqui ſalieron al rio de los Conchos por donde auian entrado, y del al Valle de Sant Bertholome de donde hauian ſalido para dar principio al deſcubrimiento: y ya quando llegaron, hallaron que el dicho fray Bernardino Beltran, y ſus companneros auian llegado a ſaluamento al dicho pueblo muchos dias hauía, y que de alli ſe auian ydo a la villa de Guadiana. Hizo en eſte pueblo el dicho Capitan Antonio de Eſpejo informacion muy cierta de todo lo arriba dicho, la qual embio luego al Conde de Corunna Virey de aquel Reyno, y el a ſu Mageſtad, y a los ſennores, de ſu Real Conſejo de las Indias, para que ordenaſſen lo que fueſſen ſeruidos, que lo han ya hecho con mucho cuydado. Nueſtro Sennor ſe ſirua de ayudar eſte negocio, de modo que tantas almas redemidas con ſu ſangre no ſe condenen, de cuyos buenos ingenios (en que exceden a los de Mexico y Peru, ſegun ſe entendio de los que los trataron) ſe puede preſumir, abraçaran con facilidad la ley Euangelica, dexando la idolatria, que agora la mayor parte dellos tiene: que lo haga Dios como puede para honra y gloria ſuya, y augmento de la ſancta fe Catholica.

Nota.

A briefe relation of two notable voyages, the firſt made by frier Auguſtin Ruyz a Franciſcan, in the yeere 1581: the ſecond by Antonio de Eſpejo in the yere 1583: who together with his company diſcouered a land wherin they found fifteene prouinces all full of townes, conteining houſes of foure and fiue ſtories high, which they named New Mexico; for that in many reſpects it reſembleth the prouince of Olde Mexico. This land is ſituate to the North of Nueua Eſpanna, and ſtretcheth from 24 to 34 degrees and better: by the which & by other inhabited lands it is thought that men may trauell euen to Terra de Labrador. Taken out of the hiſtory of China written by Frier Iuan Gonzalez de Mendoça, and printed in Madrid 1586.

I Haue now declared in the title of this preſent diſcourſe, that in the yeere 1583 there were diſcouered fifteene prouinces, which the diſcouerers called New Mexico, ſituate on the firme land of Nueua Eſpanna, and I promiſed to giue notice of the ſayd diſcouery, which I will do with as much breuity as is poſſible: for if I ſhould record at large all particulars which they ſaw and came to the knowledge of, it would require a full hiſtory. The ſubſtance thereof is as followeth.

In the yere of our Lord 1581 a certaine Franciſcan frier called Auguſtin Ruiz which dwelt in the valley of S. Bartholomew, being informed by the report of certaine Indians called Conchos, which had dealings and conuerſation with other of their neighbours called Paſſaguates; that toward the North, trauelling alwayes by land, there were certaine great townes not hitherto knowen nor diſcouered by our Spanyards: mooued with a zeale of charity, and a deſire to ſaue ſoules, craued licence of the Conde of Corunna as the Viceroy of Nueua Eſpanna, and of his superiours, to go to the ſayd townes, and to endeuour to learne their language, and hauing learned the ſame, to baptize them, and to preach the holy Goſpel vnto them. After he had obteined licence of the parties aforeſayd, taking with him other two companions of his owne order, and eight souldiers, who of their owne good will offered to beare him company, he departed to put in execution his Chriſtian and zealous intent. Who after certeine dayes trauell came vnto a countrey called The prouince de los Tiguas diſtant from the mines of Santa Barbara, from whence they began their iourney, 250 leagues towards the North: in which prouince the inhabitants, vpon a certaine occaſion, ſlew one of the ſayd friers two companions. The ſouldiers that went with him ſeeing this miſhap, and perceiuing the ſucceſſe, and likewiſe fearing, that thereof might happen ſome greater danger, determined with a common conſent to return vnto the mines from whence they departed: conſidering that their company was too ſmall to reſiſt the dangers that might happen, being ſo farre diſtant from the dwellings of the Spanyards, and from all neceſſary ſuccour. But the two friers which remained aliue did not onely refuſe their determination, but rather ſeeing fit occaſion to put their good deſire in execution, and ſo great a harueſt ripe for the Lords table, becauſe they could not perſuade the ſouldiers to proceed any further in that diſcouery, remained behinde in the ſayd prouince with three Indian boyes, and one Meſtiço whom they had caried with them; thinking that although they remained alone, yet ſhould they be there in ſecuritie, by reaſon of the great affability and loue which the people of that place ſhewed vnto them.

The firſt voyage made by Frier Auguſtin Ruiz to the prouince de los Tiguas.

The chiefe of theſe 8 ſouldiers was Franciſco Sanchez Xamuzcado which made a map of theſe prouinces, which being intercepted is come to our hands.

The prouince de los Tiguas diſtant 250 legues Northward from the mines of Santa Barbara.

The eight ſouldiers being returned to their wiſhed home, immediatly ſent newes of all that had paſſed to the Viceroy vnto the city of Mexico, which is diſtant from the ſayd mines of Santa Barbara 160 leagues.

The mines of Santa Barbara 160 leagues diſtant from Mexico.

The friers of Sant Francis were very much agrieued at the ſtaying of their brethren behinde in the countrey, and fearing leaſt the Sauages would kill them ſeeing them left alone, they began to mooue the minds of certaine ſouldiers to make another voyage to the ſayd prouince in the company of another frier of the foreſayd Order called Frier Bernardin Beltran, to deliuer the aforeſayd two religious men out of danger, and to proſecute their former enterpriſe.

The ſecond voyage.

At the ſame time there was at the foreſayd mines vpon ſome occaſion a citizen of Mexico called Antonio de Eſpejo, a rich man, and of great courage and induſtry, and very zealous in the ſeruice of king Philip his ſoueraine, and was borne in Cordoua. Who vnderſtanding the deſire of the foreſayd friers, and the importance of the action, offered himſelfe to go on that voyage, and alſo to ſpend part of his ſubſtance, and to aduenture his life therein; conditionally that licence might be granted him to the ſame purpoſe from ſome perſon ſufficiently authorized by his Maieſtie. Which licence at the ſayd friers procurement was granted vnto him by the gouernour Iuan de Ontiueros the kings Alcalde mayór or chiefe Iuſtice in the townes called Las quatro Cienegas ſituate within the iuriſdiction of Nueua Biſcaya ſeuenty leagues from the ſayd mines of Santa Barbara; authorizing him both to take in hand the ſayd voyage, and alſo to aſſemble ſuch people and ſouldiers as he could, which might accompany and ayde him in the performance of this his Chriſtian intent.

Las quatro Cienegas in the prouince of Nueua Biſcaya 70 leagues frō the mines of Santa Barbara.

The ſayd Antonio de Eſpejo was ſo earneſt in this matter, that in very few dayes he had gathered a company of ſouldiers, and made prouiſion of things neceſſary for his voyage, ſpending therein a good part of his ſubſtance. And he departed with his whole company from the valley of S. Bartholomew the tenth of Nouember 1582; taking with him (for whatſoeuer ſhould happen) 115 horſes and mules, with great ſtore of weapons, munition, and victuals, and ſome Indians to ſerue him in his iourney.

Antonio de Eſpejo his ſetting forth frō the valley of S. Bartholomew the tenth of Nouember 1582.

Directing his courſe toward the North, after two dayes iourney he met with great ſtore of the foreſayd Indians called Conchos, which dwell in villages or hamlets of cottages couered with ſtraw. Who, ſo ſoone as they vnderſtood of his approch, hauing newes thereof long before, came foorth to receiue him with ſhewes of great ioy. The food of this people and of all the reſt of that prouince, which is great, are conies, hares, and deere which they kill, of all which they haue great abundance. Alſo they haue great ſtore of Maiz or Indian wheat, gourds, and melons very good and plentifull: and there are many riuers full of excellent fiſh of diuers ſorts. They goe almoſt naked, and the weapons that they vſe are bowes & arrowes, and liue vnder the gouernment and lordſhip of Caçiques like thoſe of Mexico: they found no idols among them, neither could they vnderſtand that they worſhipped any thing; whereupon they eaſily conſented that the Spa-nyards ſhould ſet vp croſſes, and were very well content therewith, after they were informed by our friers of the ſignification thereof, which was done by the interpreters that they caried with them; by whoſe meanes they vnderſtood of other townes, whither the ſayd Conchos did conduct them, and bare them company aboue foure & twenty leagues, all which way was inhabited with people of their owne nation: and at all places where they came they were peaceably receiued by aduice that was ſent by the Caçiques from one towne to another.

Hauing paſſed the foure and twenty leagues aforeſayd, they came vnto another nation of Indians called Paſſaguates, who liue after the maner of the foreſayd Conchos their borderers, and did vnto them as the others had done, conducting them forward other foure dayes iourney, with aduice of the Caçiques, as before. The Spanyards found in this iourney many mines of ſiluer, which according to the iudgement of ſkilfull men, were very plentifull and rich in metall.

Paſſaguates.

Very great and rich ſiluer mines.

A dayes iourney from thence they met with another nation called Toboſos, who ſo ſoone as they beheld the countenance of our people fledde vnto the mountaines, leauing their townes and houſes deſolate. Afterward wee vnderſtood that certeine yeeres paſt there came vnto that place certaine ſouldiers to ſeeke mines, who caried away captiue certaine of the people of the countrey, which cauſed the reſt of them to be ſo ſhey and fearefull. The captaine ſent meſſengers to call them backe againe, aſſuring them that they ſhould not ſuſtaine any harme, and handled the matter ſo diſcreetly, that many of them returned, whom he made much of, and gaue them gifts, vſing them kindly, and declaring vnto them by the interpreter, that their comming was not to hurt any man: whereupon they were all quieted, and were content they ſhould ſet vp croſſes, and declare the myſtery of the ſame, making ſhew that they were highly pleaſed therewith. For prooſe whereof they accompanied them on their voyage, as their neighbours had done, vntill they had brought them to a countrey inhabited by another nation, which was diſtant from theirs ſome 12 leagues. They vſe bowes and arrowes and go naked.

Toboſos.

The nation vnto which the ſayd Toboſos conducted them, is called Iumanos, whom the Spanyards by another name call Patarabueyes: their prouince is very great, conteining many townes and great ſtore of people: their houſes are flat-roofed, and built of lime and ſtone, and the ſtreets of their townes are placed in good order. All the men and women haue their faces, armes and legges raced and pounced: they are a people of great ſtature, and of better gouernment, then the reſt which they had ſeene in their former iourneyes; and are well prouided of victuals, and furniſhed with plenty of wilde beaſts, fowles and fiſhes, by reaſon of mighey riuers which come from the North, whereof one is as great as Guadalquiuir, which falleth into the North ſea or bay of Mexico. Here are alſo many lakes of ſalt water, which at a certeine time of the yere wareth hard, and becommeth very good ſalt. They are a warlike people, and ſoone made ſhew thereof: for the firſt night that our people incamped there, with their arrowes they ſlew fiue horſes, and wounded fiue other very ſore, nor would not haue left one of them aliue, if they had not beene defended by our guard. Hauing done this miſchiefe, they abandoned the towne, and withdrew themſelues to a mountaine which was hard by, whither our captaine went betimes in the morning, taking with him fiue ſouldiers well armed, and an interpreter called Peter an Indian of their owne nation, and with good perſuaſions appeaſed them, cauſing them to deſcend to their towne and houſes, and perſuading them to giue aduice vnto their neighbours, that they were men that would hurt no body, neither came they thither to take away their goods: which he obtained eaſily by his wiſedome, and by giuing vnto the Caçiques certeine bracelets of glaſſe beads, with hats and other trifles, which he caried with him for the ſame purpoſe: ſo by this meanes, and by the good interteinment which they gaue them, many of them accompanied our Spanyards for certeine dayes, alwayes trauelling along the banke of the great riuer aboueſayd; along the which there were many townes of the Indians of this nation, which continued for the ſpace of twelue dayes trauel, all which time the Caçiques hauing receiued aduice from one to another, came forth to interteine our people without their bowes and arrowes, and brought them plenty of victuals, with other preſents and gifts, eſpecially hides and chamoiſ-ſkins very well dreſſed, ſo that thoſe of Flanders do nothing exceed them. Theſe people are all clothed, and ſeemed to haue ſome light of our holy faith; for they made ſignes of God, looking vp towards heauen, and call him in their language Apalito, and acknowledge him for their Lord, from whoſe bountifull hand and mercy they confeſſe that they haue receiued their life and being, and theſe worldly goods. Many of them with their wiues and children came vnto the frier (which the captaine and ſouldiers brought with them) that hee might croſſe and bleſſe them. Who demanding of them, from whom they had receiued that knowledge of God, they anſwered, from three Chriſtians, & one Negro which paſſed that way, and remained certaine dayes among them, who by the ſignes which they made, were

Aluaro Nunnez, Cabeça de Vaca, and Dorantes, and Caſtillo Maldonado, and a Negro; all which eſcaped of the company which Pamphilo de Naruaez landed in Florida; who after they had bene many dayes captiues and ſlaues, eſcaped and came to theſe townes, by whom God ſhewed many miracles, and healed onely by the touching of their hands many ſicke perſons, by reaſon whereof they became very famous in all that countrey. All this prouince remained in great peace and ſecurity; in token whereof, they accompanied and ſerued our men certaine dayes, trauelling along by the great riuer aforeſayd.

Very great quantity of ſiluer.

Within few dayes after they came vnto another great prouince of Indians, from whence they came forth to receiue them, vpon the newes which they had heard of their neighbors, and brought them many very curious things made of feathers of diuers colours, and many mantles of cotton ſtraked with blew and white, like thoſe that are brought from China, to barter & trucke them for other things. All of them both men, women and children were clad in chamois ſkinnes very good and wel dreſſed. Our people could neuer vnderſtand what nation they were for lacke of an interpreter: howbeit they dealt with them by ſignes; and hauing ſhewed vnto them certaine ſtones of rich metall, and inquired whether there were any ſuch in their countrey: they anſwered by the ſame ſignes, that fiue dayes iourney Weſtward from thence there was great quantity therof, and that they would conduct them thither, and ſhew it vnto them; as afterward they performed their promiſe, & bare them company 22 leagues, which was all inhabited by people of the ſame nation.

Another prouince.

Great lakes.

A mighty lake.

Rich metals.

Next vnto the foreſayd prouince they came vnto another further vp the great riuer aforeſayd, being much more populous then the former, of whom they were well receiued, and welcomed with many preſents, eſpecially of fiſh, whereof they haue exceeding great ſtore, by reaſon of certaine great lakes not far from thence, wherein they are bred in the foreſayd plenty. They ſtayed among theſe people three dayes; all which time both day and night they made before them many dances, according to their faſhion, with ſignification of ſpeciall ioy. They could not learne the name of this nation for want of an interpreter, yet they vnderſtood that it extended very farre, and was very great. Among theſe people they found an Indian of the foreſayd nation of the Conchos, who told them, and ſhewed them by ſignes, that fifteene dayes iourney from thence toward the Weſt there was a very broad lake, and nere vnto it very great townes, and in them houſes of three or foure ſtories high, and that the people were well apparelled, and the countrey full of victuals and prouiſion. This Concho offered himſelfe to conduct our men thither, whereat our company reioyced, but left off the enterpriſe, onely to accompliſh their intent for which they vndertooke the voyage, which was to go Northward to giue ayd vnto the two friers aforeſayd. The chiefe and principall thing that they noted in this prouince was, that it was of very good temperature, and a very rich ſoile, and had great ſtore of wilde beaſts, and wilde-fowle, and abundance of rich metals, and other excellent things, and very profitable.

Woods of pine trees.

New Mexico.

Woods of poplar and walnut trees.

Vines.

From this prouince they folowed their iourney for the ſpace of fifteene dayes without meeting any people all that while, paſſing thorow great woods and groues of pine trees bearing ſuch fruit as thoſe of Caſtile: at the end whereof, hauing trauelled, to their iudgement, foureſcore leagues, they came vnto a ſmall hamlet or village of fewe people, in whoſe poore cottages couered with ſtraw they found many deeres-ſkinnes as well dreſſed as thoſe of Flanders, with great ſtore of excellent white ſalt. They gaue our men good entertainment for the ſpace of two dayes while they remained there, after which they bare them company about twelue leagues, vnto certaine great townes, alwayes trauelling by the riuer called Rio del Norte aboueſayd, till ſuch time as they came vnto the countrey called by them New Mexico. Here all along the ſhore of the ſayd riuer grew mighty woods of poplar being in ſome places foure leagues broad, and great ſtore of walnut trees, and vines like thoſe of Caſtillia.

Houſes of 4 ſtories high.

Hauing trauelled two dayes thorow the ſaid woods of Poplar and Walnut trees, they came to ten townes ſituate on both ſides of the ſayd riuer, beſides others which they might ſee further out of the way, wherein there ſeemed to be great ſtore of people, and thoſe which they ſaw were aboue ten thouſand perſons. In this prouince they receiued them very courteouſly, and brought them to their townes, whereas they gaue them great plenty of victuals and hennes of the countrey, with many other things, and that with great good will. Here they found houſes of foure ſtories high, very well built, with gallant lodgings, and in moſt of them were Stooues for the Winter ſeaſon. Their garments were of Cotton and of deere-ſkinnes, and the attire both of the men and women is after the maner of the Indians of the kingdome of Mexico. But the ſtrangeſt thing of all was to ſee both men and women weare ſhooes and boots with good ſoles of neats leather, a thing which they neuer ſawe in any other part of the Indies. The women keepe their haire well combed and dreſſed, wearing nothing els vpon their heads. In all theſe townes they had Caçiques which gouerned their people like the Caçiques of Mexico, with Sergeants to execute their commandements, who goe thorow the townes proclaiming with a loud voice the pleaſure of the Caçiques, commanding the ſame to be put in execution. In this prouince our men found many idols which they worſhipped, and particularly they had in euery houſe an Oratory for the diuell, whereinto they ordinarily cary him meat: and another thing they found, that as it is an vſe among the Chriſtians to erect croſſes vpon the high wayes, ſo haue this people certaine high chapels, in which they ſay the diuell vſeth to take his eaſe, and to recreat himſelfe as he trauelleth from one towne to another; which chapels are maruellouſly well trimmed and painted. In all their arable grounds, whereof they haue great plenty, they erect on the one ſide a little cottage or ſhed ſtanding vpon foure ſtuddes, vnder which the labourers do eat, and paſſe away the heat of the day, for they are a people much giuen to labour, and doe continually occupy themſelues therein. This countrey is full of mountaines and forreſts of Pine trees. The weapons that they vſe are ſtrong bowes and arrowes headed with flints, which will pierce thorow a coat of male, and macanas which are clubs of halfe a yard long, ſo beſet with ſharpe flints, that they are ſufficient to cleaue a man aſunder in the midſt: they vſe alſo a kinde of targets made of raw hides.

These high mountaines are a cauſe of the coldnes of the countrey.

Hauing remained foure dayes in this prouince, not farre off they came to another called The prouince of Tiguas conteining ſixteene townes, in one whereof, called Poala, they vnderſtood that the inhabitants had ſlaine the two fathers aforeſayd, to wit, frier Francis Lopez, and frier Auguſtus Ruyz, whom they went to ſeeke, together with the three Indian boyes, and the meſtiço. So ſoone as the people of this towne and their neighbours ſaw our men there, their owne conſciences accuſing them, and fearing that our men came to puniſh them, and to be auenged of the death of the foreſaid fathers, they durſt not abide their comming, but leauing their houſes deſolate they fled to the mountaines next adioyning, frō whence they could neuer cauſe them to deſcend, although our men attempted the ſame by diuers deuiſes and entiſements. They found in the townes and houſes good ſtore of victuals, with infinite number of hennes in the countrey, and many ſorts of metals, whereof ſome ſeemed to be very good. They could not perfectly vnderſtand what numbers of people this prouince might conteine, by reaſon they were fled into the mountaines, as I haue ſayd before.

The prouince of Tiguas. Poala.

Very rich and good metall.

Hauing found thoſe to be ſlaine which they went to ſeeke, they entred into conſultation, whether they ſhould returne to Nueua Biſcaya, from whence they came, or ſhould proceed further in their iourney; whereabout there were diuers opinions: howbeit, vnderſtanding there, that toward the Orient or Eaſt parts of that prouince, and very far diſtant from thence, there were great and rich townes: and finding themſelues ſo far on the way, the ſayd captaine Antonio de Eſpeio with the conſent of the foreſayd frier called Frier Bernardine Beltran, and the greater part of his ſouldiers and companions determined to proceed on the diſcouery, till ſuch time as they did ſee to what end it would come; to the end they might giue certeine and perfect knowledge thereof to his Maieſty, as eye-witneſſes of the ſame. And ſo with one accord they determined, that while the army lay ſtill there, the captaine and two more of his company ſhould proſecute their deſire, which they did accordingly. And within two dayes iourney they came vnto another prouince, where they found eleuen townes, and much people in them, which in their iudgement were aboue forty thouſand perſons. The countrey was very fertile and plentifull, whoſe confines bordered vpon the territories of Cibola, where there are great ſtore of kine, with whoſe hides and with cotton they apparell themſelues, imitating in the forme of their gouernment their next neighbours. In this place are ſignes of very rich mines, ſome quantity of the metals whereof they found in the houſes of the Indians; which Indians haue and doe worſhip idols. They receiued our men peaceably, and gaue them victuals. Hauing ſeene thus much, and the diſpoſition of the countrey, they returned to the campe, from whence they departed, to informe their companions of the things aboue mentioned.

This draweth toward Virginia.

Another prouince.

Being returned to the campe they had intelligence of another prouince called Los Quires, which ſtood ſixe leagues higher vp the riuer called Rio del Norte. And in their iourney thitherward, being arriued within a league of the place, there came forth very many Indians to receiue them in peace, requeſting them to beare them company to their townes: which they did, and were maruellous well interteined and cheriſhed. In this prouince they found fiue townes only, wherein were great ſtore of people, and thoſe which they ſaw were aboue 14000 ſoules, who worſhip idols as their neighbours do. In one of theſe townes they found a pie in a cage after the maner of Caſtile, and certaine ſhadowes or canopies like vnto thoſe which are brought from China, wherein were painted the Sunne, the Moone, and many Starres. Where hauing taken the height of the pole-ſtarre, they found themſelues to be in 37 degrees and ½ of Northerly latitude.

Seuen & thirty degrees and a halfe.

They departed out of this prouince, and keeping ſtill the ſame NORTHERLY courſe, foureteene leagues from thence they found another prouince called The Cunames, where they ſaw other fiue townes, the greateſt whereof was called Cia, being ſo large, that it conteined eight market-places, the houſes whereof being plaiſtered and painted with diuers colours, were better then any which they had ſeene in the prouinces before mentioned: the people which they heere ſaw, they eſteemed to be aboue twenty thouſand perſons. They preſented to our men many curious mantles, and victuals excellently well dreſſed; ſo that our men deemed this nation to be more curious, and of greater ciuility, and better gouernment, then any other that hitherto they had ſeene. They ſhewed them rich metals, and the mountaines alſo not farre off whereout they digged them. Heere our people heard of another prouince ſtanding toward the Northweſt, whereunto they purpoſed to goe.

Hauing trauelled about ſixe leagues, they came to the ſayd prouince, the people whereof were called Ameies, wherin were ſeuen very great townes, conteining, to their iudgement, aboue thirty thouſand ſoules. They reported that one of the ſeuen townes was very great and faire, which our men would not go to ſee, both becauſe it ſtood behinde a mountaine, and alſo for feare of ſome miſhappe, if in caſe they ſhould be ſeparated one from another. This people are like vnto their neighbours of the former prouince, being as well prouided of all neceſſaries as they, and of as good gouernment.

Ameies, or Ameies.

About fifteene leagues from this prouince, trauelling alwayes toward the Weſt, they found a great towne called Acoma, conteining aboue ſixe thouſand perſons, and ſituate vpon an high rocke which was aboue fifty paces hie, hauing no other entrance but by a ladder or paire of ſtaires hewen into the ſame rocke, whereat our people maruelled not a little: all the water of this towne was kept in ciſternes. The chiefe men of this towne came peaceably to viſit the Spanyards, bringing them many mantles, and chamois-ſkinnes excellently dreſſed, and great plenty of victuals. Their corne-fields are two leagues from thence, and they fetch water out of a ſmall riuer nere thereunto, to water the ſame, on the brinks whereof they ſaw many great banks of Roſes like thoſe of Caſtile. Here are many mountaines that beare ſhewes of mettals, but they went not to ſee them, becauſe the Indians dwelling vpon them are many in number, and very warlike. Our men remained in this place three dayes, vpon one of the which the inhabitants made before them a very ſolemne dance, comming foorth in the ſame with gallant apparell, vſing very witty ſports, wherewith our men were exceedingly delighted.

Signes of metals.

Twenty foure leagues from hence toward the Weſt, they came to a certaine prouince called by the inhabitants themſelues Zuny, & by the Spanyards Cibola, containing great numbers of Indians; in which prouince Franciſco Vazquez de Coronado had bene, and had erected many croſſes and other tokens of Chriſtianity, which remained as yet ſtanding. Heere alſo they found three Indian Chriſtians which had remained there euer ſince the ſaid iourny, whoſe names were Andrew de Culiacan, Gaſpar de Mexico, and Antonio de Guadalajara, who had almoſt forgotten their owne language, but could ſpeake that countrey ſpeech very well; howbeit after ſome ſmall conference with our men, they eaſily vnderſtood one another. By theſe three Indians they were informed, that threeſcore dayes iourney from this place there was a very mighty lake, vpon the bankes whereof ſtood many great and good townes, and that the inhabitants of the ſame had plenty of golde, an euident argument whereof was their wearing of golden bracelets & earrings: and alſo that after the ſayd Francis Vaſquez de Coronado had perfect intelligence thereof, hee departed out of this prouince of Cibola to goe thither, and that hauing proceeded twelue dayes iourney, he began to want water; and thereupon determined to returne, as he did indeed, with intention to make a ſecond voyage thither at his better opportunity; which afterward he performed not, being preuented of his determined iourney by death.

Upon the newes of theſe riches the ſayd Captaine Antony de Eſpeio was deſirous to go thither; and though ſome of his companions were of his opinion, yet the greater part and the frier were of the contrary, ſaying that it was now high time to returne home vnto New Biſcay from whence they came, to giue account of that which they had ſeene: which the ſayd greater part within few dayes put in execution, leauing the captaine with nine companions onely that willingly followed him: who after hee had fully certified himſelfe of the riches aboueſayd, and of the great quantity of excellent mettals that were about that lake, departed out of this prouince of Cibola with his companions; and trauelling directly toward the Weſt, after hee had paſſed 28 leagues, he foūd another very great prouince, which by eſtimation conteined aboue 50000 ſoules: the inhabitants whereof aſſoone as they vnderſtood of their approch, ſent them word, vpon paine of death to come no neerer to their townes: whereto the captaine anſwered, that their comming was in no wiſe to hurt them, as they ſhould well perceiue, and therefore requeſted them not to moleſt him in his intended voyage, and withall gaue to the meſſenger a reward of ſuch things as they brought with them: who thereupon made ſo good report of our people, and ſo appeaſed the troubled minds of the Indians, that they granted them free acceſſe vnto their townes, and ſo they went thither with 15. Indians their friends of the prouince of Cibola aforeſaid, and the three Mexican Indians before mentioned. When they were come within a league of the firſt towne, there came forth to meete them aboue 2000. Indians laden with victuals, whom the Captaine rewarded with ſome things of ſmall value, which they made great accompt of, and eſteemed more precious then gold. As they approched neere vnto the towne which was named Zaguato, a great multitude of Indians came forth to meete them, and among the reſt their Caçiques, with ſo great demonſtration of ioy and gladnes, that they caſt much meale of Maiz vpon the ground for the horſes to tread vpon: with this triumph they entred the towne, where they were very wel lodged and much made of, which the Captaine did in part requite, giuing to the chiefeſt among them hats, and beads of glaſſe, with many ſuch trifles, which he caried with him for the like purpoſe. The ſaid Caçiques preſently gaue notice to the whole prouince of the arriual of theſe new gueſts, whom they reported to bee a courteous people, and ſuch as offered them no harme: which was occaſion ſufficient to make them all come laden with preſents vnto our people, and to intreat them to goe and make merry with them in their townes; which they yeelded vnto, though alwayes with great foreſight what might follow. Whereupon the Captaine vſed a certaine policie, making the Caçiques beleeue, that foraſmuch as his horſes were very fierce (for they had told the Indians that they would kill them) therefore it was neceſſary to make a Fort of lime and ſtone to incloſe them, for the auoyding of ſuch inconueniences as otherwiſe might happen vnto the Indians by them. This tale was ſo ſtedfaſtly beleeued by the Caçiques, that in fiue houres they aſſembled ſuch ſtore of people together, that with incredible celeritie they built the ſaid Fort which our men required.

Zaguato, or Ahuato a towne.

A witty policie to be vſed by the Engliſh in like caſes.

Moreouer, when the Captaine ſaide that he would depart, they brought vnto him a preſent of 40000. mantles of cotton, both white and of other colours, and great ſtore of hand-towels, with taſſels at the corners, with diuers other things, and among the reſt rich metals, which ſeemed to holde much ſiluer. Among theſe Indians they learned very much concerning The great Lake aforeſaide, whoſe report agreed wholly with the relation of the former, as touching the riches and great abundance of gold about that lake.

Rich metals.

Great abundance of gold.

The Captaine repoſing great confidence in this people & in their good diſpoſition toward him determined after certaine dayes, to leaue there fiue of his companions with the reſt of his Indian friends, that they might returne with his cariages to the prouince of Zuni, while himſelfe with the foure other which remained ſhould ride in poſt to diſcouer certaine very rich Mines, whereof he had perfect information. And putting this his purpoſe in execution he departed with his guides, and hauing traueiled due-weſt 45. leagues he came vnto the ſaid Mines, and tooke out of the ſame with his owne hands exceeding rich metals holding great quantitie of ſiluer: and the mines which were of a very broad veine were in a mountaine whereon they might eaſily aſcend, by reaſon of an open way that led vp to the ſame. Neere vnto theſe mines were certaine townes of Indians dwelling vpon the mountaines, who ſhewed them friendſhip, & came forth to receiue them with croſſes on their heads, and other tokens of peace. Hereabout they found two riuers of a reaſonable bigneſſe, vpon the banks whereof grew many vines bearing excellent grapes, and great groues of walnut-trees, and much flaxe like that of Caſtile: and they ſhewed our men by ſignes, that behinde thoſe mountaines there was a riuer aboue 8. leagues broad, but they could not learne how neere it was; howbeit the Indians made demonſtration that it ran towards the North ſea, and that vpon both ſides thereof ſtood many townes of ſo great bigneſſe, that in compariſon thereof thoſe wherein they dwelt were but ſmall hamlets.

Exceeding rich Mines of ſiluer.

A mighty Riuer of eight leagues broad running toward the North ſea. Perhaps this Riuer may fall into the Cheſepiouk bay, or into the great lake of Tadoac.

After he had receiued all this information, the ſaid Captaine returned toward the prouince of Zuni, whither he had ſent his ſaid companions: and being arriued there in ſafety, hauing trauailed vpon a very good way, he found in the ſame place his 5. companions, & the ſaid father Frier Bernardin Beltran, with the ſouldiers which were determined to returne, as is aforeſaid, but vpō certaine occaſions were not as yet departed: whom the inhabitants had moſt friendly intreated, & furniſhed with all things neceſſary in abundance, as afterward likewiſe they vſed the Captaine, and thoſe that came with him, comming foorth to meete them with ſhew of great ioy, and giuing them great ſtore of victuals to ſerue them in their iourney homewards, and requeſting them to returne againe with ſpeed, and to bring many Caſtilians with them (for ſo they call the Spaniards) to whom they promiſed food ſufficient. For the better performance whereof they ſowed that yeere more graine and other fruits, then they had done at any time before.

At this preſent the Frier and ſouldiers aforeſaid reſolued themſelues in their former determination, & agreed to returne vnto the prouince from whence they came with intention before mentioned, to ſeek the two Friers that were ſlaine, to whom alſo Gregorio Hernandez who had bene ſtandard-bearer in the iourney, ioyned himſelfe. Who being departed, the Captaine accompanied onely with 8. ſouldiers, determined to proſecute his former attempt, & to paſſe vp higher the ſaide riuer called Rio del Norte, which he did accordingly. And hauing traueiled about 60. leagues toward the prouince of the Quires aforeſaid, 12 leagues frō thence toward the Orient or Eaſt they found a prouince of Indians called Hubates, who receiued them peaceably, and gaue them great ſtore of victuals, informing them alſo of very rich Mines which they found, whereout they got gliſtering & good metal, and therewith returned to the towne from whence they came. This prouince contained by their eſtimation 25000. perſons all very well apparelled in coloured mantles of cotton, and Chamois-ſkins very well dreſſed. They haue many mountaines full of Pines and Cedars, and the houſes of their townes are of 4. and 5. ſtories high. Here they had notice of another prouince diſtant about one dayes iourney frō thence inhabited by certaine Indians called Tamos, and containing aboue 40000. ſoules: whither being come the inhabitants would neither giue them any victuals, nor admit them into their townes: for which cauſe, and in regard of the danger wherein they were, and becauſe ſome of the ſouldiers were not well at eaſe, and for that they were ſo fewe (as we haue ſaid) they determined to depart thence, and to returne toward the land of the Chriſtians, which they put in execution in the beginning of Iuly 1583, being guided by an Indian that went with them, who led them another way then they went forth by, downe a riuer, which they called Rio de las vacas; that is to ſay, The riuer of oxen, in reſpect of the great multitudes of oxen or kine that fed vpon the bankes thereof, by the which they traueiled for the ſpace of 120. leagues, ſtill meeting with ſtore of the ſaid cattell. From hence they went forward to the riuer of Conchos by which they entered, and thence to the valley of S. Bartholomew, from whence they firſt entered into their diſcouerie. Vpon their cōming thither they found that the ſaid Frier Bernardin Beltran and his company were ſafely arriued at the ſaid towne many dayes before, & were gone from thence to the towne of Guadiana. In this towne the foreſaid captaine Antony de Eſpeio made moſt certaine relation of all that is aforeſaid, which relation preſently hee ſent vnto the Conde of Corunna Vizroy of Nueua Eſpanna, who ſent the ſame to his Maieſtie, & to the Lords of his royal counſel of the Indies, to the end they might take ſuch order as they thought beſt, which they haue already performed with great care and circumſpection.

Almighty God vouchſafe his aſſiſtance in this buſines, that ſuch numbers of ſoules redeemed by his blood may not vtterly periſh, of whoſe good capacitie, wherein they exceed thoſe of Mexico and Peru (as we be giuen to vnderſtand by thoſe that haue delt with them) we may boldly preſume that they will eaſily embrace the Goſpel, and abandon ſuch idolatrie as now the moſt of them doe liue in: which Almightie God graunt for his honour and glory, and for the increaſe of the holy Catholique faith.

The marches of Villa Manrique Viceroy of Noua Hiſpania.

IT may pleaſe you Sir, to be aduertiſed that I haue receiued your letters, whereby I vnderſtand that our ſhip with the treaſure is ſafely ariued, God be praiſed therefore. The frigate arriued here in ſafetie which brought the letters of Aduiſe from the King to the Viceroy. She arriued in S. Iohn de Vllua the 29. of May, & departed from S. Lucar in Spaine the 6. of April. By which his Maieſtie writeth vnto the Viceroy, what time the Fleete ſhall depart from hence, and what courſe they ſhall take, not as they had wont for to do; by reaſon that there are great ſtore of men of war abroad at the ſea, which meane to encounter with the Fleete. I pray God ſende them well to Spaine: for here wee were troubled very ſore with men of warre on this coaſt. His Maieſtie hath ſent expreſſe cōmandement vnto the Marques of Villa Manrique his coſen, Viceroy of Noua Hiſpania, that immediatly vpon ſight of his letters he ſhal cōmand to be builded in S. Iohn de Vllua, & in Vera Cruz two ſtrong Forts for the defence of theſe countries, of his Maieſties charges: And that there ſhalbe gariſons in both the Forts for the defence of the ſhips which ride there, and for the ſtrength of the countrey.

There are departed out of Mexico and other townes hereabout by the commaundement of the Viceroy 500. ſouldiers Spaniards, vnder the cōduct of Rodorigo del Rio the gouernour of Nueua Biſua Biſcaia which are gone to win a great City called Cibola, which is 400. leagues beyond Mexico to the Northweſt, and ſtandeth vp in the maine land. It is by report a very great citie, as bigge as Mexico, and a very rich countrey both of golde Mines and ſiluer Mines: and the King of the countrey is a mighty King, and he will not become ſubiect to his Maieſtie. There were certaine Spaniards ſent to that king from the Viceroy in an ambaſſage; It is thought that they are ſlaine, for we can here no newes of them.

500. Spaniards ſent to conquet the great citie of Cibola which is 400. leagues from Mexico North weſtward.

The other newes that I can certifie you of at this inſtant is, that there is a Iudge of the city of Guadalajara called don Nunno de villa Inſcenſia lately maried. Alſo the kings Atturney of Guadalajara maried his daughter of 8. yeres old with a boy of 12. yeres old. But the Viceroy ſaith that he hath a warrant from his Maieſtie, that if any Iudge whatſoeuer dwelling in that kingdome of Guadalajara ſhould mary any ſonne in that iuriſdiction, that then the ſaid Viceroy is to depriue him of his office. And therefore he went about to depriue the Iudge & the kings Attourney of their offices. Whereupon the people of that prouince would not thereunto conſent, nor ſuffer them to be diſmiſſed of their offices, nor to be arreſted, nor caried priſoners to Mexico. When the viceroy had intelligence thereof, & that the Countrey did reſiſt his commandement, and would not ſuffer them to be apprehended, he ſent certaine Captaines with ſouldiers to goe and apprehend the Iudge, the kings Attourney, and as many as did take their parts. So the citizens of Guadalajara withſtood the viceroies forces, & put themſelues in defence; and are vp in armes againſt the viceroy: yet they do not rebel againſt the king, but ſay: God ſaue king Philip, and wil ſubmit themſelues to his Maieſtie, but not to the viceroy. So that all the kingdome of Guadalajara is vp in armes, and are all in a mutinie againſt vs of Mexico. I beſeech Almighty God to remedy it, and that it may be qualified in time: or elſe all Noua Spania wil be vtterly ſpoiled. I write this thing, becauſe it is publiquely knowen in all places. And thus I reſt, from Mexico the 30. of May 1590.

A dangerous rebellion in Guadalajara a prouince of Noua Hiſpania.

THE FIRST AND SECOND DISCOuery of the gulfe of California, and of the Sea-coaſt on the Northweſt or back ſide of America, lying to the Weſt of New Mexico, Cibola and Quiuira, together with Sir Francis Drakes landing and taking poſſeſſion vpon Noua Albion in the behalfe of the Crowne of England, and the notable voyage of Francis Gaule; Wherein amongſt many other memorable matters is ſet downe the huge bredth of the Ocean ſea from China and Iapan to the Northweſt parts of America, in the 38. and 40. degrees.

A relation of the diſcouery, which in the Name of God the Fleete of the right noble Fernando Cortez Marques of the Vally, made with three ſhips; The one called Santa Agneda of 120. tunnes, the other the Trinitie of 35. tunnes, and the thirde S. Thomas of the burthen of 20. tunnes. Of which Fleete was Captaine the right worſhipfull knight Francis de Vlloa borne in the Citie of Merida. Taken out of the third volume of the voyages gathered by M. Iohn Baptiſta Ramuſio.

Chap. 1.

Francis Vlloa a captaine of Cortez departeth with a Fleet from the port of Acapulco, and goeth to diſcouer vnknowen lands, he paſſeth by the coaſt of Sacatula and Motin, and by tempeſt runneth to the riuer of Guajanal, frō whence he croſſeth ouer to the hauen of Santa Cruz, along the coaſt whereof he diſcouereth 3. ſmal Ilands, and within two dayes and an halfe returning to the maine land he diſcouereth the riuer called Rio de ſan Pedro y ſan Pablo, and not far diſtant from thence two other riuers as big or greater then that of Guadalquiuir which runneth by Siuil, together with their head-ſprings.

WE imbarked our ſelues in the hauen of Acapulco on the 8. of Iuly in the yeere of our Lord 1539, calling vpon almighty God to guide vs with his holy hand vnto ſuch places where he might be ſerued, and his holy faith aduanced. And we ſailed from the ſaid port by the coaſt of Sacatula and Motin, which is ſweete and pleaſant through the abundance of trees that grow thereon, and riuers which paſſe through thoſe countreis, for the which wee often thanked God the creatour of them. So ſailing along we came to the hauen of S. Iago in the prouince of Colima: but before we arriued there, the maine maſt of our ſhip called Santa Agueda was broken by a ſtorme of winde that tooke vs, ſo as the ſhip was forced to ſaile without her maſt vntil we arriued in the ſaid hauen. From the port of Acapulco to this hauen of Colima wee were ſayling the ſpace of 20. dayes. Here wee ſtayed to mende our maſt and to take in certaine victuals, water, and wood, the ſpace of 27. dayes. And wee departed from the ſaide hauen the 23. of Auguſt, and ſayling by the Iſles of Xaliſco the 27. or 28. of the ſaide moneth wee were taken with an extreame tempeſt wherein wee thought we ſhould haue periſhed, and being toſſed and weather-beaten, wee came as farre as the riuer of Guajaual in the Prouince of Culiacan. In this ſtorme wee loſt the pinneſſe called Sant Thomas, and becauſe wee had loſt her wee croſſed ouer to the port of Santa Cruz in California: for while wee were ſo beaten in the former tempeſt, the pilot of the Barke ſignified vnto vs, that he perceiued ſhe beganne to leake, and that already ſhe had receiued in much water, inſomuch that ſhe beganne to founder; whereupon, to helpe her neede, and that wee might meete together in a knowen hauen, if by chance the tempeſt ſhould ſeparate vs, as it did indeed, we willed him to repaire to the hauen of Santa Cruz, where we meant to repaire his harmes and our owne. Wherefore being all arriued in this place of Santa Cruz, wee ſtayed there fiue dayes and tooke in water, wherein we heard no newes of our Barke which we had loſt: Whereupon the Captaine reſolued to follow on our voyage; wherefore we ſet ſaile the 12. of September, and as wee ſailed wee ſaw along the coaſt of the ſaide hauen 3. Iſlands, whereof the Captaine made no great accompt, thinking there coulde be no great good found in any of them. Theſe Iſlands ſeemed not to be great; wherefore he commanded the Maſters and pilotes to proceed on their voyage, and not to leeſe time without any profit. So ſailing ouer the gulfe of California, in two dayes and an halfe we came to the riuer of S. Peter and S. Paul, finding before we entred into the ſame a ſmall Iſland in the mouth of the Riuer, being 4. or 5. miles diſtant from the maine. On both ſides of this Riuer wee beheld goodly and pleaſant great plaines full of many greene and beautifull trees, and farther within the land we beheld certaine exceeding high mountaines full of woods very pleaſant to beholde. From this Riuer wee ſailed ſtill along the coaſt the ſpace of 15. leagues, in which courſe wee found two other Riuers in our iudgement as great or greater then Guadalquiuir the Riuer of Siuilia in Spaine. All the coaſt by theſe Riuers is plaine as the other which we had paſſed, with many woods: likewiſe within the lande appeared great mountaines couered with woods very beautifull to beholde, and beneath in the plaine appeared certaine lakes of water. From theſe Riuers we ſailed 18. leagues, and found very pleaſant plaines, and certaine great lakes whoſe mouthes opened into the Sea: here our Captaine thought good throughly to diſcouer what thoſe lakes were, and to ſearch whether there were any good hauen for his ſhips to ride in, or to harbour themſelues, if any tempeſt ſhould ariſe; and ſo hee commaunded a boat to be hoiſed out into the Sea, with a Maſter and fiue or ſixe men to view them, and to ſound the depth, and botom of them: who went thither, and found the coaſt very ſholde, and the mouthes of the lakes; whereupon they made no accompt of them, onely becauſe the ſhore was ſo ſhallow, for otherwiſe the land was very pleaſant. Here at euening we ſaw on the ſhore 10. or 12. Indians and fires. The aforeſaide two Riuers are two leagues diſtant the one from the other, little more or leſſe, and are great, as I haue ſaide, and being in the laſt of them we went vp to the ſhip-top, and ſaw many lakes, and one among the reſt exceeding great, and wee ſuppoſed that they had their ſprings out of this great lake, as other Riuers alſo haue from other lakes, for wee ſawe the courſe of them ſeuerally each by themſelues, hauing goodly woods growing all along their bankes. The currents of theſe Riuers might be diſcerned three leagues within the Sea: and at the mouthes of them were many ſmall ſtakes ſet vp for markes: the ſhore here is plaine and ſandie, and the countrey very pleaſant.

Chap. 2.

Sailing along the coaſt from the two aforeſaid great Riuers, they diſcouer three mouthes of lakes and a goodly Countrey, they come vnto Cabo Roxo, and take poſſeſſion of thoſe countreys for the Emperours Maieſty. A diſcourſe of the faire hauens that are on thoſe coaſtes, and of very many Iſlands which they ſaw, before they came to the Cape called Capo de las Plaias.

This day wee ſailed along the coaſt the ſpace of 16. leagues, and in the midſt of this voyage there is a Bay very faire of 4. or 5. leagues, hauing certaine bankes or fences in it, in beholding whereof we tooke great pleaſure. The night following we road in 20. fadome water. The next day we followed our voyage toward the North, and hauing ſailed 3. or 4. leagues we ſaw 3. mouthes of lakes which entered into the land, where they became like ſtanding pooles. Wee road a league diſtance from theſe mouthes in 6. fadome water, to ſee what they were, and ſent our boat with certaine men, to ſee if there were any entry for our ſhips: for halfe a league from ſhore we had not not paſt one or two fadome water. Here our men ſaw 7. or 8. Indians, and found ſundry ſorts of greene herbes ſomewhat differing from thoſe of Nueua Eſpanna. The Countrey is plaine, but farre within land they ſaw great and ſmall hils extending themſelues a great way, and being very faire and pleaſant to behold. The day following we proceeded on our voyage ſayling alwayes in ſight of the plaine coaſt toward the Northweſt, in 10. or 15. fadome water. And hauing ſailed 6. good leagues we found a Bay on the coaſt within the land of about 5. leagues ouer, from whence the coaſt trended Northweſt, and this day we ſailed about 16. leagues. All this coaſt is plaine, and not ſo pleaſant as that which we had paſſed; here are certaine ſmall hilles, but not ſo high as thoſe which we had found before. Thus we ſailed all night Northweſt, and vntil the next day at noone, at which time we fell with a headland of white ſand, where by the height which we tooke that day we found our ſelues to be in the latitude of 27. degrees and $\frac{3}{4}$. This cape we called Capo Roxo. All the coaſt is plaine and faire and cleane ſand, and we ſaw within land ſome few trees not very great, with certaine mountaines & woods 3. or 4. leagues diſtant from the ſaid cape: and here likewiſe appeared a mouth of a riuer, which (as far as we could diſcerne) made certaine lakes vp within the land: frõ the mouth whereof for the ſpace of a league into the ſea it ſeemed to be very ſholde, becauſe the ſea did breake very much. Here we ſaw within the land 3. or 4 riuers. In this ſort we ſailed on our voiage to the Northward, & becauſe we had not good weather we road that night in a great hauen lying in our way, where on the ſhore wee ſaw certaine plaines, and vp within the land certaine hilles not very high: and continuing our courſe toward the North about 3. leagues from this hauen, we found an Iland of about one league in circuite lying before the mouth of the ſaid hauen. And ſailing forward we found an hauen which hath two mouthes into the Sea, into which we entered by the Northermoſt mouth, which hath 10. or 12. fadome water & ſo decreaſeth till it come to 5. fadome, where we anckered in a poole which the Sea maketh, which is a ſtrange thing to beholde, for there are ſo many entrances & mouths of ſtreames and hauens, that we were all aſtonied at the ſight thereof; and theſe hauens are ſo excellently framed by nature, as the like are not to be ſeene in the world, wherein we found great ſtore of fiſh. Here wee anckered, and the Captaine went on ſhore, and tooke poſſeſſion, vſing all ſuch ceremonies as thereunto belong. Here alſo wee found certaine weares to catch fiſh made by the Indians, and certaine ſmall cottages, wherein were diuers pieces of earthen pots as finely made as thoſe in Spaine. Here by cõmandement of the Captaine a Croſſe was erected vpon an hill, and it was ſet vp by Francis Preciado. In this place we ſaw the Countrey full of freſh and greene graſſe, howbeit differing from that of New Spaine, and vp within the Countrey wee ſaw many great and very greene mountaines. This Countrey ſeemed very goodly and delightſome to all of vs, in regard of the greenneſſe and beautie thereof, and we iudged it to be very populous within the land. From this hauen we departed and kept our way toward the Northweſt with good weather, and began to finde hard by the ſea-ſhore exceeding high mountaines ſpotted with white, and in them we ſaw many fowles which had their neſtes in certaine holes of thoſe rocks, and ſailed 10. leagues vntil night, all which night we were becalmed. The next day we followed our courſe Northweſt with good weather: and from that day forward we began to ſee on the Weſterne ſhore (whereon the foreſaid hauen of S. Cruz ſtandeth) certaine Iſlands or high lands, whereat we reioyced not a little. And ſo ſayling forward we met with an Iſland about two leagues in bigneſſe, and on the Eaſt ſhore hauing ſtill the maine land and Iſlands in ſight, we ſailed 15. leagues vntil the euening, alwayes finding hard by the ſea-coaſt exceeding high mountaines bare of trees, the land appearing ſtill more plainely vnto vs on the Weſterne ſhore. Whereupon wee began to be of diuers opinions, ſome thinking that this coaſt of Santa Cruz was a firme land, and that it ioyned with the continent of Nueua Eſpanna, others thought the contrary, and that they were nothing elſe but Iſlands, which were to the Weſtward. And in this ſort we proceeded forward, hauing the land on both ſides of vs, ſo farre, that we all began to wonder at it. This day we ſailed ſome 15. leagues, and called this Cape Capo de las Plaias.

Of the Streight which they diſcouered on the coaſt of Capo de las Plaias and of the pleaſant Countrey which they found before they came to the rockes called Los diamantes. Of the wonderfull whiteneſſe of that Sea, and of the ebbing and flowing thereof; and of the multitude of Iſlands and lands, which extend themſelues Northward from the hauen of Santa Cruz.

The day folowing we ſailed vntil night with ſo good weather, that we ran about 20. leagues. All this coaſt along the ſhore is full of little hilles without graſſe or trees: and that night we anckered in 20.fadome water. The next day we followed our voyage beginning to ſaile before breake of day Northweſtward, and we came into the midſt of a Streight or mouth which was 12 leagues broad from one land to the other, which Streight had two Ilands in the midſt thereof being 4.leagues diſtant the one from the other: and here we diſcerned the countrey to be plaine, and certaine mountaines, & it ſeemed that a certaine gut of water like a brooke ran through the plaine. This ſtreight (as far as we could perceiue) was very deep, for we could finde no botome; and here we ſaw the land ſtretching afarre off from the one ſhore to the other, and on the Weſterne ſhore of the hauen of S.Cruz, the land was more high with very bare mountaines. The day following we paſſed on our way toward the North, and ſailed ſome 15.leagues, and in the midſt of our way we found a circuit or bay of 6.leagues into the land with many coues or creeks, and the next day following continuing our courſe we ſailed ſome 10.leagues, and the coaſt in this dayes iourney was all of high mountaines naked and bare without any tree. It is very deepe hard by the ſhore, and that night we were conſtrained to ſtay by reaſon of the contrary winde. The next morning before breake of day we ſailed ſtill along the coaſt to the Northweſt vntil euening, and ranne about ſome 15.leagues. All along this ſhore wee ſawe very goodly mountaines within the land, and many plaines and downes with ſome few trees, & the ſea ſhore was all ſandy. In the midſt of this dayes courſe we found certaine ſmall rockes in the ſea 4.leagues diſtant from the maine, where the ſaid land maketh a great point into the ſea, and here we ſtayed the reſt of the night, where we had a very great ſhower of raine. The day following we proceeded on our voyage, and ſailed vntill night by a compaſſe or turning, ſome 8.or 9.leagues, and ſaw within land a few mountaines hauing no trees vpon them, but the Sunne ſhining alwayes very cleare, as farre as wee could deſcry, they were very great, on the Weſterne ſhore of the hauen of Santa Cruz. Here we ſtayed all night becauſe we found very ſhallow water and ſawe the ſea very white, and in a maner like to chalke, ſo that we all beganne to marueile thereat. The day following wee went forward againe along the coaſt Northweſtward, and ſailed eight leagues, and ſaw another land which ſtretched Northweſt, and was full of high mountaines. And ſtill continuing this courſe we ſearched very diligently to ſee if there were any paſſage through betweene both the landes, for right forward wee ſawe no land. And thus ſayling wee alwayes found more ſhallow water, and the Sea thicke, blacke, and very muddie, and came at length into fiue fadome water; and ſeeing this, wee determined to paſſe ouer to the land which wee had ſeene on the other ſide, and here likewiſe wee found as little depth and leſſe, whereupon we rode all night in fiue fadome water, and wee perceiued the Sea to runne with ſo great a rage into the land, that it was a thing much to be marueiled at, and with the like fury it returned backe againe with the ebbe; during which time wee found 11.fadome water, and the flood and ebbe continued from ſixe to ſixe houres.

The day following the Captaine and Pilote went vp to the ſhippes top, and ſawe all the lande full of ſand in a great round compaſſe, and ioyning it ſelfe with the other ſhore, and it was ſo low, that whereas wee were a league from the ſame wee could not well diſcerne it, and it ſeemed that there was an inlet of the mouthes of certaine lakes, whereby the Sea went in and out. There were diuers opinions amongſt vs, and ſome thought that that current entered into thoſe lakes, and alſo that ſome great Riuer there might be the cauſe thereof. And when we could perceiue no paſſage through, nor could diſcerne the countrey to be inhabited, the Captaine accompanied with certaine of vs went to take poſſeſſion thereof. The ſame day with the ebbe of the Sea wee fell downe from the other coaſt from the ſide of Nueua Eſpanna, though alwayes we had in ſight the firme land on the one ſide of vs, and the other Iſlands on our left hande, on the ſide of the port of Santa Cruz ſituate on the Weſterne ſhore: for on that ſide there are ſo many Iſlands and lands, ſo farre as we could deſcry, that it was greatly to be wondered at: for from the ſaid hauen of Santa Cruz, and from the coaſt of Culiacan we had alwayes in a maner land on both ſides of vs, and that ſo great a countrey, that I ſuppoſe if it ſhould ſo continue further inwarde, there is countrey ynough for many yeeres to conquer. This day wee had the winde contrary, and caſt ancker vntil the flood increaſed, which was in the afternoone, and then wee ſet ſaile likewiſe with contrary winde vntill midnight, and then caſt ancker.

The next day wee departed, ſhaping our courſe along the coaſt Southweſt, vntill midnight with little winde, and wee ſawe within the land high mountaines with ſome openings, and wee made way ſome three leagues, and all the next night wee were becalmed, and the next day we continued our courſe but a little while, for we ſailed not aboue fiue leagues, and all the night were becalmed, and ſawe the lande full of bare and high mountaines, and on our left hande wee deſcried a plaine countrey, and ſaw in the night certaine fires.

Chap.

Chap. 4.

They land vpon an Iſland to diſcouer the ſame, and there they ſee many fires, which iſſue out of certaine mountaines, and many Seale-fiſhes. Here they take an Indian, and can not vnderſtand his language. Running along they diſcouer another Iſland, and take poſſeſſion therof for the Emperours Maieſtie, and a great hauen in the firme land, which they call Ancon de Sant Andres, or The hauen of S. Andrew.

The next day following our courſe we ſaw a great hauen with an Iſland in the ſea, within a croſſe-bow ſhoote of the firme land, and in this Iſland and on the firme land were ſeene many ſmokes by the iudgement of all the company; wherefore the captaine thought good that wee ſhould goe on land to know the certainty of theſe ſmokes and fires, himſelfe taking ten or twelue of vs with a boate in his company: and going on ſhore in the Iſland, we found that the ſmokes proceeded out of certaine mountaines and breaches of burned earth, whereout aſcended into the aire certaine cinders and aſhes which mounted vp to the middle region of the aire, in ſuch great quantitie, that we could not eſteeme leſſe then twenty lodes of wood to bee burned for the cauſing of euery of thoſe ſmokes, whereat wee were all not a little amazed.

Burning mountaines.

In this Iſland were ſuch abundance of Seales, as it was wonderful. Here we ſtayed that day, and killed a great number of theſe Seals, with whom we had ſome trouble: for they were ſo many, and ayded one another ſo well, that it was ſtrange to behold; for it fell out, that while we were occupied in killing ſome of them with ſtaues, they aſſembled twentie or thirty together, and lifting themſelues vp aſſayled vs with their feete in a ſquadron, and ouerthrew two or three of our company on the ground: whereupon letting goe thoſe which they had in their hands, they and the others eſcaped vs and went into the ſea; howbeit wee killed good ſtore of them, which were ſo fatte as it was wonderfull: and when we opened ſome of them to haue their liuers, we found certaine ſmall blacke ſtones in their bodies, whereat wee much marueiled. The next day wee rode at anker here for lacke of good weather to ſayle withall: whereupon the Captaine determined to goe on ſhore with nine or ten in his company, to ſee whether there were any people there, or any ſigne of people that had bene there, and they found on the maine land ſeuen or eight Indians like to Chichimecas, which were gone a fiſhing, and had a raft of canes; who ſo ſoone as they eſpied vs ranne away and betooke themſelues to flight, but being purſued by vs, in the end we tooke one of them, whoſe language was ſo ſtrange that wee could by no meanes vnderſtand him; his clothing was nothing at all; for he was ſtarke naked. Theſe people caried their water in bottels made of beaſts ſkins, they fiſhed with hookes of bone, and wee found good ſtore of their fiſhes, whereof we tooke three or foure dozen.

The Indian which we had taken ſeeing himſelfe in our hands did nothing but weepe, but the Captaine called him, and made much of him, giuing him certaine beades, with a hat and certaine hookes of ours, and then let him goe. And it ſeemed that after hee was returned to his companions, he declared vnto them how we had done him no harme at all, ſhewing them the things which we had giuen him: whereupon they alſo determined to come vnto vs to our boate, but becauſe it was now night, and that our ſhippes were farre from vs, we forced not to ſtay for them, eſpecially becauſe it was a bad place and a dangerous. This countrey hath on the ſea-coaſt high and bare mountaines with certaine graſſe in ſome places like vnto our broomes, or like vnto woods of roſemary.

The next day wee ſayled neere to the coaſt on the ſame ſide, with very ſcarce winde, and in a manner calme, and ranne not aboue fiue leagues, and all the night following we lay becalmed, and we ſaw on the ſhore fiue or ſixe fires. The land is high with very high mountaines without graſſe, hauing certaine caues in them: the next day alſo, and part of the night following we were becalmed: and the morow after we followed our courſe along the ſayd coaſt, and paſſed betweene a great Iſland full of exceeding high mountaines, and the maine land; where we ſaw a very great hauen in the firme land in which wee ankered to ſee what it was, and being come to an anker, the Captaine and ſome of vs went on land the ſame day to ſee if there were any people and freſh water, and wee found certaine ſmall cottages couered with drie graſſe, with certaine little ſtaues layd ouerthwart, and we went a little way into the countrey which was very baren, by certaine ſmall and ſtreight pathes, and found a little pond or pit, but drie and without water; and here the Captaine tooke poſſeſſion for the Marques of the valley in the name of his Maieſtie, and after this we returned to our ſhip, and that night we ſawe foure or fiue fires on the land. The next day the Captaine determined, becauſe hee had ſeene theſe fires, to goe on ſhore, and ſo with our two boates we went fifteene or twenty of vs vnto certaine crooked ſtrands two leagues from the place where our ſhips rode, and where we had ſeene the fires, and we found two Indians of exceeding huge ſtature, ſo that they cauſed vs greatly to wonder; they caried their bowes and arrowes in their hands, and as ſoone as they ſaw vs leap on ſhore they ran away, and wee followed them vnto their dwellings and lodgings, which were certaine cottages and bowers couered with boughs, and there we found great and ſmall ſteps of many people, but they had no kind of victuals but onely cuttle-fiſhes which wee found there. The countrey toward the ſea ſide ſeemed but barren, for we ſaw neither trees nor greene graſſe there, yet were there certaine ſmal pathes not well beaten, and along the ſea-coaſt we ſaw many tracts of dogges, hares, and conies, and in certaine ſmall Iſlands neere vnto the maine we ſaw Seale-fiſhes. This hauen is called Ancon de Sant Andres.

They diſcouer a mountainous Iſland very great, and neere vnto it certaine other Iſlands with a goodly greene and pleaſant countrey. They haue ſight of certaine Indians in Canoas of canes, whoſe language ſounded like the Flemiſh tongue, with whome they could not haue any traffique.

A great Iſland

The next day we proceeded on our voyage, ſayling betweene the maine and an Iſland, which we ſuppoſe to be in circuit about a hundreth or eighty leagues, ſayling ſometimes within one, and ſometimes within two leagues of the maine. The ſoile of this Iſland is of certaine mountaines not very ſteepe with caues in them, and as farre as wee could deſcrie by the coaſt, there appeared no ſigne of any plaine countrey. Here from this day forward wee began to bee afraid, conſidering that we were to returne to the port of Santa Cruz; for it was ſuppoſed, that all along this mighty gulfe from the entrance in at Çuliacan vntil the returning backe vnto the ſaid hauen, was all firme land, and alſo becauſe wee had the firme land alwayes on our right hand and it goeth round circle-wiſe vnto the ſayd hauen; but many thought and hoped that we ſhould finde ſome mouth or out-let, whereby wee might paſſe through vnto the other coaſt. What our ſucceſſe was we will declare in the relation following.

They returne from the bottome of the gulf of California.

The next day being Thurſday wee ſayled with ſcant winde, for it was almoſt calme, and paſſed beyond that great Iſland, hauing firme land alwayes on our right hand, and coaſting (as I ſayd) very neere vnto it. The next day likewiſe we ſayled with little winde, it being in a manner calme, and paſſed neere vnto the ſhore by certaine round baies, and certaine points which the land made, which was pleaſant to behold being ſomewhat greene, and there ſeemed to be ſome creeke there. This Friday at night wee ſayled altogether with a freſh gale, and at breake of day wee were betweene the maine land, and an Iſland on our left hand, which was ſomewhat big, as farre as we could diſcerne. There was a great bay in the firme land, and before it was a point which ſtretched farre into the ſea. The firme land ſeemed to bee much freſher and pleaſanter then thoſe lands which we had paſſed, hauing many bankes and hilles of indifferent height, and beautifull to behold.

Another Iſlād

The countrey (as farre as wee could diſcerne) was ſo pleaſant and delightfull, that wee all deſired to goe on ſhore, and to ſearch vp into it two or three dayes iourney, to ſee whether it were inhabited or not. Wee ſaw within the land of that bay two fires. The night following being Saturday we ſailed continually with a proſperous and freſh gale, and the wind was ſo great that we drew our bonet to our maine ſayle, and ſayled ſo till the morning.

On Sunday the twelfth of October we found our ſelues altogether incloſed with land, on the right hand with the maine, which compaſſed vs before and behinde, and on the left hand with an Iſland of a league and a halfe; and betweene the maine and the Iſland in the midſt of the ſea there lay a ſmall Iſlet, and alſo betweene the ſayd maine and the Iſland there were two mouthes, through which there appeared a paſſage whereby afterwad we paſſed through. This maine was much more freſh and greene then the other which wee had paſſed, and had certaine plaines and points of mountaines of pleaſant view, and full of greene graſſe. Here all this night we ſawe two or three villages which were very great, and at breake of day we ſaw a Canoa or boate made of canes, which came from the land out of a creeke, and wee ſtood ſtill vntill it came neere vnto vs in the ſhip, and they began to ſpeake in their language which no man vnderſtood, whoſe pronuntiation was like to the Flemings, and being called they returned with great haſte vnto the ſhore; and we were very ſory becauſe our boate had not followed them.

Here happened vnto vs a very ſtrange thing, which was, that as this Indian returned to the ſhore in certaine of theſe creekes where a number of his fellow Indians were, as wee viewed that part, we ſawe fiue Canoas iſſue foorth, which came toward vs: whereupon wee ſtayed to ſee what they would doe. (In the meane while our Admirall came vp vnto vs, which was neere the ſhore,) for ſhe alſo had ſeene them, and ſo being come together we caſt anker, expecting what thoſe Canoas would doe. In the meane while our Generall commanded vs to make ready our boate, and to furniſh the ſame with oares and men, to trie if we could by any meanes take ſome of them, that we might come to ſome knowledge of them, and that wee might giue them ſome of our trifles, and ſpecially of our hookes and beads to winne their friendſhip. The Indians with their fiue Canoas approched within one or two ſtones caſt of vs, and then began to ſpeake very loude vnto vs in a very ſtrange language, alwayes ſtanding vpon their guard to retire themſelues with ſpeede. When our Captaine ſaw this, and that they would not come neere vs, but rather retired, he commanded ſixe mariners to get into the boate from the ſterne of the ſhip, and himſelfe alſo went with them with all poſſible haſte toward the Indians. The Indians returned to the ſhore with ſo great celeritie, that they ſeemed to flie in thoſe little Canoas of canes. Neuertheleſſe our men vſed ſuch diligence that one of the Canoas was boorded & taken; but the Indian in the Canoa ſeeing himſelfe now taken leapt into the water, and our men followed with their boat to take him, but ſeeing himſelfe within their reach, he ducked with his head vnder their boate, and ſo deceiued them, and then roſe vp againe, and with their oares and with ſtaues they gaue him certaine blowes, to amaze him, but nothing would ſerue them; for as they were about to lay handes vpon him hee ſtill diued vnder water, and with his hands and feete got neere to the ſhore: and as he roſe vp aboue the water, hee called to his felowes which ſtood on the ſhore to behold, crying Belen with a loud voyce, and ſo they purſued him, and ſtrooke him ſometimes being very neere the ſhore, and he alwayes went calling the reſt of his fellowes to come and helpe him, whereupon within a ſhort while after three other Canoas came foorth to ſuccour him, being full of Indians with bowes and arrowes in their handes, crying with a loude voyce, that wee ſhould come on ſhore: theſe Indians were of great ſtature and ſauage, fat alſo and well ſet, and of a browne colour. Our Captaine perceiuing this, leaſt they ſhould wound any of our people with their arrowes, returned backe, and commanded vs immediately to ſet ſayle, and ſo foorthwith wee departed.

This day the wind changed, and we returned to anker in the foreſayd place, and our Admirall rode from the firme land toward the Iland, and wee which were in the ſhip called The Trinitie lay neere vnto the maine, and before breake of day wee departed with a freſh gale. And before we diſembogued out of that chanell we ſaw certaine graſſe very high and greene vpon the maine: whereupon a mariner, and the Pilot went vp into the top, and ſaw the mouth of a riuer which ranne through that greene countrey into the ſea. But becauſe our Admirall was vnder all her ſayles farre from vs, we could not tell them of this riuer, where wee would haue taken water, whereof we had ſome neede, and becauſe it was a very good hauen to goe on ſhore to take it, and therefore without watering we followed our courſe. On munday we departed from this hauen which is like vnto a lake, for on all ſides we were compaſſed with land, hauing the continent before, behinde vs, and on our right ſide, and the Iland on our left ſide, and we paſſed foorth at thoſe mouthes before mentioned, which ſhewed an out-let into the open ſea. Thus wee ſayled along ſtill viewing the ſituation of the countrey, reioycing all of vs at the ſight thereof, for it alwayes pleaſed vs more and more, ſtill appearing more greene and pleaſant, and the graſſe which wee found neere vnto the ſhore was freſh and delectable, but not very high, being (to all our iudgements) not paſt a ſpanne long. Likewiſe the hilles which wee ſaw, which were many, and many downes made a very pleaſant proſpect, eſpecially becauſe we iudged, that there were many valleys and vales betweene them.

Port Belen a very good hauen.

Chap. 6.

They diſcouer a very great bay with foure ſmall Ilands in it, whereof they take poſſeſſion. As they ſayle along and diſcouer diuers Ilands they come at length to the port of Santa Cruz, where not being able to get any knowledge of thoſe Indians although they lay in waite for them at a place called The well of Grijalua, they departed thence. They haue a perilous and long tempeſt, which ceaſed after they had ſeene a light on their ſhrowdes.

AT our comming out of theſe openings, we began to ſee a Bay with a very great hauen, in circuite, with diuers ſmall hilles [illegible]

A great hauen

In this bay and ſtrond were two ſmall Iſlands neere vnto the ſhore, one of the which was like vnto a table about halfe a league in bignes, and the other was a round hill almoſt as big as the former. Theſe Iſlands ſerued vs onely to content our ſight, for we paſſed by them without ſtaying, hauing but a ſlacke wind on Munday morning: all which day we followed our courſe with the foreſayd ſlacke winde, and within a while after it became flat contrary, ſo that we were conſtrained to anker at the ſayd point of the ſayd hauen; and on Tewesday at breake of day we ſet ſayle, but made but little away all the day, becauſe the winde continued contrary, although but very weake. The night following wee were becalmed a little beyond the point of this hauen; but about midnight wee began to haue a freſh gale, and on Wedneſday in the morning wee were ſeuen leagues diſtant from that point. This countrey ſhewed (as it was indeede) more plaine then the reſt, with certaine ſmall woody hilles, and within the other point which was before deſcribed, the ſituation ſeemed to be more pleaſant and delightſome then the reſt which we had paſſed. And at the vttermoſt end of the point were two ſmall Iſlets. The ſayd Wedneſday about nine of the clocke the winde blew a good gale, and we ſayled by euening betweene ſeuen and eight leagues, and came ouer againſt a land not very high, where wee ſaw certaine creekes or breaches not very ragged, into euery of which a riuer ſeemed to fall, becauſe the ſoyle was very greene, and had certaine trees growing on it farre bigger then thoſe which we had found before. Here the Captaine with fiue or ſixe men went on ſhore, and taking poſſeſſion paſſed vp one of thoſe riuers, and found the footing of many Indians vpon the ſand. On the bankes of that riuer they ſaw many fruitful trees, as cherry-trees and little apple-trees, and other white trees: they found alſo in the wood three or foure beaſts called Adibes, which are a kind of dogs. The ſame night wee ſet ſayle with the winde off the land, which blew ſo freſhly, that it made vs to ſtrike our foreſayle; and on the ſixteenth of October at nine of the clocke we came neere vnto a point of certaine high mountaines, on which day being Thurſday we made little way, becauſe the winde ceaſed, but it roſe againe in the night, whereupon by the breake of day on Friday wee came before the ſayd point being ſixe or ſeuen leagues off. The land ſeemed to bee very mountainous with certaine ſharpe points not greatly clad with graſſe, but ſomewhat bare. On our left hand wee ſaw two Iſlands, the one of a league and a halfe, the other not ſo much, and it ſeemed that we drew neere to the port of Santa Cruz, whereat we were ſory, becauſe we were alwaies in good hope to find ſome out-let into the maine Ocean in ſome place of that land, and that the ſame port was the ſame out-let, and alſo that by the ſayd coaſt we might returne to the foreſayd hauen of Santa Cruz, and that we had committed a great error, becauſe we had not certainely ſought out the ſecret, whether that were a ſtreit or a riuer, which wee had left behind vs vnſearched at the bottome of this great ſea or gulfe.

All Friday and the night following we ſayled with a ſcant winde, and on Saturday at breake of day we were betweene two points of land which make a bay, wherein we ſaw before and behinde foure or fiue great and ſmall Iſlands. The land was very mountainous, part whereof was couered with graſſe, and part was voide. Within the land appeared more mountaines and hils, and in this place we were come neere vnto the hauen of Santa Cruz, which is all firme land, except it be diuided in the very nooke by ſome ſtreite or great riuer which parteth it from the maine, which becauſe we had not throughly diſcouered, all of vs that were imployed in this voyage were not a little grieued. And this maine land ſtretcheth ſo farre in length, that I cannot well expreſſe it: for from the hauen of Acapulco, which ſtandeth in ſeuenteene degrees and twenty minutes of latitude, wee had alwayes the coaſt of the firme land on our right hand, vntill we came to the great current of the white & red ſea; and here (as I haue ſaid) we knew not the ſecret of this current, whether it were cauſed by a riuer or by a ſtreit: and ſo ſuppoſing that the coaſt which wee had on our right hand was cloſed vp without paſſage, wee returned backe againe, alwayes deſcending Southward by our degrees, vntill wee returned vnto the ſayd hauen of Santa Cruz, finding ſtill along the coaſt a goodly and pleaſant countrey, and ſtill ſeeing fires made by the Indians, and Canoas made of Canes. We determined to take in freſh water at the hauen of Santa Cruz, to runne along the outward Weſterne coaſt, and to ſee what it was, if it pleaſed God. Here we reſted our ſelues, and eat of the plummes and fruits called Pichaias: and wee entred into the port of Santa Cruz on Sunday the 18 of October and ſtayed there eight daies to take in wood and water reſting our ſelues all that while, that our men might ſtrengthen and refreſh themſelues. Our captaine determined to diuide amongſt vs certain garments of taffata, with clokes and ſaies, and a piece of taffata, and likewiſe ordained, that wee ſhould goe on land to catch a couple of Indians, that they might talke with our interpreter, and that we might come to the knowledge of their language. Whereupon thirteene of vs went out of our ſhip by night, and lay in ambuſh in a place which is called The well of Grijalua, where we ſtayed vntill noone betweene certaine ſecret wayes, and could neuer ſee or deſcrie any one Indian: wherefore wee returned to our ſhips, with two maſtiue-dogs which we caried with vs to catch the Indians with more eaſe: and in our returne we found two Indians hidden in certaine thickets, which were come thither to ſpie what wee did: but becauſe wee and our dogs were weary, and thought not on them, theſe Indians iſſued out of the thickets, and fled away, and wee ranne after them, and our dogges ſaw them not: wherefore by reaſon of the thicknes of the wilde thiſtles, and of the thornes and bryars, and becauſe we were weary, we could neuer ouertake them: they left behinde them certaine ſtaues ſo finely wrought that they were very beautifull to behold, conſidering how cunningly they were made with a handle and a corde to fling them.

The Spaniards vſe maſtiues to take the Indians.

Reade more of theſe ſtaues cap. 10.

The nine and twentieth of October being Wedneſday, we ſet ſayle out of this hauen of Santa Cruz with little winde, and in ſayling downe the chanell our ſhippe called the Trinitie came on ground vpon certaine ſholdes: this was at noone at a low water, and with all the remedy that we could vſe wee could not draw her off, whereupon wee were conſtrained to vnderprop her, and to ſtay the next tide: and when the tide began to increaſe wee vſed all diligence to draw her off, and could not by any meanes, whereat all the company and the Captaine were not a little grieued; for wee thought wee ſhould haue loſt her there, although wee ceaſed not with all our might to labour with both our boates, and with our cable and capſten. In the ende it pleaſed God about midnight at a full ſea with the great force which wee vſed to recouer her, that wee drew her off the ſand, for which we gaue God moſt hearty thankes, and rode at anker all the reſt of the night, wayting for day-light for feare of falling into any further danger or miſhap. When day was come, wee ſet forward with a freſh gale, and proceeded on our voyage, directing our prowes to the maine ſea, to ſee whether it would pleaſe God to let vs diſcouer the ſecret of this point. But whether it pleaſed not his great goodneſſe, or whether it were for our ſinnes, wee ſpent eight dayes from this port, before we could double the poynt, by reaſon of contrary winds, and great raine, and lightning and darkeneſſe euery night: alſo the windes grew ſo raging and tempeſtuous, that they made vs all to quake, and to pray continually vnto God to ayde vs. And hereupon wee made our cables and ankers ready, and the chiefe Pilot commanded vs with all ſpeede to caſt anker, and in this ſorte we paſſed our troubles: and whereas wee rode in no ſecuritie, he cauſed vs foorthwith to weigh our ankers, and to goe whither the wind ſhould driue vs. And in this ſorte wee ſpent thoſe eight dayes, turning backe by night the ſame way that wee had gone by day, and ſometimes making good in the night that which we had loſt in the day, not without great deſire of all the company to haue a winde which might ſet vs forward on our voyage, being afflicted with the miſeries which wee indured by reaſon of the thunders, lightnings, and raine, wherewith we were wet from toppe to toe, by reaſon of the toyle which we had in weighing and caſting of our ankers, as neede required.

And on one of theſe nights, which was very darke and tempeſtuous with winde and raine, becauſe we thought we ſhould haue periſhed, being very neere the ſhore, we prayed vnto God that he would vouchſafe to ayde and ſaue vs, without calling our ſinnes to remembrance. And ſtraightway wee ſaw vpon the ſhrowdes of the Trinity as it were a candle, which of it ſelfe ſhined, and gaue a light, whereat all the company greatly reioyced, in ſuch ſort that wee ceaſed not to giue thankes vnto God. Whereupon we aſſured our ſelues, that of his mercie hee would guide and ſaue vs, and would not ſuffer vs to periſh, as indeede it fell out; for the next day wee had good weather, and all the mariners ſayd, that it was the light of Saint Elmo which appeared on the ſhrowdes, and they ſaluted it with their ſongs and prayers. Theſe ſtormes tooke vs betweene the Iſles of Saint Iago and Saint Philip, and the Iſle called Iſla de perlas lying ouer againſt the point of California ſuppoſed to be firme land.

Chap. 7.

Sayling on their way they diſcouer a pleaſant Countrey, and in their iudgement greatly inhabited, and finde the Sea-coaſt very deepe. They went to diſcouer or viewe the Iſle of perles. And by a current one of their ſhips is ſeparated from the other, and with great ioy after three dayes they had ſight again of her, and following their voyage they diſcouer certaine great, greene, and pleaſant plaines.

WE began to ſayle along the coaſt the ſeuenth or eight of Nouember, the land alwayes ſhewing very greene with graſſe pleaſant to behold, and certaine plaines neere the ſhore,

Nouember.

From hence forward they ſaile on the weſterne or backſide of California and vp within the countrey many pleaſant hils repleniſhed with wood, and certaine valleys, ſo that wee were delighted aboue meaſure, and wondered at the greatnes and goodly view of the countrey: & euery night we ſaw fires, which ſhewed that the countrey is greatly inhabited. Thus we proceeded on our voyage vntill the tenth of the ſayd moneth of Nouember, hauing alwayes the coaſt of the maine Ocean on our right hand, and the farther we ſailed, wee alwayes found the countrey more delightſome and pleaſant, as well in beholding the greennes therof, as alſo in that it ſhewed certaine plaines and deepe valleys, through which riuers did fall downe into the land, within certaine mountaines, and hilles full of great woods which were not very high, and appeared within the countrey. Here we were 54 leagues diſtant from California little more or leſſe, alwayes toward the Southweſt, ſeeing in the night three or foure fires, whereby it appeareth that the countrey is inhabited, and full of people, for the greatnes of the countrey argueth no leſſe: and we ſuppoſed that there muſt needs bee great townes inhabited within the land, although in this poynt we were of diuers opinions. The ſea is ſo deepe on all this coaſt that we could ſcarce find ground in 54 fadomes. On the greateſt part of the coaſt there are hilles of very white ſand, and it ſeemeth to be a dangerous coaſt, becauſe of the great and ſwift tides which goe there, for the ſand ſheweth ſo much for the ſpace of ten or twelue leagues, for ſo the Pilots affirmed. This day being Saturday the winde increaſed, and wee had ſight of the Iſle of pearles, which on this ſide of the gulfe appeareth with a deepe valley all couered ouer with trees, and ſheweth much fairer then on the other ſide, and wee entred into the Porte of Santa Cruz. From the ninth of Nouember to the fifteenth we ſayled not aboue tenne leagues, becauſe we had contrary winds, and great ſhowres: and beſides this we had another miſchance which did not a little grieue vs: for wee loſt company of the ſhip called The Trinitie, and could neuer ſee her for the ſpace of three dayes, whereupon wee ſuſpected that ſhee was returned home vnto New Spaine, or that ſhe was ſeuered from our company; wherefore we were grieued out of meaſure to ſee our ſelues ſo left alone, and the Captaine of all others was moſt ſad, though he ceaſed not to encourage vs to proceede on our voyage, ſaying that notwithſtanding all this wee ought not to leaue off this enterpriſe which we had begunne, and that though we were left alone we ſhould deſerue the greater commendation and credite: whereupon wee all anſwered him, that wee would not haue him thinke that any of vs would euer be diſcouraged, but that we would follow him vntill hee ſhould thinke it reaſonable that we ſhould not proceede any further in the enterpriſe, and that we were in danger of periſhing, and that vntill then wee would bee at his commandement: but withall we perſwaded him that after he had ſeene any great difficulty to proceede any further, he ſhould doe well to returne backe to make relation of our ſucceſſe to the R. H. lord the Marques de valle. Hereupon he made an Oration vnto vs, wherein he told vs, that he could not beleeue, much leſſe could imagine, wherefore the ſhippe called the Trinitie ſhould returne into Newe Spaine, nor why ſhe ſhould willingly depart from vs, and goe vnto any other place, and that he thought by all reaſon, that ſome current had caried her out of our ſight, and that through contrary weather and tempeſts ſhe could not fetch vs vp, and that notwithſtanding all that which we had done in the voyage, he had an inſtruction, that if by chance we were ſeparated one from the other, wee were to take this courſe to meete againe together, namely to returne backe eight or tenne leagues to ſeeke one another, beyond certaine head-lands which lay out into the ſea, and that therefore we ſhould doe well to returne to ſeeke her vp. This ſentence pleaſed vs all, and ſo returning to ſeeke her, we eſpied her two leagues diſtant from vs, comming toward vs with a freſh gale of winde, whereat we greatly reioyced.

A current.

Thus being come together we ankered for that day, becauſe the weather ſeemed very contrary, and the Captaine chid them for their negligence in ſayling, becauſe they had in ſuch ſort loſt our company; and they excuſed themſelues, that they could doe no leſſe, becauſe a current had caried them away aboue three leagues, whereby they could neuer reach vnto vs. The next day being the ſixteenth of Nouember wee ſet forward, but ſayled very little, for the North and Northweſt winds were againſt vs. Here we diſcouered certaine plaines, in my iudgement very great and greene, and right before vs we could not diſcerne any mountaines or woods, whereat wee marueiled to ſee ſo great a countrey. And wee met an Indian in a Canoa on the ſhore whereon the ſea did breake, who ſtayed to beholde vs a great while, and oftentimes hee lifted vp himſelfe to view vs the better, & then returned backe along the coaſt: we vſed al diligence to ſee whether he would come out further from the ſhore, to giue him chace, and to trie whether we could catch him, but he very cunningly viewed vs without comming neere vnto vs, and returned to the ſhore with his Canoa. Here we ſaw in the euening but one fire, and wiſt not whether it were done by the cunning of the Indians, becauſe they would not haue vs know that there were people there, or that it was ſo indeede. From the ſaid 16 day of Nouember untill the 24 of the ſame moneth we could not proceede on our way aboue 12 or 15 leagues: and looking into our Sea-chart, we found our ſelues diſtant from the Laguges of the port of Santa Cruz about 70 leagues. Now on the 24 day being munday very early in the morning we beganne to take very good view of that Countrey, and all along the coaſt we ſaw many faire plaines with certaine furrowes made in the midſt like unto halfe plaines, the ſaid plaine ſtill appearing up into the Countrey, with pleaſant champions, becauſe the graſſe which grew there was very beautifull, ſhort, and greene, and good paſture for cattell. Howbeit becauſe we rode ſo farre off, we could not perfectly iudge what kind of graſſe it was, but it ſhewed very ſhort and greene, and without thornes. Theſe plaines on the right hand made a bay into a valley which ſeemed to be a piece of a mountaine: the reſt ſhewed to be al plaines without any thiſtles or weedes, but full of graſſe good for cattel very green and faire, as I haue ſaid.

They are 70 leagues from the port of Santa Cruz.

Chap. 8.

One of their ſhips by tempeſt was ſeparated from the other, and afterward meeting with her conſort ſhe reporteth that the land ſtretcheth to the Weſt by the mouth of the great lake. The Pilots are of diuers iudgements touching the ſtate of this coaſt inhabited by Chichimecas. They enter into an hauen to take in freſh water, and are ſuddenly aſſayled by two ſquadrons of Indians. They defend themſelues valiantly, and the Captaine with ſome of his ſouldiers are grieuouſly wounded.

The 26 of this moneth being Wedneſday at night the North wind tooke us, which ſtill increaſed more and more ſo greatly that it put us to much trouble, for it continued two dayes, in which the Sea was alwayes boiſterous; and this night againe we loſt the Trinity being beaten with the North winde aforeſaid (and we had ſight of her on munday the 24) wherewith we were all of us greatly agrieued, both Captaines, Souldiers and Mariners, becauſe we ſaw we were left alone, and our ſhip call Santa Agueda wherein we were, was but badly conditioned, and this grieued us more then the trouble which we had with the boiſterouſneſſe of the Sea, imagining that if we ſhould leeſe the Trinity, or if any miſhap ſhould fall unto us, we ſhould not be able to follow our voyage according to our Captaines and our owne deſire. This ſaid 24 day being munday we ſaw a Countrey with high mountaines toward the Northweſt, and it ſeemed that the land ſtretched on ſtill forward, whereat we exceedingly reioyced, becauſe we iudged that the lande grew alwayes broader and broader, and that wee ſhould meete with ſome ſpeciall good thing. Whereupon we deſired that it would pleaſe God to ſend us good weather for our voyage, which hitherto we found alwayes contrary, ſo that in 26 dayes we ſayled not aboue 70 leagues, and that with much trouble, ſometimes riding at anker and ſometimes ſayling, and ſeeking the remedies and benefite of the ſhore to auoide perils. In this Countrey which we diſcouered the 26 day we alwayes ſaw (as I haue ſaid) along the ſhore, and within the land, goodly plaines without any tree, in the midſt wherof was a lake or gathering together of the Sea-water, which (to our iudgement) was aboue 12 leagues in compaſſe, and the ſea-coaſt reached to the mountaines before mentioned. And this day we ſaw our ſhip called the Trinitie, which rode 2 leagues diſtant from us, which ſo ſoone as ſhe ſaw us, ſet ſaile, and we came together and reioyced greatly. They brought us great quantity of gray fiſhes, and of another kinde: for at the point of thoſe mountaines they found a fiſhing which was very wonderfull, for they ſuffered themſelues to be taken by hand: and they were ſo great that euery one had much adoe to finde roome to lay his fiſh in. They found alſo on the ſaid point a fountaine of freſh water which deſcended from thoſe hilles, and they told us that at the ſame place they had found a narrow paſſage, whereby the Sea entered into the ſaid lake. They comforted us much with the report of theſe things, and in telling us that the lande trended to the Weſt; for the chiefe Pilot thought, and the other Pilot was of the ſame opinion, that we ſhould finde a good Countrey. This night we ſet ſaile to goe to that point to take in freſh water which we wanted, and to ſee this lake, and to put ſome men on ſhore: and after midnight the winde came upon us ſo forcibly at the North that we could not ſtay there: whereupon wee were conſtrained to put further into the Sea, and returned the ſame way backe againe unto the ſhore with much adoe, and came to an anker a great way ſhort of the place from whence we were driuen: and there we rode untill Thurſday at noone with this bitter North winde, and on Friday about noone, when we moſt thought it would haue ceaſed, it beganne to increaſe againe, which grieued us not a little ſeeing the weather ſo contrary, hoping alwayes that it would ceaſe, and that ſome winde would blow from the ſhore, whereby we might recouer the point of land to take in freſh water, and to ſearch whether there were any people about that lake. Here we lay from the 26 of the ſaide moneth till the 29, driuing vp and downe the Sea, winding in by little and little vntill we had gotten vnder the ſhelter of thoſe mountaines: which being obtayned wee rode the ſayd 29 of the moneth halfe a league from thoſe wooddy mountaines, which we had ſeene in the Sea. We ſtayed in this place at our eaſe all the Sunday, and Iuan Caſtilio the chiefe Pilot went that day in the bote on ſhore with ſeuen in his company, and they landed neere the Sea, and on a certaine low ground they found foure or fiue Indians Chichimecas of great ſtature, and went toward them, who fled away like Deere that had beene chaſed. After this the Pilot went a little way along the Sea-ſhore, and then returned to his boate, and by that time he was entered thereinto, he ſaw about fifteene Indians of great ſtature alſo, with their bowes and arrowes which called vnto him with a loude and ſtrong voice, making ſignes with their bowes; but the Pilot made no account of their geſture, but rather returned to the ſhippes, and declared what had paſſed betweene him and the Indians. The ſame day the Captaine commaunded that our caske ſhould be made readie againſt the next morning to take in water, for in both the ſhippes there were about fiue and twentie buttes emptie. The firſt of December, and the ſecond day in the morning the Captaine went with both the barkes on ſhore with ſome dozen ſouldiers, and the greateſt part of the Mariners which laboured in filling of water, leauing in the ſhippes as many as were needefull, and as ſoone as wee were come on ſhore at the watering place the Captaine cauſed the buttes to be taken out, to the ende they might be filled with water, and while they returned to fetch the barrels and hogsheads of the ſhippe, the Captaine walked a turne or two vpon the ſhore for the ſpace of one or two croſſebow ſhoots, and afterwarde we went vp to certaine of thoſe mountaines, to view the diſpoſition of the countrey, and in trueth we found it in that place very bad to our iudgement, for it was very ragged, full of woods and caues, and ſo ſtonie, that we had much adoe to goe. Being come vnto the top we found certaine ſmall hilles full of woods, and cliffes that were not ſo craggie, although very troubleſome to climbe vp; and while we looked from theſe little hilles, we could not diſcerne any more mountaines, but rather iudged that from that place forward there were great plaines. The Captaine would not ſuffer vs to goe any further, becauſe in thoſe places we had ſeene certaine Indians which ſeemed to be ſpies, and warning vs thereof he commanded vs to retire vnto the ſhore, where we were to take in water, and to diſpatch our buſineſſe quickly, and appointed vs to make certaine pits, that our buts might more eaſily be filled with water. And ſetting our Guardes or Centinels, we beganne to fill water. In the meane while the Captaine tooke certaine ſouldiers, and went to the top of an high hill, from whence he deſcryed a great part of the Sea, and a lake which is within the land: for the Sea entereth in the ſpace of a league, and there is a good fiſhing place round about: and the lake was ſo great, that it ſeemed vnto vs to be very neere 30 leagues in compaſſe, for we could not diſcerne the end thereof. Then we came downe with no leſſe trouble then wee had mounted vp vnto the hill, by reaſon of the ſteepeneſſe of the place, and ſome tumbled downe with no ſmall laughter of the reſt. And being come ſomewhat late to our watering place (for it was then paſt noone) we ſet our ſelues to dinner, alwayes appointing ſome of our company in Centinell, vntill we were called to dinner, and when ſome were called two others were appointed in their roomes. And about two of the clocke after dinner, the Captaine and the reſt ſuſpecting no danger of aſſalt of Indians, both becauſe the place ſeemed not to be fit for it, as alſo for that we had ſet our Centinels at the paſſages; two ſquadrons of Indians came vpon vs very ſecretly and couertly, for one came by the great valley through which the water ranne which we tooke, and the other came by a part of that great hill which we had aſcended to ſee the lake, and all of them came ſo couertly, that our Centinels could neither ſee nor heare them; and wee had not perceiued them, if a ſouldier by chance lifting vp his eyes had not ſayde, Arme, Arme, my maiſters, for many Indians come vpon vs. When we heard this the Captaine leapt vp in a great rage, becauſe the guards were changed out of their place: and with his ſword and target, being followed by a ſouldier, whoſe name was Haro, and afterward by the reſt, he and the ſaid ſouldier went toward a little gate of certaine ſtones, whither the reſt of vs were to follow him: for if the Indians had gotten that place from vs, we ſhould haue incurred great danger, and the greateſt part of vs had like to haue beene ſlaine, and none could haue eſcaped but ſuch as by chance could haue leapt into the boates, and the tide went ſo high, that none could be ſaued but ſuch as were moſt excellent ſwimmers. But at length the Captaine beſtirred himſelfe very nimbly, vſing all celeritie that was poſſible. Therefore when he and Haro had wonne the gate, the reſt of the ſouldiers gate vp after them, and the Captaine and Haro turned themſelues to the Indians and made head againſt them, and the Indians aſſailed them with ſuch numbers of ſtones, arrowes, & iauelins (which was a very ſtrange thing) that they brake in pieces the target which the Captaine had on his arme, and beſides that wounded him with an arrow in the bending of his knee, and though the wound was not great, yet was it very painefull vnto him. While they thus ſtood to withſtand their aſſalt, they ſtrooke Haro which was on the other ſide ſo forcibly with a ſtone, that they threw him flat vpon the ground: and by and by another ſtone lighted vpon him which ſhiuered his Target, and they hit the Captaine with another arrow, and ſhot him quite through one of his eares. Another arrow came and ſtrooke a ſouldier called Grauiello Marques in the legge, of which he felt great paine and went halting. In the meane ſpace Francis Preciado, and certaine other ſouldiers came vp and ioyned himſelfe with the reſt on the left hand of the Captaine, ſaying vnto him, Sir, withdrawe your ſelfe, for you be wounded, but be you not diſmayed, for they are but Indians and cannot hurt vs. In this wiſe we beganne to ruſh in among them vpon the ſide of a rocke alwayes gayning ground of them, which greatly incouraged our mindes, and when we beganne to inforce them to retire, we wanne a ſmall woody hill, where we ſheltered our ſelues, whereas before they ſhot vpon vs from aloft, for they were on the higher ground vnder couert in ſafetie, & then by no meanes we could offend them, but by running forcibly vpon them with our targets on our armes, and our ſwords in our hands. On the other ſide, to approch and ſeeke to ouertake them was a vaine thing, ſeeing they were as ſwift as wilde goates. By this time Haro was gotten vp on foot, and hauing clapt a woollen cloth vpon his head, which had bled extremely, he ioyned himſelfe vnto vs, of whom we receiued no ſmall aide. In the meane ſpace the Indians fortified themſelues on the cragge of a rocke, from whence they did not a little moleſt vs, & we likewiſe fortified our ſelues vpon an hillocke, whereby we deſcended into their Fort, and there was a ſmall valley betweene them & vs, which was not very deepe from the vpper part. There we were 6 ſouldiers & two Negroes with the Captaine, & all of vs were of opinion that it was not good to paſſe that place, leaſt yͤ Indians being many might deſtroy vs all, for the reſt of our ſouldiers which were beneath at the foote of the hill, making head againſt the other ſquadron of the Indians, kept them frō hurting thoſe which tooke in water on the ſtrand and from breaking the buts of water, and being but few, we concluded to ſtay here, and ſo we ſtood ſtill fortifying our ſelues as well as we could, eſpecially conſidering that we had no ſuccour on any ſide; for Berecillo our Maſtiue-dogge which ſhould haue aided vs was grieuouſly wounded with 3 arrowes, ſo that by no meanes we could get him from vs: this maſtiue was wounded in the firſt aſſalt when the Indians came vpon vs, who behaued himſelfe very wel, & greatly aided vs; for he ſet vpon them, and put 8 or 10 of them out of array, & made them run away, leauing many arrowes behind them: but at length (as I haue ſaid) he was ſo wounded, that by no meanes we could get him to goe from vs to ſet any more vpon the Indians, & the other two maſtiues did vs more harme then good: for when they went againſt them, they ſhot at them with their bowes, and we receiued hurt and trouble in defending them. The Captaines legge when he waxed cold was ſo ſwolne, that we lapped it vp in a wollen cloth, and he halted much of it: and while the Indians thus ſtood ſtill, one part of them beganne to dance, ſing, and ſhout, and then they began all to lade themſelues with ſtones, and to put their arrowes into their bowes, and to come downe toward vs verie reſolutely to aſſalt vs, and with great out-cries they beganne to fling ſtones and to ſhoot their arrowes. Then Francis Preciado turned him to the Captaine and ſaid: Sir, theſe Indians know or thinke, that we be affeard of them, & in trueth it is a great falt to giue them this incouragement, it were better for vs reſolutely to ſet vpon them with theſe dogs, & to aſſalt them on this hill, that they may know vs to be no daſtards, for they be but Indians and dare not ſtande vs; and if we can get their Fort vpon the hill, God will giue vs victory in all the reſt. The Captaine anſwered, that he liked well of the motion, and that it was beſt ſo to doe, although for any further purſuit vp the hill, he thought we were to take another courſe. By and by Francis Preciado getting his target on his arme, and his ſword in his hand, ranne vnto the other ſide of the valley, which on that part was not very ſteepe, crying S. Iago, vpon them my maſters, and after him leapt Haro, Tereça, Spinoſa, and a Croſſebow-man called Montanno, and after them followed the Captaine, though very lame, with a Negro and a ſouldier which accompanied him, incouraging and comforting them, willing them not to feare. Thus we draue them to the place where they had fortified themſelues, and from whence they deſcended, and we tooke another hill ouer againſt them within a darts caſt of them. And hauing breathed our ſelues a little, the Captaine came vnto vs, and ſaid, Go too my maſters, vpon them before they ſtrengthen themſelues on this hill, for now we ſee plainely that they be affeard of vs, ſeeing we chaſe thē continually from their Forts: & ſuddenly 3 or 4 of vs went toward them well couered with targets, vnto the foot of their Fort where they were aſſembled, and the reſt of our company followed vs: the Indians beganne to make head againſt vs, and toſſing many ſtones vpon vs, and ſhoot many arrowes, and we with our ſwords in our hands ruſhed vpon them in ſuch ſort, that they ſeeing how furiouſly we ſet vpon them, abandoned the fort, and came downe the hill as ſwift as Deere, and fled vnto another hill ouer againſt vs, where the other ſquadron of the Indians ſtood, of whom they were reſcued, and they began to talke among themſelues, but in a low voyce, and ioyned together 6 and 6 and 8 & 8 in a company, and made a fire and warmed themſelues, and we ſtood quietly beholding what they did.

Chap. 9.

After the ſkirmiſh the Captaine being wounded, and the reſt of the ſouldiers ſeeing the Indians depart, returned vnto their ſhips. The next day taking in freſh water at the ſaide place he ſent mariners to ſound the mouth of the lake. Departing thence they came to the port called Baya de Sant Abad, and indured a dangerous ſtorme at ſea. And afterward comming neere the ſhore to take freſh water in the ſaid hauen, they ſee certaine peaceable Indians.

BY this time it was late and the night approched, and the Indians ſeeing this, within a ſhort while after determined to get them packing, and ech of them or the greateſt part tooke firebrands in their hands, & got them away into craggy places. When the Captaine ſaw this he cõmanded vs to returne aboord our boats, it being now darke night, thanking vs all for the good ſeruice we had done him. And being not able to ſtand vpon his legge, he leaned with his arme vpon Francis Preciado; and thus we returned to our boats, where with much adoe we got aboord, by reaſon of the great tide and roughneſſe of the ſea, ſo that our boats were filled with euery waue. Thus very weary, wet, & ſome wounded (as is aforeſaid) each man returned vnto his ſhip, where our beds which we found, and our refreſhing, & the cheere we had at ſupper did not greatly comfort vs in regard of our former trauels. We paſſed that night in this ſort, and the next day being Tueſday the Captaine found himſelfe greatly payned with his wounds, & chiefly with that on his leg, becauſe it was greatly ſwolne with his going vpon it. We lacked 12 buts to fill with water, and the barrels in both the ſhips, and the Captaine would haue gone out to cauſe them to be filled, but we would not ſuffer him, and therefore we left off the buſineſſe for that day. But he appointed that the croſſebowes ſhould be made readie, and two ſpeciall good harquebuzes, & the next day being Wedneſday very early, he commanded Iuan Caſtilio chiefe Pilot to goe out with both the boats and with all the ſouldiers and mariners that he could make, hauing the day before commanded the Trinitie to go as neere the ſhore as ſhe might, & to make ready ſome of her ordinance, that if the Indians ſhould ſhew themſelues, they might affright them, & doe them as much hurt as they could. Wherfore on the Wedneſday al we that were ſouldiers, ſauing the wounded perſons, went on ſhore with certaine mariners in the beſt order that we could, and tooke the firſt hill, where we had fortified our ſelues, ſtanding all vpon our guard vntill the water was filled, and vntill we were called, during which time not one Indian ſhewed himſelfe. Thus we went aboord when we thought good our ſelues, at leaſt without any ſuſpicion of the Indians, although the tide of the Sea went ſo high ẏ it put vs to great trouble, for oftentimes with great waues it beat into our boats. This was on the Wedneſday the 3 of December. And to auoide loſſe of time the Captaine commanded Iuan Caſtilio the chiefe Pilot to take a boat and certaine mariners as he ſhould thinke good, and to view the mouth of the lake to ſee whether the entrance were deepe enough for to harbour the ſhips. He taking the boat of the Admirall with 8 mariners, and ours of the Trinity, went and ſounded the mouth, & on the ſhalloweſt place of the barre without they found 3 fadome depth, and farther in 4, & vp higher 5, alwayes increaſing vnto 10 or 12 fadomes, when they were come into the two points of the ſaid lake, which was a league broad from one point to the other, and all their ſounding was exceeding good ground. Then they went ouer to the ſoutheaſt point, & there they ſaw a great boat or raft which they indeuoured to take to carrie vnto their ſhips. In ẏ meane while they eſpied certaine cottages, which the Pilot determined to goe and ſee, and being come neere they ſaw 3 other raftes with 3 Indians on them diſtant from the cottages one or two croſſebowes ſhot, and he leapt on land with 4 or 5 mariners in his companie; and while they beheld thoſe cottages, they ſaw many Indians deſcending downe a ſmall hill in warlike manner with their bowes and arrowes, whereupon they determined to retire to their boats, and to returne to their ſhips, and they were not gone from the ſea-ſhore ſcarſe a ſtones caſt, but the Indians were come vpon them to ſhoot at them with their arrowes, and becauſe they were vnarmed, they would not fight with them, hauing gone on ſhore for no other purpoſe, but to ſound the mouth and enterance of that lake. On Thurſday the 4 of December we ſet ſaile with a freſh gale of winde, and ſayled ſome 8 or 10 leagues, and came vnto certaine mouthes or inlets, which ſeemed to all of vs as though they had beene Ilands, and we entered into one of them, and came into an hauen which we called Baya del Abad all incloſed and compaſſed with land, being one of the faireſt hauens that hath beene ſeene: and about the ſame, eſpecially on both ſides the lande was greene and goodly to behold; we diſcryed certaine riuers on that part which ſeemed greene, & therefore we returned backe, going out at that mouth wherby we came in, alwayes hauing contrary wind: yet the Pilots vſed their beſt indeuour to make way: and we ſaw before vs certaine wooddy hils, and beyond them certaine plaines; this we ſaw from the Friday the 5 of the ſaid moneth, vntill the Tueſday, which was the ninth. As we drew neere to theſe woods they ſeemed very pleaſant, and there were goodly and large hilles and beyond them towardes the ſea were certaine plaines, and through all the countrey we ſaw theſe woods. From the day before, which was the Conception of our Lady, we ſaw many great ſmokes, whereat we much maruelled, being of diuerſe opinions among our ſelues, whether thoſe ſmokes were made by the inhabitants of the countrey or no. Ouer againſt theſe woods there fell euery night ſuch a dew, that euery morning when we roſe, the decke of the ſhip was ſo wet, that vntill the ſunne was of a good height, we alwaies made the decke durtie with going vpon it. We rode ouer againſt theſe woods from the Tueſday morning when we ſet ſaile, vntill Thurſday about midnight, when a cruell Northweſt winde tooke vs, which, whither we would or no, inforced vs to way our anker; and it was ſo great, that the ſhip Santa Agueda began to returne backe, vntill her cable broke, and the ſhip hulled, and ſuddenly with a great guſt the trinket and the mizen were rent aſunder, the Northweſt winde ſtill growing more and more: within a ſhort while after the maine ſaile was rent with a mighty flaw of winde, ſo that we were inforced, both ſouldiers, captaine, and all of vs, to doe our beſt indeuor to mend our ſailes; and the Trinitie was driuen to do the like, for ſhe going round vpon her anker, when ſhe came a-head of it, her cable broke, ſo that there we loſt two ankers, each ſhip one. We went backe to ſeeke Baya del Abad, for we were within 20 leagues of the ſame, and this day we came within foure leagues of it, and being not able to reach it by reaſon of contrary windes, we rode vnder the lee of certaine mountaines and hilles which were bare, and almoſt voide of graſſe, neere vnto a ſtrand full of ſandie hilles. Neere vnto this road wee found a fiſhing-place vnder a point of land, where hauing let downe our lead to ſee what ground was there, a fiſh caught it in his mouth, and began to draw it, and he which held the ſounding-lead crying and ſhewing his fellowes that it was caught, that they might helpe him, as ſoone as he had got it aboue the water, tooke the fiſh, and looſed the cord of the ſounding-lead, and threw it againe into the ſea, to ſee whether there were any good depth, and it was caught againe, whereupon he began to cry for helpe, and all of vs made a ſhout for ioy; thus drawing the fiſh the rope of the ſounding-lead being very great was crackt, but at length we caught the fiſh which was very faire. Here we ſtayed from Friday when we arriued there, vntill the Munday, when as it ſeemed good to our Captaine, that we ſhould repaire to the watering place, from whence we were ſome ſixe leagues diſtant, to take in 12 buttes of water, which wee had drunke and ſpent, becauſe he knew not whither we ſhould from thenceforth finde any water, or no; and though we ſhould finde water, it was doubtfull whither we ſhould be able to take it by reaſon of the great tide that goeth vpon that coaſt. We drewe neere to that place on Munday at night, when as we ſawe certaine fires of the Indians. And on Tueſday morning our Generall commaunded that the Trinitie ſhould come as neere our ſhip & to the ſhore as it could, that if we had neede, they might helpe vs with their great ordinance: and hauing made 3 or 4 bourds to draw neere the ſhore, there came 4 or 5 Indians to the ſea-ſide; who ſtood and beheld while we put out our boat and anker, marking alſo how our bwoy floated vpon the water; and when our boat returned to the ſhip, two of them leapt into the ſea, and ſwamme vnto the bwoy, and beheld it a great while; then they tooke a cane of an arrow, and tyed to the ſayd bwoy a very faire and ſhining ſea-oyſter of pearles, and then returned to the ſhore, neere to the watering-place.

Baya del Abad is 100 leagues from the point of California.

Many great ſmokes, of which alſo Francis Gualle maketh mention.

Chap. 10

They giue vnto the Indians many trifles which ſtand vpon the ſhore to ſee them, and ſeeke to parley with them by their interpreter, which was a Chichimeco, who could not vnderſtand their language. They go to take freſh water. Francis Preciado ſpendeth the time with them with many ſignes, and trucking and being afeard of their great multitude, retireth himſelfe wiſely with his companions, returning with ſafety to the ſhips.

When the Captaine and we beheld this, we iudged theſe Indians to be peaceable people; whereupon the Captaine tooke the boat with 4 or 5 mariners carrying with him certain
